"What the negro himself went through, what he must have experienced, all this came before me as I watched this play, the other day, and I was moved to profound pity, pity for the white man and pity for the colored man, pity for the land that had been made desolate. There was nothing in my mind of race prejudice, but others I believe felt differently.

"In some Boston ministers it did evidently arouse animosity. They revealed it consciously or unconsciously. They frankly rejoice in this motion picture because it reveals the animalism of the negro race, holds it up to scorn and because it voices an appeal from the south.

Its Mischievous Effect.

"There are some persons who never discriminate. They do not hesitate to indict a whole race for the faults of a few. They will take the guilt of one and then assume that as the negro was, so he still is. That seems to be the error of the Rev. Mr. Hawkins. But I think the reply of one friend meets the case. Nothing more justifies the agitation for the photo-play than, such argument of Rev. Mr. Hawkins.

"He himself is an instance of its mischievous effect. He applies the match to the woodpile, or perhaps he is the 'nigger in the woodpile.'

"The Rev. Pitt Dillingham's reply is sufficient. It is contained in a letter to the Boston Herald of Saturday as follows: 'If Mr. Hawkins finds in the film, the appeal of the south to the nation and this valuable showing up of the "animalism" of the "overwhelming majority" of the colored people in this country, is it altogether strange that the colored people of Boston and many of their friends and fellow citizens should discover the same thing and should be a bit stirred up and be unable to take an altogether detached and aesthetic point of view, or if they are wondering just where the wise and just limit to the freedom of the stage comes in?"

"What then? Should the play be prohibited? This is where we touch some vital principles. This raises wider issues than the expediency or non-expediency of a photo-play.

"I do not believe in hysterical legislation. Laws hastily made are never wise laws. They infringe on this right or that right or trespass on the liberties of the community or the individual. The passion to limit by legislation or by restrictive order the freedom of the individual is today the curse of the world.

Freedom Priceless Heritage.

Our freedom is a priceless heritage. [illegible] want justice and fairness for all [illegible]es, all classes, all creeds. The only [illegible]its of freedom must be in the interests of decency and morality. We [illegible]st have liberty of speech and the [illegible]edom of the press and, shall I say, [illegible]rty of the stage."

The speaker here quoted from an [illegible]torial in the Boston Transcript, [illegible]ich, he said, put the whole case as [illegible]cibly and plainly as possible. It [illegible] speaking of the Sullivan bill, [illegible]ich was called into being by this [illegible]itation. It is pleasing to know it [illegible] since been withdrawn. The editorial follows:

"This Sullivan bill would deliver a [illegible]w at religious freedom, the rights [illegible] the individual and the liberty of [illegible] press. It puts a premium on vio[illegible]ice by making it possible for two [illegible]n to engage in a fisticuff fight in [illegible] lobby of a theatre to force the [illegible]thorities to stop the show [illegible]er.

COLUMBIA (S. C.) STATE
MAY 3, 1915

[illegible] manner of delivering their blows.

The Noble Average.

Boston continues in a furor of excitement over the exhibition of the film the "Birth of a Nation," adapted, so we are told, from Tom Dixon's book and play, The Clansman. That is to say, the negro, Trotter, is very much excited and the old abolition stock is turning well-bred somersaults, and the New York Evening Post is throwing a fit with its usual abandon of common sense when it gets a whiff of dark meat. In Boston they have had this weighty matter up for hearings before Mayor, Governor and a committee of the Legislature. "A judge has been found with authority and courage enough to cut out the most objectionable scene. The press has been full of arguments for and against the film and the proposed legislation. On Sunday last many clergymen preached about the play; and ex-President Eliot, speaking in a Cambridge church, was one of those who protested against its falsification of history. Never before have the [illegible] himself to be [illegible] of Boston been so

NORTH ADAMS (Mass.) TRA[illegible]
MAY 4, 1915

NOT TO ADJOURN FOR MONTH YET

Legislature Still Has Much Work to do

MANY BILLS COMING

Indications Are This Session Will Last Longer Than Was Predicted Month Ago

State House, Boston, May [illegible]—Although the matters on the calendars in both the Senate and the House of Representatives are being cleared of the way as fast as possible indications are that this year's legislature will not adjourn much before May 20 and possibly not until the 1st week in June.

"Let's get home early" is the cry of the great majority of the solons and unless something unforseen happens they will probably have their wishes gratified. The railroad matters are yet to be disposed of, however, and if any of them encounter much opposition the session is likely to be prolonged.

The Governor's Bill

Governor Walsh's bill to provide a belt line freight railway system for the metropolitan district has not been acted upon as yet. This is a legislative proposition which is bound to bring forth a prolonged discussion. The fate of this measure is a problem. It is almost certain to encounter vigorous opposition from several sources and particularly from the up state delegations in both branches. The attitude of the ways and means committee on this matter has not been made known but if the members of that committee are consistent in their policy of economy they will maintain a determined front in opposition to it. A resolve providing for an investigation as to the advisability of such a proposition has already been presented to the House and this measure will also interfere to some extent with the governor's recommendation.

While some of the workmen's compensation measures have been killed and others adopted by the legislature so far this year, there still remain several proposed amendments to the present law hanging in the balance. These matters, however, will probably be settled before the end of this week.

Much time is expected to be consumed in debating the merits of numerous taxation bills which at present are tied up in both branches of the legislature. Pending the decision of the tax commissioner and the supreme court as to the constitutionality and other phases of many of these bills practically all of them may lay until the end of the session to be disposed of. As a result several of these must be taken from the table in the House and Senate within the next two weeks and acted upon.

"Birth of a Nation"

The stir caused by the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now playing at the Tremont theatre in Boston, has stirred another hornet's nest into the midst of the legislature. The majority of the members of both branches today went to see a special performance of the film which was staged for their benefit by the management. The introduction of the censorship bills so late in the session and the feeling behind them was unlooked for obstacle and one which those solons representing districts comprising a colored constituency are giving serious consideration. Many of them realize that the way they vote upon this question may determine whether they will be returned to Beacon Hill next year and as a result are basing their actions accordingly.

This question of censorship may also delay adjournment as the joint committee on judiciary has reported a bill which provides that the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court, if their opinion is unanimous, may stop any play on any grounds they see fit. Three members of the committee have dissented from the report on the grounds that the bill contains no provisions for an appeal and there is bound to be strenuous opposition to the passage of the bill. In view of the uncertainty of all these matters and the minor bills that are still on the calendar, it is not believed the legislature will adjourn as early as it was predicted a month ago.

united and determined, or appeared to better advantage, and their white friends have rallied in great force to their aid. Gov. Walsh, ex-Congressman McCall, and Lieut. Gov. Cushing have spoken out emphatically against permitting the play to continue, though the Mayor sided with the producers—as our own New York Mayor has failed to recognize in his utterances the gravity of the situation, or to rise to the emergency, being content with the promise of certain slight excisions, which appear to be of little or no value. The play continues to do its devlish work of misrepresentation and fanning of race hatred."

All of which is, of course, the merest piffle. Neither the "Leopard's Spots" nor the "Clansman" was much of a book, and the play that grew out of them was less as drama. It was as much melodramatic slap-stick from a wrong Southern bias as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was an incoherent and ignorant farce which would never have had recognition except as it inspired Northern hatred. In both cases, the plays and the books were bad—so bad that they lacked in the essential of good taste. But, when we commence to suppress a thing because it is in bad taste, at that moment we slice of a large shaving from the sorely whittled candle of human liberty.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" has been shown in motion pictures within the year in this town of South Carolina which was burned by General Sherman, who led soldiers that considered it almost a Bible. It gives the lie direct to everything Southern, including even the negro as we of the South know him. It is caricature, and malice, and hate, and lies, from beginning to end. Yet we never had a riot over it. Nevertheless, taking everything said about its objectionable character to be true, we see no reason to prohibit the "Birth of the Nation" or any other play or film not flagrantly immoral in either the North or the South.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 4, 1915
1708 he Birth of a Nation

story here told is the story shown in the re-rkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF FIRST INSTALMENT

rgaret Cameron, a daughter of the South, comes upon her father, Dr. n, engaged in a heated discussion over the slavery question with Judge and a group of Southern gentlemen on the veranda of the Cameron . A call to arms on Harper's Ferry by John Brown, with 18 followers, has re- begun. Before the men refreshments is an effort to end the discussion. gin by drinking "To Stephen Douglas, the Next President," following which ion departs. ther and daughter remain alone on the veranda until they are sum- to dinner by Mrs. Cameron and her children.

By Gertrude Stevenson.

II. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part I. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

ative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

urlow Wade was right. Washington was a hotbed of conflict and no man knew the opposing forces better than Stoneman, the representative from Pennsylvania, who, by ination of vaulting arrogance, native shrewdness and elo- was everywhere acknowledged as the "Master of the abolitionist of the most pronounced type, he advocated st drastic measures in dealing with the insurgent Southern the emancipation of the negroes and their enfranchisement, oing to the radical point of considering the wholesale con- n of the land of rebellious Southern citizens and their dis- isement. Even his worst enemies admitted his sincerity ve him a free bill of health in regard to hypocrisy, a trait d to many of the leaders on both sides in the agitation of ne.

MULATTO MISTRESS OF MANSION

pet expression when in con- with other leading states- s: "To my mind, there can oubt of what we have a right What it will be policy to do more difficult to determine." ight be expected there was on for this radicalism and it the form of the French , "Cherchez la femme." Club- sickly and bald, Austin an had never found the of fair women easy of attain- When a young man he had d a simple and pure-souled e born and reared in his own town in Vermont, who had d the ideal of the day that e and ultimate aim for a wom- s to marry as early in life as le. Her own existence ended she gave life to her third a girl, who was destined to and greater things than had been the little mother's lot in Carrying the ideal of this r country lass in his heart, n Stoneman had later, and in inexplicable manner, enthroned affections a mulatto woman, Brown.

tensibly the housekeeper, in his lonely mansion near the e House, she was its unques- d mistress and the dominating in its master's life and ac- Stoneman's unfortunate liai- was a subject known to all and n of by none. To his credit charming little daughter, just ing into lovely womanhood, was in complete and blissful igno- of the hidden chapter in her r's life. She lived with a cir- pect, elderly aunt in another of the city and never suspected true state of affairs. In the mer she joined her brothers, Phil Tod, at the old home in Lancas- Penn.

er Toward Enemies, Tender to Daughter ustin Stoneman was a strange dox. Possessed of a biting wit h readily approached stinging e in his forensic efforts, he was erness itself to his daughter, e, and because of his own physi- ailments, always the ready nd of the lame, the blind and halt. His deep-set eyes, glow- with frigidity rather than mith, under bristling brows, a uth ugly in its firmly-drawn er lip and its aggressively pro- ling lower one, and the thick, ight-haired wig which he ner- ly pushed back from his great are forehead only to quickly re- ast again, gave him at once a st unusual and formidable appear- e.

The measured thump—thump of tread as he hobbled along on the k-soled shoe of his club-foot and ane was the familiar signal of proach his daughter loved and acquaintances all recognized. this particular afternoon he was ted in his favorite retreat, an rmous room actually walled with oks, the result of a collection be- when he was scarcely 15, in ulation of Daniel Webster, at a e when books were rare and his lars to buy them still rarer. The rary had grown until it contained rything pertaining to his legal profession and nearly everything else worth reading with the excep- ion of fiction. Into this room his daughter never ventured, for it was here he sat and talked over his plans with Lydia Brown, the same Lydia, who now, bowing low, ush- red in the great leader of the Sen- te, Charles Sumner.

The man who held the reins of power in the upper body presented the most striking contrast possible to his host. With the face of an Adonis, long flowing locks and erect figure, he showed to wonderful ad- vantage as, turning in disgust from the ingratiating Lydia, he greeted the crippled, bent figure before him.

Sumner and Stoneman Confer as to Slavery

Lydia had scarcely withdrawn from the room before the two men were deep in the discussion of the problem of the day. With Wendell Phillips, Beecher, Hale and Lovejoy, they were compactly united in a band of brotherhood, pledged by mutual consent to unite their forces in a general assault upon the citadel of State rights and Southern slavery.

"Does the South believe that the North, tame as she is, will never turn?" Stoneman demanded of Sumner, as he banged the table before him with his fist. "I tell you that the sympathies of the whole civilized world are with us and, unless we put an end to this damnable business, the dangers are great. Has South Carolina forgotten St. Domingo and the terrible retribution their leaders inflicted on their former masters?"

"Those Southerners know it's wrong," Sumner agreed, earnestly. "They know it's incompatible with our government, but it's a good thing for them. They grow fat and rich and have a good time on account of it and no one can blame them for not giving it up."

"But they've got to give it up," Stoneman stormed, in reply. "I look upon any Northerner, enlightened by a Northern education, who would directly or indirectly, by omission or commission, by basely voting or cowardly skulking, permit slavery to spread over one rod of God's free earth, as a traitor to liberty and recreant to God!"

Sumner nodded as the other paused for breath.

"I don't reproach the South," Stoneman continued. "I honor the way the Southerners are acting. Even in a bad, wicked cause, they show a united front. All of them are faithful to the cause because it is the Southern cause.

Expresses His Contempt For His Own Partizans

"But the Northerners"—and he flung out a scornful hand while the lower lip protruded a bit more contemptuously—"the poor, timid, mercenary, driveling Northerners—they are no such united defenders of their cause, although it is the cause of human liberty. Up here, we're the victims of low ambition, an ambition which prefers self to country, personal aggrandizement to liberty. We are offered up as a sacrifice to propitiate Southern tyranny—to conciliate Southern treason!"

CHARACTERS IN THE STORY

Col. Ben Cameron....Leader of the Piedmont troops in South Carolina, the first Southern State to secede
Margaret Cameron.....His elder sister, a true daughter of the South
Flora.....The younger sister, destined to a tragic death
Dr. Richard Cameron....His father, a gentleman of the old school, wealthy cotton planter and slave owner
Mrs. Cameron.....His mother
Wade Cameron.....The second son
Duke Cameron.....The youngest son
Uncle Jerry and Mammy....The Cameron house servants, faithful even after the war
Hon. Austin Stoneman....Radical leader of the House, known as the "Great Commoner," noted for his vindictive policies toward the Southern States, instigator of carpet-bag rule and believer in negro suffrage
Elsie Stoneman.....His daughter, good angel of the war hospitals
Phil Stoneman.....His older son
Tod Stoneman.....His younger son
Lydia Brown.....Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper
Silas Lynch....Stoneman's mulatto protege, destined for political power in the Reconstruction Period
Gus.....A renegade negro
Abraham Lincoln.
John Wilkes Booth.....The actor-assassin
Gen. U. S. Grant.
Gen. Robert E. Lee.
Charles Sumner.....Senator from Massachusetts, zealous Abolitionist bondage of her own people. Shrewd and calculating as the fusion of two races made her, she saw her opportunity, as the power behind the throne, to render her race a tremendous service. She only feared that the great leader, over whom she exerted her influence by the most subtle and concealed cleverness, would succumb to the maladies with which he suffered before her great purpose of negro emancipation was accomplished.

Worshiping him for his great intellect and the powerful position he held, she watched over him like a mother with a child, saw to it that he ate only the food which best agreed with him, cautioned him against overtaxing himself when in his zeal for oratory he would spend his energies in the utterance of a masterly philippic, placed his chair in the best light and drew his shawl closer about his shoulders a dozen times a day.

As she heard Sumner saying good-by, she busied herself at a nearby table and was thus engaged as the great Bostonian opened the door. With nicely simulated subservience, she hastened to reach for his high hat and even attempted to brush from it an imaginary speck of dust, but its owner snatched it from her and waved her aside with a haughty gesture. Zealous as he was to emancipate the race from which she sprang, Charles Sumner's puritanical conscience could not tolerate even the servile attentions of such a woman as Lydia Brown.

(To Be Continued Tomorrow.)

AUSTIN STONEMAN, "MASTER OF THE HOUSE"

MAY 4 1915

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spec-

Record, Boston Mass
May 4, 1915.

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" was played practically continuously yesterday from 10.30 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night. Members of the Legislature, their wives, families and friends to the number of about 1200 persons attended a special morning performance which lasted until after 1 o'clock. There were crowded audiences at the public matinee performance and likewise at the evening performance, so that approximately 3500 people saw the Griffith spectacle in the course of the day. The great advantage to spectators is in having the performances being at set times. For there is nothing more exasperating than to buy a ticket for such an entertainment and find that the current exhibition is half over, making it necessary to witness the second half of the story before picking up the opening threads of the story on the next showing. The regular matinee and evening hours are 2.10 and 8.10 respectively.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UN
MAY 4, 1915

Birth of a Nation," with "Gus"
Scene, Viewed by Legislators

Practically all of the State House went to the Tremont Theater this morning to witness a special private performance of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," by invitation of the theater management.

Because of the widespread protest against the play has resulted in a demand for legislation to prohibit the production of this and similar plays, the invitation was issued to the members of the Legislature, in order that they might see the play to be guided in passing upon the proposed legislation.

But in addition to members of the Legislature, there were present State officials, clerks, State House messengers and other attaches, lobbyists and reporters, most of them being accompanied by their wives.

The orchestra and first balcony seats were crowded and many stood.

Walsh Absent.

Neither Gov. Walsh nor anyone from his office was at the performance, and President Coolidge of the Senate and Speaker Cox of the House were also among the absentees.

One of the features of the special performance was the showing of the so-called "Gus" scene, in which a renegade Negro is shown making advances to a white girl, who eludes him by leaping to death from a precipice. This scene was cut out of the film by order of Municipal Court Judge Dowd, who pronounced it "immoral and obscene," but was shown at the request of a "committee," presumably the legislative Committee on Judiciary. Announcement to this effect was made during the intermission between the first and second parts of the show by the press representative.

Another scene, which had been eliminated by consent of the management, was also shown. In this one a mulatto lieutenant-governor of the State where the scenes take place, is shown proposing marriage to the daughter of his white patron, and when she spurns him is shown grabbing her and carrying her into a bedroom, when she is rescued.

Applaud Ku Klux Scenes.

Both of these scenes were shown after the performance as given to the public had been produced. There was considerable applause at several scenes in the second part of the play showing the masked white Ku Klux Klan riders effecting rescues. A small detail of police was in the lobby of the theater as those who saw the special performance filed out and as those waiting for the afternoon and regular performance were standing in line for their tickets.

The performance was a quiet one, without accident. Legislators were wary about expressing an opinion about the show, many praising its artistic quality and general interest, some adding the opinion that it produces a psychological impression of dislike against the Negro.

BOSTON (Mass.) EVE. GLOBE
MAY 4, 1915

In view of the proposition to have a board of censors for moving-picture films here in Boston, it is interesting to note these samples of cut-outs ordered in films inspected by the Board of Censors in Chicago:

Two scenes of convict scaling prison wall; close view of plan showing method of tunneling under bank.

Mob assaulting man; flash gambling scene; scene showing Cossack striking [illegible] with butt of gun.

[illegible] shooting bandit.

[illegible] trance of burglar; close view of loot.

[illegible] prompt [illegible] decision of all such cases. Mr. [illegible] Dixon stating a general censorship [illegible] he hoped pictures as distin-

Continued on Page Nine, Column 6

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 4, 1915

$35,000,000 IN CAPITAL AGAINST FILM CENSOR BILL

Five hundred motion picture theatres in Massachusetts, representing a total investment of approximately $35,000,000, will be represented in the solid, vigorous opposition to be made against the so-called Carstens bill for film censorship tomorrow when the Senate ways and means committee continues its hearing on the measure.

Special Agent Carl C. Carstens of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is the author of the bill, which provides for a three-hundred board of film censors to be appointed by and under the jurisdiction of the state board of labor and industries.

With J. A. Eslow, New England manager of the Universal Film Company and one of the leading motion picture men in the country at their head, the opponents to the bill hope to make out a clear case. Their preparations have been thorough. They have interested the public in their fight by flashing protests against the measure on the screens in their theatres daily. Then have secured some strong outside assistance.

Members of the Massachusetts Motion Exhibitors League, in a body, and their counsel, will take a prominent part. The Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange and the Boston Central Labor Union, both of which have condemned the measure, will aid the men whose business is said to be threatened.

President J. J. Barry, Vice-President Ignatius McNulty and Treasurer Harry Jennings will oppose the bill on behalf of organized labor. The "movie" men maintain that about 8000 employes of Massachusetts show houses will be affected if the bill is enacted into law.

The attitude of the opposition is presented by Mr. Eslow, the Universal Film man, as follows:

"I am not in favor of any change in the present method of censoring pictures. The verdict of the national board is, in my sincere belief, judicious, impartial and successful in its judgment upon the vast number of films manufactured yearly. Any change so far as Boston is concerned would, in my estimation, prove unwise.

"There are many phases in the judgment of pictures which the public is wholly unfamiliar with. In the first place, in a city like ours, with its tremendous cosmopolitan population, the matter of judgment is not as easy as one might infer. The stamp of approval sealed upon any picture by the national board of censorship comprises the verdict of more than 100 prominent people, whose established reputations as writers, educators, philanthropists, business men and women is universally known and respected. Their ability to diagnose every element of the difficulties that naturally arise in the judgment of pictures is proven by their success of the past five years.

"The best proof of Boston's confidence of their judgment is shown in the fact that no picture is allowed to be exhibited in Boston unless passed favorably on by this national board of censorship. This alone ought to prove sufficient guarantee of their practicability and experience to handle the situation, not to mention the fact that in their arduous labors these men and women receive no remuneration. In other words, they offer their valuable services gratis, which is, of course, the best proof of the sincerity of their judgment.

"On the other hand, what benefits can come of any change? Let us for the sake of argument assume that the now pending censorship bill become a law, what would be the result? Under the present structure of the bill the work would prove physically impossible to accomplish. This would, of course, naturally make careful and sincere judgment upon the enormous weekly output of pictures inefficient.

"This, however, is only the least of its bad features. We must not overlook the channel of graft which can easily be opened to this proposed board of three censors. The proposed tax of $1.00 on each film is of little consequence in so far as I can observe. While the film exchanges would, of course, be obliged to pay this levy the actual sufferer would be the public; for, with the increased cost, the exchanges would be justified in their increased prices to exhibitors, and the latter in turn would be equally justified in charging a higher admission fee to their places of amusement. Thus would the public suffer.

"The public does not realize the large amount of property that would be placed in jeopardy. Does the average layman realize, whether he or she be a movie patron or not, that there are over 500 theatres in Massachusetts, representing an output of over $35,000,000? Can you imagine the amount of labor supplied in the maintenance of these places? Assuming that a change took place and many of these theatres were forced to close, what would be the actual result in the homes of many families?"

Opponents of the bill say that it would give the censors a dangerous amount of power.

It would authorize the board to alter films and withdraw the license at any time for cause shown. The films would be marked as approved and the sign of this thrown on the screen. The bill provides for a fee of $1 for each reel examined which does not exceed 1000 lineal feet and for any reel exceeding this length a $2 fee.

A fine of not less than $25 nor more than $300, or imprisonment for not less than 20 days nor more than a year, or both, are provided as penalties for those exhibiting pictures not licensed, stamped and designated. If passed and approved, act would take effect July 1.

A FEW PARALLELS.

To the Editor of The Traveler:

"The Birth of a Nation" is still going on, and with it the persecution of a race. When I review a few of the crimes against white women, perpetrated by white men, they set me thinking. Where were the Southern knights of purity a few years ago, when one of their sons (Clarence Richeson) destroyed not only the virtue but also the life of one of our Northern girls? His father came here in all his Southern pride, declaring, "It is not in the blood, sah!" But it was in the blood and manifested itself, and that father went home crushed and broken.

Should all ministers be villified in moving pictures because that one was false to his sacred duties? Should little children be taught to fear priests because one killed a young woman some time ago in New York? Should the many physicians who go about daily saving hundreds of lives be deemed unsafe because a few of their profession, by illegal practice, cause the deaths of some young women? Should architects as a class be stamped as moral lepers because Stanford White destroyed the virtue of a young girl? No! a thousand times no!

These crimes I have cited were not committed by men of the slums, but by men of training, of high degree and great opportunities. And their actions only prove that human nature is human nature the world over. The many sad deaths, and mysterious burials, of young girls within the past year, further show that womanhood is not altogether safe in the hands of every white man. "The Birth of a Nation" is an incubator for race prejudice, and it is causing men's wrath to burn up their better judgment. CLARA MORRIS DIGGS.
191 Cedar street, Roxbury, May 3.

BOSTON (Mass.) EVE. GLOBE
MAY 4, 1915

BOSTON L. & H. A. INDORSED THE HALLOWELL BILL

At its regular meeting last night in the St Mark's Congregational Church at 1047 Tremont st, the Boston Literary and Historical Association indorsed the Hallowell Bill for censorship of plays and an appeal was made to the members to go to the Legislature in its defense this morning.

The resolution passed recited that "it is with heartburning and feelings of shame and discouragement" that the members of the association read in the newspapers that legislators went to see "The Birth of a Nation" and "applauded" it. "This in itself is sufficient reason for the suppression of 'The Birth of a Nation,'" read the resolution.

As colored citizens of Boston and Massachusetts, the members appealed for the quick passage of the Hallowell Bill, that the play may not be allowed. They also indorsed the movement of the United denominations to set aside May 23 as "Race Day," to oppose race hatred and prejudice.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCUR
MAY 4, 1915

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, who can always be depended upon to say something sensible and worth while, is not in favor of legislating against the exhibition of the "Birth of a Nation" film. He advises the colored people not to feel insulted. It is false doctrine and if its presentation is everywhere accompanied by true exposition of what the American people stand for, it will have a useful result. And incidentally Dr. Eliot said a very fine thing. "It is true," he said, "that there has been a growing indifference among white people to all questions of liberty and justice in the conduct of public affairs."

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 4, 1915

THE HOUSE.

Debate Precedes Vote on Film Bill.

According to order the House met at 1 o'clock, but only about 20 members were present in consequence of the acceptance generally of the invitation from the Tremont theater to witness the production of "The birth of a nation," concerning which there was recently on the House calendar a bill to provide for a commission of three to pass upon theatrical shows in Boston. The calendar was read the first time and then a recess was taken, subject to the call of the chair, in order to give time for the absentee members to come in.

CONCORD (N. H.) MONITOR
MAY 4, 1915

Gertrude Stevenson has written a story based on the much discussed film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which the Boston Journal is publishing as a serial.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 4, 1915

LOBBY QUIET AS A CHURCH

"Birth of a Nation" Witness Says the Police Made the Disturbance—Rev. M. W. Thornton Released When It Was Learned He Had a Ticket

William Johnson, a Winchester negro, who tried to buy a ticket at the Tremont Theatre in the evening of April 17 to see "The Birth of a Nation," testified today that when he was "refused" a seat at the box office he took it philosophically. Johnson was at the box office a full hour before curtain time, and when he was told that the seats were all gone, he approached policeman No. 481 and told the latter he would have him as a witness to the fact that there were no seats for sale. "After than," went on the witness, "I stayed around and made myself to home. By and by I saw Mr. Trotter in line and I fell in behind him. eW got to the box office and Mr. Trotter was told that there were no tickets for sale. We moved out and made the trip again to the box office. Again we heard the story of 'no tickets.' I didn't see any disturbance till Sergeant King came along; it was as quiet as a church. The sergeant said to Mr. Trotter: 'You're trying to incite a riot.' Then he arrested him. When Mr. Trotter was told by the ticket seller that there were no seats for sale he said, 'The white people are getting tickets.' Then he asked again, and the ticket seller looked over his head and didn't answer. I guess it was a hard blow for the ticket seller."

Rev. Mntrose W. Thornton pastor of the African Methodist Episcopal Church on Charles street, asserted that he was told that all tickets were sold when he tried to get one at 7.30 in the evening of the alleged disturbance. A little later he got one, he declared, through a white man. Then he went out on the street to smoke for it was half an hour before curtain time. Returning to the theatre, he ran across Rev. Mr. Puller, and was near when the latter was arrested. Mr. Thornton said that he also was taken to the station, but was released when it was fund that he had a ticket to the performance. The ticket was admitted by Judge Brackett as an ehibit, and the Court said that if Mr. Thornton had been arrested, there seemed to have been no justification for it. The witness was in the lobby when it was cleared by the police, and was put out in spite of his protest that he had a ticket. He saw Mr. Puller hit by a policeman, he declared, just before the latter's arrest, but he was unable to identify the policean. Thornton did not deny that he was interested in suppressing "The Birth of a Nation," but he denied having made the radical remarks attributed to him in a speech on Boston Common Sunday.

Some stirring words uttered in the theatre lobby, and laid at the door of Mr. Trottr, were acknowledged by Robert Coursey. It was he, according to his testimony, who said to the crowd in a loud voice: "This show is put on in an attept to desecrate our race; but we will let you know this isn't Georgia." To a group of white men, the witness spoke as follows: "If you'll give us half a chance we'll show you that we are good citizens." The witness felt that he had a right to see the photo-play, and to protest because he was denied, for the reason that he pays $1800 a year in taxes to the city of Boston.

Rev. Aaron Puller, who, with William Monroe Trotter, was arrested at the theatre on the night of the alleged disturbance, testified that he tried to buy a ticket to the performance, but was refused. He then left the lobby, and, reaching the sidewalk, was asked by Sergeant King to "tell these people there are no more tickets; tell them to go home." He followed the sergeant's instructions, he said, and just then was told that a policeman had struck a woman. "I went to the side of this woman," he continued, "and was about to take the number of the policeman when I was struck by another policeman and fell down. As I struck the curbstone two policemen grabbed me and dragged me to the sidewalk; some other policemen then took hold, I think there were five altogether, and after some rough handling they took me to the station."

Mr. Puller testified that he heard no loud talking in the crowd and saw no pushing. He did not address the people outside and advise them to "come into the theatre." In cross-examination the witness said that "as yet" he had made no complaint on account of the rough treatment he claimed to have received.

CABLE ADDRESS
CLIPPING FROM Telegram
Worcester Mass
4-2-15

HIS MASTERPIECE.

"The Birth of a Nation" the Culmination of D. W. Griffiths' Ability.

D. W. Griffith, the Mutual's $100,000 director, with the production of his masterpiece, "The birth of a Nation," has exemplified in one mighty 12-reel motion picture those matured abilities which have made so many releases in the Mutual program, and particularly several of the new Mutual masterpictures made under his general direction, so remarkable from the artistic point of view and so appealing from the standpoint of popularity.

A few of these pictures which show Griffith's perfecting touch, unmistakable to those who are familiar with pictures are "The lost house," by Richard Harding Davis; "The outcast," by Thomas Nelson Page; "Enoch arden," by Lord Tennyson, and "The outlaw's revenge in the birth of a new republic," These are all masterpictures, as is "Captain Macklin." The last is the latest production sent out from the Griffith studios at Hollywood and is founded on the story by Richard Harding Davis.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 4, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN ITS SECOND MONTH

This is the second month of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. Spectacularly, it far surpasses any photoplay ever produced. Thrilling in the extreme are the battle scenes, the picture showing the burning of Atlanta, the assassin's attack on President Lincoln and the activities of the Ku Klux Klan.

It is estimated that in the last four weeks more than 30,000 persons attended the performances at the Tremont. The pictures are exhibited twice every day, beginning at 2.10 in the afternoon and 8.10 in the evening. Regular theatre prices prevail.

The photo-spectacle is favored with an effective orchestral and vocal accompaniment.

Members of the Legislature saw the play yesterday morning at a special performance.

Al Lincoln
New York
4-16-15

"NATION" PASSES IN BOSTON.

Boston, April 14.

"A Birth of a Nation" the Griffith feature film, has been the centre of a bitter storm of dissension in this city through protests originally made by the negro organizations and later picked up and furthered by various white organizations, including the Wendell Phillips Memorial Association.

Mayor Curley at the private performance Friday night requested portions of the film in addition to the New York cuts be made including the scene where a negro member of Legislature removes his shoes and the Legislature, by a unanimous vote against orders him to replace them.

The negroes charge that all through the film they are treated unfairly, including the scenes where a negro regade chases a young white girl who throws herself off a cliff to save her honor and where an attempt is made to ravish a protesting white girl by means of a trick marriage.

The mayor said the showing of negro as a degenerate did not prove all negroes degenerates any more than the showing the assassination of Lincoln by Booth meant that every white man was of Booth's calibre.

It was finally discovered that the films were safe from prosecution as the Tremont through the fact that the local law applies only to immorality or obscenity in a theatrical performance and even then it can only be stopped by the joint condemnation of the mayor and police commissioner. Both these dignitaries sent official censors who said the film is "within the law."

(Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 5, 1915

ARBITRARY FILM MEASURES ARE ATTACKED

Representative Bowser of Wakefield Tells Why He Opposed New Bills.

Representative Eben K. Bowser of Wakefield, one of the three members of the Judiciary Committee who dissented to the compromise censorship bill reported last week, today told why he voted against the measure. He said:

"What sense is there in passing new laws which injure rather than benefit? I prefer the present statute to the Judiciary Committee bill. The measure reported adds as a censor the chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court. The present statute bestows the power of censorship upon the Mayor and police commissioner.

"Now I have the most profound respect for Chief Justice Bolster. I think he is a splendid type of judge and citizen. But when I say I don't think he should sit as a censor of photo plays or any other public entertainment I do not wish to reflect in the slightest measure on him personally.

"My objection is general. I do not think a justice whose tenure of office is for life, should be asked to censor plays or films with the Mayor and police commissioner. Not that a judge wouldn't be apt carefully and conscientiously to weigh all the facts, as I am sure Chief Justice Bolster would do, but such a statute would establish a dangerous precedent.

"In the first place the committee measure gives a power altogether too arbitrary, and, in the second place, it bestows the power to a judge who is appointed and not elected. He and the Mayor and police commissioner must be unanimous in their decision from which there can be no appeal.

'RELIEF' MISSES MARK.

"I would prefer to give all the power to a Mayor, because he could be made answerable to the people if he was found to be false to his trust and to graft. Another feature I dislike about the committee bill is failure to specify cause for suspension and failure to give aggrieved managers the right to appeal.

"I say if we cannot improve the present law let it alone. I haven't seen a relief measure offered yet that comes anywhere near hitting the mark.

It is my purpose to offer an amendment to the Judiciary Committee censorship bill to eliminate the chief justice of the Municipal Court as a censor. If that is done I feel satisfied the bill will die a natural death, because the committee will then have no further interest in it.

"I have seen 'The Birth of a Nation' twice. It is a wonderful production from a photographic and entertainment standpoint. It is really thrilling. It shows the possibilities of the motion picture art. The photoplay has come to stay and it is already a tremendous power in our everyday life. It has great educational advantages. It is growing with leaps and bounds, as the production at the Tremont Theatre shows. Therefore proper safeguards should be prepared to protect rather than injure the industry.

"Even if the Judiciary Committee bill were made a law it admittedly could not prevent the exhibition of 'The Birth of a Nation' which apparently has been the target for the various measures offered. Why stir matters up and attempt changes that will leave us deeper in the mire than if we stand by the present law?"

BILLS TOO ARBITRARY."

"The committee bill and kindred measures are too broad and arbitrary. They are not just. Such laws could be so abused as to interfere with public meetings and free speech and freedom of the press. While freedom of the press is sacred it might be argued that next to it should be freedom of the stage, except where virtue and morals are assailed."

At the hearing to be given today by the Senate Committee on Ways and Means the Massachusetts Exhibitors League, Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange and the Central Labor Union will oppose the Carstens bill, which aims to give censorship power to the State Board of Labor and Industries and to impose a tax of $1 to $2 on all films brought into the State.

The following denouncement of the Carstens bill has been issued by Fred J. Dempsey, president Local 11, International Alliance Stage Employes, and John J. Barry, corresponding secretary of the Boston Central Labor Union:

"FANATICAL LEGISLATION OPPOSED BY ORGANIZED LABOR.

"Any measure, whether private or public, or of private or legislative origin, that contemplates danger for the interests of personal liberty or the rights of the hosts of the working men in Massachusetts cannot and will not receive the support of the labor organizations throughout the State.

"Senate Bill 202, under discussion before the Senate of Massachusetts, is such a measure, and, in its conception, shows a woeful lack of consideration of the facts governing the exhibition of motion pictures which its proponents seek to hamper, and absolutely no positive knowledge of the far-reaching and disastrous effects of the passage of this bill.

"They ask that a sweeping censorship of motion pictures be vested in a State Board composed of three members, but have they ever asked themselves or anyone else what the effects of such a condition would be? Upon their own statements they would eliminate the possibility of producing about 30 per cent. of the output of film plays that are now being shown in this Commonwealth.

SEE PERIL IN BILLS.

"Do they know that the present output of motion pictures is hardly sufficient to supply the demand necessary to continue the operation of upward of 600 theatres in this State devoted to their exhibition?

"And what would this mean? It does not take a person of extraordinary intelligence to figure out that inevitably about thirty per cent. of the motion picture theatres of the State would be forced to close their doors. Thirty per cent. of the poor man's—the working man's—theatres would be barred to them.

"Is it a just or promising measure that proposes to deprive the working man of his cheap amusement?

"And what would be the further result of the adoption of this legislation? Cannot its proponents conceive that with thirty per cent. of their product useless on their hands, the film manufacturers, must, for the salvation of their business in this State, ask more from the exhibitor who is fortunate enough to still have his business for the privilege of showing the pictures to the public?

"This is just what will happen, and, inevitably, it means that the exhibitor will ask of the patron that he make up his increased cost of doing business. Who, then, is the ultimate sufferer but the public—the ordinary man, woman or child who can afford a nominal small price of admission but who cannot afford the luxury of the higher priced entertainments? And it would not be too far a cry to predict average picture shows at prices up to fifty cents. In short the passage of this measure would presage the death of the poor man's show.

"Have these seekers after frenzied legislation considered for a minute that in the closing of thirty per cent. of the motion picture theatres of Massachusetts they would throw out of employment the unionized employes of conservatively 175 theatres?

CALL FOR FREEDOM.

"If they want it further enumerated, let us quote figures. It would mean the unemployment of about 175 operators and possibly 150 assistants, at least 600 musicians, at least 375 stage mechanics, and, at the very lowest, 1,500 other employes of the theatres depending upon them for a livelihood.

"It is hardly necessary to state that the projection of many picture theatres, entailing large costs of construction and meaning the employment now and permanently of many hundreds of working men of the Commonwealth, will be, and are, halted for the settlement of this pertinent question.

"Organized labor has always stood and always will stand, not for the privilege and caprices of the few, be they classes, races or creeds, but for the full quota of freedom, and it does stand for the rights of the working man and the personal comforts of the poor man.

"Senate bill 202 seeks to encompass all of these, and, as a needless measure, aimed toward the supposed satisfaction of a few, is nothing less than a hysterical effort to place more law on the already overburdened statute books, where it is not only inefficient but not wanted.

"As opposed to this legislation the undersigned representatives of the Boston Central Labor Union ask that this bill be further considered with the true facts distinctly in view and defeated as unproductive of welfare and happiness for the working man of Massachusetts.

"Fred J. Dempsey, president Local 11, International Alliance Stage Employes; John J. Barry, corresponding secretary Boston Central Labor Union."

New Propositions Injure More Than Help Conditions, He Declares.

(Mass.) MO

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 5, 1915

PROTEST FILM PLAY

Christian Endeavor Adopt Resolutions Denouncing "Birth of a Nation"

Resolutions protesting against the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," and urging the passage of laws to prevent public performances which tend to provoke racial hatreds and misunderstandings, were unanimously adopted by members of District 1, Boston Christian Endeavor Union.

The resolutions were sent to Gov. Walsh, Pres. Coolidge of the Senate, Speaker Cox, the Boston newspapers, and John B. Schoeffel, proprietor of the Tremont Theatre. They were signed by William Shaw, Nan Van Syckel and Marion J. Pullen.

The resolutions passed were:—

"Resolved, that we, the members of District 1 of the Boston Christian Endeavor Union, in convention assembled, representing 14 societies and 1000 members, protest against the presentation of the motion-picture play, 'The Birth of a Nation,' and urge the passage of such laws as shall prevent the production of such public performances as provoke racial hatreds and misunderstandings."

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 2, 1915

CUSHING HAS YET TO SEE 'MOVIES'

Urges Film Censorship but Opposes Judiciary Committee Bill; Urges Right of Appeal.

Grafton D. Cushing, Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts, blue blood, social worker, lawyer, teacher and bachelor, has never gone to the "movies." He confessed it himself in a speech before the Twentieth Century Club yesterday, when he said:

"I have never been to a motion picture house to see a film, yet I believe the interest aroused by "The Birth of a Nation" put us in the position to discuss legislation. There ought to be a board of censorship, composed of two men and one woman, to pass judgment on every film used. Their seal of approval ought to appear on every film. If their decision is unreasonable, there should be the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

Lieutenant-Governor Cushing in his address made it clear that he thought motion picture managers should have the right to appeal.

"The members of the Judiciary Committee do not," he said, "or they would not have reported the copromise measure adding the Chief Justice of the Boston Municipal Court as a censor with the Mayor and Police Commissioner, and insisting that their decision in correcting or suppressing a photo-play or entertainment of any sort, must be unanimous.

"The most dangerous flaws in their measure are denial of appeal and permitting the triumvirate to reject a film or show, not for the specific causes of immorality and obscenity as defined by the present law, but for any reason that might pop into their heads.

"Little wonder that theatre managers and motion picture producers are attacking the Judiciary Committee bill with a solid front. And it is notable and not a little odd to learn that the colored race are opposed to the compromise bill also, in spite of the fact that it is likewise objectionable to the exhibitors of 'The Birth of a Nation' and film producers generally.

"In the lame apology substituted by the Judiciary Committee the public and theatre interests see a graver danger and no relief. It is the popular opinion that the present statute is preferable."

Trotter Not Guilty of Inciting Riot

William Munroe Trotter and the Rev. Aaron W. Puller were found not guilty by Judge Brackett in the Municipal Court of charges of creating a disturbance and inciting a riot in the lobby of the Tremont Theatre, April 24. Trotter was fined $20 on the charge of assaulting Patrolman Connaire. He appealed.

Fleischer to Defend 'Birth of a Nation'

Dr. Charles Fleischer will defend "The Birth of a Nation" in a public debate in the Maverick Congregational Church, Central Square, East Boston. His opponent will be Peter R. Fagan, a Boston newspaperman.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 5, 1915

PULLER FREED; TROTTER FINED

Judge Brackett in "Birth of a Nation" Case Tells Negroes They Should Have Sought Redress in the Courts or Legislature

There was applause among the negroes in the Municipal Court yesterday afternoon when Judge Brackett's finding in the "Birth of a Nation" case, acquitting Rev. Aaron Puller, was read. Mr. Puller and William Monroe Trotter, editor of the Guardian, had been charged with making a disturbance and inciting a riot at the Tremont Theatre on the evening of April 17. Trotter had been charged also with assaulting an officer, and on this charge alone he was fined $20, and appealed.

In giving his decision Judge Brackett said: "I severely criticise the man who sold the tickets on that night. When he testified here that he sold no more tickets after being ordered to stop I hoped to believe him.

"It was the theatre's right to stop the sale of tickets. But I find upon the evidence in this case that the ticket seller continued to sell and used unfair discrimination between white and colored applicants for tickets. His conduct is largely responsible for what occurred.

"Mr. Trotter's conduct was not what it should have been, considering his influence with his people. If his people were wronged they should have sought redress later in the Legislature or in the courts."

The Court said further that Trotter and Mr. Puller would have done better had they counselled their friends to leave the theatre in peace. He complimented the attorneys on both sides for the spirit and fair manner in which the case was conducted, and the persons who have attended the hearings for their exemplary conduct throughout.

FILM PLAY FURTHER PROTESTED

District 1, Boston Christian Endeavor Union, Adopts Resolution Which Is Sent to Governor, Newspapers and Manager Schoeffel

The following resolution was adopted at a meeting of District 1, Boston Christian Endeavor Union, last night:

Resolved, That we, the members of District 1 of the Boston Christian Endeavor Union, in convention assembled, representing fourteen societies and one thousand members, protest against the presentation of the motion-picture play, "The Birth of a Nation," and urge the passage of such laws as shall prevent the production of such public performances as provoke racial hatreds and misunderstandings.

Copies of the resolution were sent to Governor Walsh, President Coolidge of the Senate, Speaker Cox of the House, John B. Schoeffel, manager of the Tremont Theatre, and to the Boston newspapers.

Negroes to Continue Fight

At a mass meeting of negroes at the People's Baptist Church last night, Rev. Aaron W. Puller, the pastor, gave the incidents of the disturbance at the Tremont Theatre on the night of April 17, in which he was involved. Other speakers urged the audience to continue their fight against the presentation of the film play, "The Birth of A Nation," and to resort to violence, if necessary. Mr. Puller remonstrated against violence, however, and declared that the best way to fight the film play was by law. The pastor was the speaker also at a meeting of the J. C. Price Musical and Literary Society at the Columbus Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. Here again he advised opposition to the film play through cooperation, but in a sane way.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 5, 1915

PLAYING TO CAPACITY.

"The Birth of a Nation" enters its Second Big Month at the Tremont Theatre.

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" enters upon the second big month of its run at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, Monday afternoon. The play is the most widely discussed topic in this State and for a fortnight has overshadowed even the European war and the Roosevelt Barnes trial as a front page feature. On Monday morning at 10.30 o'clock a special performance was given with the members of the legislature and other officials as invited guests.

Mr. Griffith's production has developed an enormous number of friends in Greater Boston and all the surrounding places. It has now been viewed by more than 75,000 patrons. Their support, with that of those who sympathize with them, outweighs the opposition. The issue of freedom of dramatic speech is involved in the play's continuance. It is hoped a wise and reasonable censorship bill will be passed that will not curtail the privileges of stage producers nor render nugatory such wonderful art achievements as the one Mr. Griffith has accomplished.

Public performances are given at the Tremont Theatre twice daily at 2.10 and 8.10 p. m. except on Sundays. The prices range from 25c. to $2.00 evenings and Saturday matinees, and 25c. to $1.00 the other matinees. Mail orders when accompanied by check and stamped self-addressed envelope are promptly filled. The run is proving the most extraordinary one in the history of Boston theatricals, all the performances up to date having been absolute capacity.

NFIELD (Mass.) RECORDER
GREEN MAY 5, 1915

MOVIE REGULATION

The agitation in Boston over the film representation, "The Birth of a Nation" brings to direct issue the question of the public regulation of the motion picture business. On the one side, it is made clear that the only legal restraint is upon immoral features. On the legislative side, there is confusion over the extent to which the public may go in restraint of films that are objectionable on other grounds than their immorality. The moving picture investment has reached proportions that give ground for the familiar plea of the rights of property which may not be sacrificed.

With all the claims that are made for the new and by far the most popular form of entertainment that it is educational and harmlessly diverting there comes an obligation to keep it up to these specifications. When it becomes offensive in any particular, as in the case of the Birth of a Nation through its race reflections, it fails to justify its rights. The issue ought be fairly met. The right of the public to restrain what is objectionable, offensive, injurious, likely to disturb, can hardly be questioned as a moral right. And the writing of the moral right into a statute is the task of the legislature.

A careful, just, searching defense of the thousands who witness the movies against not only moral harm in the sense that word is narrowly used, but against the implanting of harmful prejudices, is in the interest of the theatre owners and the film makers. It is secondary at best to the public interest, but it is not antagonistic. The men most interested financially can least afford to have the instrument of the public's entertainment and their profit discredited.

It will be fortunate if out of this agitation there comes a means of passing oversight that will be for the common interest. Somewhere there needs to be a tribunal before which can be heard the merit of any question of exhibition.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 4, 1915

FILM MEN ASK JUST SOLUTION OF PROBLEMS IN BIG INDUSTRY

Film history is being written in Boston these days. A crisis has been reached in the motion picture industry. Exhibitors and theatre owners realize that the agitation stirred by "The Birth of a Nation" has brought matters to a head.

They demand an accounting right now. Producers claim delusions, misunderstandings and prejudices should be swept aside at once and a solution reached, not only for the sake of photo-play art, but for the interests of the public.

The motion picture men say the future of this industry in Boston and Massachusetts depends on wise and just adjustment of present difficulties for all time. They hail a satisfactory settlement, but insist that it shall be final and equitable.

It is the consensus of opinion that no remedy has been found or even hinted at in the whirlwind of proposed legislation resulting from the criticism of the historic production at the Tremont Theatre. Even prominent legislators prefer the present law to any of the hysterical relief measures, the majority of which have been carried into oblivion by the weight of their own defects.

As the film producers and exhibitors view it, the most vicious feature of the present agitation is its direct blow at free speech and a free press. They say these two phases should be kept constantly in mind. They further aver that the placing of any arbitrary power in the hands of a coterie of office holders would be unconstitutional and a public menace.

So they insist on a "show-down" and they are doing their level best to bring it about in the Massachusetts Legislature. When the Legislature shuts up shop and attends a photo-play in a body to judge the merits of disputed films the situation must be acute. That's what happened yesterday at the Tremont Theatre when the solons and their wives, daughters and sisters filled the house to witness a private display of the much-discussed film.

SEEN BY LEGISLATORS.

It was a novel event. It marked an epoch in public amusements. The management had thrown open its doors and the producers "presented their evidence," as the announcer put it, adding:

"In view of the many misstatements the management felt it would be better for the members of the Legislature not to accept our argument or the argument of our opponents, but to behold the proof first hand. We will today show what is being produced to the public twice daily and at the close, at the request of the Committee on Judiciary, will throw on the screen the parts excluded by order of the court."

The legislators and their friends were presented with programs by girls in flounces and hoop skirts and ushered to their seats by young men in uniform, some in Confederate gray and others in Union blue.

The music, chorus of Southern melodies and the marvelous photographic excellence of the performance were freely commented on in the foyer. So was the dramatic intensity and magnitude of the production.

The management claims it took nearly nine months to perfect the play and that 18,000 people took part. The production shows the possibilities of the film art.

A very few applauded the slide announcing that although 400,000 Ku Klux shrouds were made in secret by the women there was not a single violation of confidence. There was general and vigorous applause when the Ku Klux clan galloped to the rescue.

Not a few of the solons said they were impressed by the introductory slide, which read:

> A PLEA FOR THE ART OF THE MOTION PICTURE.
>
> We do not fear censorship, for we have no wish to offend with improprieties or obscenities, but we do demand, as a right, the liberty to show the dark side of wrong, that we may illuminate the bright side of virtue; the same liberty that is conceded to the art of the written word—that art to which we owe the Bible and the works of Shakespeare.

FIGHT CARSTENS BILL.

The slide epitomizes the contentions of all exhibitors and film producers in their campaign for a just and equitable law. They are eager to live up to the law and more eager to educate and not offend or degrade the public. Hence the acuteness and importance of the present situation.

The Committee on Judiciary has reported a bill making the Mayor, Police Commissioner and the chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court a board of censors whose decision must be unanimous and from which there can be no appeal.

On Wednesday the next skirmish in the film war will be fought out before the Senate Committee on Ways and Means when the exhibitors, film exchange proprietors, representatives of the Central Labor Union and the [illegible]

[illegible] hopes pictures [illegible]

Continued on Page Nine, Column 6

Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange will combat the Carstens bill. The Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will turn out in a body with counsel.

The bill would vest the State Board of Labor and Industries with an arbitrary power in the censorship of photo-plays and all public entertainments without ascribing specific cause.

The executive committee of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange adopted the following resolutions opposing the Carstens beasure:

Voted, That the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange views with disfavor the substitution for the National Board of Censorship, a paid board of censors for motion pictures, in the Commonwealth for the following reasons:

Such a board would impose hardships upon Massachusetts enterprises because of the inability of such a limited board to censor the requisite number of films to meet the demand.

Such a board would be superfluous because the national board already performs the necessary service adequately and without expense, while a board less efficient, because of its size, would entail considerable expense upon the Commonwealth.

PRAISE NATIONAL BOARD.

The character of the National Board of Censorship is beyond question, because its personnel is derived from organizations of the highest standing in New York city, whose function it is disinterestedly to conserve the public good, and it is our belief that a local board of the character suggested could not render better service.

The Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange recommends, however, that an unpaid commission of three members of the highest type of citizenship should be appointed by the Governor, with full power to pass upon those films and plays only in any theatre, motion picture house or place of amusement, against which question may be raised as to whether they are immoral or obscene, or incite race or creed prejudices.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 5, 1915

"NOT GUILTY" IS RIOT CASE VERDICT

TICKET SELLER AT THE THEATRE IS CENSURED

Court Frees W. M. Trotter and Rev. Aaron Puller of Charges Inciting Violence

In finding William Monroe Trotter and Rev. Aaron Puller not guilty of inciting riot and disturbing the peace at the Tremont Theatre on April 17, in connection with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," Judge Brackett severely criticised the ticket seller for unfair discrimination between white and colored persons and declared that the conduct of the ticket seller was largely responsible for what occurred on that night.

Although discharged on the charges of inciting riot and disturbing the peace, Trotter was found guilty of assault on an officer and fined $20. He entered an appeal.

In giving his decision Judge Brackett said: "I severely criticise the man who sold the tickets on that night. When he testified here that he sold no more tickets after being ordered to stop, I hoped to believe him.

"It was the theatre's right to stop the sale of tickets. But I find upon the evidence in this case that the ticket seller continued to sell and used unfair discrimination between white and colored applicants for tickets. His conduct is largely responsible for what occurred.

"Mr. Trotter's conduct was not what it should have been, considering his influence with his people. If his people were wronged they should have sought redress later in the Legislature or in the courts."

He said further that Trotter and Rev. Dr. Puller would have done better had they counselled their friends to leave the theatre in peace. He complimented the attorneys on both sides for the spirit and fair manner in which the case was conducted, and also those persons who have attended the hearings for their exemplary [illegible]

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 4, 1915

PRESENT MONSTER ANTI-RACE FILM PROTEST IN HOUSE

Representative Rowley of Brookline presented to the House today an impressive petition, signed by Joseph Lee, a member of the Boston school committee, and 4534 others "in aid of legislation relative to public entertainments that are immoral or indecent or that tend to excite racial or religious prejudice."

The petition, which is one of the biggest in point of signatures that has been filed in either branch of the Legislature for years, contains the names of practically all of those who have taken a prominent part in the protest against the production of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation." The signers include the following:

Joseph Lee and Margaret C. Lee, 96 Mt. Vernon street; Christopher R. Eliot, 2 West Cedar street; F. P. Sprague, 229 Commonwealth avenue; Elizabeth C. Putnam, 104 Marlborough street; James J. Putnam, 106 Marlborough street; Grace Wolcott, 202 Marlborough street; Zilia C. Perry, Margaret Perry, Edith Perry and Thomas C. Perry, 312 Marlborough street; Georgia Lowell, 12 Fairfield street; Miss Lucy S. Sampson, 229 Commonwealth avenue; E. P. Tilton, Marlborough street; Harriet Minot Laughlin, 50 Commonwealth avenue; Mrs. H. P. Phillips, Tufts College.

Practically all of the signatures were obtained in Boston and the immediate vicinity.

At a meeting of the first district of the Boston Christian Endeavor Union, representing 14 societies and 1000 members, in the First Presbyterian [illegible] ing resolutions were adopted, copies of which, today, were sent to the Legislature and to Gov. Walsh. The resolutions protest against "the presentation of the motion picture play, 'The Birth of a Nation,' and urge the passage of such laws as shall prevent the production of such public presentation as will promote racial hatred and injustice."

There will be a big mass protest meeting tonight in the Columbus Avenue A. M. E. Church, at Columbus avenue and Northampton street, and a similar meeting tomorrow night in the Camden Street Church.

Indorse Hallowell Bill and "Race" Day

The Boston Literary and Historical Association, at its regular meeting last night in the St. Mark Congregational Church, indorsed the Hallowell bill for the censorship of plays, and urged its members to go before the Legislature today, in an effort to urge that body to take favorable action. Resolutions adopted by the organization deplored the visit to the Tremont Theatre yesterday of members of the state Legislature, to witness the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," as guests of the management, and further deplored the applause which greeted the activities of the Ku Klux Klan, as depicted upon the screen.

Members of the association, who witnessed the photo-play, adopted resolutions expressing agreement with Prof. A. B. Hart that "the play is based upon the most hideous of crimes, and is calculated to arouse passionate and destroying race hatred."

As colored citizens of Boston and Massachusetts, the members in their resolutions appeal to the Legislature to forbid further showing in city and state of a play which, they assert, promotes the Southern propaganda of disfranchisement and lynching, by quick passage of the Hallowell bill. The movement of the united denominations designating May 23 as "Race Day," to oppose race hatred and prejudice, also is indorsed by the association.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 5, 1915

No One Should Judge a Play Like "The Birth of a Nation" Unless He Has Seen It

The AMERICAN publishes below a letter from Carrie Washington Reed concerning the censorship of moving picture exhibitions.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I have read your editorial anent the "Birth of a Nation" photo-play and the legislation aimed to suppress it, and while I do not agree with your conclusions, it is pleasing to note your friendly and deserving tribute to the colored race, contained therein, which in substance is a condemnation of the play.

Your defence of the "liberty of the press," however, suggests to me that historic utterance: "O Liberty! Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!"

You admit that the play is not true to history and that it libels the colored race, I glean, when you say "a race can be libeled, but it cannot be really harmed by misrepresenting history. So we ought not to overthrow a principle of liberty, in a vain attempt to prevent a harmless libel." But would you have the 10,000,000 of our colored citizens grossly maligned, for the "liberty of the press"?

Why not invite colored men into your office, as you do white men, to discuss these great issues, so that the world may know their viewpoint? Seventy-five thousand colored citizens of Massachusetts, without a dissenting voice, demand the suppression of this play, a situation almost unprecedented in our history.

None but colored men and women can fully appreciate the cruel injustice of this production, which, its sponsors have admitted, is aimed to embitter the white man against his colored brother.

Young men, women and children, who have no personal knowledge of the reconstruction period and have been unable to secure any accurate, historical facts relating thereto, see the play and are told that it is true; that Boston would not license the pictures were the events there portrayed false. The result is that they believe what they have seen and come away with an intensely bitter feeling against the colored race, which is there pictured only as an ignorant, depraved, lustful people.

Colored men have valiantly fought an uphill battle against tremendous odds since the war and have had to contend against intense prejudice, even in Boston, and to add to their burden, at this time, the production at the Tremont Theatre with its wicked design is a crime, differing in degree only from that when he was liberated and left without shelter, raiment or food, to work out his salvation in the hostile country of his former masters.

You certainly would place some regulations on picture shows. Would you permit our German citizens to present a photo-play falsely portraying men and women of French or English extraction, as depraved criminals, especially if it were admitted in advance that the object was to create prejudice against these nations?

You say "The provisions of the bill would have prohibited 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' etc." It required no law to suppress that play in the South and it was never verbally received even after being mutilated beyond recognition.

You joined in the protest against the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures, which merely represented a black man triumphing over a white man in a fair and manly test of physical strength and skill, and when they were suppressed, you said it was a great moral victory. I think you know that the opposition to those pictures was based upon racial grounds, and to be consistent you ought likewise to urge the suppression of this photo-play, which from a moral standpoint is far below the standard of prizefighting.

The Civil War is over and the South ought to be only too glad to forget, rather than come to Boston fifty years after its close, to picture the assassination of Lincoln and glorify the assassin, Booth, with his "sic semper tyrannis." Yours for justice.

CARRIE WASHINGTON REED.

No. 19 Wigglesworth street, Boston.

The AMERICAN does not attempt to justify "The Birth of a Nation" photo-play. Neither does the AMERICAN condemn it. But there is evidence in some of Mrs. Reed's criticisms that she has not seen the play, but has derived her knowledge from hearsay. For instance, she closes her letter with the statement that the play "pictures the assassination of Lincoln and glorifies the assassin, Booth, with his 'sic semper tyrannis.'"

If Mrs. Reed had seen the play she could not have made such a statement. It does not glorify the assassin Booth. It represents his act as a terrible blow to the white people of the South. The mother of the Camerons, the central Southern white figures in the play, calls Lincoln "The Great Heart," and when the news of his assassination is brought to the Cameron home, the old man bows his head and weeps and the young Southern colonel is made to say, "What hope is left for the South now?"

The impression which an intelligent and calm mind receives from this photo-play is one of sympathy for the negroes and of disgust for the Northern whites who went down to use the negroes for their own corrupt and immoral purposes. Among all the figures which stand out in relief from the enormous mass represented in this remarkable play, there are none more attractive than the negro man and woman who were attached to the Cameron household and who risked their lives to protect the old white man.

The individuals who do the vicious things are the white captain, the white politician and the half-white carpet-bagger. The great mass of the colored people are represented to be happy, innocent and easily led. What they did was as children incited by ignoble white men who played upon the wrongs they suffered in slavery.

The AMERICAN suggests that the management of "The Birth of a Nation" invite the colored people of Boston to see this play and to judge it each for himself. Let a day be reserved for this purpose.

ON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 5, 1915

ters to the Editor

E. Pillsbury's Protest

itor of The Advertiser:—
seen the moving-picture show e Birth of a Nation," and found very different from what I had to expect, I am strongly im-hat the controlling reason why it be excluded from exhibition in tts has not been brought out him be.
ed its most offensive feature to famation of the negro. Much as to this, on grounds both of justice ey, the fundamental objection to lies deeper. It is covert but most nd insidious defamation of the Une, and apotheosis of slavery and . We of the white race should be rise against it, and we do our-o credit by leaving it to our col-low-citizens to protest. With the n of the Lincoln episodes, where it y defers to a sentiment that can-ly be trifled with even in the law-North—though it is impossible to a touch of coarse caricature in of the Lincoln—it is, from the ris-
the curtain unto the going down of e, a pack of pictured lies so gro-false that but for their malice and ower of mischief, as addressed to s of a generation comparatively und, they would be simply laughable.
e of the displayed incidents most ted to exalt rebellion and excite hy for the (white) victims of reconon, probably there is not one au-nted instance in the whole history war and reconstruction period. Pur-to be historical, it is history up-own, a complete inversion of his-truth. If special pains are taken to the negro, it is because he is the object of the propaganda for repeal 14th and 15th Amendments of which lay is unquestionably a part, and it ted will be a subtle and effective in-ent. The most amazing feature of hole performance is the glorification
Ku Klux Klan, for which alone it have been composed. Fancy a deof that "secret, black and mid-horde of lawless ruffians whose ca-of outrage and murder is unhappily f the history of the country, as arisut of a chivalrous purpose to protect women against negro lust, drawing nse, probably sincere, from an honest achusetts audience! Yet they emerge end with the principal honors of the pictorial recrudescence of the Rebelis a gross libel upon the Union cause, its public leaders. Lincoln only ex-

, upon every soldier, living or dead, ought for it, and upon the whole who supported it. Slavery and re-were right, the South was outraged ancipation, the attempt to secure the in his freedom was a crime for which sale murder was the proper remedy, negro was unfit for freedom and is unr civil rights, the Yankees were van-the rebels the true chivalry, and the Klux Klan the heroes of the whole
a. This is the moral of the tale, cond with skilful innuendo and most con-mate art. It gambles on the public rance of our own history, and as a majority of people are more impressed what they see than by what they read ear, it is liable to win by permanently ing a radically false conception in the ic mind.
e selection of Massachusetts as the
for the introduction of this spectacle he public, impudent as that is, affords opportunity to deal with it here as it rves. In the South, with conditions ressed, such a show and its perpetrators ld be lynched. This is not the Massa-etts way. But unless we find a way ffectively resent this libel alike upon citizenry and our history, let us dey our soldiers' monuments, give the le-flags at the State House to the dust
, abolish our Memorial Day, and con-ourselves unfit to inherit the tradis of Massachusetts, in our impotence indicate them or the memory of the who made them.
A. E. Pillsbury.
ston, May 3.

OSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 5, 1915

DENOUNCE PHOTO-PLAY

peakers at Mass Meeting of Colored People Urge Continuance of Fight Against "Birth of a Nation"

An educational mass meeting of the younger generation of the colored people of Greater Boston was held in the People's Baptist Church, South End, last evening, and in the course of his address William Lee, directing his remarks to the young men, declared: "We are planning for the time when the legal side of this fight is exhausted. We want men to fight. Men who are strong, who have no yellow streak, who are not weak-kneed, who will give their lives for the race. It makes no difference to me how soon this happens, for I am ready now."

At the conclusion of Lee's address the Rev. Aaron Puller stated to the audience that he did not agree with all that Lee had said, and that the best way to fight the film company was by law, and not by violence. The next moment, however, Herbert H. Guppy, chairman of the meeting, announced that a collection would be taken for the Equal Rights League in case there should be trouble, to defray legal expenses and pay fines.

Among the other speakers were Mrs. Agnes Adams, colored social worker; J. Hamilton Caines, William D. Brigham, a white supporter; Julian Ring and W. Munroe Trotter, the colored editor.

The other meeting was at the Columbus Avenue M. E. Church, colored, under the auspices of the J. C. Price Musical and Literary Society. There were about 100 present at this meeting, and Dr. Puller was the principal speaker. He urged the negroes to stick together and in that way win their fight.

...erence to me now soon it happens."
On the other hand, the pastor of the church, the Rev. Aaron W. Puller, advised his hearers to be calm, law-abiding citizens, and he took exceptions to resorting to physical force. This great problem of race prejudice would never be settled, he said, until settled rightly and lawfully.

"I believe, however," he exclaimed, that on Saturday evening, April 17, Sergeant King and his men had formed a conspiracy to bring me to the police station and murder me."

He then invoked the aid of all fair-minded people, irrespective of color, creed or nationality, to lend a hand to persuade the Mayor, police commissioner and the Governor, in the name of decency, to strip Sergeant King and his subalterns of authority that gentlemen, rather than murderers, might patrol the streets as policemen.

Stirring speeches were also made by J. Hamilton Caines, Julian Ring, Mrs. Agnes Adams, William D. Brigham, the Rev. B. F. Swain and W. Munroe Trotter.

In the resolutions adopted, Representative Curran, in opposing legislation to remove the photo-play, was denounced as betraying his constituents of

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 5, 1915

PASTOR CLAIMS POLICE PLANNED TO BEAT HIM UP

Rev. A. W. Puller Addresses Two Big Meetings of Negroes.

SAYS HE WILL SUE CITY FOR $20,000

Young Men Urged to Fight For Suppression of "Birth of Nation"

Two mass meetings were held last night in colored churches in the South End to protest against the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation." The largest of the two was at the People's Baptist Church, Camden street, where about 1000 negroes, men, women and even children, gathered. It was still going on at an early hour this morning.

At this meeting Police Sergt. Martin King and several patrolmen of the La Grange street station were assailed, and the Rev. Aaron W. Puller, the pastor of the church, asserted that these men had planned to beat him when he was arrested at the riot three weeks ago at the Tremont Theater.

Puller was yesterday acquitted on the charge of inciting a riot, by Judge Brackett in the police court. He was arrested on the night of the riot by Sergt. King and several patrolmen of his station. Puller alleged last night that these men had planned to beat him in the station, but did not have the "nerve" to go through with it. He intends, so he said later to a Journal reporter, to sue the city of Boston for $20,000 on account of his arrest.

Makes Conspiracy Charge

"Sergt. King had conspired to take me to the station house and harm me, when he arrested me that Saturday night," said Puller. "We will not rest until he is stripped of every bit of police authority, and the other officers who were with him. It has come to a pretty pass when a police sergeant in Boston can stand up and say, 'Lock that nigger up.'

"That is what he said about me to five officers. Then one of them struck me, knocked me down, and five of them hustled me the block and a half to the station. Somebody in the crowd yelled 'Lynch him,' meaning me, and one of the officers yelled back, 'We'll fix him when we get him to the station house.' If there is any decency in the police commissioner, the mayor or the governor, Sergt. King and these officers will be stripped of their authority. Sergt. King offered me his hand after I was acquitted today, and I shook it, for I am still a gentleman, and always have been and I would not refuse to shake hands with any man."

William Lee, one of the speakers, urged the young colored men to get together to fight the production of the film. "If you allow this play to continue you are worse than curs," he said. "We want to get rid of the 'birth of a Nation.' How much are you people going to contribute? I am willing to contribute my body, even if in pieces, to stop this play.

Wants Young Men to Fight

"The older men have been demonstrating. We thank them for this, but now they shall be our council and we will take the action. We want young men. We are planning for the time when the legal side of this fight is exhausted. We want men to fight. Men who are strong, who have no yellow streak, who are not weak-kneed, who will give their lives for the race. It makes no difference to me how soon this happens, for I am ready now."

At the conclusion of Lee's address the Rev. Aaron Puller stated to the audience that he did not agree with all that Lee had said, and that the best way to fight the film company was by law, and not by violence. The next moment, however, Herbert H. Guppy, chairman of the meeting, announced that a collection would be taken for the Equal Rights League in case there should be trouble, to defray legal expenses and pay fines.

Among the other speakers were Mrs. Agnes Adams, colored social worker; J. Hamilton Caines, William D. Brigham, a white supporter; Julian Ring and W. Munroe Trotter, the colored editor.

The other meeting was at the Columbus Avenue M. E. Church, colored, under the auspices of the J. C. Price Musical and Literary Society. There were about 100 present at this meeting, and Dr. Puller was the principal speaker. He urged the negroes to stick together and in that way win their fight.

TAUNTON (Mass.) HERALD-NEWS
MAY 5, 1915

Boston has worked itself up into a frenzy over the moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation" to which the colored people have so strenuously objected. All of which is very good advertising for the owners of this production.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 5, 1915

TROTTER FINED FOR ASSAULT

Puller Freed—Theatre Scored by Judge for Action

At the conclusion of the cases against the Rev. Aaron Puller and William Monroe Trotter in connection with the "Birth of a Nation" troubles at the Tremont Theatre on the evening of April 17, Justice Brackett yesterday discharged Mr. Puller and fined Trotter $20 for assault upon an officer while dismissing the cases against him of disturbance and inciting a riot. Trotter appealed.

NO RIOTOUS CONDUCT

Judge Brackett decided that Mr. Trotter and the Rev. Mr. Puller might have done better in counselling their colored friends to leave the theatre as the officers directed, but could not find that their conduct could be viewed as riotous.

He placed the preponderous of blame for what occurred upon the ticket seller of the Tremont Theatre, who sold admissions to white people, while refusing them to the colored folk.

He said Officer Dennis Harrington was in fault for striking Trotter, and deserved censure. The manager of the theatre, the manager of the film, the ticket taker, and others whose names had appeared, were exonorated by the judge, who added:

"I severely criticise the man who sold the tickets. When he testified here that he sold no more, after being ordered to stop, I hoped to believe him. It was the theatre's right to stop selling. But I find, upon evidence, that the ticket seller continued to sell and used unfair discrimination between white and colored applicants for tickets. His conduct was largely responsible for what occurred.

"Mr. Trotter's conduct was not what it should have been, considering his influence with his brethren. If his people had wrongs, they should seek redress later, in the Legislature or the courts.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 5, 1915

Resolutions Against "Film Play."

District of the Boston Christian Endeavor Union has adopted resolutions against "The Birth of a Nation" and asks the Legislature to prevent such performances. The signers are William Shaw, Nan Van Syckel and Marion J. Pullen.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 5, 1915

NEGROES' ASSOCIATION CONDEMNS LEGISLATORS

The Boston Literary and Historical Association, consisting of colored men and women, has adopted resolutions condemning the members of the Legislature for having "accepted the hospitalities of the producers of a play against which legislation is pending," and appealing to the Legislature to forbid the continuance of the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 5, 1915

Representative Rowley

of Brookline, who yesterday filed in the House a petition of protest against the production of "The Birth of a Nation," signed by 25 persons, intends to offer an amendment to the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee to provide that the action of two of the three officials—the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal Court—will be sufficient to stop any production.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 5, 1915

Urges Continuance of Photoplay Fight

An educational mass meeting of the younger generation of the colored people of Greater Boston was held in the People's Baptist Church, South End, and in the course of his address William Lee directed the young men to continue the fight against "The Birth of a Nation." On the other hand, the Rev. Aaron W. Puller advised his hearers to be calm, law-abiding citizens, and he took exceptions to resorting to physical force. This great problem of race prejudice would never be settled, he said, until settled rightly and lawfully.

QUINCY (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 5, 1915

The negroes object to the Legislature seeing "The Birth of a Nation" as the guests of the proprietors, before acting on the bill to prevent its production. They say that the legislators will naturally be biased by gratitude for the free show, and that therefore the free show would amount to bribery.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 5, 1915

TROTTER FINED $20--APPEALS

Found Guilty Only of Assaulting Officer.

Judge Dismisses All Charges Against Rev Aaron Puller.

Criticises Ticket Seller for Discrimination.

After criticising the ticket seller of the Tremont Theatre for discriminating between colored and white people, Judge Brackett in a special session of the Municipal Court yesterday afternoon fined William Monroe Trotter, the colored editor, $20 for assaulting an officer and dismissed the other cases against him, and all the cases against Rev Aaron Puller.

Trotter and Dr Puller were charged with creating a disturbance and with inciting a riot at the Tremont Theatre, April 17, in connection with a performance of the film-play "The Birth of a Nation."

"I severely criticise the man who sold the tickets," said the court. "When he testified here that he sold no more after being ordered to stop, I hoped to believe him. It was the theatre's right to stop the sale of tickets. But I find upon the evidence in this case that the ticket seller continued to sell, and used unfair discrimination between white and colored applicants for tickets. His conduct is largely responsible for what occurred.

"Mr Trotter's conduct was not what it should have been considering his influence with his people, however. If his people were wronged, they should have sought redress later in the Legislature or in the courts."

The court said that Dr Puller and the editor would have done better had they counseled their friends to leave the theatre in peace.

The court complimented counsel and the audience for their conduct during the trial.

Mr Trotter appealed the case in which he was fined.

Earlier in the day Rev Montrose Thornton of the Charles-st A. M. E. Church testified that he was arrested by two officers in front of the theatre and booked on a charge of disturbing the peace at the Lagrange-st Police Station. On being searched, witness said, a ticket to the theatre was found on him and he was at once released from custody.

Dramatic Mirror
N. Y. May 5, 1915

D. W. Griffith returned to Los Angles from the East after an absence of several weeks in time to see the second opening of his "Clansman" here. He came back with a new Spring suit, different hat, purple sock and a protest.

"They are saying that the $2 prices for the 'Clansman' in New York and Boston are box charges only and otherwise take a fling at 'The Clansman' run," he said. "Here are the house sheets for performances. See for yourself. Here is New York proving up $13,500 for the week—the capacity. And it still is sold out. Here is the second week in Boston at the Tremont with a $2,100 house on Monday, the poorest day afterwards, Saturday, shows at $3,200. And, at the same time, Broadway shows are doing business at $1 and $1.50, and not so much at that. Are pictures popular? Look at the results."

W. E. Wing.

N. Y. Journal.
May 5, 1915

Negroes Did Not Incite Riot.

Boston, May 5.—William M. Trotter, editor of a weekly newspaper, and the Rev. Aaron Puller, were adjudged not guilty of inciting a riot on the night of April 17, in connection with a display of moving pictures dealing with the Southern reconstruction period. Trotter was fined $20 for an assault on a policeman. Both defendants are negroes.

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 5, 1915

NO SLUR IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," DECLARES MALON

After seeing "The birth of a nation" on the screen and subjecting it to a close and analytical study, Representative Michael F. Malone, yesterday, declared he fails to see anything in the picturized presentation of the reconstruction period which justifies the protests which have been registered against it.

Representative Malone declares that he was much surprised to see the picture as it really is, after the lurid descriptions he had read of it and the word pictures which protesting delegations had painted of it for the benefit of legislators.

It was intimated strongly by Representative Malone that he will not vote for any bill which will, in his opinion, prohibit the showing of the film or effect any material reduction in its length through cuts.

Representative Malone admits that in some sections of the film a few colored people are not shown up to great advantage from certain [illegible] social ethics [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 5, 1915

NEGROES HAIL DISCHARGE OF PASTOR PULLER

Applause in Court Checked as Judge Brackett Rules the Defendant in Film Case Neither Incited Riot Nor Disturbed the Peace—Trotter Is Fined for Assault.

Negroes who filled Judge Brackett's session of the municipal court yesterday clapped their hands when the court found the Rev. Aaron W. Puller, pastor of the Cavalry Baptist Church, not guilty of inciting a riot and disturbing the peace, during the outburst against "The Birth of a Nation," in the lobby of the Tremont Theatre on the night of April 17. The clerk stopped reading the court's order; rapped on his desk, and the applause died out quickly.

William Munroe Trotter, editor of a weekly newspaper devoted to the interests of the Negro, who has been on trial with the Rev. Mr. Puller, was also found not guilty on those two charges, but the court held that he kicked Patrolman Conare of the Lagrange street station, and fined him $20 for assault. From this sentence Trotter entered an appeal.

Judge Blames Theatre.

Judge Brackett's finding was a lengthy discussion of the case, in which he held that a ticket seller at the Tremont Theatre was in no small way to blame for the disturbance. He said:

"When the ticket man said on the witness stand that he sold no tickets after 7:15 o'clock, I hoped that I could believe him, but subsequent testimony convinced me that his statement was not a fact. He showed unfair discrimination. His acts were unreasonable discrimination against a respected part of the community, and I am not afraid to give such criticism in a public place. I believe the ticket man was largely responsible for the trouble. The testimony of a Mrs. Moore, who asked for a ticket, saw it taken from the rack and then put back when the ticket man noticed that she was a Negress, is convincing."

In speaking of the Rev. Mr. Puller's acts, the court said they were not those such as could come under the law providing against inciting a riot or disturbing the peace. He said that, as the defence contended, the act of Patrolman Harrigan in striking one of the defendants did much to aggravate affairs.

Relative to Trotter's case, the court said that the editor's conduct was not all that it should have been, as he should have realized his leadership among the colored people and asked them to leave the lobby.

Closing his finding in the case, Judge Brackett complimented counsel, witnesses and spectators on their conduct in court, and said that he believed they would exercise the same self-control in their agitation against the photoplay as they did in a movement against anything they resented. Redress for wrong, he warned them, should be sought only in the courts or in the

Traveler, Boston
May 5, 1915

THE B

PASTOR PULLER FREED IN COURT

Editor Trotter Fined as Result of Film Play Disturbance at Theatre.

Negroes who filled Judge Brackett's session of the municipal court yesterday clapped their hands when the court found the Rev. Aaron W. Puller, pastor of the Cavalry Baptist Church, not guilty of inciting a riot and disturbing the peace, during the outburst against "The Birth of a Nation," in the lobby of the Tremont Theatre on the night of April 17. The clerk stopped reading the court's order; rapped on his desk, and the applause died out quickly.

William Munroe Trotter, editor of a weekly newspaper devoted to the interests of the Negro, who has been on trial with the Rev. Mr. Puller, was also found not guilty on those two charges, but the court held that he kicked Patrolman Conare of the Lagrange street station, and fined him $20 for assault. From this sentence Trotter entered an appeal.

Judge Blames Theatre.

Judge Brackett's finding was a lengthy discussion of the case, in which he held that a ticket seller at the Tremont Theatre was in no small way to blame for the disturbance. He said:

"When the ticket man said on the witness stand that he sold no tickets after 7:15 o'clock, I hoped that I could believe him, but subsequent testimony convinced me that his statement was not a fact. He showed unfair discrimination. His acts were unreasonable discrimination against a respected part [illegible] community, and I am not afraid [illegible] such criticism in a public place. [illegible]ve the ticket man was largely [illegible]sible for the trouble. The tes[illegible]ny of a Mrs. Moore, who asked for [illegible]cket, saw it taken from the rack [illegible] then put back when the ticket man noticed that she was a Negress, is convincing."

In speaking of the Rev. Mr. Puller's acts, the court said they were not those such as would come under the law providing against inciting a riot or disturbing the peace. He said that, as the defence contended, the act of Patrolman Farrigan in striking one of the defendants did much to aggravate affairs.

Relative to Trotter's case, the court said that the editor's conduct was not all that it should have been, as he should have realized his leadership among the colored people and asked them to leave the lobby.

Closing his finding in the case, Judge Brackett complimented counsel, witnesses and spectators on their conduct in court, and said that he believed they would exercise the same self-control in their agitation against the photo-play as they did in a movement against [illegible] they resented. Redress from [illegible] he warned them, should be [illegible]t only in the courts or in the Leg[illegible]ure.

[illegible]LEY OFFERS PETITION AGAINST RACIAL PLAYS

[illegible]esentative Rowley of Brookline [illegible]ed in the House yesterday an inno[illegible]ous petition, signed by Joseph Lee, [illegible]t of the Boston school com[illegible]the 44,454 others "in aid of legis[illegible]violative to public entertainments gen[illegible]rammoral or indecent or that [illegible]e basis racial or religious preju[illegible]resses."

Not [illegible]

were [illegible]

slide.

ASSOCIATION [illegible]DEMNS LEGISLATORS

[illegible]ston Literary and Historical [illegible]n, consisting of colored men [illegible]en, has adopted resolutions [illegible]ng the members of the Legis[illegible]re having "accepted the hospi[illegible]y the producers of a play against [illegible]islation is pending," and ap[illegible]o the Legislature to forbid the [illegible]nce of the exhibition of "The [illegible]a Nation."

Page Nine, Column 4.

Boston American
May 5, 1915

ARBITRARY FILM BILLS ATTACKED

Representative Eben K. Bowser of Wakefield, one of the three members of the Judiciary Committee who dissented to the compromise censorship bill reported last week, today told why he voted against the measure. He said:

"What sense is there in passing new laws which injure rather than benefit? I prefer the present statute to the Judiciary Committee bill. The measure reported adds as a censor the chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court. The present statute bestows the power of censorship upon the Mayor and police commissioner.

"Now I have the most profound respect for Chief Justice Bolster. I think he is a splendid type of judge and citizen. But when I say I don't think he should sit as a censor of photo plays or any other public entertainment I do not wish to reflect in the slightest measure on him personally.

"My objection is general. I do not think a justice whose tenure of office is for life, should be asked to censor plays or films with the Mayor and police commissioner. Not that a judge wouldn't be apt carefully and conscientiously to weigh all the facts, as I am sure Chief Justice Bolster would do, but such a statute would establish a dangerous precedent.

"In the first place the committee measure gives a power altogether too arbitrary, and, in the second place, it bestows the power to a judge who is appointed and not elected. He and the Mayor and police commissioner must be unanimous in their decision from which there can be no appeal.

'RELIEF' MISSES MARK.

"I would prefer to give all the power to a Mayor, because he could be made answerable to the people if he was found to be false to his trust and to graft. Another feature I dislike about the committee bill is failure to specify cause for suspension and failure to give aggrieved managers the right to appeal.

"I say if we cannot improve the present law let it alone. I haven't seen a relief measure offered yet that comes anywhere near hitting the mark. It is my purpose to offer an amendment to the Judiciary Committee censorship bill to eliminate the chief justice of the Municipal Court as a censor. If that is done I feel satisfied the bill will die a natural death, because the committee will then have no further interest in it.

"I have seen 'The Birth of a Nation' twice. It is a wonderful production from a photographic and entertainment standpoint. It is really thrilling. It shows the possibilities of the motion picture art. The photo-play has come to stay and it is already a tremendous power in our everyday life. It has great educational advantages. It is growing with leaps and bounds, as the production at the Tremont Theatre shows. Therefore proper safeguards should be prepared to protect rather than injure the industry.

"Even if the Judiciary Committee bill were made a law it admittedly could not prevent the exhibition of 'The Birth of a Nation' which apparantly has been the target for the various measures offered. Why stir matters up and attempt changes that will leave us deeper in the mire than if we stand by the present law?"

'BILLS TOO ARBITRARY.'

"The committee bill and kindred measures are too broad and arbitrary. They are not just. Such laws could be so abused as to interfere with public meetings and free speech and froodom of the press. While freedom of the press is sacred it might be argued that next to it should be freedom of the stage, except where virtue and morals are assailed."

At the hearing to be given today by the Senate Commitee on Ways and Means the Massachusetts Exhibitors League, Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange and the Central Labor Union will oppose the Carstens bill, which aims to give censorship power to the State Board of Labor and Industries and to impose a tax of $1 to $2 on all films brought into the State.

The following denouncement of the Carstens bill has been issued by Fred J. Dempsey, president Local 11, International Alliance Stage Employes, and John J. Barry, corresponding secretary of the Boston Central Labor Union:

"FANATICAL LEGISLATION OPPOSED BY ORGANIZED LABOR.

"Any measure, whether private or public, or of private or legislative origin, that contemplates danger for the interests of personal liberty or the rights of the hosts of the working men in Massachustts cannot and will not receive the support of the labor organizations throughout the State.

"Senate Bill 202, under discussion before the Senate of Massachusetts, is such a measure, and, in its conception, shows a woeful lack of consideration of the facts governing the exhibition of motion pictures which its propofients seek to hamper, and absolutely no positive knowledge of the far-reaching and disastrous effects of the passage of this bill.

"They ask that a sweeping censorship of motion pictures be vested in a State Board composed of three members, but have they ever asked themselves or anyone else what the effects of such a condition would be? Upon their own statements they would eliminate the possibility of producing about 30 per cent. of the out of film plays that are now be[illegible]hown in this Commonwealth.

SEE PERIL IN BILLS.

"Do they know that the present output of motion pictures is hardly sufficient to supply the demand necessary to continue the operation of upward of 600 theatres in this State devoted to their exhibition?

"And what would this mean? It does not take a person of extraordinary intelligence to figure out that inevitably about thirty per cent. of the motion picture theatres of the State would be forced to close their doors. Thirty per cent. of the poor man's—the working man's—theatres would be barred to them.

"Is it a just or promising measure that proposes to deprive the working man of his cheap amusement?

"And what would be the further result of the adoption of this legislation? Cannot its proponents conceive that with thirty per cent. of their product useless on their hands, the film manufacturers, most, for the salvation of their business in this State, ask more from the exhibitor who is fortunate enough to still have his business for the privilege of showing the pictures to the public?

"This is just what will happen, and, inevitably, it means that the exhibitor will ask of the patron that he make up his increased cost of doing business. Who, then, is the ultimate sufferer but the public—the ordinary man, woman or child who can afford a nominal small price of admission but who cannot afford the luxury of the higher priced entertainments? And it would not be too far a cry to predict average picture shows at prices up to fifty cents. In short the passage of this measure would presage the death of the poor man's show.

"Have these seekers after frenzied legislation considered for a minute that in the closing of thirty per cent. of the motion picture theatres of Massachusetts they would throw out of employment the unionized employes of conservatively 175 theatres?

CALL FOR FREEDOM.

"If they want it further enumerated, let us quote figures. It would mean the unemployment of about 175 operators and possibly 150 assistants, at least 600 musicians, at least 375 stage mechanics, and, at the very lowest, 1,800 other employes of these theatres depending upon them for a livelihood.

"It is hardly necessary to state that the projection of many picture theatres, entailing large costs of construction and meaning the employment now and permanently of many hundreds of working men of the Commonwealth, will be, and are, halted for the settlement of this pertinent question.

"Organized labor has always stood and always will stand, not for the privilege and caprices of the few, be they classes, races or creeds, but for the full quota of freedom, and it does stand for the rights of the working man and the personal comforts of the poor man.

"Senate bill 202 seeks to encompass all of these, and, as a needless measure, aimed toward the supposed satisfaction of a few, is nothing less than a hysterical effort to place more law on the already overburdened statute books, where it is not only inefficient but not wanted.

"As opposed to this legislation the undersigned representatives of the Boston Central Labor Union ask that this bill be further considered with the true facts distinctly in view and defeated as unproductive of welfare and happiness for the working man of Massachusetts.

"Fred J. Dempsey, president Local 11, International Alliance Stage Employes; John J. Barry, corresponding secretary Boston Central Labor Union."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 5, 1915

JOURNAL MAIL BAG

Says Whites Should Resent "Birth of a Nation"

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

Having seen the moving picture show called "The Birth of a Nation," and found it the very different from what I had been led to expect, I am strongly impressed that the controlling reason why it ought to be excluded from exhibition in Massachusetts has not been brought out as it should be.

I suppose its most offensive feature to be its defamation of the negro. Much as I object to this, on grounds both of justice and policy, the fundamental objection to this play lies deeper. It is covert, but most skilful and insidious defamation of the Union cause, and apotheosis of slavery and rebellion. We of the white race should be first to rise against it, and we do ourselves no credit by leaving it to our colored fellow-citizens to protest.

With the exception of the Lincoln episodes, where it cunningly defers to a sentiment that cannot safely be trifled with even in the law-abiding North—though it is impossible to overlook a touch of coarse caricature in the face of the Lincoln—it is, from the rising of the curtain until the going down of the same, a pack of pictured lies so grotesquely false that but for their malice and their power of mischief, as addressed to the eyes of a generation comparatively uninformed, they would be simply laughable.

Of some of the displayed incidents most calculated to exalt rebellion and excite sympathy for the (white) victims of reconstruction, probably there is not one authenticated instance in the whole history of the war and reconstruction period. Purporting to be historical, it is history upside down, a complete inversion of historical truth. If special pains are taken to vilify the negro, it is because he is the special object of the propaganda for the repeal of the 14th and 15th amendments of which this play is unquestionably a part and if tolerated will be a subtle and effective instrument.

The most amazing feature of the whole performance is the glorification of the Ku Klux Klan, for which alone it might have been composed. Fancy a depiction of that "secret, black and midnight" horde of lawless ruffians whose career of outrage and murder is unhappily part of the history of the country, as arising out of a chivalrous purpose to protect white women against negro lust, drawing applause, probably sincere, from an honest Massachusetts audience! Yet they emerge at the end with the principal honors of the piece.

This pictorial recrudescence of the rebellion is a gross libel upon the Union cause, upon its public leaders, Lincoln only excepted, upon every soldier, living or dead, who fought for it, and upon the whole people who supported it. Slavery and rebellion were right, the South was outraged by emancipation, the attempt to secure the negro in his freedom was a crime for which wholesale murder was the proper remedy, the negro was unfit for freedom and is unfit for civil rights, the Yankees were vandals, the rebels the true chivalry, and the Ku Klux Klan the heroes of the whole drama. This is the moral of the tale, conveyed with skilful innuendo and most consummate art. It gambles on the public ignorance of our own history, and as the vast majority of people are more impressed by what they see than by what they read or hear, it is liable to win by permanently lodging a radically false conception in the public mind.

The selection of Massachusetts as the field for the introduction of this spectacle to the public, impudent as the step affords the opportunity to deal with it here as it deserves. In the South, with conditions reversed, such a show and its perpetrators would be lynched. This is not the Massachusetts way. But unless we find a way to effectively resent this libel alike upon our citizenry and our history, let us destroy our soldiers' monuments, give the battle flags at the State House to the dust heap, abolish our Memorial day, and confess ourselves unfit to inherit the traditions of Massachusetts, in our impotence to vindicate them or the memory of the men who made them. A. E. PILLSBURY.

Boston.

Resents Latest Attack on "Birth of a Nation"

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

"I have seen a copy of Mr. Pillsbury's letter to the newspapers. His missive is a special brief to cover up the mistakes of his partizans in this matter. They first charged 'The Birth of a Nation' with being immoral and obscene, then shifted the attack to the alleged prejudice they said it exhibited against the negro. They were unable to win over the body of Boston opinion to their views on these grounds. Now Mr. Pillsbury steps to the front and takes a fresh line of attack by denouncing it as 'a covert but most skilful and insidious attack on the Union cause and an apotheosis of slavery and rebellion!'

"Is Mr. Pillsbury still living in and dwelling among the sectional hates of the era of 'slavery and rebellion?' It seems to us he is a veritable Rip Van Winkle of long-bygone animosities. Does he not know that Unionism is held as devotedly by the people of the South as by the people of the North, by Mr. Griffith, the author of this film, as by Mr. Pillsbury himself and his fellows? The blood of Northern and Southern men were split together in the Spanish-American War. Another struggle with a foreign power, should this nation again be dragged into war, would again prove the Southerners' whole-hearted, passionate loyalty. Why then this talk about 'insidious attack on the Union cause?' The men and women connected with 'The Birth of a Nation' play do not yield, in their love of the Union, even to Mr. Pillsbury. As a matter of fact, they regard his aspersions as unthinkable. Sons of Union veterans work for the film company, and among the many letters of commendation received by the management there is no line of [illegible] between those who were for the [illegible] those who were the Union.

"If our opponent could not learn of his Rip Van Winkle mental attitude he would see 'The Birth of a Nation' in its really [illegible]-fictional romance of the Lost Cause. His criticism is as absurd as that of a Hottentot overlan promising Mr. Walter Scott 'Waverley' on the fancied ground of its inciting the restoration of the Stuart kings. Scott shed the halo of romance over a broken dynasty and the long-since-reconciled rebel Highlanders of a few years previous. Mr. Griffith has done much the same. Of some of the [illegible] played incidents' in the piece, Mr. Pillsbury tells us there is no historical basis. What of it? Has not every writer of historical novels drawn on imagination to some extent? The [illegible] writer's misstatement that 'The Birth of a Nation' is a pack of pictorial lies' can be readily disproved by reference to Woodrow Wilson's and Fleming's chapters on Reconstruction, and to the voluminous congressional reports on the Ku Klux Klan. The latter as a special subject of Mr. Pillsbury's ire. His characterization of them as a 'secret, black and midnight horde of lawless ruffians' is far wider of the truth than any fictionist's glorification of them as protectors of oppressed Southern whites, which in very many instances they actually and undeniably were.

"Attack on the Union cause!' Mr. Pillsbury's frenzied phrase should make men laugh and the gods weep. The glorification of Unionism in the play includes (1), the reverent treatment of President Lincoln (notwithstanding Mr. Pillsbury's silly sneer); (2), the apotheosis of Daniel Webster and the flaming of his immortal sentiment; (3), the dignity and moral grandeur of Grant; (4), the heroism of the Roseman boys, the protagonists of Northern chivalry; the depiction of the wonderful bravery and knightly qualities of all the Union fighters; the scenes in the federal hospital and the Executive Mansion; the death of Lincoln represented as the loss to the South of its best friend; the final reunion of the nation after treating Reconstruction in the bonds of love and peace. Such are but a few of the many points that could be cited to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt the realisation of national unity, as the title indicates, forms the very breath and life of the drama.

"The producers of 'The Birth of a Nation' are not trying for a repeal of the 14th and 15th Amendments. They are not insidiously attempting to bring back slavery (the very thought provokes a smile), and they are not actuated by political motives. They do not share Mr. Dixon's radical view of a future Liberia for American negroes; over against the imaginative scene of the great Liberia once dreamed of by Lincoln is displayed the happy record of negro progress and prosperity since the war. And any schoolboy could have told Mr. Pillsbury that the depiction of the antics and excesses of recently freed negroes, as shown in the play during Reconstruction times does not in any manner indict or malign the negro of today.

"In conclusion, we resent the unfounded, biased and prejudiced attempt to impugn the motif and purpose of this art-work of Mr. Griffith's. Our actions and activities have all been lawful and honorable, we have obeyed every request made to us by the properly constituted authorities, and we are exhibiting a play which has already been witnessed and enthusiastically applauded and indorsed by many thousands of Bostonians. To drive 'The Birth of a Nation' out of Boston would mean that no different interpretation of Reconstruction times could obtain free speech in this city save that which is Mr. Pillsbury's, and that of his co-workers in this matter, who, we are convinced, do not represent any considerable faction of the citizenship."

J. J. M'CARTHY.

General manager of "The Birth of a Nation" Company.

Boston, May 4, 1915.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 7, 1915

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Margaret Cameron, a daughter of the South, comes upon her father, Dr. Cameron, engaged in a heated discussion of the slavery question with Judge Carter and a group of Southern gentlemen on the veranda of the Cameron mansion. A raid on Harper's Ferry by John Brown, with 18 followers, has recently been made.

The girl brings the men refreshments in an effort to end the discussion and, after drinking a toast to "Stephen Douglas, the next President," the company departs.

The scene then shifts to the North, to the home of Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, who is noted for his vindictive policies toward the Southern States.

Stoneman is engaged in conversation with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts and zealous Abolitionist. Both men are sincere in their convictions of the wickedness of slavery and its inconsistency with Republican institutions.

Their conversation is overheard by Lydia Brown, a mulatto woman, ostensibly the housekeeper, but in reality mistress of the Stoneman house. As Sumner departs the woman resolves to use the insidious influence of her position to bring freedom to her race.

By Gertrude Stevenson

Part III. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part II. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

Tod Stoneman, sitting in an easy chair under a spreading tree, was laboriously at work writing a letter. He had written the message twice and was attempting to make the third a legible document, without any great prospect of success.

In this respect, and in no other, he was a true chip of the old block, for Austin Stoneman was the worst penman in three counties.

He never took any notes in his big law cases. According to his admirers, his remarkable memory made them unnecessary, but if you were to believe certain others it was because he couldn't read them five minutes after he had jotted them down. His younger son inherited the wretched chirography without the wonderful memory, and would not have attempted a letter had the occasion not been urgent.

STONEMAN BOYS GOING SOUTH

He and Phil were preparing to accept Ben and Duke Cameron's oft repeated invitation to visit Piedmont. The four had attended the same school and were boon companions. Phil and Ben were more devoted than brothers, and Duke and Tod had been inseparable.

An hour before Phil had labeled Tod a lazy young rascal and with true big-brother domineering had commanded him to send the Camerons word of their approaching visit.

"Dear Bennie"—Tod had begun—"True to our promise, brother and I are coming to visit you, arriving in Piedmont on Friday next. We are both dying to see you and meet your kith and kin."

Not being able to think of anything more and fearing to spoil this third effort with any addition, he raised his voice in a lusty shout for Phil to hasten to see and countersign the masterpiece.

Looking quite manly in his youthful but not wholly successful attempts at mustache and "sideboards," Phil came striding down the walk to his young brother's literary retreat.

"You don't mean to tell me you've finished it so soon?" he demanded.

"And so much?" he laughed as he perused the few, badly scrawled lines. "But it covers the ground and that's all that's necessary. We'll have plenty of time to talk all we want to say when we get there."

"That's all the thanks a fellow gets for an afternoon of honest toil," Tod grumbled, and was about to feel abused at his brother's raillery when his eyes suddenly lighted with the dear, boyish smile which made his homely face really beautiful. Phil followed his brother's glance. At the end of the path stood their sister, arrayed in the latest fashion, and engaged in earnest conversation with a mischievous Angora kitten.

"She talks to that cat as though it were a person," and Phil grinned.

"'Member she used to talk to her dolls the same way?" added Tod, lovingly, as both stood watching the young girl alternately scolding and fondling the unperturbed bit of snowy fluff in her arms.

Elsie Is Adorable in Her Effort to Be Severe

For Elsie Stoneman to be serious was like a butterfly attempting to be solemn; but like many another butterfly she tried to take herself seriously and was at present pulling a pair of rosebud lips, manifestly meant only for smiles and kisses, into a ridiculously firm line of determination as she acquainted the Angora with a lengthy list of its shortcomings. Her pink and white face and her riotous yellow curls were framed in a dangerously becoming bonnet, bewitching with tiny pink rosebuds and black velvet ribbons tied under her demure little chin. Her silken skirts measured yards and yards, in accordance with the latest fashion decree, and seemed to weigh the slender figure to earth. Suddenly she became aware of the eavesdropping brothers and pattered toward them in her shiny Dolly Madison slippers.

"That cat will die of grief if you lecture it any more," Phil declared, while Tod held up the letter he had written for her to see.

"That's beautiful," she declared, and Tod beamed with the appreciation as he proceeded to strut vainglorious about. "I wish I could go, too," she finished, wistfully. "Their sister Margaret must be a dear."

"Next time, little sister," Phil agreed, and they all scampered into the house to expedite the packing and the arrangements for the journey.

Two days later the boys were on their way South, reveling in the discovery of new beauties as they traveled through the Southern States, finding the sunshine brighter, the moonlight softer, the sky fairer, the flowers richer and more profuse, even the air balmier than in their Pennsylvania home.

The Cameron carriage was at the Piedmont station to meet them, and all the Cameron family gathered on the veranda to welcome them as they drove up. Tod and Duke waived all ceremony of greeting, and proceeded to frolic about the spacious mansion like healthy puppies, while Ben and Phil, quite too grown up for such antics, talked with the senior Camerons of the trip down and their entertainment while in Piedmont.

Northern Boys Make Tour of the Plantation

Directly after luncheon Ben and Margaret insisted that the visitors make a tour of the plantation, and for the first time the Northern boys saw slavery in its practical application. With Tod and Duke racing on ahead and Phil playing the gallant to Margaret under her silken parasol, poor Ben found himself paired off with little Flora. Not until the cotton fields were reached did Phil remember that he had deserted his old schoolmate for the more enticing charms of his sister. Then Ben, plucking a perfect blossom, hailed Phil and announced:

"This is the fairest flower the Southland boasts," as he held aloft the waxen-petaled flower.

Phil turned from the contemplation of her whom he considered a much lovelier flower of the South and to whom he had been displaying a daguerrotype of Elsie.

As he turned to take the cotton blossom from Ben's hand, Ben saw and appropriated the picture. Out of the black binding, in its maroon velvet setting, gazed the face of the most beautiful girl he had ever seen, the ideal of his boyish dreams. A half smile lay in the heavy-lidded eyes. The lips were an invitation and a lure. Ben's eyes lighted. Instinctively he raised his hat and saluted. The next moment he was hurrying through the cotton bushes away from Phil's outstretched hand.

"Possession's nine-tenths of the law," he called back, gaily; "and this picture's mine for keeps."

"Oh, I say, Ben," Phil called. "I simply must have it. It's the only one I've got."

The only response from Ben was a waving hand and a tantalizing laugh, as with Flora at his heels he hurried away. A moment later Phil was too engrossed in his efforts to tempt Margaret's downcast eyes to look up to his to remember Elsie's picture and Ben, at the other side of the field, no longer felt shut out or alone.

Find Darkies Happy In Their Cabin Homes

Margaret led the way to the darky cabins where the rest of the party already awaited them. It was the one hour interval in the darkies' working day, which began at 6 in the morning and ended at 6 in the evening.

In vain Phil and Tod looked about for the poor, down-trodden negro about whom they had heard so much discussion at home. In spite of their hard morning's work in the cotton fields, the darkies were as happy as their pickaninnies, rollicking about the cabins.

Old Uncle Jerry and young Sam insisted on doing a buck and wing for the edification of the visitors, and much to the delight and applause of the other darkies gathered round. After Phil and Tod had expressed their admiration and appreciation and had shaken hands a dozen times, Uncle Jerry let them go, running after them to ask if they wouldn't come down again and hear some of the darky songs.

Back at the house the happy young people found Father Cameron in a state of great excitement. As they approached, he held aloft the daily paper, across the top of which were the startling headlines:

"If the North Carries the Election the South Will Secede."

The smiles died in the eyes of Phil and Ben, the laughter fell from Margaret Cameron's lips, and even irrepressible Duke and Tod stood sobered and alarmed.

Phil was the first to find his voice.

"Oh, I hope it will never come to that, Mr. Cameron," he offered, soothingly.

"It's coming as sure as Judgment," the elder Cameron answered, hotly.

Gloom Follows Gaiety In the Cameron Mansion

"No, father," Ben remonstrated, and Mrs. Cameron and Margaret added their efforts to repress an outburst.

The old man settled back in his chair to reread the political news which was the only thing which interested him now. At his feet two hound puppies sprawled lazily, alternately chewing each other's ears and the buttons on the old man's gaiters.

A gloom had fallen on the group and their combined efforts were not successful in shaking it off. After a day of carefree happiness, a presentiment of disaster to come seemed to obsess them all, and one by one they took their candles and soberly ascended the broad staircase over which so many Camerons had gone to their repose, counting all else well lost if only honor remained.

(To Be Continued Tomorrow)

ELSIE STONEMAN, THE "MASTER'S" PRETTY DAUGHTER

Defends Photo-Play

Cusick Says Its Critics Do Not Agree Among Themselves as to Alleged Defects

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—One of the most surprising and I might say perplexing, phases of the situation created by the production of "The Birth of a Nation" is the attitude and criticism of a few well-known men of this community.

Mr. Moorfield Storey, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, criticises the picture because it is a "wicked libel on the negro race." He has never seen the picture. He relies upon the opinions of others for his conclusion.

On the other hand, thousands of citizens have actually seen this picture, and among them men of equal standing in the community with Mr Storey, who entirely disagree with him in his conclusion. Is Mr. Storey supersensitive as to the feelings of his colored fellow citizens and misinformed as to the facts, or are the thousands of citizens who have viewed this play wrong in their conclusions?

As the public continues to view this picture and public sentiment in its favor becomes more pronounced, the criticism from this small coterie of men continues, but their criticism indicates an entire change in their point of view. Therefore, we find Dr. Charles W. Eliot of Harvard criticising the picture, because "it injured the whites more than the blacks," but at the end of his statement, in speaking about the continued presentation of the photo-play, he says: "I am not sure it will not have a very useful result—one worth having."

Closely following this statement of Dr. Eliot, as if in consternation at his statement, we find our old friends, Albert E. Pillsbury, who is one of the directors of the Wendell Phillips Memorial Association, coming out with a long dissertation in criticism, rather vitriolic and imaginative in scope, but nevertheless interesting from the point of view of bolstering the criticism, despite the facts.

He starts his letter by admitting that after having seen the picture, he "found it very different from what I had been led to expect." Perhaps Mr. Moorfield Storey and others who have criticised this picture might find it very different from what they had been led to expect if they went to see it. However, Mr. Pillsbury still criticises the picture as follows:

He finds it now "a defamation of the Union cause and an apothesis of slavery and rebellion." Well, at least this is a new one and one which our colored citizens are not apparently interested in, as they have argued their cause only from the viewpoint of villification of the negro race.

Mr. Pillsbury finds another highly imaginative basis for criticism. That is a deep, dark scheme to cause the repeal of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and with the license of the poet and not the logic of the attorney he reasons the white race "to arms." Of course, he brings in the Ku Klux Klan and alleges that the picture glorifies the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, chiding the public for its applause.

[illegible] not see that the public is applauding, not the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, which many of them know nothing about, but the beautiful exemplification of fine riding, beautiful scenery, fine horses, and virtue triumphant over vice. Call it the Ku Klux Klan, or the Crusaders, or what you will, it is simply a fitting tribute to human nature and a beautiful picture.

Mr. Pillsbury's deductions from this picture seem absurd when we consider that a large number of Grand Army veterans who actually participated in the Civil war have seen this picture with approval, but it remains for Mr. Pillsbury, who did not participate in the Civil war, to pick out the alleged slander to the Union cause and the alleged propaganda to repeal the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the Constitution as a basis for criticism.

To recapitulate, these gentlemen, together with some others not mentioned, have criticised this picture at different times in the following terms: That it was obscene and immoral; the courts and public authorities found it otherwise. Not content they now say that it is a libel on the negro race. This becomes untenable. They then say it is a slander on the Union cause, that it is a direct propaganda to repeal the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and finally, that it ought to be suppressed and that it ought not to be suppressed.

The facts are, however, that thousands of citizens have seen this play and have not been impressed as the gentlemen who have made the above criticisms.

The picture, itself, is comprised of a pictorial reproduction of written historical events, plus romance and character study worked together in one allegorical theme, called "The Birth of a Nation." It is intended to have its amusement value and does have a historical value. Naturally people will differ in their impressions of this picture, but I believe that over 99 per cent of the 75,000 people who have seen this picture see absolutely no relevancy between the criticisms made by these gentlemen and the actual play itself.

The pity of it all is that these abnormal criticisms are creating in the minds of a large number of colored people an emotional hysteria leading them to think that their rights are in some way being infringed and it is encouraging them in false notions as to the offensiveness of this production. On the other hand, thousands of citizens are continuing to view this picture daily and no doubt go away with the same feelings as those who have already seen it, wondering why there has been so much ado about nothing.

JOHN F. CUSICK.

42 Tremont street, Boston.

GLOUCESTER (Mass.) TIMES
MAY 7, 1915

CENSOR BILL PASSES.

Those who have been fighting against the production of the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation" won a victory at the State House yesterday when the House of Representatives passed to a third reading the bill providing for a triple-headed theatrical censor board for Boston.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 7, 1915

"MOVIE" BILL ADVANCES

House Gives "Birth of a Nation" Measure a Third Reading—Real Debate Will Come on Engrossment Stage

After a comparatively short debate, the House late yesterday ordered to a third reading the bill providing for a censorship of theatrical productions in Boston by a board of three members, consisting of the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal Court. The vote on the measure, which is a direct result of the agitation over the production of "The Birth of a Nation," was 94 to 41.

The real debate on the measure is expected to develop at the engrossment stage, when Mr. Rowley of Brookline will offer an amendment to provide that a performance may be stopped by a majority vote of a board. Democratic members took opposition yesterday, one of their arguments being that the Irish, the Jew and the Italian have been ridiculed on the stage for years, but it was left for the colored people to register the first official com-

[illegible] House concurred with the Senate in [illegible] the rules to admit for consideration the petition allowing Boston to pay [illegible] of Councillor Woods's salary [illegible] Senate passed the Bos[illegible] bowling-room bill [illegible]

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 7, 1915

FEATURE FILMS AT THE PALACE

Poli Announces Addition to Vaudeville Bill; Starts Next Monday.

A new departure is announced for the coming summer season at Poli's Palace, opening next Monday afternoon, when, in addition to the usual high-grade vaudeville program, as heretofore, a big feature motion picture play from four to seven reels, will be presented, constituting practically a double bill, although there will be no increase in the price of admission. It is announced that there will be no diminution in the quality of the vaudeville, but that this part of the entertainment will be better than ever, because of the fact that the closing of many companies at this time will result in substantial additions to the vaudeville field, and that more attractive acts can be secured. The bills, despite their generous size, will be arranged in such a way that those who attend can see the entire show and still arrive home in good season.

The management has secured some of the best photo-plays in the world for the coming season, most of them being the productions of the celebrated D. W. Griffith, whose "Birth of a Nation," now playing in Boston, after a great run in New York at $2 prices, is conceded to be the greatest achievement in the photo-play world. The first feature to be seen under the new policy next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, will be Mr. Griffith's great drama of the mind, "The Avenging Conscience," with Benjamin Walthall and Blanche Sweet in the leading roles. The play is based on the great story by Edgar Allan Poe, "The Telltale Heart."

During the summer season Mr. Griffith's greatest productions will be seen. For the last half of next week "Graustark," a big six-reel photo-play, will be produced, and others to be seen during the coming season will be "The College Widow," "The Carpet from Bagdad," Paul Armstrong's daring play, "The Escape"; Cyrus Townsend Brady's "The Island of Regeneration," "Beulah" and many big features of similar character.

"The Avenging Conscience," the first of the features, is a drama of the mind, in which a young man who, in a fit of revengeful passion, plans the murder of his uncle, is deterred by reading the great story of Poe, and seeing in a vision the results that will accrue from the crime he is plotting. This permits of the wonderful imagination of the immortal Poe to be shown [illegible] screen through the medium master producer, Mr. Griffith, a result is said to be one of the wonderful achievements in photography seen this [illegible] tory of the art.

[illegible] Asked [illegible] else what the [illegible] tion would be? [illegible] tements they [illegible] possibility of [illegible] cent. of the [illegible] re now be[illegible] wealth. [illegible] city a[illegible] authorities

DIXON DENIES STATEMENT AS TO NEGRO RACE

Says Editor Cobleigh's Talk About Extermination Is Due to Hysteria.

The controversy between the Rev. Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation," and Rolfe Cobleigh, editor of The Congregationalist, was renewed yesterday when Mr. Dixon denied, in a statement in New York, that he ever said the purpose back of the play is the extermination of the Negro race.

Mr. Cobleigh declared last night that, although he never used the word extermination in connection with Mr. Dixon's statement, he said and reiterates that the novelist told him that one of the purposes of the play was the removal of all Negroes from the United States; and he added that if Mr. Dixon denies that he is not telling the truth.

Mr. Dixon's statement reads:

Calls It Hallucination.

"The statement made by Rolfe Cobleigh that I told him that the purpose back of 'The Birth of a Nation' was the extermination of the Negro race, is the hallucination of an over-heated mind. The assertion is so foolishly absurd on its face that it would not require denial, but for the widespread hysteria which at present affects our colored friends in Boston.

"Early in March I received a letter from Mr. Cobleigh denouncing 'The Birth of a Nation,' which he had never seen. I suggested mildly that he suspend judgment until he had seen it, or at least until I could forward the verdict of the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, who had been asked to see it and make a special report from a clergyman's point of view.

"Mr. Cobleigh replied expressing his confidence in Dr. Parkhurst. A week later he wrote me again for asking for the report from the distinguished clergyman reformer. I immediately mailed it and asked him to print it in full in The Congregationalist. This he failed to do. The reason was simple. It was not what he expected or desired. He did not wish to know the truth. He wished only to attack the play.

Opposed by Parkhurst.

"Dr. Parkhurst gave 'The Birth of a Nation' his 'unqualified approval,' and specifically declared that the play was in no sense an attack on or a reflection on the Negro race of today. On the other hand, he squarely affirmed that the final impression of the drama was the highest compliment to the Negro of today because it showed so simply and plainly his progress from the conditions of 50 years ago, when he had just emerged from slavery.

"On my arrival in Boston on the 9th of April I called at Mr. Cobleigh's office to ask why, after demanding the report of Dr. Parkhurst, he had failed to print it. I met the gentleman for the first time in my life and had a very pleasant but unprofitable talk with him in his little sanctum.

"I again laughingly suggested that he suspend his final judgment until he should see the play that night. He frankly informed me that his mind was already made up, and that no event in heaven or earth could move him. I told him, of course, he could only see on the screen that which he had made up his mind to see. I laughed again and gave him two tickets for which he thanked me.

Can Make Use of Cobleigh.

"The mental make-up of such men is a curious study. As a novelist I intend to use Mr. Cobleigh.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is an absolutely true record of the turbulent life of the civil war and reconstruction. It was produced to stimulate, through three thrilling hours, the study of American history. I find it is certainly accomplishing that purpose.

To the man or woman who sees it with an open mind, it brings only inspiration and gratitude to God for the blessings we enjoy today as a free, united nation.

"The play is much broader and more catholic than my book, on which it is based. In fact, the film is so much broader that I insisted that Mr. Griffith change the title to 'The Birth of a Nation,' as 'The Clansman' was too narrow and controversial to fit the new production.

Mr. Cobleigh is merely repeating preconceived ideas which he got long ago from an angry reading of one of my books. He certainly found no such idea in 'The Birth of a Nation.' The play speaks for itself. Its producers cannot be held responsible for what the critics of my book imagine must be in it.

"I never made the statement which came from Mr. Cobleigh's excited brain. I never made any such statement to any human being. It is hysteria pure and simple."

Same Allegation About Others.

Mr. Cobleigh said last night:

"The allegation of an overheated mind Mr. Dixon makes about everybody who opposes his play. I have had considerable correspondence with him about the play and one interview. In one letter he enclosed a clipping from a New York newspaper in which he was reported as arguing at length for the deportation of Negroes from the United States, and citing Abraham Lincoln in support of his plan.

"He later called at my office and talked most of the forenoon about the play. I finally asked him just what he hoped to accomplish by the film. He replied that one purpose of it was to promote the removal from this country of all Negroes. I laughingly suggested the impracticability of getting rid of 10,000,000 persons. He replied that he was convinced that a start could be made at once and that the project could be accomplished within a century. If he denies that he is not telling the truth.

"As for failing to publish in The Congregationalist Dr. Parkhurst's report, we had no space for it. We should not have published it at such length if it had been in opposition to the play."

Boston Herald
May 7, 1915

THIRD READING FOR FILM BILL

Amendment Favored by Negroes Will Be Offered When Measure Comes Up.

The new bill for censoring theatrical entertainments in Boston, which has grown out of the agitation over the production of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," was ordered to a third reading in the House yesterday by a vote of 94 to 41.

This bill makes the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court a board with power to pass on all theatrical or motion picture performances. The members are given authority to stop any performance which they may regard as of a prejudicial character to the morals of the community. The bill provides that a unanimous vote of the censors is required to make that power operative.

Today in the House, if the measure is reached, Mr. Rowley of Brookline will offer an amendment to provide that a performance may be stopped by a majority vote of the board. Many of the colored people who sat in the gallery yesterday and listened to the debate claim that the unanimous provision is almost prohibitive of any action and that unless they secure the Rowley amendment, they do not care for the bill.

The debate did not continue to the length expected, partly because of the action of Mr. Rowley in holding back his amendment for the engrossment stage.

Mr. Sheehan of Boston opened the opposition to the bill which, he said, had been presented solely to quiet a mistaken public clamor. He confessed that he could not see any special objections to the photo-play which called for such action. Mr. Giblin of Boston also objected to the measure.

Mr. Kennard of Somerville, chairman of the House judiciary committee, said the bill should be considered wholly apart from this particular picture play. The aim had been, he said, to report a bill which would provide for sane censorship and which would yet allow a leeway to stop a performance which was objectionable. Cities and towns outside of Boston now had the power, he said, to stop performances for any reason whatsoever, and the aim had been to make the Boston situation more uniform.

The bill to establish a bureau of steam engineering which was reported on adversely by the House ways and means committee was rejected by a roll call vote of 117 to 93.

The Boston & Maine railroad reorganization bill was given a second reading. Just after the speaker had put the question of a third reading he recognized Mr. Atwood of Boston, who moved to postpone the consideration. Although the speaker did not declare the vote on ordering to a third reading, the bill was sent to the bills on third reading committee, and it is presumed it will reach the House today, when it will be postponed to next Tuesday.

Ways and means reported adversely on the bill to allow half holidays Saturdays for all workmen, mechanics and laborers employed by or for the commonwealth.

The rules were suspended and bills providing for emergency repairs on the state normal art school, allowing Framingham to supply water to Ashland and permitting the directors of the Boston port board to provide for a street railway line to the pier and fish wharf were admitted.

The House concurred with the Senate in suspending the rules to admit for consideration the petition of Senator Hays that the city of Boston be allowed to pay to the widow of the late Councilman Woods the balance of his salary.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 7, 1915

"Birth of Nation" Bill Advanced To Third Reading

The so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill, providing for a board of censors consisting of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court to pass on theatrical exhibitions, was advanced to a third reading in the House yesterday after a stormy debate by a vote of 94 to 41.

The opponents of the bill based their argument on the claim that this bill was founded entirely on the protest of the Negroes against this certain film play. The members of the Committee on Judiciary which brought in the bill declared that this was not the case

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) [illegible]
MAY 7, 1915

Advance Bill Based Upon "Birth of Nation" Play

[illegible] many [illegible] people to the [illegible] before the legislature [illegible] suppress [illegible] licenses for theatrical [illegible] in Boston, the second [illegible] Nation," has been ordered to a third reading in the House this afternoon by a vote of 94 to 41 after a long debate.

Rep. John L. Dennis of Everett opposed the bill and said the [illegible] for what [illegible] started. [illegible] night the arrests were made, [illegible] 50,000 people have seen the picture and not one has been [illegible] [illegible] no one will be allowed to [illegible] attempt to start a riot. [illegible] Jew, the Irish and the Italian [illegible] ridiculed for years on the [illegible] but it is felt for the Negro to [illegible] the first complaint officially.

Rep. Robert M. Washburn of Worcester urged that the bill be not passed as one designed solely to remedy a possible wrong to the colored race. Instead, he said, it applies to all theatrical exhibitions and gives to properly and fairly constituted authorities power to shut up a show which ought to be shut up, a power which they have not today in sufficient measure.

Rep. W. H. Sullivan of Boston called attention to the fact that all of the opposition to the bill thus far has come from Irish Democratic members. In spite of the fact that the Irish of all races should embrace the opportunity to prevent further defamation of their own race. The fact that thousands of citizens feel that they have been outraged should be sufficient to stop the play.

Rep. Aaron C. Dewar of Boston declared the picture an insidious attack upon the North. "If my sires had been born when the Ku Klux clan was organized then I am willing to sell my birthright for a mess of pottage."

Rep. Fred W. Cross of Boston said those who oppose the play have not taken the trouble to analyze it. As a matter of fact, he said, it is not aimed at the depiction of any one Negro or the Negro as a class, but it depicts as faithfully as may be a painful incident in the history of the country.

NO. ATTLEBORO (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 7, 1915

NOTES FROM BEACON HILL

State House, Boston, May 7.—Sen. Martin, for the committee on election laws, reported a resolve permitting women to serve on committees for the purpose of favoring or opposing the constitutional amendment, striking out the word "male" from the constitution during the campaign of 1915. The resolve further stipulates that the women serving upon the committees must be residents of Massachusetts and living five years in the United States.

The attorney general ruled that women, in accordance with the corrupt practice acts, could not legally expend money. The suffragists were somewhat disturbed over this as they did not care to have men do the spending of their money and petitioned for a change in the general election laws. The committee declined to report a general bill but favored a resolve for this year only and for the one issue.

The Ellis amendment to the [illegible] holders' bill was adopted in the [illegible] ate.

The bill to prohibit the sale or delivery of milk or cream produced under unhealthful conditions was returned to the house after the senate had concurred in the adoption of the house amendment as to alteration of buildings within 72 hours from notice and Sen. Hobbs of Worcester had put on another amendment that the provisions of the act should not apply to a common carrier.

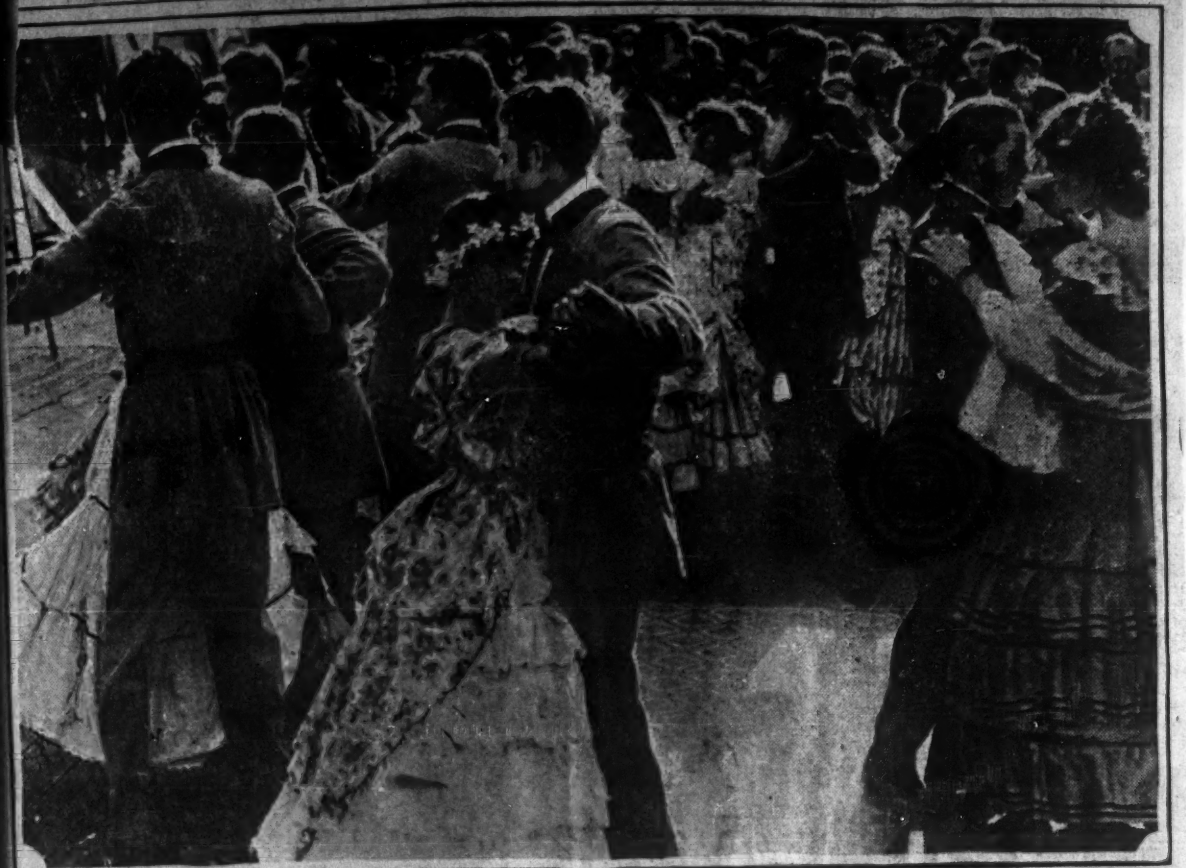
The Boston basement and sleeping room bill was passed to be engrossed.

The house passed the taxation constitutional amendment along, 7.

After a hot debate, the bill [illegible] is intended to stop "The Birth of a Nation" was passed to a third reading by the house, 94 to 41.

The house rejected the bill to establish a bureau of steam engineering and boiler inspection.

"FINAL BALL" AS CIVIL WAR SOLDIERS PREPARE FOR FRONT



The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Margaret Cameron, a daughter of the South, comes upon her father, Dr. Cameron, engaged in a heated discussion of slavery with other Southern gentlemen. A raid on Harper's Ferry by John Brown, with 16 followers, has recently taken place. A toast is drunk to "Stephen Douglas, the next President."

The scene then shifts to the Northern home of Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, noted for his vindictive policies toward the South. Stoneman is conversing with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts and zealous Abolitionist. Both men are sincere in their convictions of the wickedness of slavery and its inconsistency with republican institutions.

Their conversation is overheard by Lydia Brown, a mulatto woman, ostensibly the housekeeper, but in reality mistress of the Stoneman house. As Sumner departs the woman resolves to use the insidious influence of her position to bring freedom to her race.

Tod and Phil, sons of Austin Stoneman, visit Cameron and for the first time see slavery in its practical application. They find Cameron stirred over a newspaper headline which reads: "If the North Carries the Election the South Will Secede." The young trio became alarmed at the import of the announcement.

Time comes for the Stonemans to return, with Phil deeply in love with Margaret.

Events, meanwhile, are progressing rapidly. Lincoln has been elected President, carrying all free States except New Jersey. Business in the South is bad.

The news that South Carolina is an independent Commonwealth is received with popular rejoicing. A congressional committee is appointed in the North to prevent other States from following South Carolina's example.

Secession moves apace. Jefferson Davis counsels his followers to prepare for war. The Southern Confederacy is formed with Davis as President.

Lincoln answers the challenge by calling for 75,000 volunteers. As one man the entire North rallies to his support.

By Gertrude Stevenson

Part V. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part IV. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

In this uprising of the people, patriotism spoke as never before since the Union was formed. Militia regiments and military companies, formerly merely decorative or conspicuous in Fourth of July parades and the like, now became actual fighting units, and men from every walk of life fell over each other in their haste to enlist. Money for the "cause" poured in from every side.

STONEMAN BOYS OFFER SERVICES

In Lancaster the Stoneman boys were the first to offer their services, their lives, if need be, and Phil was at once chosen captain of the local company. Tod, young as he was, announced his intention of shouldering a musket and serving in the ranks. With all a youngster's ardor of fighting for his country, nothing could [illegible] uniforms, Phil with the broad hat and caped coat of his captain's rank, and Tod, looking pathetically young and boyish in his tight fitting private's garb and visored cap.

"Ready so soon?" she called gaily. "Isn't it a glorious day to start!"

"Fair weather's always a good omen," Phil declared, while Tod cry of delight at seeing who her tormentor was.

Lifting her up off the couch, he carried her on his shoulder to the big flag draped over the door and bade her kiss it and understand why he must leave her; why he must march off to fight. Then, lovingly, tenderly, he put her back on the couch again and playfully covered her head with her own smaller flag. A moment later he leaned down and heard the same regular breathing. He listened a moment. Flora was fast asleep again.

He sighed and directed his steps back to the dancers, taking with him a mammoth banner made for the occasion. As he appeared in the ballroom with the flag held aloft, a great shout went up from a hundred throats. The dancing ceased and everyone rushed forward to help spread the banner which had had its first baptism of glory at Bull Run. Fluttering hands and handkerchiefs, glasses upraised in fervent pledges, cheers uttered again and again, testified to the spirit in every heart; the proud hopes on every side.

Again the dance, again lovelit eyes turned up to answering adoration, again the graceful swaying to music soft and sweet. Then suddenly above the violin strains, above the laughter, above the clamor of the crowd around the roaring bonfire outside, comes the echo of a sound, piercingly sweet, growing nearer shriller—the bugle call that means the call to arms. The violins end in a wailing sob, fond arms drop from responsive waists, heads go up, all eyes turn to the summons. There is a moment's startled pause, then comes hurry and bustle as good-byes are said, hats found and, on the run, the hope of the Confederacy hasten to their places in line.

Forgetting their guests, forgetting everything but the sad moment of parting, the Cameron Boys and Margaret rushed into the sitting room, where the same signal had roused their father and little Flora and set their mother's heart fluttering faster with the realization that the awful, dreaded moment was come. Silently, wretchedly the anguished mother kissed her boys in turn, scarcely hearing their comforting assurances, clinging helplessly to Ben, the first born, the last to take her in his arms and bid her be of good cheer.

The sound of marching troops and lively music from the street without impelled them all forward and once again the good-bys were said, lips pressed to lips.

Ben's horse is at the gate, he mounts, looks from his mother to Flora, then setting his chin, shouts:

"For-ward march!"

The cavalcade moves on.

(To Be Continued Tomorow) back and fell at the feet of the old aunt who was the only mother she had ever known.

Cameron Youths Enlist

Northern patriotism was only equaled by Southern enthusiasm and there, too, every city and town was sending its quota of troops to the front.

In Piedmont the Camerons were foremost in the organization activity, as they had been at every step of the controversy. Ben was at the head of a company, with Wade as a lieutenant and Duke in the ranks. Dr. Cameron was the proudest man in town, because he had three sons to prove the courage of the family and his devotion to the Confederacy.

Mrs. Cameron, her lips dumb but her eyes eloquent with grief, was the only member of the family not borne along on the high tide of military excitement that was sweeping the town. In her heart, her husband's enthusiasm was tempered with foreboding of the hideous aftermath. Her husband saw only the moment, heard only the martial music. She saw the battlefield strewn with the dead and wounded, foresaw in a despairing vision these stalwart, straight-limbed boys crippled, disfigured, limping home on crutches with stumps where their fine muscles had been before. In her heart she thanked God that her sons were but three and that two of her children were daughters.

To all outward appearances, Piedmont might have been on the eve of a carnival or a Mardi Gras, rather than on the verge of sending its ablest citizens to war. The Union rout at the battle of Bull Run, made possible by "Stonewall" Jackson's desperate heroism, had fired the Southern imagination with an alluring prospect of speedy and glorious victory. Houses and public buildings were draped with bunting. Crowds congregated in the public square, bonfires were lighted, and all the beauty and valor of the town were bidden to a gorgeous farewell ball in the great rooms of the spacious Cameron mansion. Not a single soul, young or old, slept that night.

Adored by Fair Women

Never were young soldiers prouder or more adored by fair women than those Piedmont boys who danced the night away, ready, at break of dawn, to mount their horses, shoulder their knapsacks and muskets and fight under the banner inscribed: "Conquer we must, for our cause is just."

Pulses throbbed to the stirring cadences of the "Blue Danube" and the vision of future honors and glories. Feminine eyes, ever before shy and

[illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation" is an absolutely true record of the turbulent life of the Civil War and reconstruction. It was produced to stimulate, through three thrilling hours, the study of American history. I find it is certainly accomplishing that purpose.

"To the man or woman who sees it with an open mind, it brings only inspiration and gratitude to God for the blessings we enjoy today as a free united Nation.

"The play is much broader and more catholic than my book on which it is based. In fact, the film is so much broader that I insisted that Mr. Griffith change the title to 'The Birth of a Nation,' as 'The Clansman' was too narrow and controversal to fit the new production.

"Mr. Cobleigh is merely repeating preconceived ideas which he got long ago from an angry reading of one of my books. He certainly found no such idea in 'The Birth of a Nation.' The play speaks for itself. Its producers cannot be held responsible for what the critics of my book imagine must be in it.

"I never made the statement which came from Mr. Cobleigh's excited brain. I never made any such statement to any human being. It is hysteria pure and [illegible]

[illegible] and Storey and others who [illegible] raised this picture might [illegible] very different from what [illegible] been led to expect if they [illegible] see it. How [illegible] criticism the [illegible]

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 7, 1915

DIXON DENIES HIS MOTIVE IMPROPER

Author of Book, Basis of Photoplay, Attacks Cobleigh Statement.

"HYSTERIA," HE SAYS

Says Congregationalist Sub-Editor's View Adopted Without Seeing Film.

[Special to The Union.]

BOSTON, May 6—Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman" and the photoplay on which it is based, "The Birth of a Nation," over whose presentation in Boston there has been great protest because of its alleged untruthful portrayal of reconstruction conditions, tonight defended the play. He also made vigorous denial of the assertion of Rolfe Cobleigh, editor of The Congregationalist, that his (Dixon's) purpose was to exterminate the colored race. Mr. Dixon wrote to the papers as follows:

"The statement made by Mr. Rolfe Cobleigh that I told him that the purpose back of 'The Birth of a Nation,' was the extermination of the Negro race, is the hallucination of an overheated mind. The assertion is so foolishly absurd on its face that it would not require denial but for the widespread hysteria, which at present affects our colored friends in Boston.

"Early in March I received a letter from Mr. Cobleigh denouncing 'The Birth of a Nation,' which he had never seen. I suggested mildly that he suspend judgment until he had seen it, or at least until I could forward the verdict of the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, who had been asked to see it and make a special report from a clergyman's point of view.

"Mr. Cobleigh replied expressing his confidence in Dr. Parkhurst. A week later he wrote me again asking for the report from the distinguished clergyman reformer. I immediately mailed it, and asked him to print it in full in The Congregationalist. This he failed to do. The reason was simple. It was not what he expected, or desired. He did not wish to know the truth. He wished only to attack the play.

"Dr. Parkhurst gave 'The Birth of a Nation' his 'unqualified approval' and specifically declared that the play was in no sense an attack on, or reflection on the Negro race of today. On the other hand, he squarely affirmed that the final impression of the drama was the highest compliment to the Negro of today because it showed so simply and plainly his progress from the condition of 50 years ago, when he had just emerged from his slavery.

"On my arrival in Boston on the 9th of April I called at Mr. Cobleigh's office to ask why, after demanding the report of Dr. Parkhurst, he had failed to print it. I met the gentleman for the first time in my life and had a very pleasant but unprofitable talk with him in his little sanctum.

"I again laughingly suggested that he suspend his final judgment until he should see the play that night. He frankly informed me that his mind was already made up and that no event in heaven or earth could move him. I told him, of course, he could see on the screen that which he had made up his mind to see. I laughed again and gave him two tickets for which he thanked me.

"The mental makeup of such men is a curious study. As a novelist I intend to use Mr. Cobleigh.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is an absolutely true record of the turbulent life of the Civil War and reconstruction. It was produced to stimulate, through three thrilling hours, the study of American history. I find it is certainly accomplishing that purpose.

"To the man or woman who sees it with an open mind, it brings only inspiration and gratitude to God for the blessings we enjoy today as a free united Nation.

"The play is much broader and more catholic than my book on which it is based. In fact, the film is so much broader that I insisted that Mr. Griffith change the title to 'The Birth of a Nation,' as 'The Clansman' was too narrow and controversal to fit the new production.

"Mr. Cobleigh is merely repeating preconceived ideas which he got long ago from an angry reading of one of my books. He certainly found no such idea in 'The Birth of a Nation.' The play speaks for itself. Its producers cannot be held responsible for what the critics of my book imagine must be in it.

"I never made the statement which came from Mr. Cobleigh's excited brain. I never made any such statement to any human being. It is hysteria pure and [illegible]

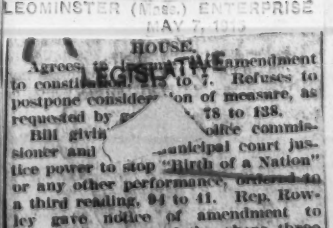
LEOMINSTER (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 7, 1915

HOUSE.

LEGISLATIVE

Agrees to [illegible] Amendment to constitution, 213 to 7. Refuses to postpone consideration of measure, as requested by [illegible], 78 to 138.

Bill giving [illegible] municipal court justice power to stop "Birth of a Nation" or any other performance, ordered to a third reading, 94 to 41. Rep. Rowley gave notice of amendment to provide that two of the above three shall decide for or against theatrical productions.



BOSTON GLOBE

May 7, 1915

HOUSE FAVORS SHOW CENSORS

Only Seven Dissent on Tax Reform.

Governor's Request for Delay Provokes Criticism.

Plea for Councilor Woods' Widow Received.

The bill providing for a censorship of theatrical productions in Boston by a board to be made up of the Mayor, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, who may, when they agree, revoke the license of any exhibition which they believe contrary to the public welfare, was yesterday ordered to a third reading in the House of Representatives.

It is the result of the agitation over the showing of "The Birth of a Nation." The galleries contained large numbers of colored men and women, who showed a deep interest in the fate of the measure.

Those who want "The Birth of a Nation" stopped are not entirely satisfied with the bill, and when it reaches its next stage (possibly today) Mr Rowley will offer an amendment that will permit the board of three censors to act on the majority vote of its members.

The bill providing for a reorganization of the Boston & Maine Railroad received, by agreement, one reading and will be especially assigned for debate when it comes back from the committee on third reading. This means there will be only one debate on the measure.

Cox Urges Taxation Amendment.

The House agreed, 215 to 7, to the amendment to the Constitution permitting the General Court to classify property for the purposes of taxation and to tax the income of property. The amendment has now been passed at two sessions of the Legislature and will come before the people at the State election in November.

When the matter was reached in the calendar in the morning Mr Good of Cambridge urged postponement. The Governor desired postponement, he said, and he himself, both as a private citizen and a member of the Committee on Taxation, believed that it should be put over for a week until several bills in connection with taxation had come before the House.

Speaker Channing H. Cox took the floor for the second time this year and argued against postponement. He said that it matters are taken up as they come along the Legislature can be progressed in two weeks. The matter had been especially assigned for yesterday, he declared.

Edward F. McLaughlin, the Democratic leader, retorted that the only dictation he had observed was the action of the Speaker in leaving his chair to dictate to the Republican members. The motion to postpone was defeated on a roll call by a strict party vote, 123 to 73.

Lomasney Criticises Governor.

When the amendment came up for discussion in the afternoon Mr Drury of Waltham, in supporting it, told the House that the sole reason for the contemplated postponing was that "a certain ... was insistent that his own ... program should be enacted ... the amendment was put through, and declared that this individual had sent an ultimatum to the Democrats of the House that unless this were done the amendment should be killed.

Mr Lomasney of Boston opposed an amendment but asked that the matter be considered not as a political measure. He declared that he had no use for a political policy which stood for one thing at 6 o'clock and for the opposite three hours later.

This was considered a reference to the Governor, rumor having it that he had "passed the word" that he wanted the amendment killed yesteray morning, but changed his mind during the noon recess.

At this point the debate unexpectedly collapsed, and by a vote of 215 to 7, the amendment was agreed to, six Democrats and one Republican voting against it.

The seven who voted against the amendment were John J. Donovan, Martin M. Lomasney, William M. McMorrow, Robert Robinson and Alfred Santosuosso of Boston, Michael F. Malone of Worcester, all Democrats, and Albert Holway of Bourne, a Republican.

Debate on Censorship Bill.

The provisions of the Censorship bill were explained by Mr Burr of the Committee on Judiciary, who described the deliberations of the committee and urged the passage of the measure. Mr Sheehan of Boston opposed it.

Mr Giblin of Boston said the Irish have been vilified far more than the colored people, but when the Irish Players were in Boston a few years ago no Irish mob climbed the steps to the Governor's office to protest. He would like to have pictures like the "Birth of a Nation" shown in every school in the country.

Mr Kennard, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said that in other places the local authorities may stop a production for any reason whatever, but in Boston a production may be stopped only if the local authorities find it obscene or immoral. The bill strikes out the latter requirement and gives the ample authority to stop production.

[illegible] ing the rules to admit [illegible] the petition allowing [illegible] Dispatch of Councilor [illegible] he hollow. The Senate [illegible]

Continued on Page Nine, Column 1.

Other Nations Caricatured.

Mr Donovan of Boston criticised the colored people for what he said was an attempt to start a riot in front of the theatre the night the arrests were made. He said 80,000 persons have seen the picture and not one has been incited to crime. He said the Jew, the Irish and Italian have been ridiculed for years on the public stage, but it is left for the colored people to register the first complaint officially.

Mr Washburn of Worcester urged that the bill is not designed solely to remedy a possible wrong to the colored race but applies to all theatrical exhibitions.

W. H. Sullivan of Boston declared that all opposition to the bill thus far had come from Irish Democratic members, despite the fact that the Irish of all races should embrace the opportunity to prevent further defamation of their own race. The fact that thousands of citizens feel that they have been outraged should be sufficient to stop the play, Mr Sullivan declared.

Mr Dowse of Sherborn declared the pictures an insidious attack upon the North. "If my Nation was born when the Ku Klux Klan was organized, then I am willing to sell my birthright for a mess of pottage," he said.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, 94 to 41.

Petition for Mrs Woods.

A bill permitting reorganization of city departments, in any city except Boston, by a two-thirds vote of the City Council, without action by the Legislature, provoked a lively fight. Mr Robinson of Boston defended it as a means to shorten Legislative sessions and it was opposed by Messrs Robinson of Chelsea, Foster of Gloucester and Casazza of Revere. The hour of adjournment cut off debate.

The House concurred with the Senate in suspending the rules to admit for consideration the petition of Senator Hays that the city of Boston be allowed to pay to the widow of Councilor Woods the balance of his salary.

After a long debate the House rejected the bill providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Steam Engineering and Boiler Inspection.

The Committee on Ways and Means reported ought not to pass on a bill providing that all workmen, mechanics and laborers employed by or on behalf of the Commonwealth shall receive four hours off each week and striking out of the present law the provision that they shall have a Saturday half-holiday "if their services can be dispensed with."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 7, 1915

JOURNAL MAIL BAG

Thinks Some History Should Be Forgotten

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

The late Mark Twain wrote, "I have no race prejudices, and I think I have no color prejudices, nor caste prejudices, nor creed prejudices. Indeed, I know of I can stand any society. All I care to know is that a man is a human being. That is enough for me. He can't be any worse."

In this spirit I approach the much mooted question regarding "The Birth of a Nation." I have seen it and formed my own conclusions.

It is a wonderful illustration of events which transpired prior to, during and following the Civil War. In many respects it is true to life. It portrays events that reflect no credit on designing politicians who use ignorant Southern negroes simply to further their political ends. It may be history, but all things in history are not of special benefit to the present generation. Some pages of history are best forgotten, as nothing is to be gained by bringing to light certain historical events which are liable to cast discredit on race, creed or religion.

CHARLES D. B. FISK.

Brookline.

Denies "Birth of Nation" Was Aimed at Negro

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

The statement made by Rolfe Cobleigh that I told him that the purpose back of "The Birth of a Nation" was the extermination of the negro race, is the hallucination of an over-heated mind. The assertion is so foolishly absurd on its face that it would not require denial but for the widespread hysteria which at present affects our colored friends in Boston.

Early in March I received a letter from Mr. Cobleigh denouncing "The Birth of a Nation," which he had never seen. I suggested mildly that he suspend judgment until he had seen it or at least until I could forward the verdict of the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D., pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, who had been asked to see it and make a special report from a clergyman's point of view.

Mr. Cobleigh replied expressing his confidence in Dr. Parkhurst. A week later he wrote me again asking for the report from the distinguished clergyman reformer. I immediately mailed it and asked him to print it in full in the Congregationalist. This he failed to do. Dr. Parkhurst gave "The Birth of a Nation" his "unqualified approval" and specifically declared that the play was in no sense an attack on or a reflection on the negro race of today. On the other hand he squarely affirmed that the final impression of the drama was the highest compliment to the Negro of today, because it showed so simply and plainly his progress from the conditions of 50 years ago when he was just emerged from slavery.

On my arrival in Boston on April 9 I called at Mr. Cobleigh's office to ask why, after deaf Cobleigh's office to ask Dr. Parkhurst, pending the report of I met the gentleman for the first but impromptu and had a very pleasant chat with him [illegible]

CENSOR BILL PASSES HOUSE

Anti "Birth of Nation" Leaders Win

Those who have been fighting against the production of the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation" won a victory at the State House yesterday when the House of Representatives passed to a third reading the bill providing for a triple-headed theatrical censor board for Boston.

A lively battle ensued over the measure, a hard fight being made to kill it. The vote on the bill was 94 for it to 41 against.

This bill provides that the chief justice of the Municipal Court, the police commissioner and the Mayor may, for any reason satisfactory to them, revoke the license for any public performance or entertainment. It stipulates, however, that three officials must be of unanimous opinion to cause a license to be revoked.

Immediately after yesterday's vote was announced, Representative Rowley of Brookline announced that he will offer an amendment to provide that a license may be revoked with the consent of two of the three officials named.

The galleries of the House, during the debate, contained a number of colored people who have been fighting against "The Birth of a Nation," while in the corridors and in the chamber itself were others.

Journal

I again laughingly suggested that he suspend his final judgment until he should see the play that night. He frankly informed me that his mind was already made up and that no event in heaven or earth could move him. I told him, of course, he could only see on the screen that which he had made up his mind to see. I laughed again and gave him two tickets, for which he thanked me.

The mental make-up of such men is a curious study. As a novelist I intend to use Mr. Cobleigh.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an absolutely true record of the turbulent life of the Civil War and Reconstruction. It was produced to stimulate, through three thrilling hours, the study of American history. I find it is certainly accomplishing that purpose.

To the man or woman who sees it with an open mind, it brings only inspiration and gratitude to God for the blessings we enjoy today as a free united nation.

The play is much broader than my book on which it is based. In fact, the film is so much broader that I insisted that Mr. Griffith change the title to "The Birth of a Nation," as "The Clansman" was too narrow and controversial to fit the new production.

Mr. Cobleigh is merely repeating preconceived ideas which he got long ago from an angry reading of one of my books. He certainly found no such idea in "The Birth of a Nation." The play speaks for itself. Its producers cannot be held responsible for what the critics of my book imagine must be in it. I never made the statement which came from Mr. Cobleigh. I never made any such statement to any human being. It is hysteria pure and simple.

THOMAS DIXON.

New York, May 6.

Veteran Says He Found An Inverted Apotheosis

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

I have already been allowed space in your paper in regard to a matter that is causing so much interest and controversy, namely: "The Birth of a Nation." If I allow myself to trespass on your courtesy and good will, it is because of a letter published in The Boston Journal of the 5th inst., as written by one A. E. Pillsbury. Thereby I was moved by the spirit to write a rebuttal, promising I will not indulge in a sur-rebuttal, whatever happens.

The writer states that he is "strongly impressed that the controlling reason why it ought to be excluded from exhibition in Massachusetts has not been brought out." Are there any peculiar reasons differentitating Massachusetts from the rest of the States? Seems that the writer's mental processes run deeper than those of the average person. He has discovered "the controlling reason." I looked for it; found three; couldn't be sure which was which. Thought at first it was "defamation of the negro."

Farther on I read—"fundamental objection to this play lies deeper." So down I went in my mental submarine to find it. Found what I call No. 2, namely: "It is a covert and insidious defamation of the Union cause and apotheosis of slavery and rebellion." Note the word, "apotheosis." For the benefit of the wayfarer in English, I will try to remember my schoolboy Greek and show it up. Two Greek words, apo (from) and theos, (God), meaning deification, or the exaltation of a person or thing to divine honor.

Now that is going some; couldn't make slavery and rebellion any more respectable than that signifies. Somehow I didn't get any such impression from the photoplay, as I saw it. Wonder how the writer compassed it? But to read on in his letter, I reach this, "purported to be historical, it is history upside down." So the history is either upside down or else A. E. Pillsbury is. Yes, I think I understand the writer's mental attitude—he was upside down, and that is the position in which he discovered the "apotheosis."

One couldn't stand upright long enough to discover such supernal heights without great danger of mental cerebro-spinal-meningitis. Reading further alone, I came to this statement—

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 6, 1915

Letters to the Editor

The Birth of a Nation."

To the Editor of The Advertiser:—

One of the most surprising, and I might say, perplexing phases of the situation created by the production of "The Birth of a Nation" is the attitude and criticisms of a few well-known men of this community.

Mr. Moorfield Storey, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People," criticises the picture because it is a "wicked libel on the negro race." He has never seen the picture. He relies upon the opinions of others for his conclusion. On the other hand, thousands of citizens have actually seen this picture, and entirely disagree with him in his conclusion.

We find Dr. Eliot of Harvard criticising the picture because: "It injured the whites more than the blacks," but at the end of his statement, in speaking about the continued presentation of the photo-play, he says, "I am not sure it will not have a very useful result—one worth having." Albert E. Pillsbury, who is one of the directors of the Wendell Phillips Memorial Association, "found it very different from what I had been led to expect." Perhaps Mr. Moorfield Storey and others who have criticised this picture might find it very different from what they had been led to expect if they went to see it. However, Mr. Pillsbury still criticises the picture as "a defamation of the Union cause and an apotheosis of slavery and rebellion," but not as a vilification of the negro race.

Mr. Pillsbury finds also a deep, dark scheme to cause the repeal of the 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. Of course he brings in the Ku Klux Klan and alleges that the picture glorifies the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, chiding the public for its applause. He will not see that the public is applauding merely the beautiful exemplification of fine riding, beautiful scenery, fine horses and virtue triumphant over vice.

Mr. Pillsbury's deductions seem absurd when we consider that a large number of Grand Army Veterans who actually participated in the Civil War have seen this picture, with approval, but it remains for Mr. Pillsbury, who did not participate in the Civil War, to pick out such ideas.

To recapitulate, various critics have said this picture was obscene and immoral—the courts and public authorities found otherwise; or a libel on the negro race. This becomes untenable. They then say the 14th and 15th Amendments; and finally, that it is a direct propaganda to repeal the 14th and 15th amendments; and finally, that it ought to be suppressed and that it ought not to be suppressed.

The facts are, however, that thousands of citizens have seen this play and have not been impressed as the gentlemen who have made the above criticisms.

Naturally people will differ in their impressions of this picture but I believe that over 90 p.c. of the 75,000 people who have seen this picture see absolutely no relevancy between the criticisms made by these gentlemen and the actual play itself.

The pity of it all is that these abnormal criticisms are creating in the minds of a large number of colored people an emotional hysteria leading them to think that their rights are in some way being infringed and it is encouraging them in false notions as to the offensiveness of this production. On the other hand, thousands of citizens are continuing to view this picture daily and no doubt go away with the same feeling as those who have already seen it, wondering why there has been so much ado about nothing.

John F. Cusick, 42 Tremont st., Boston.

Journal

"This is the moral of the tale." That is No. 3; but I could hardly determine whether the so-called "moral" was to be found just before the word "tale," or just after it. I have known a moral to get displaced on other occasions.

However, he says this moral is "conveyed with consummate art." Well, now that admission ought to please the general manager, Mr. McCarthy. It is just what the public thinks, too—those that have seen the photoplay. But the writer is not mentally exhausted yet—listen: "The whole performance is the glorification of the Ku-Klux-Klan"—in deed. I never mistrusted it. I could see that it glorified valor, patriotism, justice, the great progress of the colored race, and the final and complete union of the whole country in the common bond of patriotism and citizenship. The Ku-Klux-Klan cannot be left out without emasculating seriously the history of the Reconstruction period.

I do not defend the Ku-Klux-Klan, but I wouldn't go so far as to call them "ruffians." That organization was the inevitable result of the former white ruling class being deliberately and intentionally excluded from political privilege and activity by the authors of the Reconstruction policy. If Abraham Lincoln had lived there would have been no Ku-Klux-Klan. There would have been no cause or reason for it. Lincoln and Grant were a unit as to a Southern policy. That meant the complete and immediate autonomy of the Southern States under their duly chosen and elected State officers and Legislatures, and their proper representation in the National Congress.

The South, placated and amenable by Grant's generosity at Appomattox, was in just the right mood to respond loyally and willingly to Lincoln's plans. If he had lived there would have been from the first that good and kindly feeling between the North and South that we have finally won after long years of misunderstanding, sectional bitterness and sorrowful waiting. History right side up puts the whole blame where it rightly belongs—Andrew Johnson, Thaddeus Stevens and their political adherents. As Mr. McCarthy points out, the congressional reports contain the facts, and I would add, the newspapers of that time, that did not believe in or approve of the Reconstruction policy.

Further, the writer becomes quite reckless when he declares that "from the rising until the going down" it is a pack of pictured lies. How does he know? Was he a soldier in the Civil War? Was he living during the Reconstruction period so that he can speak or write as a personal witness of contemporaneous events? Or does he consult an upside down history? Oh, yes, there has been more than one "historic mon" who has written a garbled story, an upside down history of the war and Reconstruction. But the "Cretans are always liars."

Again, "the pictorial recrudescence of the rebellion in a gross libel upon the Union cause." Well, I was for the Union cause, fought through the Civil War for it, but somehow I don't feel libeled by that photoplay—not a little bit. But—"recrudescence." I guess we can manage it. O, wayfarer, attend: Latin—recrudesco—meaning of wounds, to open afresh; of other things, to become hard, sore, painful to break out again. I do not see how it fits the word "rebellion." I do not remember of any breaking out again of the rebellion after Lee's surrender. But some of the definitions of recrudesce might be applied to the reconstruction period. It surely was hard, sore and painful.

Still the writer writes on. Listen: "In the South, with conditions reversed, such a show and its perpetrators would be lynched. This is not the Massachusetts way." O, how we appreciate swim!

But, saints defend us, just here what's to come. "Let us destroy our soldiers' monuments, give the battle flags in the State House to the dust heap, abolish Memorial day, and confess ourselves unfit, etc."

Well, then, I must be unfit—I have three non-commission warrants and three officer commissions. I think a great deal of them, but I suppose I must now commit them to the "dust heap." I am just morally paralyzed. I shall have to attend another matinee of "The Birth of a Nation" to restore my moral equilibrium. Dear Journal, I will say no more. I feel that I have not really added anything to the able and convincing letters of Mr. McCarthy and Mr. Cusick.

C. F. LOTHROP.

Everett, Mass.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
MAY 7, 1915

—The photo-film exhibited at Tremont theater, Boston, entitled "The birth of a nation," has aroused a great deal of interest in the negro and is [illegible] Anderson's [illegible] o'clock to [illegible]

ON [illegible] MERICAN
MAY 6, 1915

ENSIVE CENSORSHIP BILL UP FOR DEBATE TODAY

[illegible] alendar of the House of [illegible]ves today appears for de- [illegible] placing film censorship [illegible]s of the Mayor, the Police [illegible] and the chief justice of [illegible] Municipal Court.

The measure is offensive. The principle which it embodies is not only against every tradition of this nation, but against the fundamentals upon which the whole system of American laws has been built.

The bill provides that the "Mayor, the Police Commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal Court, acting unanimously, may revoke or suspend any license for a public exhibition where admission is charged AT THEIR PLEASURE."

The despotic power thus proposed to be vested in the triumviate named is unheard of in this country, and would excite the bitterest protest even in that land of the censorships, Russia. For observe:

1—THERE IS NO APPEAL. Against the decision of these three, the manager of a theatre or of a moving picture auditorium, is helpless. He must submit, even if he suffers an injustice obvious to every citizen of the State.

2—THERE IS NO STANDARD FOR JUDGMENT. The triumvirate may act AT THEIR PLEASURE. The producers of moving pictures spend tremendous sums, ranging into the hundreds of thousands, perhaps, in preparing an elaborate film. And if their work fails to suit the CAPRICE of the despotic triumvirate, that film must be withdrawn.

BILL IS A TRAVESTY.

The triumvirate could condemn a film today because it offends one set of people; could condemn it tomorrow because it offends another. They could condemn a film because they felt in the humor, from sheer caprice, and the film producer would have NO APPEAL; for the triumvirate has full power to act "AT THEIR PLEASURE."

The whole system of common law has been built upon the rule that previous decisions bind in the future. Thus a business man may know as act is lawful, because it was lawful yesterday; or that it is unlawful because it was unlawful last week.

But under this bill, a film producer would have no such assurance. A film passed last [illegible] condemned tomorrow. A film condemned yesterday might be passed today.

AND THERE WOULD BE NO APPEAL. If the producer asked the triumvirate "Why?" they need only reply:

"Because we wished it so."

Such a law, if passed, would strike at fundamental American principles. Such a law would so handicap the film producer and the theatre manager as to tend to discourage any production in this State. Such a law would lay open the way to drive thousands of film houses out of business. It would encourage blackmail and political hold-ups. The "Workingman's Theatre" would have to bear a burden beyond its strength.

DENOUNCE BILL.

The Zion Baptist Church of Everett this afternoon filed a petition with the House of Representatives denouncing the censoship bill.

The petition denounces the bill "as against protection of classes of citizens from race prejudice plays," and it requests the members of the Legislature to vote for the Halliwell bill, "that 'The Birth of a Nation' may soon be stopped." The petition is signed by the Rev. J. P. Washington, pastor of the church.

Although the bill was supposed to be unanimously supported by the colored people, this new petition attests to the fact that it is unsatisfactory to at least one congregation.

The newest development further impresses the members of the Legislature that the opponents of "The Birth of a Nation" have failed to find a mutual foundation.

A second petition was also filed during the day, this one by the J. C. Price Musical and Literary Society of the Columbus Avenue A. M. E. Zion Church. The petition is manifestly against "The Birth of a Nation," but its language does not indicate that it favors the bill now before the House or prefers the Halliwell bill, which the Judiciary Committee discarded in favor of the existing bill. The petition reads:

"We respectfully petitoin you to pass such a law, governing the theatrical and other amusement exhibitions in this Commonwealth as will be effective to prevent such an exhibition as 'The Birth of a Nation,' which is a historical perversion, libels a large body of Massachusetts citizens, is a breeder of race hatred and antagonism and tends constantly to a breach of the peace."

The petition is signed by E. B. Washburn, chairman, and by the Rev. Benjamin W. Swain, pastor of the church.

FREAK BILLS POP UP.

Whether the House would reach debate on this bill today was doubtful. But when debate does come, the bill is likely to be swiftly disposed of if the Legislature giveh it any sincere thought.

The Senate Committee on Ways and Means today considered the James A. Lowell bill, substituted for the Carstens bill. These are two others of the measures with which the Legislature has been flooded, most of them the products of cranks and half-baked proponents of legislation.

Abandonment of the objectionable Carstens bill at the eleventh hour encouraged the film men. They interpreted it as a confession of the weakness and defects of the measure that not only drew the united opposition of the motion picture men but attack by the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange and the labor forces. The Boston Central Labor Union passed resolutions condemning the Carstens bill. Opposition was so strong that it was decided at the last minute to pigeon-hole it.

It was the product of Carl C. Carstens of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and Lieutenant-Governor Cushing, president of that society, was reported to be backing it. James A. Lowell who introduced the substitute is also connected with the "society with the long name," showing that the same motives and interests that boomed the Carstens bill are supporting the Lowell measure.

LITTLE IMPROVEMENT.

But while elated over the shelving of the Carstens [illegible] the motion picture men do not see any improvement in the Lowell bill.

That was how it happened yesterday that the film producers and exhibitors bombarded the Lowell bill just as vigorously as they had the Carstens measure.

And they continued the use of their heavy artillery today. The motion picture men deny that they are selfish or exacting. They emphasize the point that their only mission is to bring about legislation in Massachusetts that will be fair and equitable not only to them, but to the public at large.

The Carstens bill which met the same fate as the vicious Sullivan bill with its racial and religious fangs, aimed to bestow the power of censorship on the State Board of Labor and Industries. Imposing a tax on all films brought into the State; allowing no right of appeal and the suppression of a photo-play or any other public entertainment without specific cause.

WOMAN AS CENSOR.

The Lowell bill provides for the establishment of a department of film censorship in the office of the State Police, this board to consist of the chief and not more than five censors, one of whom shall be a woman. Another section of the bill provides for the appointment, by the Governor, of another board of seven to draft censorship rules. One of the Board of Rules shall be a wage-earner, and another a representative of the motion picture industry. The bill provides that the censors shall examine every film and license the same, unless it proves "obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or of such a character that its exhibition would tend to impair the health or corrupt the morals of children or adults, promote lawlessness or incite crime." An appeal from the decision of censors would be permitted to the Superior Court. Censors would be selected under civil service rule.

Mr. Lowell modestly admitted that he didn't know much about the motion picture industry when asked how it would be possible for such a board of censors to examine 35,000 or more films in use in Massachusetts. But he was very emphatic on the point that the National Board of Censorship did not fill the bill. To support this claim he told of a committee made up of charitable and social welfare workers who voluntarily inspected 1,261 films passed by the National Board and he said this committee found 235 objectionable films.

Senator Bates favored the bill with fervor and denounced the methods of certain motion picture interests in opposing it. He declared that the motion picture men were opposed to any kind of censorship. He paid his respects to the circulars being distributed in the motion picture houses throughout the State, requesting patrons to sign the coupons and forward their protests against the "busybodies" who tried to dictate as to the type of films to be displayed to the public. Bates declared that the motion picture men admitted they were making money out of improper films when they claimed they would lose $520,000, if their films were cut down one-fifth.

FOLLOWED OHIO BILL.

Mr. Lowell furnished these figures to show that many films indorsed by the National Board are bad. He said he drafted his bill after the Ohio law, which was pronounced constitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

He said his bill if adopted would stop films before they were given a first display to the public, a thing that had been found difficult in the past in the case of any public entertainment. He recommended the adoption of a set of standards but he did not think those used by the National Board would fill the bill.

J. A. Eslow, New England Manager of the Universal Film Exchange, said:

"If the members of this committee and the Legislature and public at large could only realize the care exercised producing a film I think there would be less criticism and suspicion. The National Board exercises the greatest possible caution. A woman friend complained of a film we handled because there was a hanging scene. I asked her if she beheld the actual hanging and she replied with a pout, 'Well, not the hanging, but they caught the man and put a rope around his neck and after that you didn't see him any more.'"

Post

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 6, 1915

ONE MORE MOVIE BILL SUBMITTED

Chief of District Police and Five Censors to See Films

Advocates of a stricter censoraship of moving pictures yesterday submitted to the Legislature a brand new bill covering their views on this subject.

The bill was presented as a substitute for the Carsten's "movie" censor bill which the "movie" promoters have been waging a vigorous fight against. It was submitted to the Senate ways and means committee, which assembled to hold a public hearing on the Carsten's bill. Its supporters claim that it is backed by 60,000 women in this State.

FEATURES OF NEW BILL

This new bill, which was offered by James A. Lowell, who appeared for the society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, provides for the establishment of a department of film censorship in the district police force. It is provided that this department or bureau shall consist of the chief of the district police and not more than five censors, one of whom shall be a woman.

The bill also provides that the Governor shall appoint another board, one of whom shall be a wage-earner and one a representative of the moving-picture interests, to make rules for the censors.

It is provided in the bill that the censors shall examine every film offered for exhibition in this State and shall license the same unless they find such film to be obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman or of such a character that its exhibition would tend to impair the health or corrupt the morals of children or adults; promote lawlessness or incite crime. An appeal is provided for from the decision of the censors, the film producers, under the bill, being given the right to ask the Superior Court to pass on any film the censors may reject.

This measure has no bearing on the bill which provides for a triple-headed censor board for Boston. This latter bill will be debated by the House today.

Films Investigated

Respecting the new bill Mr. Lowell said that a voluntary investigating committee had inspected 1261 films exhibited in this State and found 235 of them objectionable. It is understood that this committee was made up of social and charitable workers of Boston.

Mr. Lowell said that many films passed by the national board of censors are obscene. He stated that his bill is modelled after the Ohio law on which the Supreme Court has already passed.

Senator Sandford Bates declared that the moving picture people of the State do not want censorship of any sort. He said that the moving picture people are now engaged in misrepresenting the facts to their patrons by claiming that a censor bill would increase the price of admission to "movie" shows. He opposed a referendum on the bill if this sort of thing is to be allowed to continue.

Attorney John F. Duffy spoke for the bill also.

John J. Gartland spoke in opposition, saying that there is enough law on the statute books now to protect the patrons of moving picture shows against immoral, obscene or inhuman pictures.

In reply to a question he declared that he believed to be untrue the rumor which was circulated at the State House to the effect that the moving picture men had threatened to have the pictures of the Senators who may vote for a censor bill thrown upon the screens at picture shows, together with requests that the patrons of these places vote against these Senators next fall.

Enos Washburn, representing the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, stated that his organization favors the substitution for the bill of a measure providing for the appointment by the Governor of an unpaid board of censors, such board to only pass upon films against which objections had been raised. His organization opposes further censorship, he said.

J. A. Eslow, New England manager of the Universal Film Corporation, opposed the new bill as unnecessary and a burden to the Commonwealth. He declared that no committee could view all of the films sent into this State. If the law should go into effect, he said, some of the movie houses would have to close for six months before films would be available for them, so slow would the work of censoring the films be.

Henry Sterling and Ignatius McNulty, prominent labor leaders, also opposed the bill.

The hearing will be continued today.

OPPOSE BILL FOR CENSORS

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—At the nearing before the Senate committee on ways and means today, the proponents of the Carstens State censorship bill, evidently recognizing its weaknesses, withdrew the bill, and offered a substitute bill. So far as the photo-play interests and the general public are concerned, the new bill is equally impractical and harmful This bill, if enacted, would provide a board of censors, whose duty it would be, to approve every film before it could be shown in this State. Taking the figures brought out in yesterday's hearing, 15 minutes is the minimum time in which a motion picture film should be shown. That would mean that this board could only review four films an hour, or in an eight-hour day, not taking out time for lunch, 32 films a day. Working six days a week, using Saturday afternoons, they could see just 192 reels a week.

Lieutenant-Governor Cushing is quoted as saying at the Twentieth Century Club that, in his belief, it was possible for such a board to censor 225 reels a week, a physical impossibility. But, taking his figures, and assuming that such a board would approve every photo-play it saw, (and if they did—why the need of such a board?) and supposing that the film distributors in this city were able to secure 10 copies of film so approved, there would be a supply of 2250 reels a week.

Every film distributor in this State has signed a statement to the effect that it would be absolutely impossible for them to secure 10 copies of film which had been approved by a board such as the bill presented calls for.

There are 500 or more photo-play theatres in this State, changing on an average of three times a week. They use an average of six reels a show or 18 reels a week for each house. This will require 9000 reels a week, therefore you have a supply of 2250 reels a week to meet a demand of 9000 reels a week, or exactly one-quarter enough. If this substitute bill passes 75 per cent of the photo-play theatres of this State would have to close for lack of films.

This would mean the closing of 375 photo-play theatres, using a low average of four union employes, or a total of 1500 union employes that would be thrown out of work. It is a fair estimate that six other employes per theatre would be affected, which means that 2250 other employes would be jobless, a total of 4000 people deprived of their means of livelihood. Does this State desire more unemployed?

Forty million dollars is invested in photo-play theatres in this State, and any legislation affecting 75 per cent of this investment would mean the destruction of $30,000,000 of investment.

There are at present 35,000 reels in this State which cost $100 each, or a total of $3,500,000 additional that would be rendered useless, by the passage of this proposed bill—a grand total of $33,500,000 ruination. This does not take into consideration the building operations that would be stopped.

The State Branch of the American Federation of Labor, the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, the Boston Central Labor Union, the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, as well as the general public as a whole, are opposed to this proposed bill.

More than a thousand screen announcements are being shown, and a quarter of a million petitions are being signed against this measure. A great wave of public indignation is sweeping over the State at the attempted destruction of this popular amusement for the purpose of creating five jobs and to humor the whim of a few probably well intentioned but misguided, uninfomed and impractical persons.

This bill should not be confused with the Judiciary Committee Bill, which the agitators of "The Birth of a Nation" are pushing.

CO-OPERATIVE ANTI-CENSORSHIP COMMITTEE OF MASSACHUSETTS.
Boston, May 5.

Defends Photo-Play

Cusick Says Its Critics Do Not Agree Among Themselves as to Alleged Defects

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—One of the most surprising, and I might say perplexing, phases of the situation created by the production of "The Birth of a Nation" is the attitude and criticism of a few well-known men of this community.

Mr. Moorfield Storey, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, criticises the picture because it is a "wicked libel on the negro race." He has never seen the picture. He relies upon the opinions of others for his conclusion.

On the other hand, thousands of citizens have actually seen this picture, and among them men of equal standing in the community with Mr Storey, who entirely disagree with him in his conclusion. Is Mr. Storey supersensitive as to the feelings of his colored fellow citizens and misinformed as to the facts, or are the thousands of citizens who have viewed this play wrong in their conclusions?

As the public continues to view this picture and public sentiment in its favor becomes more pronounced, the criticism from this small coterie of men continues, but their criticism indicates an entire change in their point of view. Therefore, we find Dr. Charles W. Eliot of Harvard criticising the picture, because "it injured the whites more than the blacks," but at the end of his statement, in speaking about the continued presentation of the photo-play, he says: "I am not sure it will not have a very useful result—one worth having."

Closely following this statement of Dr. Eliot, as if in consternation at his statement, we find our old friend Albert E. Dillsbury, who is one of the directors of the Wendell Phillips Memorial Association, coming out with a long dissertation in criticism, rather vitriolic and imaginative in scope, nevertheless interesting from the point of view of bolstering the critic despite the facts.

He starts his letter by admitting that after having seen the picture he "found it very different from what I had been led to expect." Perhaps Mr. Moorfield Storey and others who have criticised this picture might find it very different from what they have been led to expect if they would see it. [illegible] criticises the [illegible]

WALTHAM (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 6, 1915

Mayor Curley of Boston is discriminating. He stopped "Ma[illegible] but not "The Birth of a Nation."

finds it now "a defamation of th en cause and an apotheosis of slavery rebellion." Well, at least this is a one and one which our colored citi-are not apparently interested in, as ey have argued their cause only from the viewpoint of vilification of the negro ce.
Mr. Pillsbury finds another highly imaginative basis for criticism. That is a eep, dark scheme to cause the repeal of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and with the license of the poet and not the logic of the attorney he reasons the white race "to arms." Of course, he brings in the Ku Klux Klan and alleges that the picture glorifies the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, chiding the public for its applause.
He will not see that the public is applauding, not the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, which many of them know nothing about, but the beautiful exemplification of fine riding, beautiful scenery, fine horses, and virtue triumphant over vice. Call it the Ku Klux Klan, or the Crusaders, or what you will, it is simply a fitting tribute to human nature and a beautiful picture.
Mr. Pillsbury's deductions from this picture seem absurd when we consider that a large number of Grand Army veterans who actually participated in the Civil war have seen this picture with approval, but it remains for Mr.
Pillsbury, who did not participate in the Civil war, to pick out the alleged slander to the Union cause and the alleged propaganda to repeal the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the Constitution as a basis for criticism.
To recapitulate, these gentlemen, together with some others not mentioned, have criticised this picture at different times in the following terms: That it was obscene and immoral; the courts and public authorities found it otherwise. Not content they now say that it is a libel on the negro race. This becomes untenable. They then say it is a slander on the Union cause, that it is a direct propaganda to repeal the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and finally, that it ought to be sup pressed and that it ought not to be suppressed.
The facts are, however, that thou sands of citizens have seen this play and have not been impressed as the gentlemen who have made the above criticisms.
The picture, itself, is comprised of a pictorial reproduction of written historical events, plus romance and character study worked together in one allegorical theme, called "The Birth of a Nation." It is intended to have its amusement value and does have a historical value. Naturally people will differ in their impressions of this picture, but I believe that over 99 per cent of the 75,000 people who have seen this picture see absolutely no relevancy between the criticisms made by these gentlemen and the actual play itself.
The pity of it all is that these abnormal criticisms are creating in the minds of a large number of colored people an emotional hysteria leading them to think that their rights are in some way being infringed and it is encouraging them in false notions as to the offensiveness of this production.
On the other hand, thousands of citizens are continuing to view this picture daily and no doubt go away with the same feelings as those who have already seen it, wondering why there has been so much ado about nothing.

JOHN F. CUSICK.

41 Tremont street, Boston.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 6, 1915

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 6, 1915

JOURNAL MAIL BAG

Finds "Birth of a Nation" Critics Are Perplexing

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

One of the most surprising, and I might say perplexing, phases of the situation created by the production of "The Birth of a Nation" is the attitude and criticisms of a few well-known men of this community.

Mr. Moorfield Storey, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, criticizes the picture because it is a "wicked libel on the negro race." He has never seen the picture. He relies upon the opinions of others for his conclusion. On the other hand, thousands of citizens have actually seen this picture, and among them men of equal standing in the community with Mr. Storey, who entirely disagree with him in his conclusion. Is Mr. Storey super-sensitive as to the feelings of his colored fellow-citizens and misinformed as to the facts, or are the thousands of citizens who have viewed this play wrong in their conclusions?

As the public continues to view this picture and public sentiment in its favor becomes more pronounced, the criticism from this small coterie of men continues, but their criticism indicates an entire change in their point of view. Therefore, we find Dr. Charles W. Eliot of Harvard criticizing the picture because: "It injured the whites more than the blacks," but at the end of his statement, in speaking about the continued presentation of the photo-play, he says: "I am not sure it will not have a very useful result—one worth having." Closely following this statement of Dr. Eliot, as if in consternation at his statement, we find our old friend Albert E. Pillsbury, who is one of the directors of the Wendell Phillips Memorial Association, coming out with a long dissertation in criticism, rather vitriolic and imaginative in scope, but, nevertheless, interesting from the point of view of bolstering the criticism, despite the facts.

He starts his letter by admitting that after having seen the picture he "found it very different from what I had been led to expect." Perhaps Mr. Moorfield Storey and others who have criticized this picture might find it very different from what they had been led to expect if they went to see it. However, Mr. Pillsbury still criticizes the picture as follows:

He finds it now "a defamation of the Union cause and an apotheosis of slavery and rebellion. Well, at least this is a new one and one which our colored citizens are not apparently interested in, as they have argued their cause only from the viewpoint of vilification of the negro race.

Mr. Pillsbury finds another highly imaginative basis for criticism. That is a deep, dark scheme to cause the repeal of the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and, with the license of the poet and not the logic of the attorney he reasons the white race "to arms." Of course, he brings in the Ku Klux Klan and alleges that the picture glorifies the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, chiding the public for its applause. He will not see that the public is applauding, not the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, which many of them know nothing about, but the beautiful exemplification of fine riding, beautiful scenery, fine horses and virtue triumphant over vice. Call it the Ku Klux Klan, or the Crusaders, or what you will, it is simply a fitting tribute to human nature and a beautiful picture.

Mr. Pillsbury's deductions from this picture seem absurd when we consider that a large number of Grand Army veterans who actually participated in the Civil War have seen this picture with approval, but it remains for Mr. Pillsbury, who did not participate in the Civil War, to pick out the alleged slander to the Union cause and the alleged propaganda to repeal the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution as a basis for criticism.

To recapitulate, these gentlemen, with some others not mentioned, have criticized this picture at different times in the following terms: That it was obscene and immoral; the courts and public authorities found it otherwise. Not content they now say that it is a libel on the negro race. This becomes untenable. They then say it is a slander on the Union cause; that it is a direct propaganda to repeal the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and finally, that it ought to be suppressed and that it ought not to be suppressed.

The facts are, however, that thousands of citizens have seen this play and have not been impressed as the gentlemen who have made the above criticisms.

The picture, itself, is comprised of a pictorial reproduction of written historical events, plus romance and character study worked together in one allegorical theme called "The Birth of a Nation." It is intended to have its amusement value and does have a historical value. Naturally people will differ in their impressions of this picture, but I believe that over 99 per cent. of the 75,000 people who have seen this picture see absolutely no relevancy between the criticisms made by these gentlemen and the actual play itself.

The pity of it all is that these abnormal criticisms are creating in the minds of a large number of colored people an emotional hysteria leading them to think that their rights are in some way being infringed and it is encouraging them in false notions as to the offensiveness of this production. On the other hand, thousands of citizens are continuing to view this picture daily and no doubt go away with the same feelings as those who have already seen it, wondering why there has been so much ado about nothing.

JOHN F. CUSICK.

Boston, May 5, 1915.

Highly indignant at the statements of Representative Michael F. Malone that the moving picture, "The birth of a nation," does not cast any stigma on the negro race or any race, Rev. Junius C. Ayler, pastor of Bethel A. M. E. church, yesterday, said the film is a slur on the race and seriously tends to degrade the colored people of the United States. He took issue with several statements made by Mr. Malone.

He said: "Independently of the forum, as I stated in The Telegram recently, upon information and belief, 'The birth of a nation' is a slur and a tirade upon a race recently emancipated from slavery, and a race being much in the minority. It is not only a slur, but it is not by any means educational as has been stated recently. For the film to be educational, it would first have to be true to nature, and second it would have to be preeminently moral, and if preeminently moral, it would have to be a performance unquestionably popular.

"I was born in the South in the days of reconstruction. During a part of that period, I was able to and did take notice of the attitude of the negro to himself and to his environment, including his former masters and their sons and daughters, and I am in a position to speak with authority, in derogation to any caricature of the black man that would make him seem ridiculous and worse than any other race in this country which is trying to do the best it can for itself, its children its neighbors, and the American flag.

What could be the motive of any playwrite in creating a drama or photoplay upon a delicate subject, a subject of race, color or previous servitude, a play certain to disturb the harmony existing between the northern negro and the northern white man? Why touch a discordant note which might cause regret to the sons and daughters of those abolitionists of the days of John Brown, who were then potent advocates of negro emancipation and who are now the saving grace of the negro race not only of the North but in the entire United States?

"The negro knows the probable effect of the killing off of his friends in this country. He knows that it would tend toward extermination of the American negro. Knowing this, he has the courage of his convictions to rise up in respectful opposition, and ask the assistance of the newspapers, to discourage whatever film or play, has a tendency to raise from the dead, the goblins of slavery, which were not the fault of the negro since he did not enslave himself.

"A visit through the South by Mr. Malone might help him to change his mind and to decide to cast his vote the other way. He would see in the South, the aftermath of slavery as it really is. He would see the millions of dollars' worth of property acquired, the numerous colleges and universities established and operated by negro brain, a hundred or more, together with at least 5,000,000 negro men, women and children, worshipping weekly, at the shrine of Christianity. Such facts as these are entirely inconsistent with sentiment to the contrary.

"I believe that the newspapers of the United States, as heralds of the public opinion, will discourage dramas which tend to cast reflections on the negro race, for the additional reason that he has been since the days of Crispus Attucks to the battle of Gettysburg, and since San Juan hill, a contributor, by the use of ball and shot, to the maintainance of the Union and a defender of the stars and stripes. Exceptions will be found in every race. The majority of the people may be good, but he will always be able to find black sheep. This is of course true with the negro race, but not to the extent shown in this film and the public opinion of the race is lowered 50 per cent after witnessing the picture.

"The negro took such a part upon the battlefields of the Civil war that the result was the emancipation of 4,000,000 slaves whose shackles were lost in the sea of blood. In these conflicts the negro showed himself the man behind the gun. Why humiliate him? Why not let him be a man? Why not let him become more of a man. All things such as this photoplay tend to hinder his progress, so why not eliminate them. The time will come when it will be a choice between the negro or these degrading dramas, and the public will be the chooser.

"Mr. Malone states 'if the film is historically correct, as I have reason to believe it is'—now I ask why he didn't give this reason. I know that the film is an exaggeration of history and is therefore not historically correct. If an attempt is made to produce the picture in Worcester I will offer my strongest opposition, but I don't think it will come to this city as the municipal officials are too broad-minded to even think of allowing its appearance."

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Dr. Cameron, a daughter of the South, engaged in a heated discussion of the slavery question and a group of Southern gentlemen in the parlor of Cameron's home. A raid on Harper's Ferry by John Brown will follow.

The girl brings the men refreshments in an effort to end the discussion, after drinking a toast to "Stephen Dargist, the next President." The company departs.

The scene then shifts to the North, to the home of Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, who is noted for his vindictive policies toward the Southern States.

Stoneman is engaged in conversation with Charles Sumner, noted for his Massachusetts and zealous Abolitionism. Both men are ardent believers in the victions of the wickedness of slavery and its incompatibility with democratic institutions.

Their conversation is overheard by Lydia Brown, ostensibly employed as housekeeper, but in reality mistress of the household. Lydia informs Sumner despatches the woman resolves to use the political influence of her master to bring freedom to her race.

Ted and Phil Stoneman, sons of Austin Stoneman, pay a visit to the home of Mr. Cameron in Piedmont, where they make a tour of the plantation and for the first time see slavery in its practical application.

They find Cameron stirred over a startling headline in a daily paper which reads: "If the North Carries the Election the South Will Secede." The import of the announcement solves the young trio who become alarmed at its significance.

By Gertrude Stevenson

(Part IV. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part III. was printed in yesterday's Journal.)

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright.
All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

Morning brought restored equanimity to the Cameron family and their guests, who entered into the quaint life of the South with all the zest and interest the new and unexperienced affords. The glow of summer was in the air and lured the young people out of doors, into the gardens, down to the river, walking in the moonlight.

As naturally and simply as if the situation had always existed Phil found himself always at Margaret's side, assisting her into the boat, taking her hand as she stepped out, opening and closing her parasol, holding aside the branches as their walks led them through the cool woods or restoring her reticule which she dropped or mislaid it.

ENCHANTED WITH SOUTHLAND

Thus the days sped on and the two Northern boys found themselves almost a part of this mysterious Southland, which soothed their senses with such languid pleasure they would have been glad to remain always.

The calm nights, free from the bustle and turmoil to which he had been accustomed, pleased Phil most. He walked with Margaret in the moon on the dim horizon, that he knows, gardens unlike any he had seen, gardens filled with flowers of unwonted richness and profusion, heavy with odors which seemed almost to intoxicate. It was then he seemed to breathe more freely, to live anew, as though he had cast off an oppressive cloak. He was happily conscious of being ensnared in the toils of love. All life seemed simpler—freer.

Until now all pretty women had interested him alike. Now he saw one in whom the charms of all the others were united, standing apart in her loveliness as a young birch tree stands in the springtime on the border of a wood. He loved to hear her speak, to watch the shapely head and neck on the white, smooth shoulders, as, after dinner, they moved in and out among the flowers. All life seemed filled with melody, the very flowers themselves seemed to quiver in response to the light touch of her gown as she passed, and her own dusky eyes to brighten as the shadows deepened. Love itself seemed to hang vibrant in the languid, fragrant air.

A tacit understanding had arrived between them. Like two mirrors, the emotions of the one were reflected in the other. Yet neither spoke their thoughts in words. Their communion was wholly of the senses, an alluring, secret intimacy, which bound them closer than any spoken language could have done.

Margaret was conscious that she had never felt so vigorously, so resplendently alive. Around her the birds seemed to sing in new ecstasy, joy seemed pulsing on every side, she knew the sunshine brighter, the fields greener, yet she did not trouble to analyze her emotions. Afterward, years of suffering were sweetened and made bearable by the memory of those hours, the words of which were negligible and scarcely remembered.

Phil and Margaret Say Their Final Farewells

A night came when they looked into each other's eyes with the realization that the next day would bring their separation.

"You will come North this winter?" he asked, sensing her thoughts.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 6, 1915

CAMBRIDGE NEGROES PROTEST FILM PLAY

About 200 Negroes attended a protest meeting against "The Birth of a Nation" in the Rush A. M. E. Church, Cambridge, [illegible] LEGISLATIVE Sherwin L. [illegible], an attorney, say that the film was more dangerous to the welfare of the white man than the Negro.

"I don't believe that viewing the photoplay of 'The Clansman' would create half the race hatred and prejudice in the Negro that it would be in the white man," he said. "It should be suppressed not only because it misrepresents the Negro, but because it is a detriment to the white race as well."

Miss Eliza Culley, secretary of the Northeastern Federation of Women's Clubs; Secretary Brigham of the Equal Rights League, and the Rev. T. A. Austen, the pastor, were the speakers. Clement G. Morgan presided.

Secretary Brigham criticised the Rev. A. E. A. Palmquist, pastor of the North Cambridge Baptist Church, who called the agitation against the film a "tempest in a teapot." Mr. Brigham wanted the pastor to understand that the tempest was out in the open and had a potent blast.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 6, 1915

Making Battle Pictures Real Hard Work

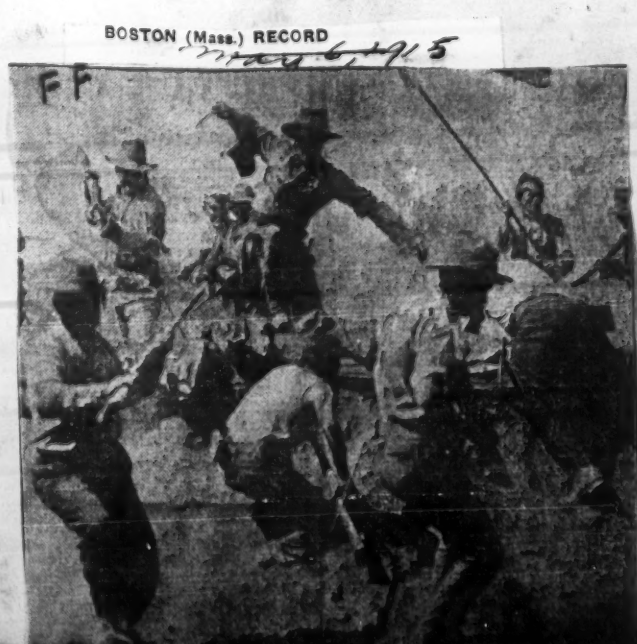
Especially When David W. Griffith Is Bossing the Job

Hard grueling work characterizes the making of battle pictures when David W. Griffith gets on the job. Every ounce of energy is put into attack and defence, the reckless charging of entrenchments and the stout resistance of men behind the breastworks. The accompanying picture, taken from "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, shows Henry Walthall as the Little Confederate Colonel at the head of his men going over an embankment with sword drawn and every muscle tense in the devoted charge that wiped out every member of his command and left him wounded at the feet of his old time chum, Captain Phil Stoneman, U. S. A.

The boys who play the common soldiers are militia privates. They have been drilled for a fortnight in movie warfare, subsequent to their regular midsummer maneuvers. Each soldier gets $5 a day which is considerably better than Uncle Sam pays, and each one is doing his best to make good and hold the job. The bayonet work is so realistic that folks in the audience squirm at the apparently ghastly details.

The field of battle stretches for miles. Lines of entrenchment extend as far as the eye can see. Professional engineers have laid out the field and supervised the digging of the trenches and the raising of the earthworks.

Mr. Walthall who plays the chief part is a cousin of the late Senator Walthall of Mississippi. The young actor's father fought on the side of the South, and Henry Walthall "eats up" the scene (in theatrical parlance). The fire and spirit in his portrayal have rarely been excelled in any department of military drama. Walthall was trained at the old Biograph Studio under Mr. Griffith's direction. When the latter took charge of the Mutual, he brought Walthall out to California with him. The role of Colonel Cameron which the young man plays is the longest one in "The Birth of a Nation."



BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 6, 1915

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 6, 1915

A mass meeting to protest against the production of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre was held last night at the Rush A. M. E. Church, Cambridge. Clement G. Morgan presided. The speakers were Sherwin L. Brigham, Miss Culley, secretary of the Equal Rights League, Miss Culley, secretary of the Northeastern Federation of Women's Clubs, and the pastor, Rev. T. A. Austen.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 6, 1915

GREAT CIVIL WAR BEGINS WITH RUSH OF RECRUITS

ing for himself a pleasanter than the morrow held.
w smile curved her lips as ized that, after all, there was ng to look forward to.
ldn't make such a journey," d, while her mind raced formagining the trip, meeting er, his father, the eccentric concerning whom she had o much discussion.
but you shall!" he declared
ly. "Bennie must bring you e'll show you what a real rn winter is like."
solacing themselves with happiness they joined the sitting on the broad veranda, the good-nights. Phil's and ret's wa the sweetest and the lingering.
ryone was up at cock crow in orning. There were numerous s to visit before Phil and Tod to start North. They must just one more trip to the river, ne more walk through the cot-fields and the last luncheon the great family table.
e carriage had drawn up at the
The luggage was tucked in, and Duke were swearing eternal tion for the 16th time, everyone shaken hands all around, when enly everyone realized that Phil missing and Margaret nowhere e seen.
n ran into the house, thinking
Phil had gone back to his room something he had forgotten and half through the wide recep-hall when he realized that the eants were standing before the ning fireplace, Phil talking earny and Margaret listening with ncast eyes.

n Discovers Secret Sister and His Chum

Amazed, Ben heard his chum vow-the old, sweet vow that his only ams would be of Margaret until y met again. He stood spell-und for an instant, then coughing ologetically, reluctantly disturbed em.
"Everyone's waiting and you'll ss your train," he exclaimed, while e lovers started with surprise at ding Ben so near.
"Yes, yes, I'm coming," Phil ologized, and Margaret turned stful eyes from one to the other.
Then, without a word, she folwed them to the door, stood atching as the good-bys were reeated all over again, waved her lace andkerchief as the horses started ff at a quick trot and smiled a bit anly as old Uncle Jerry hobbled fter the departing carriage in true arky fashion.
Then she turned and, hurrying hrough the long, cool hall, up the inding stairway, sought the quiet of her own chintz-bright room. Ben lone knew his sister's secret and guessed that tears trembled on the dark lashes as she hastened away.

Margaret did not make the trip North that winter. Two months later the Republican party polled a triumph and Abraham Lincoln was elected President, carrying all the free States except New Jersey. In his election the North had spoken her decree on State rights and negro slavery. In every man's mind, North, East and West, arose the unbidden question: What would be the answer of the South?

As soon as the result was known, South Carolina led off with a prompt reply. For 11 years disunion sentiment had been strong, but a considerable opposition had always existed. Now, the day after Lincoln's election, the sentiment became unanimous. Crowds thronged the streets of every city and town, and Piedmont was in an uproar. The one opinion was of an undoubted grievance, and the sole remedy appeared to be secession from the Union. While 90 per cent of the Northern voters thought the South had lorded it over the North since the annexation of Texas, South Carolinians, to a man, and a majority of all others in cotton States, were equally convinced they had suffered grievous wrongs at the hands of the North.

Cameron Household Feels First Pinch of Economy

Business in the South went from bad to worse. Merchants found it difficult or even impossible to pay their debts and banks were forced to suspend specie payments. Plantation slaves could be sold for only half what they would have brought before the election. For the first time the Cameron household knew what it was to feel the pinch of necessary economy.

Nevertheless, Dr. Cameron did not falter in his oft hotly expressed opinions. He led a round of meetings, pole raisings, dedications of banners, fireworks and illuminations, and already the music of a nascent revolution sounded sweet in his and many other ears. The enthusiasts for the most part were, like himself, men of distinction, whose silver hairs were a check to rash and impulsive action, yet all were unanimous in their belief in secession.

The proclamation that South Carolina was an independent Commonwealth was everywhere received with cries of exultation and demonstrations of popular rejoicing.

Northerners realized the peril at once, and a congressional committee was appointed to prevent other Southern States following South Carolina's example. The pressure of business interests in the North was strong for the preservation of the Union. The depression in trade, the panicky condition of the stock market, the apprehended repudiation of debts due the North by Southern merchants, all influenced the committee toward compromise.

Had Lincoln already been in power the crisis might have been averted, but not until four months later could he assume office, and in the interim his influence, while large, was necessarily indirect. On every point but one Lincoln was willing to compromise. On the question of the extension of slavery he was inflexible. A reconciliation between opposing moral and social forces seemed impossible, since the North would not admit that slavery was right, or the South experience a change of heart, declare slavery wrong and agree to limit its extension.

Southern Confederacy Springs Into Being.

Secession moved apace. Feeling ran high. Jefferson Davis counseled his followers to prepare for a long and bloody war, while on the other hand certain other Southern leaders characterized the North as too absorbed in money-getting to fight, or, if she did, one Southerner could whip four Yankees.

The result was the Southern Confederacy, with Jefferson Davis as President-elect. Its corner-stone rested partly upon the belief that the negro was not equal to the white man and that slavery was his natural and normal condition. Passion got the better of reason and the North was left to choose between peaceable separation and war.

Lincoln declared, in his inaugural address, that physically speaking the States could not separate, yet he abhorred the idea of preserving the Union by force. Compromise was attempted by a congressional guarantee of protection of slavery in the States where it already existed.

The spark which lighted the conflagration, however, was Lincoln's declaration in his inaugural address that he denied the right of secession and would enforce the law in all the States, using his power to hold all property belonging to the government and to collect the duties and imposts.

The only question left was when and how the war would begin. South Carolina and later the Southern Confederacy had demanded the surrender of Fort Sumter in Charleston harbor. When this was refused, bombardment began, the artillery duel between the fort and the Confederate batteries lasting 34 hours before the ultimate surrender.

For the first time in the history of the country the President called for 75,000 volunteers. As one man they rose up in a night. The North was thoroughly aroused. Civil war was a fact.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

SAUGUS (Mass.) HERALD
MAY 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," entered upon the second big month of its run at the Tremont theatre, Boston, last Monday afternoon. The play is the most widely discussed topic in this state, and for a fortnight has overshadowed even the European war and the Roosevelt-Barnes trial as a front-page feature. On Monday morning at 10.30 o'clock a special performance was given, with the members of the legislature and other officials as invited guests.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 6, 1915

FURTHER DEFENCE OF THE PHOTO-PLAY.

To the Editor of the Herald:

One of the most surprising, and I might say, perplexing phases of the situation created by the production of "The Birth of a Nation" is the attitude and criticisms of a few well-known men of this community.

Mr. Moorfield Storey, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, criticises the picture because it is a "wicked libel on the Negro race." He has never seen the picture. He relies upon the opinions of others for his conclusion. On the other hand, thousands of citizens have actually seen this picture, and among them men of equal standing in the community with Mr. Storey, who entirely disagree with him in his conclusion. Is Mr. Storey super-sensitive as to the feelings of his colored fellow-citizens and misinformed as to the facts, or are the thousands of citizens who have viewed this play wrong in their conclusions?

As the public continues to view this picture and public sentiment in its favor becomes more pronounced, the criticism from this small coterie of men continues, but their criticism indicates an entire change in their point of view. Therefore we find Dr. Charles W. Eliot of Harvard criticising the picture because: "It injured the whites more than the blacks," but at the end of his statement, in speaking about the continued presentation of the photo-play he says, "I am not sure it will not have a very useful result—one worth having." Closely following this statement of Dr. Eliot, as if in consternation at his statement, we find our old friend, Albert E. Pillsbury, who is one of the directors of the Wendell Phillips Memorial Association, coming out with a long dissertation in criticism, rather vitriolic and imaginative in scope, but nevertheless interesting from the point of view of bolstering the criticism, despite the facts.

He starts his letter by admitting that after having seen the picture he "found it very different from what I had been led to expect." Perhaps Mr. Moorfield Storey and others who have criticised this picture might find it very different from what they had been led to expect if they went to see it. However, Mr. Pillsbury still criticises the picture as follows:

He finds it now "a defamation of the Union cause and an apotheosis of slavery and rebellion." Well at least this is a new one and one which our colored citizens are not apparently interested in as they have argued their cause only from the viewpoint of vilification of the Negro race.

Mr. Pillsbury finds another highly imaginative basis for criticism. That is a deep, dark scheme to cause the repeal of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States, and with the license of the poet and not the logic of the attorney he reasons the white race "to arms." Of course, he brings in the Ku-Klux-Klan and alleges that the picture glorifies the principles of the Ku-Klux-Klan, chiding the public for its applause. He will not see that the public is applauding, not the principles of the Ku-Klux-Klan, which many of them know nothing about, but the beautiful exemplification of fine riding, beautiful scenery, fine horses and virtue triumphant over vice. Call it the Ku-Klux-Klan or the Crusaders, or what you will, it is simply a fitting tribute to human nature and a beautiful picture.

Mr. Pillsbury's deductions from this picture seem absurd when we consider that a large number of Grand Army veterans who actually participated in the civil war have seen this picture, with approval, but it remains for Mr. Pillsbury who did not participate in the civil war, to pick out the alleged slander to the Union cause and the alleged propaganda to repeal the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution as a basis for criticism.

To recapitulate, these gentlemen, together with some others not mentioned, have criticised this picture at different times in the following terms: that it was obscene and immoral—the courts and public authorities found it otherwise. Not content, they now say that it is a libel on the Negro race. This is unreasonable. They then say it is a direct on the Union cause; that it is a direct propaganda to repeal the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and finally, that it ought to be suppressed and that it ought not to be suppressed.

The facts are, however, that thousands of citizens have seen this play and have not been impressed as the gentlemen who made the above criticisms.

The picture itself is comprised of a pictorial reproduction of written historical events, plus romance and character study worked together in one allegorical theme called "The Birth of a Nation." It is intended to have its amusement value and does have an historical value. Naturally people will differ in their impressions of this picture, but I believe that over 99 per cent. of the 75,000 people who have seen this picture see absolutely no relevancy between the criticisms made by these gentlemen and the actual play itself.

The pity of it all is that these abnormal criticisms are operating in the minds of a large number of colored people an emotional hysteria leading them to think that their rights are in some way being infringed and it is encouraging them in false notions as to the offensiveness of this production. On the other hand, thousands of citizens are continuing to view this picture daily and no doubt go away with the same feelings as those who have already seen it, wondering why there has been so much ado about nothing. JOHN N. CUSICK.

43 Tremont street, May 5.

THE OPPOSITE VIEW.

To the Editor of The Herald:

For three generations my family have been recognized friends and benefactors of the Negro race. In the last century they were co-laborers with Garrison and Phillips in the cause of emancipation. In the present century they co-operate with such representative colored teachers as Booker Washington, Calhoun and Holtzclaw in the cause of education.

For many years I have been on the board of trustees of two southern industrial schools, which teach their scholars the useful trades and train them to become good citizens. I have been a witness to the heartfelt yearning for knowledge of these men, so recently the chattels of the white men of the South. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in her homely verse, truly and pathetically sings:

"He has come through sorrow, and need, and woe,
And the cry of his heart is to know, to know."

The schools are supported almost entirely by contributions from northern white friends of the freedmen, and in my campaigns here for funds I have found generous assistance and kindly words of sympathy in the work.

While many times I have been on the point of publicly registering a protest against the performance of "The Birth of a Nation," yet I have felt that the cause of the colored man is thoroughly safe when championed by such friends as Dr. Charles W. Eliot, the Hon. Moorfield Story, the Hon. John L. Bates, the Rev. Charles F. Dole, etc.; and I have also felt that The Herald is a wise counsellor respecting the legislation necessary to prevent a continuance of the calumny and falsehoods of this play. I have, therefore, been patiently hopeful that justice would be done to this long-suffering race and righteous laws made and enforced.

But the limit of patience is reached when a minister of the gospel is publicly reported as "rejoicing in this motion picture because it reveals the animalism of the Negro race and holds it up to public scorn"

I have waited, hoping that this clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Hawkins of Jamaica Plain, had been incorrectly reported and that a correction would appear, but I have seen none.

If the lust in the play is the meat upon which this Caesar delights to feed, let me give him a companion picture to gloat over! I will call it, not "The Birth of a Nation," but "The Birth of a Race"—the mulatto race—brought into being by the lust of the white owner for his female African slaves! and extended to the quadroon race by the lust of the same fatherhood for his mulatto offspring!! Surely this is "a supping of horrors," too awful, too horrible to contemplate—but it is history!

How much better for this nation—for the whole world—were this minister of the gospel to take his book into one of the "groves—which were God's first temples"—and in this season of Whitsuntide ("The Annual Miracles"), read his lesson from the Beatitudes, or find a text for a sermon in the words of Him who said "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Boston, May 5. SAMUEL MAY, Jr.

WALTHAM (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 6, 1915

PROTEST FILM PLAY.

Christian Endeavor Adopt Resolutions Denouncing "Birth of a Nation."

Resolutions protesting against the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," and urging the passage of laws to prevent public performances which tend to provoke racial hatreds and misunderstandings, were unanimously adopted by members of District 1, Boston Christian Endeavor Union.

The resolutions were sent to Gov. Walsh, Pres. Coolidge of the Senate, Speaker Cox, the Boston newspapers, and John B. Schoeffel, proprietor of the Tremont Theatre. They were signed by William Shaw, Nan Van Vechel and Marion J. Pullen.

The resolutions passed were:

"Resolved, that we, the members [illegible] representing 14 societies [illegible] 1000 members, protest against the presentation of the motion-picture play, 'The Birth of a Nation,' and urge the passage of such laws as shall prevent the production of such public performances as provoke racial hatreds and misunderstandings."

PLAY CENSORS' BILL TO GET THIRD READING

Rowley to Offer Amendment Providing That Action by Two Members Shall Stop Any Production Under Ban—Many Negroes Crowd Galleries.

The bill to establish the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal Court of Boston as a board of censors, of theatrical productions, with power to stop any performance at any time "at the pleasure" of the board, was ordered to a third reading in the House yesterday by a rising vote of 91 to 41.

When the bill, which was reported by the committee on the judiciary as a result of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation," comes up for its third reading today, Representative Rowley will offer an amendment to provide that action by a majority of the board shall be sufficient to stop any theatrical production. The bill as at present drawn requires unanimous action by the three members.

Galleries Crowded

Yesterday's discussion of the bill was before crowded galleries, in which colored men and women were in the majority. William H. Lewis, former assistant United States district attorney and one of the most strenuous among the Boston negroes in his opposition to the production of the play, occupied a seat on the side of the House chamber throughout the debate.

Arguments in favor of stopping the photoplay were greeted in one or two instances by applause from the galleries, and Speaker Cox was obliged to warn the spectators against any demonstrations of approval or disapproval.

Representative Burr of Boston, in charge of the bill for the judiciary committee, explained its provisions at the opening of the debate.

Sheehan of Boston, opposing the bill, said it is presented solely for the purpose of quieting a mistaken public clamor. He said he has had many friends among the negro people, but he thought if they were fair-minded they would not see anything objectionable in the production which has caused so much discussion.

Gunn of Boston said his race has been vilified far more than the negro, but when the Irish Players were in Boston a few years ago there was no Irish mob climbing the steps to the governor's office to protest. He said he would like to have pictures like "The Birth of a Nation" shown in every school in the country.

Chairman Kennard of the judiciary committee, said the committee considered the bill pretty much apart from the picture in question. He said the committee found that the law is different in Boston than it is in any other place in the State.

Criticises Negroes

Donovan of Boston criticized the negroes for what he said was an attempt to start a riot at the theatre the night the arrests were made

Washburn of Worcester urged that the bill be not treated as one designed solely to remedy a possible wrong to the colored race. Instead, he said, it applies to all theatrical exhibitions, and gives to properly and fairly constituted authorities power to shut up a show which ought to be shut up, a power which they have not today in sufficient measure.

W. H. Sullivan of Boston called attention to the fact that all of the opposition to the bill thus far had come from Irish Democratic members

Hr. J. Donahue of Medford said there can be no question that the play excites hatred of the negro.

Dowse of Sherborn declared the picture an insidious attack upon the North.

Cross of Royalston said those who oppose the play have not taken the trouble to analyze it.

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 7, 1915

DIXON DENIES PLAY AIMED TO DRIVE OUT NEGRO

The Rev. Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," from which the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," was written and produced, and Rolfe Cobleigh, editor of the Congregationalist, have renewed their controversy over the intentions of the novelist in the preparation of his book, and of the real purposes of the protested film. In a statement issued ever said the purpose of his book or the ever said the purpose of his book, or the photo-play was the extermination of the Negro race.

Mr. Cobleigh declared last night that, although he never used the word extermination in connection with Mr. Dixon's statement, he said and reiterates that the novelist told him that one of the purposes of the play was the removal of all Negroes from the United States; and he added that if Mr. Dixon denies that he is not telling the truth.

Mr. Dixon's statement reads:

Calls It Hallucination.

"The statement made by Rolfe Cobleigh that I told him that the purpose back of 'The Birth of a Nation' was the extermination of the Negro race, is the hallucination of an over-heated mind. The assertion is so foolishly absurd on its face that it would not require denial, but for the widespread hysteria which at present affects our colored friends in Boston.

"Early in March I received a letter from Mr. Cobleigh denouncing 'The Birth of a Nation,' which he had never seen. I suggested mildly that he suspend judgment until he had seen it, or at least until I could forward the verdict of the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, who had been asked to see it and make a special report from a clergyman's point of view.

"Mr. Cobleigh replied expressing his confidence in Dr. Parkhurst. A week later he wrote me again for asking for the report from the distinguished clergyman reformer. I immediately mailed it and asked him to print it in full in The Congregationalist. This he failed to do. The reason was simple. It was not what he expected or desired. He did not wish to know the truth. He wished only to attack the play.

Opposed by Parkhurst.

"Dr. Parkhurst gave 'The Birth of a Nation' his 'unqualified approval,' and specifically declared that the play was in no sense an attack on or a reflection on the Negro race of today. On the other hand, he squarely affirmed that the final impression of the drama was the highest compliment to the Negro of today because it showed so simply and plainly his progress from the conditions of 50 years ago, when he had just emerged from slavery.

"On my arrival in Boston on the 9th of April I called at Mr. Cobleigh's office to ask why, after demanding the report of Dr. Parkhurst, he had failed to print it. I met the gentleman for the first time in my life and had a very pleasant but unprofitable talk with him in his little sanctum.

"I again laughingly suggested that he suspend his final judgment until he should see the play that night. He frankly informed me that his mind was already made up, and that no event in heaven or earth could move him. I told him, of course, he could only see on the screen that which he had made up his mind to see. I laughed again and gave him two tickets for which he thanked me.

Can Make Use of Cobleigh.

"The mental make-up of such men is a curious study. As a novelist I intend to use Mr. Cobleigh.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is an absolutely true record of the turbulent life of the civil war and reconstruction. It was produced to stimulate, through three thrilling hours, the study of American history. I find it is certainly accomplishing that purpose.

To the man or woman who sees it with an open mind, it brings only inspiration and gratitude to God for the blessings we enjoy today as a free, united nation.

"The play is much broader and more catholic than my book, on which it is based. In fact, the film is so much broader than I insisted that Mr. Griffith change the title from 'The Birth of a Nation,' as 'The Clansman' was too narrow and controversial to fit the new production.

"Mr. Cobleigh is merely repeating preconceived ideas which he got long ago from an angry reading of one of my books. He certainly found no such idea in 'The Birth of a Nation.' The play speaks for itself. Its producers cannot be held responsible for what the critics of my book imagine must be in it.

"I never made the statement which came from Mr. Cobleigh's excited brain. I never made any such statement to any human being. It is hysteria pure and simple."

Same Allegation About Others.

Mr. Cobleigh said last night:

"The allegation of an overheated mind Mr. Dixon makes about everybody who opposes his play. I have had considerable correspondence with him about the play and one interview. In one letter he enclosed a clipping from a New York newspaper in which he was reported as arguing at length for the deportation of Negroes from the United States, and quoting Abraham Lincoln in support of the plan.

"He later called at my office and talked most of the forenoon about the play. I finally asked him just what he hoped to accomplish by the film. He replied that one purpose of it was to promote the removal from this country of all Negroes. I laughingly suggested the impracticability of getting rid of 10,000,000 persons. He replied that he was convinced that a start could be made at once and that the project could be accomplished within a century. If he denies that he is not telling the truth.

"As for failing to publish in The Congregationalist Dr. Parkhurst's report, we had no space for it. We should not have published it at such length [illegible] in opposition to [illegible]

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
MAY 7, 1915

[illegible] many [illegible] feel the difference between being the stronger and the weaker party in the grinding process.

An Eloquent Protest.

Yesterday's incidents in the debate over the bill in the house for regulation of theatrical plays, based upon the "Birth of a nation," in Boston, were very illuminating. All of the opposition to the bill came from three Irishmen. It is proper to make note of the fact and to name names, because it was an Irish speaker who called attention of the house to the fact and, in the name of the Irish race, as a race which had been ground under the heel of despotism, but had now made its way to the top, made a most eloquent and ringing protest against the attitude of certain members of his own race who would deny to the negroes a fair opportunity to prevent the presentation of a series of films which must have the certain effect of increasing common prejudice against their race. This manly speeker was William H. Sullivan of Boston. An equally eloquent and noble protest was made by Mr. Donahue of Medford, whose dignified, generous and broad-minded spirit was worthy of the best that there has been seen in Massachusetts in way of helpfulness to the weaker races, justice to all mankind, regardless of color or condition, and of equal fraternity for all.

This entire episode ought to redound to the credit of the negro race. They have shown a self respect which must command the admiration of people who realize what they would do under similar conditions if their own race were represented in such a way as to increase popular prejudice and injustice. They have been law-abiding and have taken a commendable course. They are on their way up and they ought to be helped by us all, for we are all on our way up and none has reason to despise the man or the race which is lower down.

MILFORD (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 7, 1915

REP. DOWSE HAS HIS SAY ON "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Rep. Dowse of Sherborn, from the Hopkinton, Holliston, Ashland, Sherborn district, got into the debate on the show censorship bill in the House yesterday, long enough to declare the production of "The Birth of a Nation" an insidious attack on the north.

He said: "If my nation was born when the Ku Klux Klan was organized, then I am willing to sell my birthright for a mess of pottage."

The bill was ordered to a third reading by a vote of 94 to 41.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Moving Picture World, May 8, 1915 — N.Y.

Race Prejudice Bill

Massachusetts Negroes Want State to Pass Bill Prohibiting Any Show Tending to Excite Race Prejudice—Neither State Nor Law Courts Had Power to Act Against the Griffith Film and Colored Folk Were Disappointed.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DESPITE the strong protestations of the colored gentry of the city of Boston, "The Birth of a Nation" is still playing to capacity houses at the Tremont theater.

A futile appeal was made to Governor David I. Walsh by the colored people, but he was powerless to act, however, he advised the protestants to apply for a warrant for the arrest of the producers of the film and the manager of the theater. These were refused by Judge Thomas H. Dowd after he had witnessed the production. In their dying effort to prevent this film from continuing its successful engagement, the colored people and their supporters are endeavoring to secure the passage of a bill in the Legislature, which would prohibit the performance of "any show or entertainment which tends to excite racial prejudice or tends to a breach of the public peace."

In making their appeal to the governor, the colored protestants stormed the State House 1,000 strong. The governor received them after a conference with the attorney general, police commissioner and police superintendent. After listening to their pleading, he informed them that he was powerless to act and he suggested the request for a warrant on the ground that the entertainment was immoral and obscene. Among those who spoke were Anna Philips Wendell Williams, white, a niece of Wendell Philips, Joshua Crawford, Alice W. McKane, Mrs. A. Sparrow, Dr. R. L. Roberts, Mrs. Agnes Adams, Mrs. E. Putnam and William D. Brigham. As the governor was leaving the executive chamber, the colored folks called their blessings to him. Several of them shook his hand and others knelt on their knees and exalted the executive.

The following day, the same army of colored folks stormed the municipal court at Boston and were granted a hearing by Judge Dowd. Warrants were asked for Joseph J. McCarthy, general manager for the Griffith Film Company and for John Schoeffel, manager of the Tremont theater. The witnesses heard were Dr. Horace Bumstead, former president of Atlanta University; the Rev. Samuel A. Brown, pastor of St. Mark's Congregational Church, Roxbury, and State Police Officer Harry Atkinson, the official censor of photoplays that are to be exhibited in this state on Sundays.

The colored element was represented by J. Mott Hallowell, while Attorney John F. Cusick represented the theatrical company. At the conclusion of the hearing, Judge Dowd announced that he would witness the film in the evening and announce his decision in the morning.

At the morning's session, the judge gave the film company twenty-four hours to cut out the cliff scene, in which Gus, the renegade negro chases a young girl over the cliff and she jumps to escape his clutches. He steadfastly refused to grant the warrant for the men named, claiming that with the elimination the show could not be classed as immoral or obscene.

With the elimination of this scene, the colored folks were not satisfied, declaring that the whole production ought to be stopped as it is historically incorrect. The bill which is now pending before the legislature was then presented. At the hearing on this bill several negroes and whites were present. Lieut. Governor Grafton D. Cushing and former Congressman Samuel W. McCall, were named among the protestants.

William H. Lewis, one of the leading colored citizens of the country, and assistant U. S. Attorney general under Roosevelt, was loudly applauded for his address in favor of the passage of the bill. He stated that an attempt is being made to degrade and belittle the negro in the eyes of his friends. The play has been brought to Boston to have Massachusetts put its stamp of approval on it. He continued, "We are not satisfied by what has been cut out by order of the court in the deletion of the "Gus" scene. The place to cut off a snake's tail is at his neck. You have scenes disgusting and degrading in the play which never happened. Not only that but New England is held up to ridicule, by the depiction of Thaddeus Stevens and Charles Sumner. We object to this play for the propaganda which it presents and which tends to raise prejudice against the negro. The bill which may be drawn makes no difference so long as we get relief. Massachusetts has a history to sustain and it lies with the Legislature as to whether it will sustain that history, or whether it will allow those illustrious men who have represented Massachusetts to be held up to ridicule. We do not mind the minstrel or the fun loving negro, but we shall protest forever against such a calumny as this upon the colored race."

Miss Adeline Moffat said that of all the plays she has seen, she had never seen anything so insidiously immoral. She cited two instances of reaction which she had heard. As a Southerner, she said that every family had some pride, but that there was not one which was willing to acknowledge an ancestor who was a member of the Ku Klux Klan, which has been pictured in an absolutely untruthful light.

Frank Hammond, secretary of the executive committee of the Bar Association, said that the present law left the licensing to the discretion of the authorities, and he thought that it might be better to make the laws so specific that there would be no room for such discretion.

Rev. Herbert S. Johnson suggested that all those interested in the question might get together and draw up a satisfactory bill. As to race prejudice, he said that not all of the indignation has come from the negro and that as much harm has been done to the morals of the white man as injustice to the negro. If this was a fight between Catholics and Protestants, that play would not be on the stage a week, he declared.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 8, 1915

What our civil war did was to uproot Negro slavery and serfdom in other races, a result that soon followed the conscious purpose of Lincoln not to restore the old slave-cursed Union. Our victory waited until that purpose had been declared by Lincoln; after that our European enemies cooled off and our campaigns began to be largely successful. The divine rule seems to be to allow [illegible] intolerable and then be doomed with the general consent. But there is usually a residuum of young Turks, of southern Negro-haters and religious rancorists who outlast their day and are represented here in Boston by Dixon and Griffith just now, pretending to be, what they never were, lovers of Union and liberty. In their train, working for the 30 pieces of silver are the hirelings of the money-making theaters, in various pursuits: and most hypocritical in newspaper offices. Professing to uphold fair play and free speech, they shut their eyes to the foul effect of pictured lies, and see history falsified without protest.

Mr Griffith supposed that a lawyer, whom he had given a ticket to what one of the ring at the Tremont theater calls "a historico-fictional romance of the Lost Cause" (Mr Hallowell) was accepting a retainer to plead that cause. When the accepter of the ticket gave his opinion of the wretched stuff, Griffith says, "He thrust a stiletto into the back of his host." The stiletto business is Griffith's own performance. He comes to Boston where the Shaw monument stands, secures a license pretending that his play is a historic laudation of Lincoln and the Union and then insinuates his hat pin stiletto into the ribs of his host,—the city of Boston. McCarty differs from Dixon in his excuse for the aspersions on the Negro and his glorification of the cowardly Kuklux. He compares Griffith to Walter Scott as a historical novelist, and then proceeds to contradict Mr Filsbury's faithful description of the Kuklux as "a secret horde of midnight ruffians." The truth was that every night raid of those rascals was in violation of the old state laws against arson and house-breaking in the nighttime, against felonious assault and murder. Not one of them could have been acquitted in a fair court, by the laws they had grown up under. Their rage was vented not only on Negro fellow-citizens, but specially on white Union veterans, holding federal positions in the South. If McCarthy had ever read the Congressional reports on that dastardly conspiracy against all law, he would have no excuse for his falsehood; but it is evidently a sin of ignorance. We are now to have an effective censorship law, under which "free speech" will be in no danger except from free tickets in newspaper offices, and the profits of theatrical advertising in the counting rooms.

The treatricals at Syracuse, in which the Roosevelt star company is having some success this week in showing Mr Barnes as the second lieutenant in villany under Platt, are revealing the secret methods of both parties in New York politics; but the story has little that is new in it. The libel suit of Barnes has neatly released an ex-president from the cold storage to which he had consigned himself; but it has frustrated the political trade by which Armageddon was to be itself sent to the coldest sort of storage; and the republican party was to march to victory over Wilson, with the two surviving ex-presidents arm-in-arm somewhere near the head of the forces. However this trial may end, the party in New York remains divided, and without hope of Hughes as a presidential candidate.

Herald, Falls River, Mass. May 8 1915

THE BIG SAVOY SHOW.

Of the many triumphant shows which the Savoy has presented during this phenomenal season, none has come with any greater promise than that which is announced for Monday. By the same token, the Sunday evening concert has been selected with unusual care, and a greater triumph even than that of last week is anticipated.

There's a picture play on the Monday bill warranted to exicte great interest, even as it has wherever it has been presented. It is Jesse L. Lasky's presentation of Blanche Sweet in Belasco's "The Warrens of Virginia," which ran for an entire season at the Belasco theatre in New York. It is, in a sense a "sister picture" to the "Birth of a nation.' Blanche Sweet appears supported by such notable actors as House Peters, James Neill, Mabel VanBuren and P. E. Peters.

In the uniformly strong bill of vaudeville, "The Four Volunteers" have a singing novelty and some of the most novel comedy the season has produced. Then there is the Yorke Trio, three very classy song, dance and change artists. Gwynne and Grosset, great Fall River favorites, will appear in their famous little play, "The Golden Wedding." Then the Skaters Bijou, a demonstration as thrilling as it is graceful, and D'Armore and Douglas, sensational athletes.

Those who saw the last Keystone know what to expect from the new product now being produced by the "old reliables" with the new stars, while the new Mutual "weeklies" certainly hold a fund of interest.

Motion Picture News N.Y. May 8, 1915

Try to Jam Through Censor Bill in Bay State

IN the final days of the Massachusetts legislature session two entirely new bills to regulate motion pictures were introduced. One bill would include among films which might be prohibited those tending to arouse racial and religious prejudice.

The other extended the classification still further, making the censorship apply not only to immoral and obscene films, but also to those which tend to create disturbance, incite riots or cause public disquiet.

These bills were the direct outgrowth of the feeling aroused against the Griffiths films, "The Birth of a Nation." This feeling, participated in by whites, as well as negroes, the latter of whom claimed the film was defamatory of their race, reached its climax in a riot at Tremont temple.

Eleven persons were arrested by a special force of 150 police who had been warned of an alleged plan to break up the show and ruin the film and screen. Receiving no help from Mayor Curley, whose censors reported the film as outside of their powers of prohibition, its opponents on Patriots Day marched 2,000 strong to the State House across historic Boston Common.

Governor Walsh was outspoken in his opposition to the film, and a plan was formed to apply for a warrant in the municipal court for the arrest of the producer and manager on the ground that they were presenting an obscene show.

The judge heard much evidence, saw the film and ordered cut out within 24 hours that part which showed a negro in pursuit of a white girl. But the judge declared the law inadequate to prohibit the show in its entirety.

Hence, the late attempt to pass some law which will give officials power to prohibit any film which would arouse race or religious prejudice.

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 8, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"—Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" is attracting larger audiences to the Tremont Theatre than are drawn to any of the theatres in other cities where the play is being shown. Instead of wearing out its welcome, the play is witnessed with increased enthusiasm as the weeks of the run slip by. The keen interest of Boston audiences is shown by applause marking scenes and episodes that pass unnoticed elsewhere.

One technical reason for the success of "The Birth of a Nation," apart from the controversy raging around it, is the unusual quality of the actors under Mr. Griffith's direction. Their work is the farthest removed from the rough and ready methods that characterized the early days of film productions.

The spectacular features of the civil war battle scenes and the rides of the clans impart a tremendous thrill to the presentation. "The Birth of a Nation" is on view at 2:10 and 8:10 every afternoon and evening, excepting Sundays.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 8, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

Crowded houses have been one of the results of the wide publicity given "The Birth of a Nation" through the controversy that has raged about its presentation in Boston. Every performance at the Tremont Theatre is greeted with a packed house. The history of the Civil War and the Reconstruction period are vividly pictured with scenes of rare beauty and on a scale of unusual magnitude. The drama is shown from 10.30 in the morning till 11 o'clock at night.

WESTBORO (Mass.) CHRONOTYPE
MAY 7, 1915

Hon. Joseph S. Gates attended the complimentary performance of the "Birth of a Nation" that was given to the members of the General Court by the manager. The performance was given as a result of the bill now in the court which followed the demonstration by the colored people in protest of the pictures.

...TH OF A NATION" ...ST SUCCESSFUL HERE

...second month of D. W. ... film spectacle, "The Birth of ... is attracting larger audiences ...remont Theatre than are drawn ... of the theatres in other cities ...the play is being shown. The fifth ... of public performances starts ...the matinee today. Instead of ... out its welcome, the play is ...ed with increased enthusiasm as ...eks of the run slip by. The keen ...t of Boston audiences is shown ...plause marking scenes and epi... that pass unnoticed elsewhere. ...technical reason for the success ...e Birth of a Nation," apart from ...troversy raging around it, is the ...l quality of the actors under Mr. ...'s direction. Their work is the ...t removed from the rough and ... methods that characterized the ...days of film productions. ...spectacular features of the Civil ...battle scenes and the rides of the ...impart a tremendous thrill to the ...station. "The Birth of a Nation" ...view at 2.10 and 8.10 every after... and evening, excepting Sundays.

...ion Picture News ...N.Y. May 8, 1915

...OT STOP "BIRTH OF A ...ATION" IN BOSTON

...ecial to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Boston, Mass., April 28. ...erable discussion has been caused ...exhibition here of the Griffith ...ce, "The Birth of a Nation." A ...that the picture be stopped was ...the National Association for the ...ment of the Colored People. ...Curley heard the petition and said, ...allow the play to proceed, and the ...l censor and a representative of ...ce Commissioner may pass upon ...ts."

...yor Walsh took a hand in the mat... was informed by Police Commis... O'Meara that the picture could not ...ly stopped from the State House ...ile the picture is being shown.

...FIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 8 ...

...foreign policy. At present both the ...s seem to be ... Franklin Dexter of yore, "a Bostonian ...the most cultivated distaste." ...xpedient politics will have a hard prob... to solve this year and next in deciding ...at ... expedient. Improving ...nce is making the wail of hard times ...a democratic tariff inexpedient; the ...d suffrage and prohibition issues ...ve waxy walking; the excitement over ...gregation" and the photoplay puts the ...gro vote in the North at a premium; ...d there are some indications of a re... of political liberty in the South, ...ere the Negro vote has been most un... institutionality suppressed. It no longer ...ds delegations to republican conven...ns.

...As a contrast to the causeless defama... of the whole colored race in Ameri...—in fact in the whole world,—for ...xon and Hawkins and the Kuklux Klan ...general make no exceptions, but bring ...railing accusation against every Negro, ...the faintest shade of mixture with ...ite or Indian,—let me tell a part of the ...y of Cloyd Boykin, a Virginia Negro, ...n at Hampton, and partly educated in ...famous school for his race founded ...Gen Armstrong, well remembered in ...ringfield. He is now 36, and was never ...slave, but born of a poor family: for ...race were almost universally poor ...en freedom was thrust upon them, as ...very had been, with very little choice ...their part. He hardly remembers Gen ...mstrong, but entered the institute under ...Frissell; nor did he learn drawing ...re. But he had the born artist's in...rd desire to make pictures, and to use ...or as well as form in his art. Con...quently he took to painting when he ...me North several years ago; had his ...t thorough instruction at the Boston ...museum school, though he took some ...ons and painted his first portrait in ...w York. I first met him two years ago, ...en he was still learning at the Boston ...ool. He showed me a fairly good ...rtrait of Wendell Phillips that he had ...inted from a photograph, for he never ...Phillips. He had already painted a ...rtrait of Mrs Howe from another paint...; this I never saw. He went to Es...to study in London and Paris, in ...vember, 1913; and just before sailing ...finished a portrait of the late Dea ...ndall of Cambridge from sittings, which ...praised by the ... ...ends.

...in London, and especially in Paris, ...

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Margaret Cameron, a daughter of the South, comes upon her father, Dr. Cameron, engaged in a heated discussion of slavery with other Southern gentlemen. A raid on Harper's Ferry by John Brown, with 18 followers, has recently taken place. A toast is drunk to "Stephen Douglas, the next President."

The scene then shifts to the Northern home of Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, noted for his vindictive policies toward the South. Stoneman is conversing with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts and zealous Abolitionist. Both men are sincere in their convictions of the wickedness of slavery and its inconsistency with republican institutions.

Their conversation is overheard by Lydia Brown, a mulatto woman, ostensibly the housekeeper, but in reality mistress of the Stoneman house. As Sumner departs the woman resolves to use the insidious influence of her position to bring freedom to her race.

Ted and Phil, sons of Austin Stoneman, visit Cameron and for the first time see slavery in its practical application. They find Cameron stirred over a newspaper headline which reads: "If the North Carries the Election the South Will Secede." The young trio became alarmed at the import of the announcement.

Time comes for the Stonemans to return, with Phil deeply in love with Margaret.

Events, meanwhile, are progressing rapidly. Lincoln has been elected President, carrying all free States except New Jersey. Business in the South is bad.

The news that South Carolina is an independent Commonwealth is received with popular rejoicing. A congressional committee is appointed in the North to prevent other States from following South Carolina's example.

Secession moves apace. Jefferson Davis counsels his followers to prepare for war. The Southern Confederacy is formed with Davis as President.

Lincoln answers the challenge by calling for 75,000 volunteers. As one man the entire North rallies to his support.

The Stoneman and the Cameron boys offer their services to the North and South, respectively, and leave their homes.

A great ball celebrates the night of leave-taking at Piedmont. At daybreak the Piedmont troops set forth, taking with them Ben, a captain; Wade, a lieutenant, and Duke, a private.

By Gertrude Stevenson.

(Part VI. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part V. was printed in yesterday's Journal.)

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

Ben Cameron rode off to the tune of martial music, spurred on by the tread of marching feet behind, thrilled with the power, the glory and the honor of it all. Behind, the father, realizing his gray hair, his age, his infirmities as never before, the mother and sisters, numbed with grief, turned back into the home made desolate by the Confederacy's demands. Not for them the inspiriting accessories of battle and war—only anxious waiting, horrible dread gripping their hearts as the months wore on.

Mrs. Cameron sank into her low rocker on the opposite side of the fireplace from Father Cameron—the same chair in which she had sat as she rocked her babies—these same babies who had grown up and been torn from her by a series of happenings and events she had as yet scarcely comprehended. Quietly, unrestrainedly she wept, wept the tears she had courageously withheld during all the days preceding the troops' departure, gala days for Piedmont, grimmest of the grim for her.

Margaret seated herself at the old organ, possibly with the original intention of finding solace in the repetition of the hymns she loved to play, but her slender white fingers lay motionless on the keys, her unseeing eyes fixed blankly on the music before her. Flora, with all a child's unreasoning rebellion against the inevitable, sat playing with the flag her brother had given her. Suddenly, as if by mutual divination of thought, both girls turned to their mother, and, kneeling, buried their heads in her broad lap, seeking to find and to give some measure of consolation.

Month after month passed on in the saddened Cameron home, months when only the most meager reports of military proceedings were available, when the rejoicing of each day without bad news from the front was nullified by the fear of some awful story of disaster to come in the morning.

The Confederate troops, under the command of Robert E. Lee, were successful beyond even their own wildest hopes. The two defeats, the fall of Fort Donelson before Gen. Grant's attack and the surrender of New Orleans, had been followed by a period of almost complete stagnation on the part of the Union armies, an inactivity which caused President Lincoln himself to declare in his whimsical way that "if Gen. McClellan does not want to use the army, I would like to borrow it."

This procrastination allowed the Confederates opportunity to recover from their original reverses so that, instead of following up its first brilliant coups, the North was soon in great alarm for even the safety of Washington. With the Peninsular campaign a complete failure for the North, Lee gained the love and confidence of the Southern soldiers, a confidence which was destined to wax stronger as the war progressed.

Flora Growing Up

Thus more than two years passed and still Mrs. Cameron was able to offer prayers of thankfulness that her three sons had thus far been spared. Often the letters from home and the messages from the front crossed, so that on a certain afternoon, when Ben, now browned and grizzled with the years of active service and proud of his title of "the little colonel," was smilingly reading a letter from Flora, Flora was equally happily perusing a note from him.

"And you have really grown a moustache," she had written. "Oh, my! I'm just dying to see you. I'm growing up, too. They say I'm such a big girl now you wouldn't know me. * * * (kisses) Your (little) big SIS."

Hard Times at Southern Door

Ben thought of the little girl he had last seen waving a tiny hand as he rode away. He tried to picture her "all grown up" and couldn't. His imagination positively refused to see her other than the mischievous, frolicsome youngster he had loved to romp with.

"Flora young ladyish!" he laughed to himself. "Impossible!"

But just at that moment, Flora, very much "young ladyish," was standing on the verandah rereading Ben's letter for at least the 16th time. She had grown like a young reed, rather taller than Margaret and even slenderer, with more a boy's lithe, straight lines, but singularly attractive in the clean cut length and poise of her.

Today, she had on her prettiest, in fact her only best dress for "hard times had come a knockin'" at every Southern door, the Cameron house included. No longer could Flora's every whim be granted and ever growing girlish longing satisfied, as Margaret's had been from a family purse of which the string had never before been drawn. A new order of things had arrived and a different scheme of living inaugurated in the household.

Tucking Ben's letter in the folds of her bodice, Flora waited impatiently for Margaret, who was just drawing on her gray silk dolman preparatory to an afternoon's walk. Petulantly Flora banged the brass knocker until the noise resounded through the rooms and sent Margaret hurrying to the door. Laughing and chatting, the sisters started out.

They had scarcely gone the length of the avenue when they were conscious of a strange commotion, people were fleeing in every direction and farther along, the cause of the disturbance was evident. Rushing madly down the street was a company of negro guerillas, under the command of a white leader.

Flee Terrified From Negroes

The girls waited to see no more, but fled, terrified, to the shelter and protection of their own home. Mrs. Cameron threw up her hands in terror as they ran in and for a moment no one saw what to do or what would happen next. Ignoring their protests, Dr. Cameron, hotheaded in spite of [illegible] grabbed a brace of revolvers and [illegible] defend his home. Mrs. [illegible] instinct born of desperation, and Margaret fol[illegible] the kitchen [illegible] out [illegible] rear [illegible]

Rescued by Militia

Suddenly the sounds took on a different note. The women could hear other feet aproaching, other voices raised in loud command and with sobs of relief, they realized that the Confederate State troops had been apprised of the guerilla raid and had come to the rescue.

Hastening up stairs, they could hardly believe that their quiet home could have been so changed in the space of a few minutes. Everything was turned topsy-turvy. Broken fragments of their most cherished possessions strewed the floor, and flames were lapping the partitions between the reception hall and the living room. There wasn't a moment to be lost, and with the help of the rescuing soldiers, old Mammy Cindy and Uncle Jerry, Dr. Cameron was soon revived, the fire put out and some semblance of order restored to the disordered rooms.

The cup of sorrow is seldom drained, as Mrs. Cameron realized with the advent of another day. She was just realizing how thankful she ought to be that her losses were material things and not the precious lives of her sons, when a summons at the front door roused her from her reverie. Father Cameron answered the knock. A soldier, with set lips, stood waiting. Thinking he had come to investigate the outrage of the day before, Mrs. Cameron stepped toward him. As she did so, she saw him hand her husband a paper. An awful dread gripped at her heart strings. On her lips, inarticulate with suspense, one word formed itself:

"Which!"

She saw Dr. Cameron start as he read, saw his weary lids fall over the eyes too pained to read further. With her hand to her mouth to silence the involuntary cry, she snatched the paper from his hands.

"Duke!" she moaned, "Oh, tell me it isn't true!"

Killed by His Friend

It was a blessing the poor mother could not have known how he died, that she could not see his gray-clad figure as he charged forward in that last desperate hand-to-hand conflict on the third day of the Battle of Gettysburg, rushed to meet the bayonet point in the hands of a blue-coated lad no older than himself and, falling back, recognized in his assailant the boy he had promised to meet again as they parted two years before at the Cameron home in Piedmont.

In that same moment Tod Stoneman recognized the figure that lay at his feet. Blind with the fury of conflict, he had struck without seeing and it was only when the enemy fell that he realized who it was.

With his arm outstretched he started toward his chum, wild with eagerness to stanch the wound he had inflicted. Suddenly there was a singing noise in the air, a sting in his breast. His face contorted with agony a moment. Then he crumpled and fell, dying, at Duke's side.

True to their promise, the chums had met again.

(To Be Continued Monday)

DUKE CAMERON DIED BY FRIEND'S HAND AT GETTYSBURG

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 8, 1915

"REGULAR ARMY MAN" AT POLI'S.

Tramp Act Also a Good Number on Week-End Bill at Palace.

Clark and McCullough as a pair of hoboes are the best laughter makers at the week-end Poli bill. The pair appear in the regulation tramp rig and much of their nonsense is of the old, old sort, but they handle it cleverly and have no trouble at all in getting it across. A series of parodies is sung at the close of the act and the audience calls the entertainers back several times. Victor Morley & Co in "A regular army man" offer another entertaining turn, mostly song by a chorus of male voices. The musical numbers are by Clifton Crawford and Gus Barrett and are catchily tuneful. Mr Morley takes the part of Dickie Vanderfeet, the molliecoddle private who turns out a "regular fellow," scraps with the sergeant, wins the colonel's daughter and all that. There is snap in the act and the singing is by no means bad. Laypo and Benjamin, acrobatic comedians, present a hodgepodge of agile nonsense which is warmly received. Their acrobatics are rather less than average but the fun-making offsets that.

"The up-to-date-girl" is the title of a sketch given by Catherine Cameron and company in which a young playwright who has just won success is approached by the mother of his sweetheart and begged not to have anything more to do with the girl, as she is stage-struck. The young man tells the mother that the girl can act, and proceeds to demonstrate the fact by a series of episodes in which she enters as various chaacters, completely fooling her mother. There is quite a clever idea behind the act, but somehow it is not done convincingly, the probable cause being that the attention is tugged about from one thing to another with too great rapidity. Frank and Georgia are interesting during their allotted space of time, with a line of dancing, patter and singing to which exception cannot be taken. Helen Dickson and the Rambler sisters have a pantomonplace dancing act and the bill is opened by the Menards, equilibrists, who work conscientiously during that most difficult part of the evening.

A new departure is announced for Poli's Palace for the summer, opening Monday afternoon, when, in addition to the usual high grade vaudeville program, there will be a big feature motion picture of from four to seven reels. This will comprise practically a double bill, and the management state that the quality of the offerings will be kept up to the same standard in vaudeville, with the likelihood of the attractions in that department being better than ever, because of the fact that many companies will be closing about this time and some of their best performers will go into the varieties. The first of the feature plays, which will be seen on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, will be "The Avenging Conscience," a six-reel production, made under the direction of D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation." "The Avenging Conscience" is suggested by the story of "The Telltale Heart," by Edgar Allan Poe. Henry B. Walthall and Blanche Sweet are in the cast, as well as other notable players.

NO. ATTLEBORO (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 8, 1915

NOTES FROM STATE HOUSE

State House, Boston, May 8.—The bill establishing a shad hatchery on the Taunton river was passed to be engrossed in the senate yesterday.

The taxation resolve striking the word "Proportional" from the constitution was ordered to a third reading.

The resolve permitting women to expend their own election money went to a third reading.

The inholders' bill, prohibiting false registration, got tied up in the house. The senate has tacked on an amendment and in order for concurrence unanimous consent was necessary. Donovan of Boston refused this and the bill goes back to the senate. The measure now returns to the senate, which body can strike out the amendment and pass the bill if it so desires.

The bill permitting city governments to consolidate departments without legislative consent was rejected, 41 to 51.

Consideration of the "Birth of a Nation" bill was deferred until Monday.

The Boston & Maine railroad bill was assigned for debate on Tuesday.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 8, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon the second big month of its run at the Tremont Theatre next Monday afternoon. The play is the most widely discussed topic in this State and for a fortnight has overshadowed even the European war and the Roosevelt-Barnes trial as a front page feature. On Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock a special performance is to be given, with the members of the Legislature and other officials as invited guests.

Mr Griffith's production has developed an enormous number of friends in Greater Boston and all the surrounding places. It has now been viewed by more than 75,000 patrons. Their support, with that of those who sympathize with them, outweighs the opposition. The issue of freedom of dramatic speech is involved in the play's continuance.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 8, 1915

The bill advocated by the opponents of "The Birth of a Nation," to provide for a board of censors in Boston consisting of the mayor, police commissioner and [illegible] the Municipal Court, [illegible] postponed for further consideration to Monday.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 8, 1915

[illegible] of a Nation" [illegible] Monday.

May 8, 1915 Boston

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 8, 1915

JOURNAL MAIL BAG

Mr. Dixon Not Responsible For "Birth of a Nation"

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

Mr. Thomas Dixon has informed us that he made no such statement to Mr. Rolfe Cobleigh as that "The Birth of a Nation" was being put forth to bring about the extermination of the negro race in this country. We cannot conceive of Mr. Dixon's uttering such a silly statement, and we prefer to credit his word in this matter rather than that of Mr. Cobleigh.

But at the same time—whether Mr. Dixon (as he says) did not make the statement or whether (as Mr. Cobleigh says) he did make it—we wish to point out the unquestionable fact that Mr. Thomas Dixon has nothing to do with the production of "The Birth of a Nation" in Boston or in any other part of the world. We must not be held responsible for what Mr. Dixon says or anyone else says, outside our own organization. It would be as reasonable to hold us responsible for the opinions of Tillman or Vardaman or Cecil Chesterton or other radicals on race questions.

Mr. David W. Griffith and his associates selected the material used in "The Birth of a Nation" because it possessed drama and the possibility of spectacular features connected with the Civil War history, and for no other reason. All the talk of "propaganda" in connection with the play is moonshine. We came to Boston early in order to fill Tremont Theatre "time" that Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger had requested us to fill, and not from any ulterior purpose whatever. Our claim that "The Birth of a Nation" must be judged as an art work, independent of the Dixon or anti-Dixon theories and ideas, is borne out by the fact that but 40 per cent. of the filmed scenes derive from "The Clansman" and 60 per cent. derive from Mr. Griffith solely and individually.

It seems decidedly unfortunate that the opponents of Mr. Griffith's work have not taken the same view of it as the great majority of the Boston people, namely, that it was produced for the sole purpose of entertainment, just as all great plays, in part based on history, have been. Let our opponents present a scenario possessing the "punch" and tremendous heart-interest of "The Birth of a Nation," and Mr. Griffith will be equally willing to put forth their version of this particular phase of history.

J. J. M'CARTHY,
General Manager "Birth of a Nation" Company.

Says Ku Klux Klan Protected Defenseless

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

The picture play, "The Birth of a Nation," has been attacked from almost every point of view imaginable, and with little reason for justice. It has been declared obscene, and yet even before the "Gus" feature was eliminated, there was no obscenity in it save such as might be read into it out of the imagination of the observer.

It has been condemned as being aimed against a single class of our citizens, the colored people, and yet it contains no reflection against any class of colored men save the barn burners, criminals and lawless militia that infested the South during the Reconstruction period. It has been opposed on the ground that it is a propaganda in favor of the deportation of the colored race from this country to Africa and elsewhere.

There is not a suggestion in the play of any such impossible idea.

Now as to the historical bases of some of the scenes that have evoked criticism.

First, it is a well known fact that the worst disorders in the South during the years succeeding the war did not begin until after the passage of the military Reconstruction bill in March, 1867.

Second, we know that the able but vindictive representative Thaddeus Stevens was the author of this bill, a measure that destroyed the civil government that had been set up in the Southern States after the war and substituted therefor five military dictatorships, a measure stigmatized by Prof. Burgess of Columbia University as "the most brutal proposition ever introduced into the Congres of the United States."

Third, we know that under this bill practically the entire white population was disfranchised and the whole colored population enfranchised, the latter only to fall almost immediately under the sway of the Northern "carpetbagger" and Southern "scalawag," who were the leaders in the carnival of crime and mismanagement that followed.

Were colored militia employed to uphold the carpetbaggers' power as shown in the play? L. T. Levin, himself a Southern radical, says that in South Carolina "the entire militia as organized and armed was composed of colored men, with the exception of a few white officers. During the year 1870 there was organized 14 full regiments of nearly 1000 men to each regiment." Chief Constable J. B. Hubbard, another radical, declared "The militia was organized and armed for political purposes." His deputy, J. W. Anderson, in a letter to Mr. Hubbard, dated June 25, 1870, said: "We can carry this county if we can get constables enough by encouraging the militia and frightening the poor white men."

Were the Legislatures of South Carolina and other Southern States in the hands of the newly enfranchised blacks, and did a carnival of misgovernment ensue? In the South Carolina Legislature of 1868 to 1872 there were 155 members, 57 white and 98 colored. Only 22 of the entire body could read and write. Several could only write their names. Forty-one signed by an x mark. The total taxes paid by the 98 colored members was $143. The total tax paid by the 57 white men was $491. Sixty-seven colored members and 24 white members paid no tax at all. None of the higher State officials, save the lieutenant governor, paid any taxes. And yet this Legislature levied taxes of over $2,000,000 per year and in four years increased the bonded debt of the State by nearly $20,000,000. The total cost of public printing alone which in 78 years prior to 1868 had amounted to only $600,000, in the succeeding four years of carpet bag government aggregated $1,160,465.

In one session $350,000 was spent for "supplies, sundries and incidentals," $125,000 of it being spent for the maintenance of a free restaurant, lunch counter, and bar at which members and their friends wined and dined at public expense. Whole volumes have been written on this orgy of misrule.

It was these political conditions and the carnival of social crimes and excesses which accompanied them that gave rise to the Ku Klux Klan. This league was organized "to protect the weak, the innocent, and the defenseless, from the wrongs and outrages of the lawless," "to protect and defend the constitution of the United States, and all laws passed in conformity thereto," and "to protect the people from unlawful seizure, and from trial except by their peers in conformity with the laws of the land!" The most unprejudiced and dispassionate historians agree that the first results of the movement were good, while admitting that the later results were both good and bad. "The early work of the secret orders," says Professor Fleming of West Virginia University, "quieted the negroes, made life and property safer, gave protection to woman, forced the Radical leaders to be more moderate, made the negroes work better, drove the worst of the Radical leaders from the country and started the whites on the way to regain political supremacy."

All this forms an epoch in our history, an epoch of which too little is known here in the North and of which our people have a right to know, whether it be presented to them in books, or in a wonderfully vivid picture play like "The Birth of a Nation."

FRED W. CROSS.
Representative, First Worcester District, May 7th, 1915.

Says Movie Legislation Menaces American Liberty

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

The present agitation and the various bills presented to the Legislature to censor photoplays, etc., are an attempt, indirectly, to force upon the people of this State the laws of a Czar and other foreign principles. It will lead to the abolition of free speech and such privileges as we enjoy under the American Constitution. There is not a race or creed in existence which has not made mistakes and committed crimes, more or less. Everyone should stand on their present record and achievements, and if they are worthy they offset past records and misrepresentations of the present.

The negro race has as good, if not better, record than some others, and the people of this State are fair enough and would not notice parts of pictures which they object to if their attention was not called to them by such publicity as the "Birth of a Nation" has had in Boston. What we need is true history in motion pictures, and above all, uncensored pictures, providing they are within the lines of decency.

Cambridge. F. B. M.

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 8, 1915

TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT

"The present agitation over the photoplay, 'The Birth of a Nation,' probably is caused by some unscrupulous white politicians," declared the Rev. E. A. E. Palmquist, pastor of the North Avenue Baptist church, Sunday night, in his sermon.

"Boston is having a tempest in a teapot," said he. "The tempest is caused by kindling a fire by inflaming the minds of our colored brethren. New England is like an old maid, if you want to know how to bring up children ask an old maid. If you want to know anything about handling the negro ask the people of New England.

"The colored people are merely children and if the people of Boston are to allow them to close 'The Birth of a Nation' they will be sowing the seed that will bring forth a harvest similar to the harvest in the south at the close of the civil war. The photo-play should arouse no prejudice in the heart of the negro. It has a great value as a splendid historical production." Mr. Palmquist told his congregation that he formed his opinion after seeing the photo-play for himself.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 8, 1915

SPECIAL INTEREST AT SAVOY

Of the many big shows which the Savoy has presented during the season, none has come with any greater promise than that which is announced for Monday. The Sunday evening concert has been selected with unusual care, and a greater triumph even than that of last week is anticipated.

There is a picture play on the Monday bill warranted to excite great interest, as it has wherever it has been presented. It is Jesse L. Lasky's presentation of Blanche Sweet in Belasco's "The Warrens of Virginia." This is the play which ran for an entire season at the Belasco theater in New York, and was generally conceded the most interesting and veracious of the dramas dealing with the Civil War and the reconstruction period. It is in a sense, a "sister picture" to the "Birth of a Nation," and in some respects is even more notable. Of Blanche Sweet, who appears, supported by such notable actors as House Peters, James Neill, Mabel Van Buren and P. H. Peters, little need be said.

NEW PLAN TO SERVE FILM PUBLIC AND PRODUCERS

A new film censorship bill will be presented next week to the Senate Committee on Ways and Means on behalf of distributors and exhibitors. The bill has been drafted. It is reported to be the most logical measure yet produced and a satisfactory solution of the agitation stirred by "The Birth of a Nation."

Details of the bill are purposely withheld at this early date, but enough has filtered through official circles to show it will recommend the appointment by the Governor of an unpaid commission of from eight to ten censors who will follow the standards set up by the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures.

The latest bill will not disturb the present statute which provides that the Mayor and Police Commissioner can censor improper films or public entertainments. It will merely create, in the unpaid commission, a board of appeal whose decision will be final.

This board is to have a representative of the labor unions, a representative of the motion picture interests and to be made up of public-spirited, liberal-minded persons who are willing to give their time to the work as do 120 or more philanthropists, educators and social welfare workers on the National Board of Censorship in New York.

ACT AS FINAL COURT.

And the new bill will demand that the words "obscene" and "immoral" be specified as causes for objecting to films.

But the Censorship Commission would not have power or authority to suppress a film until it had been given a public showing, and until it had been formally complained of. As soon as question is raised as to a film that has been approved by the National Board, its merits would be determined by the State censorship commission which would be a court of last resort in Massachusetts for film feuds and flurries.

Little resulted from the conference which the Senate Committee on Ways and Means held on Thursday with representatives of both factions. The film men sent agents and Senator Bates was there with the men and women representing the societies most active in foisting the Carstens-Lowell bill, the title given to the measure substituted for the bill introduced by Carl C. Carstens of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and abandoned at the last moment.

It is understood that the antis were so uncertain of the merits of their Lowell substitute even that they were willing to trade with the film men who remained obdurate and unrelenting. The antis proposed that a truce be declared. They suggested they would be satisfied if a board of censors be permitted to attend the "try-outs" of films which the producers and exchanges hold at fixed days every week. This the picture men would not consent to. They contended that the approval of the National Board, a voluntary commission made up of men and women of the highest integrity and purpose, ought to be sufficient test unless in instances where local disfavor was raised.

SIFTING THE FILMS.

Under the present law no objectionable film could possibly be presented more than once, the film men argued, and then the Governor's unpaid commission could be called in fairly and justly and dispassionately to pass upon the issues in dispute. Such a process would serve as a finer screen through which to sift films that may have been duly indorsed by the National Board, but certain features of which might prove offensive to local views of conditions. Appeal of all complaints to the unpaid commission would avoid the arduous and what the film men term the "physically impossible task" of attempting to judge the 35,000 or more films in use in Massachusetts, and the thousands brought into the State weekly.

The Ways and Means Committee had intended to complete its hearing on the Lowell-Carstens bill, but decided to call both factions in conference in order to get an idea of what was wanted. So the hearing, begun on Wednesday, will be completed next week when the film men will pop their measure which was drawn in a spirit that held most important the welfare and interests of the public.

The motion picture forces have been doing their utmost to impress their critics and both branches of the Legislature with the fact that they are only too eager to protect the public morals and to furnish children and adult patrons only with films that will provide them with healthful and educational amusement. They want it known that they are anxious to obey the law, but they do not wish to have vicious and hysterical legislation rushed through which will work hardship on them and cripple the film industry that is progressing in leaps and bounds.

SHOWER OF BILLS.

The shower of bills following the protests against the photo-play at the Tremont Theatre confused the public. Most of them, notably the Sullivan and Carstens measures, were effectually extinguished, but there seems to be still misunderstanding because of the measure before the House and the Senate.

The Carstens bill aimed to place the power of censorship with the State Board of Labor and Industries. The film distributors and exhibitors were unalterably opposed to the Carstens bill, which they considered fully as menacing as the Sullivan bill with its race and religious tentacles.

With their forces united against the Carstens bill for weeks the picture men were not a little disconcerted to have the agitation over "The Birth of a Nation" blind the public and distract attention from the dangers of the Carstens bill.

But they did not swerve from their position nor did the tumult frighten them. On their guard to combat every hostile and unconstitutional measure, they reserved their heaviest guns for the Carstens bill, which they squelched and then they riddled the last-resort measure offered by James A. Lowell, Mr. Carstens' fellow official in the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

They didn't bother their heads with the compromise measure reported by the House Committee on Judiciary which would amend the present censorship law by adding the chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court as a censor with the Mayor and Police Commissioner and making their decision unanimous. The lobbyists for "The Birth of a Nation" were the only ones who interested themselves very much in the Judiciary compromise bill.

RIGHT OF APPEAL.

The assailed photo-play promoters tried to push through the Coggan bill in the House, a measure that would amend the present statute only in that it would give the managers of complained of films the right to appeal their cases to the Superior or Supreme Court, sitting in equity. But the Judiciary Committee discarded the Coggan with the Sullivan and kindred measures and reported a bill of its own.

RESTING ON OARS.

While not over-delighted with the outcome, "The Birth of a Nation" supporters, after hurried analysis of the Judiciary compromise, discovered that, even if it did not provide for such specific causes for suppression as "obscene" and "immoral," it at least was less likely to operate against their show than the racial and religious bill proposed by Louis R. Sullivan of Dorchester.

So since the report of the Judiciary Committee it has been noted that "The Birth of a Nation" forces have been decidedly inactive. They admit they are resting on their oars. They admit that while the compromise bill is far from satisfactory it is better than others and that it is not such a bill as could hope to stop the historic production that has stirred the ire of the colored population of Greater Boston.

That was how it happened that they did not fight it in the House although morally opposed to it, and singularly enough the colored people and their white sympathizers were opposed to the compromise, too. But in spite of the open opposition of the negroes and such societies as the Equal Rights League and others and the "silent" opposition of "The Birth of a Nation" lobbyists, the compromise bill was passed to a third reading and now waits to be engrossed.

But the compromise report of the Judiciary Committee will never pass the Senate. Its doom has been sounded. It will die a natural death and the real fight will be made on the new bill drafted by the film interests to be discussed before the Senate Ways and Means Committee next week.

"LARGELY MISUNDERSTOOD."

The Rev. Mabel Witham, Ph. D., pastor of the First Church of Immortalism, lecturer and author of many books, said today: "The photo-play, 'The Birth of a Nation' has been largely misunderstood. I fail to see why the colored race should have such strong objections against it. To my mind it is simply grand and beautiful. I say this after an unprejudiced view of it. I do not believe it throws any bad reflection against the colored race.

"I am afraid we have read too much into it and let our imagination run away with us. There is a higher way of regarding it.

"Some small points in that play have been unduly emphasized to the exclusion of many other striking subjects which make up the intrinsic beauty and significance of the play. I want to be just to the colored race. I may say that I know something about them, having lived with them. I went to see the play in their behalf. I had heard so much and read so much I felt that I must add something to the general condemnation, if it is deserving. If I went there to scoff at it, I came away with praise.

"Well, as each scene came before me and different historical events were represented, I could not see flaws that my friends wanted me to see. I saw much to admire. In fact, I think the whole play is [illegible] and can be so adjusted [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 7, 1915 179

MOVE TO AMEND THE CENSORSHIP BILL MAKING

posed Change Would Give Drastic and Unwarranted Power to Two Officials.

by hysteria of oratory, the ... advanced to a third reading ... moving picture censorship bill.

Confused by a potpourri of issues, the House permitted itself to be subjected to a test vote, which indicated 94 members in favor of the pending legislation and 47 opposed.

Whether by design or not, "The Birth of a Nation" became the issue at stake, and the House, accepting the issue, voted in favor of the bill which vests in three Boston officials unlimited power to suppress any form of public entertainment and to determine at their will and pleasure the educational standards for all the people of the State.

Meanwhile a gallery of colored men and women who do not want the bill, because they believe it will be ineffective, sat patiently, wondering where it will all end.

Representative ... Washburn ... of Worcester, who favored the bill, declared "the Republican party cannot afford to turn its back on the colored people."

He spoke for the "silent" minority, he said. The colored people were great soldiers and demand protection. Mr. Washburn evidently had not been informed that earlier in the day the colored communicants of an Everett church had filed with the House of Representatives a petition in protest against the legislation for which he was speaking.

He told the House that he fought for the "silent" minority even as he fought "shoulder to shoulder with the Republican leader of the House against the sectarian bill and in favor of the silent minority who opposed that sectarian legislation."

ROWLEY HAS AMENDMENT.

Statistics show that the people who opposed the sectarian bill are not in any appreciable minority in the State. Perusal of the daily journal of the House of Representatives show that Mr. Washburn of Worcester did not vote either for or against the sectarian bill.

Anyway, in order to conserve the colored vote to the Republican party, Representative Rowley of Brookline, after the declaration of the test vote, submitted a new bill, which is a trifle more satisfactory to the colored people, but which in a greater measure attacks the right of free speech and free publication.

The bill advanced by the House grants unlimited suppression authority to the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Boston Municipal Court, their judgement to be unanimous.

Under the Rowley amendment, which may be reached today, the ... be vested in any two of the three officials. They will be given unwarranted authority to stop anything, ranging from a game of tiddledy-winks in the parlor of a private home.

Messrs. Sheehan, Giblin and Donovan of Boston were the principal speakers against the bill. They said they believed "The Birth of a Nation" was a fair document and did not tend to incite racial prejudices.

Messrs. Burr of Boston, W. H. Sullivan of Boston and J. J. Donahue of Medford combined with Mr. Kennard of Somerville, the Republican leader, to send the bill along its way.

BIG EFFECT OF BILL.

Strange as it may seem, there was not one of the 240 gentlemen who make the laws for the State of Massachusetts who got down to the root of the whole thing. Not a syllable was spoken of the momentous effect the bill will have upon the public policy of the State and nation. No one anticipated that the legislation invests three city officials of Boston with the arbitrary right to prescribe the educational standards which must be obeyed.

During the aggravated talking somebody mentioned that the moving pictures have come to be recognized as both an educational institution and as an enlivened newspaper. But there it stopped.

An aged lady who sat in the gallery and whose appearance recalled the days of old lavender, was heard to ask her neighbor:

"Won't this bill permit the newspapers to be censored?"

"Certainly not."

But the old lady was insistent.

"You establish a principle," she said. "Perhaps next year some person will come here to the State House with a bill and demand that the newspapers be restricted in their right of free speech. They will have the argument that the motion pictures are censored, and as the pictures are but animated newspapers why shouldn't the newspapers be censored too."

The Senate Ways and Means Committee tried to find out where it stood on the Carstens-Lowell bill, that establishes a couple of new State commissions, adds a few more officials to the State's payroll and taxes the movies $1 per 1,000 feet for inspection. Finally the hearing adjourned for a week.

DIXON SAYS COBLEIGH IGNORED REPORT THAT FULLY INDORSED FILM

Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," telegraphing from New York, says:

"The statement made by Rolfe Cobleigh that I told him the purpose back of 'The Birth of a Nation' was the extermination of the negro race is so foolishly absurd on its face that it would not require denial but for the widespread hysteria which at present affects our colored friends in ... Boston.

"Early in March I received a letter ... from Mr. Cobleigh denouncing 'The ... Birth of a Nation,' which he had ... never seen. I suggested mildly that ... he suspend judgment until he had ... seen it or at least until I could forward the verdict of the Rev. Charles ... H. Parkhurst, D. D., pastor of the ...

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
MAY 7, 1915 697

DISTORTING HISTORY.

If, as Rolfe Cobleigh contends, it was the purpose of Thomas Dixon, the author of the story upon which "The Birth of a Nation" is based, to create such countrywide prejudice that the colored race would be driven from this republic, he was addressing himself to a stupendous task. There are colored people to the number of 10,000,000 or more in America. Many of them are large property holders. They are engaged in all sorts of useful occupations. To create race prejudice! A lofty ambition surely for any man. Dixon's well-known hatred of the colored race makes possible easy acceptance of the substantial truth of what Editor Cobleigh of the Congregationalist says. To those who hate the negro "The Birth of a Nation" may seem eminently proper. To men like Dr. Eliot, who declares that the play is "a very extraordinary misrepresentation of the birth of a nation," the distortion of history for gain is something that cannot be too severely condemned. Lord knows there is enough ignorance prevailing about the history of our country—about its recent history, too. Only a few days ago an out of town newspaper published a sketch of a Civil war veteran who had died. There were a dozen dates of important events—one of them at least epoch making—and only two of them were correctly given.

Philadelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger
MAY 7 1915

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) JOURNAL
MAY 9, 1915

GRIFFITH SPECTACLE PLAYING TO CAPACITY

THE success of David W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," presented at first class theatrical prices, is not confined to New York City, it is claimed.

The film is meeting with success in Boston.

The Boston Herald said of it: "A triumph upon which Mr. Griffith and his associates may well plume themselves."

The Boston Transcript: "The surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, move upon the screen as they never moved in print."

The Boston Globe: "So wonderful and so beautiful and so full of life that it robs one of the power of criticism." Boston American: "A wonderful historical drama and an enthralling human story." Boston Post: "The Birth of a Nation" is most remarkable." Boston Journal: "The pictures make up the most extraordinary historical cyclorama so far brought forward." Boston Record: "A wonderful accomplishment. Compels admiration for its authors."

JEWISH ADVOCATE (Boston)
MAY 7 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Editor of The Jewish Advocate:

Sir—For the past few weeks we were witnessing a spectacle in Boston the like of which has not been presented for some time. I have no reference to the physical exhibition of the much talked of film itself, but to the tremendous amount of earnest and well meaning agitation created by that film.

The most striking part of that agitation, the part that made the profoundest impression upon the observant citizen, is the total disregard of the entire subject by the Jewish element within our midst—a disregard that left the impression of an organized effort to ignore the subject.

From the very beginning, it seems, that we as Jews could have been expected to manifest some interest in this movement for the suppression of a source which, it is alleged, breeds race hatred. We may honestly differ as to the effect of such an exhibition, but the subject involved, per se, is one that is of peculiar concern to us.

Would it be fair to assume that we in New England are without any representation, without any intellectual and spiritual leaders or leadership? What has become of the numberless numbers of Associations, Societies and Organizations who conceal, usually lead one to believe that they, ... section of ... alone, are the duly authorized ... guardians and sponsors of all ... Jewish?

... question par excellence has ... raised. A most vital issue has ... issue which af... race no less than ... an issue of many races in our community. And yet our synagogues have treated it with the most elaborate, not to say deliberate, silence. Our Y. M. H. A's have shunned it even as they would shun evil. No doubt Friday services have kept them too busy to pay any attention to show any concern in this matter.

... mythical ... Jones and the characters are ...

Are we to rest contented that the subject is of no consequence to us unless it directly and specifically affects the Jewish race to the exclusion of any other creed or race? Altogether too selfish a view to be taken for granted.

Legislation is now in the making, legislation in which we are most vitally concerned, and yet the entire Jewish community, the press and pulpit, stand aside as if they entered ... conspiracy of silence.

This is our opportunity to effectually disabuse the minds of our neighbors who all too often charge us with being self-centered and self-inclusive as a race.

ALEXANDER ROSE.
330 Old South Bldg. May 1st, 1915.

THE PHOTOPLAY

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The Photoplay Editor of the Evening Ledger will be pleased to answer questions relating to his department. Questions relating to family affairs of actors and actresses are barred absolutely.

Queries will not be answered by letter. All letters must be addressed to Photoplay Editor, Evening Ledger.

It is many years since any dramatic production has caused so much speculation and discussion as has "The Birth of a Nation," which this city will witness until autumn—and perhaps not then. The play is superlative as a motion picture. But there are scenes which treat the negro question as it existed during Civil War times, with a brutal frankness tending to the offensive. Cosmopolitan New York took to the play; Boston, the cradle of the anti-slavery movement, hemmed and hawed and then, with grimaces and wry faces, swallowed the film. The race question as presented in the play has been treated and mistreated editorially by some of the leading papers, such as the Springfield Republican and the New York Evening Post. The latter paper, in a recent utterance, says:

Wherever it goes, the "Birth of a Nation" film arouses widespread indignation. In Boston the excitement has been at white heat, because of a series of hearings before Mayor, Governor and a committee of the Legislature. A Judge has been found with authority and courage enough to cut out the most objectionable scene. The press has been ful of arguments for and against the film and the proposed legislation. On Sunday last many clergymen preached about the play; and ex-President Eliot, speaking in a Cambridge church, was one of those who protested against its falsification of history. Never before have the colored people of Boston been so united and determined or appeared to better advantage, and their white friends have rallied in great force to their aid. Governor Walsh, ex-Congressman McCall and Lieutenant-Governor Cushing have spoken out emphatically against permitting the play to continue, though the Mayor sided with the producers—as our own New York Mayor has failed to recognize in his utterances the gravity of the situation or to rise to the emergency, being content with the promise of certain slight excisions, which appear to be of little or no value. • • •

The truth is that this wonderful new means for public amusement and education has brought with it grave perils which we are only just beginning to realize, for side by side with its educational possibilities are the dangers of unrestricted propaganda. Ask the Rev. Dr. Crothers has pointed out. • • • Now, let us suppose, as Doctor Crothers has also suggested, that others inspired by this shameful example turn to religious propaganda and represent the horrible murdering of Catholics at Drogheda by Cromwell, or the massacre of Protestants on St. Bartholomew's night—what then?

Undoubtedly, the tortures of the Inquisition would make effective capital against the Pope at Rome; and if moving picture had existed in 1898, we might has seen a still more vindictive anti-Spanish crusade by films of battle, or devastation, or reconcentrado camps. Pictures of Russian pogroms would make plenty of money, yet rouse bitter national and racial antipathies. Obviously the feeling that would result from a religious film-propaganda might lead to most serious breaches of the peace.

What makes the matter worse is that it is not a question of dealing with a single theatrical production, for the film can be duplicated so that the objectionable performance may be going on in 40 or more cities at the same moment. It is not surprising, in view of this power for evil, that the United States Supreme Court on February 23 last in three unanimous decisions upheld the Ohio and Kansas laws creating official censors. "We would have," it said, "to shut our eyes to the facts of the world to regard the precaution unreasonable or the legislation to effect it a mere wanton interference with personal liberty." The Court plainly had in mind the difficulty of controlling by public sentiment alone a series of films scattered over the whole country.

Yet so excellent a newspaper as the Boston Advertiser feels that the proposed censorship may be a most dangerous infringement of our freedom of speech and of expression, on a par with the efforts to suppress Garrison and Phillips in anti-slavery days. The Boston Transcript and Herald appear to believe that if one bill proposed should become a law any citizens who indulged in a fight over a play could stop it, and that any play with a lesson to teach or one which undertook to dwell on the weaknesses of a group of our citizens might easily be driven off the stage.

NEWTON (Mass.) GRAPHIC
MAY 7, 1915

UNDER THE GLAD DOME

The bill prohibiting transportation of liquor into No-license communities has had some peculiar parliamentary situations during the past two weeks. Passed by both House and Senate and placed before the Governor, it was suggested that possibly the bill was framed so broadly as to prevent the transportation "thru" as well as "into" a No-license community, and the Governor requested its recall by the Senate until the opinion of the attorney general could be obtained on this important point. The Senate accordingly voted to recall the bill, but as it required unanimous consent in order to reconsider the enactment, it was found impossible to take such action as Senator McLane of Fall River entered objections. The bill was therefor neither before the Senate or before the Governor and for the past ten days has been on the desk of the Clerk of the Senate. Yesterday Mr. Atwill rendered an opinion that the bill would not prevent transportation "thru" a No-license community, altho he said frankly that it was a doubtful question. The Senate has therefore ordered the bill sent to the Governor again for his action.

The House had a long debate yesterday morning on the pending amendment to the constitution in regard to taxation, discussing the advisability of postponing action until a later time. Postponement was refused, however, and the amendment adopted with but 7 votes against it.

There was considerable opposition to the various taxation bills recommended by Governor Walsh, City Solicitor Bishop opposing the bill to turn over to the state the taxes now paid by certain public service corporations to the different cities and towns. This bill would add 41 cents to our present tax rate, the treasury losing about $35,000.

Mr. W. H. Rand, Jr., of the Commonwealth Trust Co. opposed the bill to require banks to furnish the Tax Commissioner with a list of bond holders. The committee on Taxation has voted to report a recess commission to consider important taxation matters and report to the next Legislature. As there have been numerous recess commissions on these matters, this method is probably a means for ducking action on them at the present time.

The committee has also reported the franchise tax bill and a drastic bill to give the Tax Commissioner authority to revise assessments made by any board of assessors.

The production of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre has brought a number of moving pictures regulate the business of moving pictures, some of them extremely radical. Former representative James A. Lowell of this city, acting for the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, presented a bill to create a new department with the chief of the district police as head of a board of censorship on all picture shows.

Another interesting measure was ... upon this week when Election Laws presented a bill to allow women to serve on political committees. It having been found that under present laws, the ladies would not be allowed to handle their own campaign for adoption of the equal suffrage amendment which will be acted upon in November.

Senator Ellis, who was in charge of a bill aimed to regulate the use of hotels for immoral purposes, has had the bill amended so as to exempt persons who use a private room simply for dining purposes, and it is now on its way to the Governor.

In the House last week, Representative Allen at first voted in favor of $15,000 for investigation of the Telephone Company while Representatives Bothfeld and Weston voted with the minority against the bill. On the final passage of the bill Mr. Allen voted with Mr. Weston, against adoption and Mr. Bothfeld was not recorded.

The bill to authorize the reorganization of the Boston & Maine has passed the Senate, Mr. Ellis voting for the bill after his amendment had been defeated.

The pure milk and bread bills have passed both branches and now wait action by the Governor.

J. C. Brimblecom.

EVEN MORE OFFENSIVE

...terian Church, ... to see it and ... from a clergy-

...ied, expressing ... Parkhurst. A ...e again, asking ...e distinguished ... I immediately ... him to print it in full in The Congregationalist.

"This he failed to do. The reason was simple. I was not what he expected or desired. He did not wish to know the truth. He wished only to attack the play.

"Dr. Parkhurst gave 'The Birth of a Nation' his unqualified approval and specifically decared that the play was in no sensean attack upon, or a reflection on, the negro race of today.

"The play is much broader and more catholic than my book on which it is based. In fact, the film is so much broader that I insisted that Mr. Griffith change the title to 'The Birth of a Nation,' as 'The Clansman' was too narrow and controversial to fit the new production."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 9, 1915 1701

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 9, 1915 1701

The impetus given "The Birth of a Nation" has not yet subsided and the two performances daily are almost invariably crowded. Now that the discussion of the photoplay, pro and con, is taking a brief rest, people are recognizing the wonderful character of the pictures, the marvellous detail, and are beginning to appreciate what an immense amount of work was required to pose for the numerous scenes. I do not quite understand, myself, how it was arranged for the horses to apparently drop dead at the right moment and the riders hurled to the ground, head over heels. The trick is some clever.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 9, 1915

David W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," is taking up another big production in his new picture play entitled "The Mother and the Law." It deals with some modern problems of the family as they concern the Church and the State. The production of the new play will be made in the course of the Summer, and it will probably be shown in Boston at the same time as in New York.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 9, 1915 177

Tremont Theatre

The Griffith historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to prove itself one of the most popular and successful entertainment presented in Boston this spring. The fifth week of the engagement opened yesterday, and the rule of capacity attendance, both matinee and night, still holds. The Tremont Theatre has the largest orchestra in town, the men in the orchestra pit are all experts, and their playing of the old Civil war tunes enhances wonderfully the marvellous effect of the pictorial scenes. The programme girls and usher girls are in the quaint cretonnes and hoop skirts of 50 years ago. The men ushers are tall manly looking Union and Confederate cadets. On the 12,000 feet of film offered in the entertainment, it is impossible to pick out an anachronism of military equipment, costume or historical detail. The splendid acting of Mr. Griffith's fine company of principals and many thousands of well trained supernumaries is a big factor in the success of the play.

VICKSBURG (Miss.) HERALD
MAY 6, 1915

Movie Stars Are Getting Rich

By Robert Grau

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN

PERHAPS the most astounding phase of the motion pictures' growth is the fact that most of the stars of the screen are young men and women who had little or nothing on the speaking stage, while not a few who never trod the boards in their lives are now earning salaries a grand opera diva might well envy.

Last year Mary Pickford was paid salary by the Famous Players Film Company, three years before her name was ever even advertised. It was when her old employer, David Belasco, engaged her at ten times the salary he had paid her previously that she who was known as "Little Mary" became a Broadway star.

But she was not happy away from the film studio. Immediately the Belasco engagement ended, she returned to her old love and was hailed as the "Queen of the Movies." Now Mary Pickford's salary is $104,000 a year—$2,000 a week, with the spectre perambulating with clock-like regularity for 52 weeks in the year.

Alice Joyce who recently sent a check for $500 to the actors' fund never acted on the stage at any time. She is as well-known today in Japan or Australia as in this country, and if she wished to convert her fame as a screen star into cash by way of vaudeville, her weekly salary would be in four figures. But Alice Joyce remains with the Kalem Film Company with which she started on her amazing career.

There are three directors of photoplays producing for the Mutual brand of films who earn from $60,000 to $100,000 a year. The higher figure goes to D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation." Griffith's earnings on this one production will add vastly to his income, as a separate undertaking in which he is heavily interested. It was just six years ago that Griffith, in sheer desperation, turned from the stage to the film and was glad to accept the regulation price of $5 a day.

Of all the remarkable changes created by the growth of an infant art and industry the career of Thomas H. Ince is perhaps the most widely discussed. Ince is the eldest son of an old time actor who did not live to see all three of his children achieve fame in the film studio. "Tom" Ince was in such straits five years ago when he applied for "work" in a Western picture plant, that he confesses he was without a place of shelter for his wife and baby. Now Ince not only earns in excess of $80,000 annually, but he is producing picture plays in a city named after himself (Inceville, Cal.,) where he often passes a production on which $50,000 has been spent.

Ralph Ince, a younger brother, has attained the highest position possible in the film studio. He writes many of his productions, but it is rare that he now gets before the camera. Recently he was offered $1,000 a week to leave the Vitagraph Company where he has been attached for years.

Anita Stewart is Ralph Ince's sister-in-law. Here we have a concrete illustration of what the motion picture art has meant for young women who embrace it seriously even without stage experience. Miss Stewart came to the Vitagraph studio less than three years ago, having not the least previous experience on stage or screen. In a few months she became a star, later scoring a sensational triumph in "A Million Bid." At the age of twenty she is earning a salary paid to few Broadway stage favorites.

Few persons realize that even the now famous John Bunny has had but three "fat" years; in fact it was four years ago that he came modestly to the Vitagraph Studio in Brooklyn. For twenty years on the stage Bunny passed through all of the vicissitudes of a precarious calling, and when he was offered $40 a week by the Vitagraph management he accepted with alacrity. The same Bunny is now a rich man. Just now he is fulfilling a contract wherein he is paid $1,000 a week to appear in the flesh in the regular theatres.

There are at least a score of youthful stars of the screen who now earn ten to twenty times as much as the highest paid salaries given them on the stage. As many directors of photoplays are paid from $250 to $500 a week who never knew a three figure salary as stage directors. Moreover some of the highest paid of all never staged a play in the older field in their lives.

The matinee idols of filmdom achieved little on the stage. Jack Warren Kerrigan earns $25,000 a year. Carlyle Blackwell is producing in his own studio photoplays directed by himself and in which he is featured. These two youths still in their early twenties are idolized by more than half the women who attend the picture houses. Neither earned as high as $50 a week when on the stage, in fact both were playing four years ago in "Brown of Harvard" in which James Young starred. Now Young himself is one of the pillars of the film industry. He writes and directs the photoplays he appears in. His wife (Clara Kimball Young) is Mary Pickford's closest rival. Like so many others who enjoyed little vogue on the stage, her career in picturedom has been amazingly meteoric.

Even the photoplaywrights who have made their impress greatest in the newer field have no stage achievements to their credit. Ninety per cent of the scenarios (save those adapted from stage plays) are the work of men and women who never wrote a spoken play in their lives. Emmett Campbell Hall, now receiving a cabinet officer's salary from the Lubin Film Company, sold 98 out of the first 100 scenarios he wrote. He is merely one of many who "think in pictures." Recently in St. Louis, Mo., Ida Damon won a $10,000 prize in a contest by providing the last situation in a serial thriller called "The Million Dollar Mystery." Miss Damon never wrote a line for publication in her life. At the time she received the check for $10,000 she was a stenographer for a piano house. Truly the once despised movies have enriched the rising generation of writers, players and directors alike.

More Pictures at Poli's Hereafter

The patrons of Poli's Palace will receive a double bill for their money during the summer, the management announces, it having been decided to give, in addition to the vaudeville bill, a feature motion picture play of from four to seven reels, and the first entertainment under the new departure will be seen to-morrow, Tuesday and Wednesday, when "The avenging conscience" will be the feature photoplay, and McMahon and Chappelle will head the vaudeville talent. "The avenging conscience" or "Thou shalt not kill," is suggested by Edgar Allen Poe's story, "The Telltale Heart," in which the man who had killed his enemy was haunted by the dead man and imagines that he can hear the heart of his victim beating. It is produced by D. W. Griffith, who was also the producer of "The birth of a nation." The photography is said to be remarkably clear, and the producer is credited with having been able to transplant to the screen much of Poe's genius.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 9, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Holds Attention at the Tremont

The fifth week of the Griffith historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, begins tomorrow without evidence of lessened attendance. It is decidedly the most remarkable photo-play ever presented here.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Clansman live again in Mr Griffith's film. In fact, the spectacle seems to be a summum magnum of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole great period—a mine from which the spectator can extract illimitable golden ore. The acting of the principals and many thousands of well trained supernumaries is a big factor in the success of the play. Finally the music, an adaptation of the old American tunes to historical narrative adds to the pleasure of patrons.

JEWISH ADVOCATE (Boston)
May 7, 1915

CALLS PLAY UNPATRIOTIC

Rabbi Harry Levi In Address, Says "The Birth of a Nation" Should Be Barred

At Temple Israel, Sunday morning Rabbi Harry Levi spoke on "The Birth of a Nation."

Rabbi Levi said in part: "The measure of this play's effectiveness is the measure of its responsibility and also the measure of its vicious influence. But much that it offers is absolutely unhistoric, and much that it presents as history is so distorted as to lose its historic value. Much of it is also untrue.

"Either as an expression of blind hate or to achieve mercenary ends, it paints falsely the conditions of yesterday, and then failing to see that with the passing of time all conditions change it would have us believe that what was, still obtains. Because at one time some negroes were bad, it would insist that today all black men are bad. By the same token because a white man commits a murder, murder is a characteristic of the Caucasian race.

"It would awaken a prejudice which has been gradually dying and which should have died long ago. It gives new life not only to race hatred but that sectional feeling that was born of the Civil War and which happily has been passing away.

"And that is why with all its pretensions, it knows nothing of patriotism. He who would incite one section of a people against another is a traitor. It should be not merely expurgated but barred in Massachusetts and every other State of the Union."

BOSTON (Mass.) REPUBLIC
MAY 8 1915 8

A Sufficient Reason for the Withdrawal of "The Birth of a Nation."

If Thomas Dixon, author of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now so terribly stirring up racial feeling in Boston, said—and the statement has not yet been questioned—that the real motive of his production is "The achieving of white supremacy and the getting rid of the colored people," then that is reason enough why the play should be withdrawn from Boston and from every truly American city. It may rightly be said of the Negroes that they are the only involuntary immigrants that America has ever had. If, despite slavery, persecution, lynching, they have attained to the number of 10,000,000 in our land, it is not at all clear how we are to deport them without their consent, or even with it, to Africa. No true American wants to solve the Negro question that way. The Afro-American has as much right here as any other American.

Outrages on human nature always bear bitter fruit. If, here and there, Dixon ... have not a matter of course that former Mayor Fitzgerald should stand with the oppressed and maligned Negro. We are glad to see Jewish rabbi, Protestant ministers, prominent Boston women, and by no means least, the venerable Dr. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard, equally standing for the weak.

FORCING NEGRO PROBLEM TO THE FRONT.

The Boston Afro-American uproar over the Rev. Dixon's "Birth of a Nation," has got Bay state politicians going. First a Democratic Governor assured the colored contingent that he was at their service, for legislation to put the obnoxious play on the blink. Then the Lieutenant Governor and other Republican leaders got busy and pledged their party's support to legislation prohibiting such plays. These manifestations are cited preliminary to the following interesting and suggestive account, in the Springfield Republican, of a committee hearing on the question:

An enormous crowd of negroes and a few whites packed to overflowing the largest committee room in the state house yesterday to hear the opposition to legislation aimed at the suppression of "The Birth of a Nation." Dr. Charles Fleischer, Rev. Dr. Chauncey J. Hawkins, M. Sumner Coggan and others spoke against the passage of legislation under the Sullivan petition that would leave in the hands of any one man the power to suppress any theatrical production.

An hour before the doors were opened several hundred people, mostly negroes, crowded around the entrance to the committee room, and when the doors were finally opened, it took strenuous work on the part of Sergeant-at-Arms Pedrick and his assistants to prevent some of the aged men and women in the crowd from being crushed by the hysterical throng struggling for admission. People who could not get in sat down upon the stairs outside. Senator Norwood announced that the hearing would be adjourned if the spectators indicated approval or disapproval of the remarks of the speakers, but his admonition did not prevent occasional hisses.

The above is followed by a number of arguments from which the following extracts are selected as especially edifying and significant:

DR. FLEISCHER'S VIEWS.

The next witness was Dr. Charles Fleischer. He said that he was asked in the beginning to join the protest against the "Birth of a Nation," but after seeing the play, he refused to do so because he saw nothing objectionable in it. "I can stand all the hysteria and vilification that will come to me for my stand on this matter if this play tends to make the North and the South face the negro problem. I am glad the play is being given," he said. He said that he felt that the great principle of freedom of speech is being threatened by this agitation. He quoted liberally from Woodrow Wilson's history of the United States to show that the play, while not precisely accurate historically, is generally correct.

Dr. Fleischer said that as a Jew he did not particularly enjoy the portrayal of Shylock as a typical Jew, but the Jews have stood a lot of persecution and have been strengthened by it. If a race is to be pampered and protected from criticism it will never grow up. The negroes, he said, have made splendid progress in the last 50 years, but the large majority of them are still children, "and this statement is proved by their actions in Boston," he added. This brought a hiss or two from the negroes. "I know that is not pleasant," said Dr. Fleischer, "but it is true."

Corporation Counsel Sullivan was also heard in opposition to the Sullivan bill, and Representative William H. Sullivan asked the corporation counsel if he did not think the objections of a large body of citizens was sufficient reason for stopping a play.

"Certainly not," replied the corporation counsel. "If a substantial body of citizens should demand my watch it is no reason why they should have it, and a production like "Birth of a Nation" is proper should not be confiscated."

The Epoch Producing Company which produces the "Birth of a Nation," was represented by John F. Cosick, who said: "This play is being given at present with great success in San Francisco, Los Angeles, New York, Kansas City and Chicago and has been sanctioned by the authorities in all of these cities." He stated that the national board of censorship passed upon the film, even before some features were removed and 18 out of 24 rated it as follows: Educational value, excellent; artistic value, excellent; dramatic value, excellent; moral effect, good. "Many of the men responsible for this condition have not seen the picture," continued Mr. Cusick. "Moorfield Storey, Lieut. Gov. Cushing, Samuel W. McCall and Gov. Walsh admit that they have not seen the play." He read a long list of prominent dramatic critics, including Metcalf of Life and a number of New York and Boston papers that have approved the play. He criticized bitterly the action of Gov. Walsh in connection with the protest of the negroes. "Gov. Walsh without seeing the play or talking with anybody connected with it, says to these agitators, 'If there is enough law on the statute books to stop this play, I will see that there is such a law passed.' This attitude on the part of the Governor is responsible for a lot of this agitation and disorder," said Mr. Cusick.

Upon the "freedom of speech principle" in the case, we make no comment—other points brought out may attract our consideration. From the Southern view point The Herald has looked with disfavor upon a stage production of the revolting facts of a period of history that this section needs no realistic reminder of. But the argument, of Dr. Fleischer especially, is convincing that for making the North "face the negro problem," which is now knocking at her doors, the positive value of the "Birth of a Nation" outweighs the objections to it. Having no such value, or need in the South, it has been a practical failure, is no drawing card, in Southern cities. But if the same outcry had been raised here by the negroes, and espoused by the politicians, it would have popularized it here, too.

No less effective and salutary are the remarks quoted from Mr. Cusick: who asserted and cited the specific proof that the reconstruction pictures in the "Birth of a Nation" were drawn with strict regard for the historical facts; thus disseminating education where it is much needed. The emphasis he places upon the verdict of the National Board of Censorship, specifying the lessons, and the merits of the play, will impress even the politicians like Gov. Walsh, Democrat, ex-Congressman Samuel W. McCall, Republican, and that veteran professional negrophobiac, Moorfield Storey.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 9 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The Griffith historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to prove itself one of the most popular and successful entertainments presented in Boston this Spring. A new week of the engagement begins tomorrow. The producers certainly merit their financial success, for unlike some managements during long runs they have not cut out any of the expensive accessories that contribute to the enjoyment of the public. The Tremont Theatre has a large orchestra and the playing of old Civil War tunes enhances wonderfully the marvelous effect of the pictorial sc...

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 9, 1915
1709

"BIRTH OF NATION" MAKER

David W. Griffith Takes Bundle of $5000 in Cash to Mother in Old Kentucky Four T

A remarkable photograph of Mr. Griffiths, the light for which is furnished solely by the match he holds to the end of his cigar. It is a rare bit of camera work. The pose is characteristic of the producer of "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffiths loves action and speed, and when his actresses fail to measure up to his standard of speed he jumps in and personally coaches them.

Irrespective of the contest waging over "The Birth of a Nation," it is interesting to know what kind of a man devised the film and brought it into being.

The official biographer of David W. Griffith, the motion picture producer, asked Griffith for some data, and got the answer that "he was born in Kentucky, that he grew up in a house like most boys; started out after his school and college days to find his place in the world, and that since he went into the business of producing pictures he has lived most of the time under his hat."

Strangely reticent about his personal affairs, the creator of "The Birth of a Nation" (when you know him) has one of the most interesting personalities in the world.

Two weeks ago he appeared in the office of the Epoch Producing Corporation in New York and put in a requisition for $5000 cash. It was a Saturday afternoon. All the funds at the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is playing, had been banked, and the cash on hand was required for salaries. But one of the managers made the round of several Broadway hotels and finally got the cash money in exchange for checks. It was all in $100 bills.

Mr. Griffith bundled the money into an old newspaper, which he tied with a piece of rough string. As he caught the flyer for Louisville, Ky., that afternoon he was observed with a suit case in one hand and the bundle of cash in the other.

The next chapter of this little story opens in LaGrange, Ky. A tall, youthful-looking man, with aforesaid cash bundle and suit case, knocks at the door of an ivy-clad cottage.

The thin, stately, white-haired woman of the crinoline and hoop-skirt era answers the knock and comes out to meet him. As the tall young man drops his suit case and embraces the old woman with his good right arm his left hand holds out a bundle in a newspaper with the commonplace remark:

"Here is a little present for you, mother."

Same Gift Four Times a Year

The incident, as the managers of the company came to learn about it, surprised them not a little, but it is characteristic of Griffith. Four times a year, on his flying trips between Los Angeles and New York, he visits the old Kentucky home and leaves that same little "memento." It is always the same sum and is always contained in an old newspaper.

"When I was a boy," said Griffith to a chum the other day, "I always had a vision of making a place in the world and bringing back the coin. I didn't know what checks were in those days. I don't think most people in LaGrange know what they mean nowadays. Anyhow, it's just a fad of mine to make the little present in Uncle Sam's legal tender."

Few men owe more to their parents than the famous director does to Brigadier-General Jacob W. Griffith and Mrs. Mary Perkins Griffith. The father held distinguished command in the Southern army.

He died when D. W. Griffith was but a lad, nevertheless, the sixth sense of military strategy that the boy inherited and the vivid depiction of Civil war campaigns that General Griffith used to tell, have remained ever with the son.

Mrs. Griffith, the mother, has been David's best friend, as every mother ought to be to her boy. She gave him old-fashioned chivalry of gentle Kentucky, and has ever watched his welfare and progress with a whole-hearted love and devotion.

Talks Little About Self

Most of the material given below has been picked up from Griffith's intimates and associates, for he will rarely talk about himself.

He wanted to be an actor or a dramatist, he did not quite know which. A stock company director named Oscar Eagle gave him his first job at Macauley's Theatre, Louisville, from which post he drifted to New York, and alternated between playing parts and writing plays.

The row of a new playwright is hard to hoe, so after one of the early partly successful attempts, young Griffith attached himself as utility actor at $5 a day to the Biograph studio. Soon they were taking small scenarios from him, and when one of the directors got sick, they allowed Griffith to make a one-reel picture.

His new ideas of the "close up," "fade out," "switch back," and "parallel action" revolutionized the technical side of photographic acting. His choice of talent in this field was likewise almost uncanny, so that in five years' time he developed a majority of the motion picture actors and actresses who are justly eminent today.

In the fall of 1913, the Mutual Film Corporation secured his services, and while in association with the Mutual, he has produced "The Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffiths is so busy a man that he has no time for the ordinary diversions and avocations of life. While at work in Los Angeles he is up at 6 o'clock every morning. His working day is from 8 or 9 o'clock until midnight. He supervises everything, reviews all scenarios, inspects every player and every costume, approves all properties and structural effects, directs every foot of all films that bear his name, and looks over all the film work of the other directors.

Is a Born Commander

"He lives under his hat," is a true expression. Griffith has a hat in every room of the many score rooms of the studio. He wears 50 hats a day, but his favorites are the enormous Panamas that guard against the excessive heat of the Los Angeles sun. He always keeps in working trim, is hard as nails physically, and while on the directing job wears his hair closely cropped. His favorite instrument is the megaphone.

Upper left picture shows one of the [illegible] Lower—Mr. Gri[illegible]hs gets re[illegible]

A born commander, he goes out fo[illegible] field work with this enormous speaking tube and directs an army of several hundred persons as easily as a farmer would boss a team of horses. But when he puts on the big battle pieces, like Sherman's march to the sea, and the Battle of Petersburg, he has to discard that big voiced instrument for a modern switchboard, and rejars of telephone wires.

While careful for the safety of his people he personally fears no danger and often takes big chances in the outdoor directing work. One of his high-powered automobiles develops a speed of nearly 100 miles an hour. With G[illegible]

N REAL LIFE

Year—Other Sidelights on Master Artist

"movie" company waiting for her cue to go before the camera. Upper right shows Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, two of Mr. Griffiths' "heroines."
ation in his 100-mile-an-hour auto. With him are Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper.

photographer, he pushes t ahead of the wild rides on their horses in the
"The Birth of a Nation"
the hardest part of his fun, as exhilarating spor a task. His is one o t find life extremely fasting and diverting. His nce grasps every new w York off his studio riffith would rather dance hing else. He believes h he most ancient and the l of all exercises.

"Note the fighting people of the world," he says. "They are dancers every one of them. All the conquests have been won by dancing people, and all the great achievements have been wrought by nations that dance."

Grimth gets 500 letters and 50 telegrams every day.

It would save a lot of anxious folk some heartburnings to know that he never answers the letters. He opens them and tosses them in huge stacks on his general manager's table, where the faithful clerks sort out the minute grains of wheat from the chaff and attend to the really important things.

He tosses the telegrams to his secretary whose discretion as to answering is final.

Grimth rarely carries money except when he is taking home the bundle of "kale" to the old folks. He is known everywhere and appropriates whatever he wants, letting the shop keepers present their claims later to the keeper of his privy purse. He never fusses about trifles. He never does a particle of clerical work. He never stops at small or large financial obstacles, but goes right ahead regardless of financial problems.

In brief, his one aspiration is to make the big picture, the great art product.

E. BOSTON (Mass.) FREE PRESS 277
MAY 8, 1915

LIVELY DEBATE

Dr. Fleisher and Mr. Fagan Discuss "Birth of a Nation" at Maverick Church.

The debate on "The Birth of a Nation" at Maverick church Wednesday night was attended by 250 people. The question was, "Resolved, That the play, 'The Birth of a Nation,' is an educational benefit to Boston." Dr. Fleisher upheld the affirmative and Mr. Fagan the negative. This was one of the best debates of the year. Both men are strong debaters and were perfectly fair and friendly in their discussions. Mr. Fagan contended that it was the purpose of the play to awaken antipathy toward the colored people, that it was a part of a movement of the enemies of this race not only to deprive it of the rights of citizenship but to segregate and transport it to its former African home or some other feasible place. He showed wherein the play is false to history and that it misrepresented facts such as showing the colored people perfectly happy and contented in slavery and none of the dark and cruel features of slavery; that it showed the ruthless destruction of the Northern soldiers but none of the desolation that followed the entrance of the Confederate soldiers into the Northern states.

Dr. Fleisher contended that it was not necessary that any play or book must be true historically but that an author had a perfect right to juggle history or any events to make a dramatic climax. He also maintained that the right of free speech is worth far more to the people, notwithstanding occasional abuse, than the hurt feelings of numbers of people. He regretted the fact that the villain in the play was a negro. That the condition of the negro in the North is worse than in the South at the present time was also brought out by Dr. Fleisher, who has taken this stand although he always has been and always will be the friend of the negro.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 9, 1915

GRIFFITH WORKS WHILE ON WHEELS

Producer of "Birth of a Nation" Stars at Cross-Country Running.

David W. Griffith is coming back to Boston in a few days to look over his film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing to bigger business at the Tremont Theatre than in New York, San Francisco or Los Angeles. Griffith makes thirty or forty across-the-continent trips every year. His business headquarters are in New York and his studio in Southern California.

The four days across the continent are never wasted. When preparing "The Birth of a Nation," he carried with him American histories and historical novels, a suitcase full. On other trips he takes along a dozen of the "best sellers," to see the kind of artistic fare the public is demanding. Still other times he loads up with Nietzsche, Plato, Emerson and Maeterlinck. All are grist to the director's mill.

But out in Los Angeles it is hard active work from six o'clock in the morning until 12 at night. No cabaret and no late suppers, and the utilization of every hour of daylight for picture taking and of many hours at night for his new art of night photography.

Griffith loves best the field work when he can be in the open and direct big armies of men. G. W. Bitzer at the camera, Mr. Griffith at the megaphone, is the way it works out. A big automobile was used by the two co-workers in "taking" the wild rides of the Ku Klux horsemen. They traveled directly ahead of the furious riding cavalry, with the camera eye turned back upon these South Carolina cavaliers. It was a perilous but mighty fascinating job.

Four historians helped him by research work, while the Civil War scenes were in the making. West Pointers and Civil War Veterans gave advice in the Petersburg campaign.

COLUMBIA (S. C.) STATE
MAY 3, 1915

The Noble Average.

Boston continues in a furor of excitement over the exhibition of the film the "Birth of a Nation," adapted, so we are told, from Tom Dixon's book and play, The Clansman. That is to say, the negro, Trotter, is very much excited and the old abolition stock is turning well-bred somersaults, and the New York Evening Post is throwing a fit with its usual abandon of common sense when it gets a whiff of dark meat. In Boston they have had this weighty matter up for hearings before Mayor, Governor and a committee of the Legislature. "A judge has been found with authority and courage enough to cut out the most objectionable scene. The press has been full of arguments for and against the film and the proposed legislation. On Sunday last many clergymen preached about the play; and ex-President Eliot, speaking in a Cambridge church, was one of those who protested against its falsification of history. Never before have the colored people of Boston been so united and determined, or appeared to better advantage, and their white friends have rallied in great force to their aid. Gov. Walsh, ex-Congressman McCall, and Lieut. Gov. Cushing have spoken out emphatically against permitting the play to continue, though the Mayor sided with the producers—as our own New York Mayor has failed to recognize in his utterances the gravity of the situation, or to rise to the emergency, being content with the promise of certain slight excisions, which appear to be of little or no value. The play continues to do its devlish work of misrepresentation and fanning of race hatred."

All of which is, of course, the merest piffle. Neither the "Leopard's Spots" nor the "Clansman" was much of a book, and the play that grew out of them was less as drama. It was as much melodramatic slap-stick from a wrong Southern bias as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was an incoherent and ignorant farce which would never have had recognition except as it inspired Northern hatred. In both cases, the plays and the books were bad—so bad that they lacked in the essential of good taste. But, when we commence to suppress a thing because it is in bad taste, at that moment we slice a large shaving from the sorely [illegible] candle of human liberty.

[illegible] Tom's Cabin" has been [illegible] motion pictures within the [illegible] town of South Carolina [illegible] by General Sher-man, who led soldiers that considered it almost a Bible. It gives the lie direct to everything Southern, including even the negro as we of the South know him. It is caricature, and malice, and hate, and lies, from beginning to end. Yet we never had a riot over it. Nevertheless, taking everything said about its objectionable character to be true, we see no reason to prohibit the "Birth of the Nation" or any other play or film not flagrantly immoral in either the North or the South.

If the public is a child, it ought to have one guardian, and only one. If it is a man, as we are fond of thinking, it ought to be treated as the collective man it likes to think itself.

One the perfectly inane "Girl From Rector's was prevented playing the town of Raleigh,—and most of the male population spent good time and money on railroad fare in going away to see it in an adjoining town, only to be stung as they deserved to be. Oscar Wilde's splendid "Salome" was stopped by flat-foot policemen in New York because somebody had the notion that the eccentric Oscar was not a very nice person. It afterwards had more companies playing it everywhere, probably, than any other "show" has ever been afflicted with. We ought to be reasonable about censorships, especially when the Great War shows us how the ability to suppress the news develops into the propagation of a lie.

In short, we would like to see the impression gain ground that the average citizen is much more kindly, and friendly, and discriminating a person than he is painted by the average exceptional citizen. If Mr. Average Citizen could have a suit for libel against the up-lifters who run him down, what a case he could make out against them! To start with, he is a tippler, as anybody can ascertain by the simple process of smelling his breath. He is absolutely unhygienic and insanitary, as any committee can tell by looking over his back fence. He is noneugenic, as any one can see by turning up the eye-lids of his eldest boy. That he beats his wife is clear, as you see by just looking at her clothes. By all the gods, both big and small, he ought to be reformed while the reforming is good, and if he dies under the operation, a good riddance!

Yet, it would be a sad world without him. The average man, the average book, the average play, the average movie. All unbeautiful to a nice discernment that runs from a two days' beard to a horrified gasp [illegible] "vulgarity" of something [illegible]

[illegible] that we all ought to wish as the highest good for our children, to see, and learn, and digest, and discriminate [illegible] from the inside of a head instead of [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 10, 1913
1709

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Margaret Cameron, a daughter of the South, comes upon her father, Dr. Cameron, engaged in a heated discussion of slavery with other Southern gentlemen. A raid on Harper's Ferry by John Brown, with 18 followers, has recently taken place. A toast is drunk to "Stephen Douglas, the next President."

The scene then shifts to the Northern home of Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House noted for his vindictive policies toward the South. Stoneman is conversing with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts and zealous Abolitionist. Both men are sincere in their convictions of the wickedness of slavery and its inconsistency with republican institutions.

Their conversation is overheard by Lydia Brown, a mulatto woman, ostensibly the housekeeper, but in reality mistress of the Stoneman house. As Sumner departs the woman resolves to use the insidious influence of her position to bring freedom to her race.

Ted and Phil, sons of Austin Stoneman, visit Cameron and for the first time see slavery in its practical application. They find Cameron stirred over a newspaper headline which reads: "If the North Carries the Election the South Will Secede." The young trio became alarmed at the import of the announcement.

Time comes for the Stonemans to return, with Phil deeply in love with Margaret.

Events, meanwhile, are progressing rapidly. Lincoln has been elected President, carrying all free States except New Jersey. Business in the South is hurt.

The news that South Carolina is an independent Commonwealth is received with popular rejoicing. A congressional committee is appointed in the North to prevent other States from following South Carolina's example.

Secession moves apace. Jefferson Davis counsels his followers to prepare for war. The Southern Confederacy is formed with Davis as President.

Lincoln answers the challenge by calling for 75,000 volunteers. As one man the entire North rallies to his support.

The Stoneman and the Cameron boys offer their services to the North and South, respectively, and leave their homes.

A great ball celebrates the night of leave-taking at Piedmont. At daybreak the Piedmont troops set forth, taking with them Ben, a captain; Wade, a lieutenant, and Duke, a private.

The Confederate troops under Lee win victory succeeding, with the almost complete stagnation of the Union forces, the safety of Washington seems to be in doubt.

After two years of war the Cameron boys are all safe. The first trouble in the Cameron home is a raid by a band of negro guerrillas under a white leader. The next day comes the news that Duke Cameron has been killed at Gettysburg, bayoneted by his chum, Tod Stoneman, who, just as he recognized whom he had killed, fell dead at Duke's side.

By Gertrude Stevenson.

Part VII. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part VI. was printed in Saturday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

To one man in the North the true significance of the war had at last struck home. Eager for war, urging Lincoln on to crush the South, Austin Stoneman little dreamed how bitter and useless the whole struggle would later seem to him. When the news of Tod's death came and he sat with his old head sunk wearily on his breast, Elsie sobbing unrestrainedly at his feet, he realized he had been called upon to pay the price—one out of all proportion to his reckoning.

Elsie could stand the inactivity no longer. Chafing at playing the waiting, praying, weeping role, she announced her determination of serving as a nurse in the military hospitals. Before her intensity and eagerness, her father felt himself forced to yield. The loss of Tod had made her even more keen to the suffering of others than usual, and she declared the only solace to her grief would come in helping others.

SOUTH REJECTS LINCOLN'S OFFER

After Gettysburg there might have been peace had the Southerners then realized they were playing a losing game. The President's offer allowing them to return to the Union still held good, but his only demand, that they relinquish their slaves and accept compensation for them, was still too much for them to grant, and the terrible slaughter and carnage of battle after battle proceeded.

Meanwhile Lincoln was re-elected, according to his own humorous phraseology, because "the people were afraid to swap horses while crossing the stream." Fortune suddenly favored the North. Farragut defeated the Confederate fleet and Sherman, after months filled with despair, had worked his way, literally inch by inch, to Atlanta, which he fired and burned in a night. It was in the bombardment and evacuation of Atlanta that Wade Cameron met his end. But Wade Cameron was only his mother's second son, and a great conqueror's march to the sea had been gloriously completed.

The last gray days of the Confederacy were at hand. With Grant moving against Lee, and Sherman marching northward to crush Johnston's forces, with communications cut off and rations consisting of meager portions of parched corn, the Southern army was in desperate straits.

Ben Cameron Falls

But the war was destined not to end without another Cameron sacrifice. With the intrenchments of Grant's army and Lee's forces only a few hundred feet apart, a sorely needed food train of the Confederates was misled to the wrong road and cut off on the other side of the Union lines on a forlorn hope, with but one reckless chance of success, the Southern general ordered an attempt to break through the enemy's lines and rescue the provisions. Ben Cameron was chosen to lead the charge.

Through the fire of the masked batteries, through the lead of the artillery and the din of the stars, the "little colonel" led his men, urging them on by his own nerve, fighting like a demon, inspiring them with a sight of the "fighting Cameron face."

One line of intrenchments and then another was taken, but the sacrifice of lives was too great and only a remnant of the regiment was left to continue the advance. Maddened with defeat, desperate, without hope, Cameron rushed on, forcing his colors into the very mouth of the Union cannon, only to collapse as a well-aimed shot went home. As he fell, a hoarse cry escaped the lips of the Union commander.

"My God! It's Ben!" he shouted as he leaped over the sand ramparts, and, gathering the limp body in his arms, lifted it to safety. The eyes of the wounded man opened a moment.

"Phil!" he gasped as he recognized his chum and then lapsed into unconsciousness.

Finds the Girl

When he next opened his eyes he was in a narrow white cot, entirely surrounded by other white cots, on which men, wounded and fever-stricken like himself, lay moaning and tossing. Lee had surrendered to Grant and the peace of Appomattox had been signed, but these men who had so nearly lost their lives knew nothing of the war's end as yet.

Ben was suddenly conscious of the soft twang of a banjo and the clear tones of a young girl's voice singing familiar darky melodies. Painfully he turned his head and saw that she was sitting at the side of his own bed. He looked, then looked again. Then he smiled. The girl smiled in return.

It was the most natural thing in the world to wake and find her there. It seemed as though she must have always sat like this beside him, raising her sweet voice in song, smiling down at him with those warm, tender eyes.

"I have carried you about with me for a long, long time," he murmured weakly, so that the girl must bend her head to catch the words.

"Poor boy," she answered, pityingly. "He doesn't know what he's saying. So many of these poor boys are delirious."

"I know who you are," the delirious one insisted. "You're Elsie Stoneman."

It was Elsie's turn to wonder if she, too, were not a bit delirious and hearing impossible things.

"How do you know?" she asked in surprise.

Ben was fumbling about looking for his coat pocket. He found a pocket in his night clothes where a thoughtful nurse had considerately placed the picture she had found in his coat, knowing it would probably be the first thing for which he would ask when his strength and reason should return. He opened the case and handed the amazed girl a picture of herself.

Elsie is Startled

"For goodness sakes!" she exclaimed. "Where did you get this?"

"I stole it," and he tried to smile as he remembered the happy day years before when Phil had walked with him through the smiling fields of sunlit cotton.

"Then you're Ben Cameron," Elsie exclaimed. "I have a letter from my brother asking me to look out for you."

"Bee," and she produced a letter from which she read: "and remember above all my request that you use your influence in any way possible for the welfare of my old friend, Col. Bennie Cameron, who has been committed to your hospital."

There was a sound back of them and as Elsie turned, she looked into a pair of the most sorrowful eyes set in the kindest face she had ever seen.

"I am looking for my son," a tremulous voice addressed her. "He's the only one I have left. Can't you help me find him? His name is Cameron."

Elsie's face lighted.

"This is he," and she pointed to the cot before them.

Comforts Ben's Mother

With a low cry of relief, Mrs. Cameron bent forward, searching the worn, hollow-cheeked face before her for a trace of the handsome, rugged son who had charged down the main street of Piedmont that morning four years before.

"Bennie," she sobbed, but the eyes that looked into hers gave back no answering recognition. The poor, dazed mind was wandering in other scenes again.

"Oh, my boy, my boy, what have they done to you?" the poor mother cried while Elsie tried vainly to comfort her.

"He'll be all right in a few minutes," she declared consolingly. "They all go off into spells like that and talk incoherently."

Ben opened his eyes again at the sound of Elsie's voice, then turned as he felt a cool, firm hand on his wrist. He looked up and gradually the light of reason dawned again. The slow, painful smile lighted his sunken eyes once more as he forced the word:

"Mother," and reached out his wasted arms to touch her.

Mrs. Cameron's joy at finding her son and gaining his recognition of her was short-lived. At that very moment, the voice of the army surgeon in conversation with a nurse was distinctly audible, as he explained that it would be better if young Cameron never left his cot, since if he did recover, he was scheduled to be hanged. It was on some charge trumped up by secret influence, concerning him with a guerrilla outrage, concerning which he had been too ill to prove his innocence.

Elsie, too, heard the words and started as she realized that Mrs. Cameron, aghast, was hanging on every syllable.

"It can't be true," the girl protested, "and even if it is, something surely can be done about it. If the worst comes to the worst, I can get my father to intercede with the President. The 'Great Heart of the North' is too kind to suffer such an injustice and an outrage."

Determines to Save Him

But Mrs. Cameron was not to be easily consoled. Wringing her hands, she hurried to the surgeon's side, begging for more details and for advice and help in her dilemma.

"He's the only one left to me," she cried, piteously. "Surely they won't take him, too. They cannot. They must not."

Elsie led her from the room. As best she could, she controlled her own anxiety, but she realized that whatever was done must be done speedily, for it would be too late even for presidential interference. Her heart went out to the motherly woman at her side, and she was conscious of more than abstract sympathy in her own emotions. The romance in the nature of this young Confederate officer who had carried his own picture against his heart throughout the long years of the war fired her impressionable girlish imagination. If the name of Stoneman counted for anything in Washington this lad would be saved, she assured herself, as she set her sweet lips in the firm line of determination which meant much to all who knew her.

As she listened to Mrs. Cameron's pathetic outpouring about the youngest boy who fell at Gettysburg—her heart fluttered—that was the battle in which her own Tod had met his death—and of the other boy killed at Atlanta, she realized that to a man like Lincoln, Mrs. Cameron was her own best emissary. The great spirit, fed by well-springs of kindness, could not fail to be moved and impressed by this mother's own story.

Her decision was quickly taken.

"I'm going to take you to the President," she announced, triumphantly, to the Southern woman's consternation and amazement. "You shall tell him all about it yourself. He'll do as much for you in this case as he would for Austin Stoneman himself!"

Elsie knew she could easily arrange a quick audience. Breathless herself, she hurried the older woman to the White House, using her own name and prestige to pave the way through supernumeraries and past waiting statesmen and officials until at last she had the satisfaction of seeing Mrs. Cameron stand, looking up into the tired eyes of the President himself.

In Lincoln's Rooms

Lincoln rose as Elsie presented Mrs. Cameron. It seemed to her he had never seemed so tall, so thin, so worn, so much a creature apart from the common run of men. His very gauntness, the accentuated hollows of his cheeks and under the shaggy brows, the black pits which were his eyes might have seemed hopelessly forbidding had it not been for the half-smile that twisted the corners of his great troubled mouth.

Her own heart fluttering and her breath coming in gasps, Elsie stood aside and watched the interview, praying, fearful to break in and spoil the magic of that mother's plea to the father of sorrows, as she had always felt Mr. Lincoln to be.

She saw the President answer negatively, declaring that he could not interfere. She saw Mrs. Cameron turn away like a stricken thing. Then she saw her turn back with new determination in her eyes. She heard her pour out her tragic story of two sons offered on the altar of the Confederacy, saw Lincoln's tired eyes kindle, realized the mother plea had reached his great heart, almost cried out in exultation as he turned, took out his spectacles, fitted them to his eyes, seated himself, took up his pen and wrote the words that restored her three sons to that broken Southern mother.

"God Bless You"

"God bless you, Mr. Lincoln!" the overjoyed woman sobbed, as she took from him the magic scrap of paper.

"I have just returned from the battlefields of Richmond and Petersburg," he answered kindly, "and I know that enough blood has been shed without adding that of your son. I'm as happy at being able to do it as you are to have me do it."

For a moment the tired eyes brightened and the weight of care seemed to have lifted from his sad face.

(To be continued.)

SHERMAN'S FORCES ON "MARCH TO THE SEA"

(Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 10, 1915

MIDNIGHT PROTEST MEETING

ed People Denounce rth of Nation" Again.

Held Responsible for Its Continuance Criticised.

oving picture drama, "The Birth ation," was unsparingly denounced t night at a meeting of protest the 12th Baptist Church at Shaw- and Madison st, Roxbury. In the members of more than a negro congregations throughout participated. The meeting was der the auspices of the Boston of the Massachusetts Equal League.

meeting did not commence until lar Sunday night services in the churches had been concluded. was nearly 10 o'clock when Rev N. Shaw, the pastor of the 12th Church, began his opening re-

The main auditorium, which seating capacity for about 800, was crowded by nearly 1000 a number of whom stood in the and it was necessary to hold an meeting in the lower audi- to accommodate all who came.

Dr Shaw explained that the people of the city were met ain to discuss what action would en now that the crisis in the has been reached. His was ed by several other speakers, and he main church well filled early orning, prominent negroes from rts of Greater Boston were still attacking those whom they with being responsible for the ued production of the "objec- film play in this city.

speakers at the big meeting were F. Swain, pastor of the Colum- venue A. M. E. Zion Church; Rev W. Fuller, pastor of the People's t Church, Camden st; William D. am and attorney Joshua A. Craw- of Roxbury. Those speaking at ew meeting were J. Solomon , Julian Rainey and Philip

RCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 10, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

MacDonald Says It Should Be Suppressed to Please the Unphilosophic.

Dr. Robert MacDonald informed congregation that plays that "The of a nation" should be suppressed, cause it is an offense in itself, but use of people's prejudices. He stated he would vote for its suppression use so many millions of colored citi- demand it.

speaking on the subject, "The birth of tion: should it be suppressed?" Rev. MacDonald said in part:

es nothing objectionable in this film It is said to be unhistoric and to rt facts, but I should say it was, at three-quarters true in its presenta- of the reconstruction period following Civil war.

wondered how the play would im- me were I a negro devoid of the sophic mind. Of course, the negro is emotional to be philosophic and has ability to command and control his udices.

The birth of a nation' should not be repugnant to the negro as is 'The chant of Venice' to the Jew. But the ish people have never demanded its pression. Nor is this film play as moral as that play, 'Common clay,' has had such a phenomenal run. This places a premium on youthful lust, es for granted that all men are mor- bad until sobered by wisdom, and re- ds immoral relations between the s. It is the most morally degrading ever staged.

e adverse criticism seems to have been aroused, however, and no 'board of ensors' has voiced disapproval.

'I think 'The birth of a nation' should be suppressed. Not because it is an of- ense in itself but because of people's prejudices.

"It is too bad that people's prejudices have to be respected when no moral wrong is responsible for their existence. "I would vote for its suppression be- cause some millions of colored citizens demand it. So large a demand should be heard and heeded, that their im- moral tendencies be prevented damning forth in unlawful deeds because of fan- ied unjust and inhuman treatment at he hands of the white man."

STON CHRIS. SCIENCE MONITOR
MAY 10, 1915

FILM AGAIN PROTESTED

Members of a dozen negro congrega- ns assembled last evening at the elfth Baptist church, Roxbury, and ntered their protest against continued esentation of the photo-drama, "The rth of a Nation," now on view in this y.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 10, 1915

FILM MEN PRAISE WORK OF NATIONAL CENSORSHIP BOARD

In the film censorship war following the production of "The Birth of a Nation," prominence has been given to the National Board of Censorship in the debates before the Legislature, in interviews and platform remarks.

Few of the thousands who patronize the motion pictures in Massachusetts know much about the National Board of Censorship, which plays such an important part in this latest amusement.

The men and women who make up this National Board, with the exception of four paid secretaries, work in a spirit of philanthropy Their judgment plays a potent part in the protection of public morals and in the education of the masses.

The standards adopted by the National Board have been a subject of lively discussion in the agitation here and are likely to figure in legislation.

A bill has been drawn on behalf of the distributors and exhibitors of films advocating the appointment by Governor Walsh of a commission of eight or ten to serve as a court of last resort in the determination of complaints against photo plays. This commission is to serve without pay and its judgment is to be final. But the important feature of the bill seeking its creation is that the board shall be guided by the standards of the National Board in New York.

Opponents of "The Birth of a Nation" and those who advocate stricter legislation for the government of films have raised the argument that the National Board has not always been careful of the public morals.

Champions of the Carstens-Lowell bill informed the Senate Committee on Ways and Means that a committee of social and child welfare workers had inspected 1,800 films and had objected to 250 or more, although all had been approved by the National Board.

This test was used by Senator Bates and other antis as the basis of their argument that Massachusetts could not depend on the decisions of the National Board, but should have a strict censorship of its own.

Motion picture men explained to the Committee on Ways and Means that the National Board sat in New York because that city was the clearing house for fully 95 per cent of the films produced in this country. A volume of testimony was offered to illustrate the caution exercised by the members of the National Board. Great stress was laid on the personnel of this voluntary commission of 120 or more public spirited men and women who stand between the millions of American theatregoers and improper films.

Because of the unlimited possibilities of the motion picture, which is admitted by all experts to be in its infancy, the film promoters in Greater Boston consider that it is no small part of their campaign of enlightment to instruct the people as to the origin and the duties of the National Board of Censorship.

The National Board of Censorship was organized in March, 1909, by the People's Institute in New York, at the request of the various theatres exhibiting films in that city. The work of the board became national in its scope in June of the same year, at the request of manufacturers of motion picture films. The National Board rapidly gained censorship control over practically all of the films exhibited in America.

Since June, 1909, the National Board has been administered by the People's Institute of New York, whose clerical machinery is utilized in part by the board. The board is self governing in all particulars. It establishes its own standards, elects its own officers and executive staff and controls its own finances.

The board is made up of a general committee of representatives from twenty civic agencies located in New York city, together with certain disinterested, public spirited individuals; an executive committee, chosen from the membership, and a censoring committee of 105 members. This censoring committee is divided into subcommittees and is at work at least five days every week.

The feature emphasized by local film interests, is that not a member of the National Board is engaged in any branch of the motion picture business, nor is any voting member on salary, directly or indirectly. These members were drawn from every source, such as educators, philanthropists and social and child welfare workers. They are cultured men and women, and, because of their long and varied experience, have become experts in the inspection of films and their influence on the community.

An idea of the cosmopolitan makeup of the National Board is furnished by the general committee, of which Frederic C. Howe is chairman.

This general committee is made up of agents of the American Social Hygiene Association, Association for Improving Condition of Poor, Charity Organization Society, Children's Aid Society, City Club of New York, City Vigilance League, Diocesan Commission for Social Service, Federation for Child Study, Graduates' Club, International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., Laity League for Social Service, League for Political Education, Music League of America, National Board of the Y. W. C. A., New York Federation of Women's Clubs, Public Education Association, People's Institute, Prison Association of New York, St. Bartholomew's Parish House, The Boys' Club.

The motion picture men of Boston claim that an organization as large and liberal as this could not possibly err in its general policy, but that if occasional films found the approval of the National Board, but happened to meet disfavor in local communities because of conditions and views peculiar to that community, an unpaid commission of public spirited men and women in Massachusetts could easily rectify any such specific case, with justice to all, and without changing the present statute or burdening the books of the Commonwealth with unnecessary legislation.

The board of censors provided for by the film men is to have a labor representative and a representative of the film interests, with six or eight other fair-minded men and women, who by education and training and temperament can be depended upon to protect not only the motion picture patrons, but the film producers and theatre managers, who in Greater Boston alone have $35,000,000 invested in the industry.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 10, 1915

Thinks "Birth of Nation" Has Sinister Purposes

To the Editor of The Boston Journal:

Permit me to state that the controversy now going on relative to the "Birth of a Nation" has greatly interested me, the more so, because I am what might be termed "non-partizan," having been born in the quaint old city of New Orleans and having lived considerable of my life along the Gulf States, as well as in the North.

I am quite familiar with the character commonly alluded to as the "poor white" or "piny-woods white," as well as the cultured white and the "darkie;" and from personal experience among all of them I am inclined to echo the statements recently made in Revere by the ex-governor of Tennessee, excepting, perhaps, that in my cold, unbiased opinion I would say that the ratio was 90 per cent. or a little better of good blacks to 10 per cent. of bad ones. And in my years of living in the South I never knew or heard of any serious trouble between the cultured whites and the blacks; in fact, I think it a safe assertion that the percentage of law-breaking whites in the North will exceed the ratio of law-breaking blacks in the South, taking the two populations per 1000 capita; but my main object for writing this is to suggest that it might be a good idea for the State authorities, both North and South, as well as the Federal peace protectors, to investigate closely for the "hidden hand" or "wolf in sheep's clothing" that is putting forth this photoplay for sinister purposes at this particular time.

I notice that Albert Bushnell Hart, in your issue of today, hints at the same idea, but this has been my strongest opinion from the beginning of this controversy, and I doubt not that some innocent people are being unwittingly used as "tools" therein or blinded by promises of large financial returns.

This nation at the present time is sorely beset with pretended friends—both domestic and foreign—which are the worst possible types of enemies. Better search for the hidden hand.

G. H. WILLIAMS.

Brunswick, Me.

Transcript. Holyoke, Mass.
May 10 1915.

MORE PICTURES AT POLI'S HEREAFTER.

The patrons of Poli's Palace will receive a double bill for their money during the summer the management announces, it having been decided to give, in addition to the vaudeville bill, a feature motion picture play of from four to seven reels, and the first entertainment under the new departure can be seen the first three days of the week, when "The avenging conscience" will be the feature photoplay, and McMahon and Chappelle will head the vaudeville talent. "The avenging conscience" or "Thou shalt not kill," is suggested by Edgar Allen Poe's story, "The Telltale Heart," in which the man who had killed his enemy was haunted by the dead man and imagines that he can hear the heart on his victim beating. It is produced by D. W. Griffith, who was also the producer of "The birth of a nation." The photography is remarkably clear, and the producer is credited with having been able to transplant to the screen much of Poe's genius.

picture ... and longest show ... ever offered.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 10, 1915

CONRAD SCORES DIXON

Book and Photo-Play False to History, He Declares

Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman" and the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," based upon his story, was excoriated by the Rev. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Church, in a sermon last night.

Dr. Conrad branded Dixon a man of ulterior purposes—one who sought to have every negro deported—and asserted that he was incapable of writing history, rather trusting to his imagination for facts and to prejudice for his theme.

CONDEMNS ON EIGHT COUNTS

"I saw the photo-play yesterday," said Dr. Conrad, "and I have eight reasons for objecting to it.

"First, it misrepresents the nation. The nation was not born in the Civil war, but with the Revolution and the Constitution. Second, it is an effort to justify the Rebellion. Third, it seeks to glorify the Confederacy. Fourth, it misrepresents the reconstruction period and is a travesty of the whole thing. Fifth, it grossly misrepresents the negro race by trying to make the lust of a few appear as the lust of a whole people. Sixth, it affronts the intelligence of the American people by parading the Ku Klux Klan as a loyal band. Read the records of the Thirty-ninth Congress, which tell of thousands of murders by Ku Klux Klan marauders. Study history. Seventh, it creates racial antipathy. Eighth, and lastly, it purports to be based on history, when Mr. Dixon could not write history, but trusts to his imagination for facts and to prejudice for his theme."

Dr. Conrad, as a preface to his remarks, took occasion to extol Mayor Curley for the censorship he has thus far observed over objectionable plays, asserting that without such censorship Boston would witness orgies more infamous and worse than those of old Rome.

In a prayer preceding the sermon, the pastor of the Park Street Church referred indirectly to the torpedoing of the Lusitania, and called upon God to give courage and strength to President Wilson.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) HERALD
MAY 10, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon the second big month of its run at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, next Monday afternoon. The play is the most widely discussed topic in this State and for a fortnight has overshadowed even the European war and the Roosevelt-Barnes trial as a front page feature. On Monday morning at 10.30 o'clock a special performance is to be given, with the members of the Legislature and other officials as invited guests.

Mr. Griffith's production has developed an enormous number of friends in greater Boston and all the surrounding places. It has now been viewed by more than 75,000 patrons. Their support, with that of those who sympathize with them, outweighs the opposition. The issue of freedom of dramatic speech is involved in the play's continuance. It is hoped a wise and reasonable censorship will no wbe passed that will not curtail the privileges of stage producers nor render nugatory such wonderful art-achievements as the one Mr. Griffith has accomplished.

Public performances are given at the Tremont Theatre twice daily at 2.10 and 8.10 p. m. except on Sundays. The prices range from 25 cents to $2.00 evenings and Saturday matinees, and 25 cents to $1.00 the other matinees. Mail orders when accompanied by check and stamped self-addressed envelope are promptly filled. The run is proving the most extraordinary one in the history of Boston theatricals, all the performances up to date having been absolute capacity.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 10, 1915

"MOVIE" BILL ENGROSSED

House Considers Rowley Amendment to "The Birth of a Nation" Measure

After rejecting two amendments the House this afternoon passed to be engrossed the so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill. The rollcall vote was 175 to 43.

Two hundred negroes assembled in the House gallery this afternoon to listen to the debate on passing to be engrossed the bill so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill. As soon as the calendar was reached, Mr. Rowley of Brookline offered an amendment providing that the proposed censorship board, composed of the mayor of Boston, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal Court, may act by a two-thirds vote, instead of by a unanimous vote, as required by the bill reported by the committee.

"The author of the book on which this play is based," he said, "is one of the most notorious haters of the colored race the South ever produced. He frankly admits that he has no use for the colored race and would drive it from the country. In this play by subtle and insidious perversions of the history of the reconstruction period he would keep alive and foster this race-prejudice on the part of one group of American citizens against another. The colored man is represented as a sensuous animal, lusting after the virtue of the white women, and in his new freedom arrogant and defiant of law and order.

"Whatever may have been the original purpose of the Klu Klux Klan, does not every student of history know that very shortly after their organization they became gangs of rapists and murderers, perpetrating crimes that in their heinousness stagger the imagination? And yet in this play they are represented as chivalrous knights of a holy order, with the Cross of Christ as their standard, whose sole purpose was to protect the virtue of Southern white women.

"The bill reported by the committee seems to me too rigid in its requirements of the unanimous consent of the three officials in whose hands is placed the power to revoke licenses. Are not majorities, with rare exceptions, always controlling on commissions and other boards? What unusual or extraordinary circumstances have been shown here that should cause us to depart from this well-known principle of government?"

Mr. Cross of Royalston opposed the bill, declaring it but a weak attempt to satisfy a mistaken hysteria on the part of a very small number of people, and a piece of legislation which would give to three men the power to take a long step toward suppressing the freedom of the stage. Mr. Abbott of Haverhill also opposed the bill as futile. Mr. Davis of Boston favored it, saying that the present law was inadequate to deal with motion-picture business. Mr. Drury of Waltham supported the bill and the amendment.

Mr. Dowse of Sherborn urged the members to consider the bill wholly apart from the play which has caused the agitation. The events of the past few hours, he said, have shown the need of having at all times an impartial tribunal which may be appealed to settlement of such differences of opinion. Mr. Allen of Newton said nothing portraying the Ku Klux Klan should be portrayed upon the screen. To show its real activities, he said, would be highly improper, and it was equally bad to show such a perversion of its purpose as included in this play.

Mr. Catheron of Beverly offered an amendment which would leave the censorship board as at present, composed of the mayor and the police commissioner, but permitting it to suspend a license at its pleasure, without giving reasons.

Prior to the taking of a vote, Mr. Cross raised the point of order that the bill and the amendments were beyond the scope of the petition on which the proposed legislation was based. Speaker Cox ruled as follows:

"If the gentlemen will consult the rulings made in connection with House Rule No. 30, in which it has been repeatedly declared that, after a bill has been ordered to a third reading it is too late to raise a point of order that is beyond the scope of the petition, he will agree with the chair that the point of order is not well taken."

The voting then began. The Rowley amendment was declared adopted on a voice vote, but on the standing vote was rejected, 65 to 67. The rollcall was then taken.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) HOMESTEAD
MAY 10, 1915

NEW SUMMER POLICY AT PALACE

Beginning today Poli's Palace will inaugurate a new summer policy which will consist of the usual vaudeville augmented by a six-part photoplay. It is announced that the performance will end in time to allow patrons to reach home at a reasonable hour. The first photoplay will be "The Avenging Conscience," a screen version of Edgar Allen Poe's "The Tell Tale Heart." It was produced by D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation" and who is said to be the most skillful and highly paid of the motion picture directors. The story of "The Avenging Conscience" is that of a young man who has murdered another and who is tortured by the qualms of conscience and the pangs of remorse.

They say the ... urally be biased by ... free show, and the ... show would ...

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 10, 1915

DR. CONRAD CALLS FOR PRESS AS WELL AS FILM CENSORS

"A censorship of both the press and stage is necessary in this period of our development," declared the Rev. A. Z. Conrad, D. D., last night at the Park Street Church, condemning "The Birth of a Nation." "Just as long as the tendency is present in the press to violate the sanctity of the home there should be a censorship," he said. "People must be protected from piracy."

He praised Mayor Curley for stopping the production of certain plays, and claimed that "but for the censorship, orgies worse than those of ancient Rome would be depicted on our stage, for the tendency is toward entertainment of low standard and catering to vitiated tastes."

Dr. Conrad saw "The Birth of a Nation" Saturday, and said he had been careful not to read articles which might prejudice his mind. He was free to admit that the photoplay is "a magnificent spectacle, most impressive, and a marvel in presenting the art of the moving picture play. It has certain instructive features of value, such as depicting the horrors of war and the agony of the battlefield.

"But it is based on the novel, 'The Clansman,' by Thomas Dixon, a man I have heard many times, until he wisely left the pulpit, and deportation drivel runs all through that book, his hope to see the day when the colored race will be deported from this country."

The speaker said the Negro, having been held in slavery for so many generations, was naturally a belated people, but the duty imposed by the oGspel is not to magnify and parade the worst in human nature but to help bring out all that is best.

"What effect does this play have on the white race? Does it lead to a glimmer of sympathy for the colored race? Is it not rather deliberately calculated to inspire distrust? And to inculcate the belief that brutality dominates the entire colored race? What effect does it have on the colored race? Does it not oppress them with a sense of discouragement, of utter despair olever obtaining any standing in the community, or even of obtaining employment?"

Dr. Conrad named these eight reasons why the play is not promotive of higher citizenship:

"It misrepresents by its very title. This nation was not born during the civil war, but was brought into being by the sword of Washington, and the constitution. There is a sinister motive in seeking to honor the confederacy.

"It is an effort to justify the rebellion.

"It is untrue to history in glorifying all the acts of the Confederates and depreciating the deeds of the Northern soldier.

"It grossly misrepresents the reconstruction period.

"It misrepresents the colored people in characterizing the whole race by the crimes of a few, and leaves out of account entirely the thousands of slaveowners, who left the care of wife and daughters to the honor and loyalty of slaves.

"It offronts the intelligence of every educated person by seeking to give respectability to the Ku Klux, a secret society, which, perhaps had a laudable purpose in its beginning, but which according to the congressional records, was responsible for more than 100 murders in Louisiana alone, and which all through the South aimed its crimes mainly against the teachers and preachers, many of them from the North, who had come to raise up the colored race to manhood and virtue.

"The tendency of the play is to create race antagonism in the mind of the observer.

"The play is presented as history, but is based on fiction the author of which is an impossible historian because saturated with prejudice imbibed from his earliest days."

Urge Force to Drive Race Film from Boston

Bitter protest against the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," and strong arguments to use force, if necessary, in putting a stop to any further showing of the film in Boston, were advanced last night at a meeting in St. Stephen's Baptist Church, Harvard and Windsor streets, Cambridge. The Rev. Andrew Jones of Philadelphia characterized the production as an insult to Deity, and predicted dire calamity to those interested in its manufacture and presentation.

William M. Trotter, publisher of the Guardian, urged his hearers to visit the state legislators and, if arguments failed with them, to take the matter up with the Governor who, he said, had promised to act in the event of failure on the part of the Legislature. He said the seed of southern prejudice against the Negro is coming farther and farther North, and he advised self-protection, and a readiness for drastic action if necessary.

Boston Post.

QUINCY (Mass.) LEDGER
MAY 10, 1915

REV. HUDSON APPROVES "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Speaks Upon "The Negro Problem In the South"

The sermon of Rev. A. L. Hudson on Sunday morning upon "The Negro Problem in the South" was a plea for fairmindedness in our attitude toward the white people in the South who pay the taxes and are responsible for social progress and enlightened self-government in that portion of our country. This, he pointed out, requires us to face facts unbiased by prejudice and influenced by former hostility. "It is perfectly right for us to feel a profound sympathy for the colored people in this country and to help them develop those most essential elements of progress, in which so many of them are now lacking—self sustaining industry and self-respecting home life. It is right for us to rejoice in whatever progress they are making and to stimulate them to further progress.

"It is not right for us, under guise of sympathy for the colored people in the South to strike at the vital interests of the white people of that section or to increase and complicate their heavy burdens. It is not right for us to idealize the negro as a potential anglo-saxon in a black skin, fully capable of deciding all the problems of modern delocracy without the anglo-saxon's centuries of preparation for such responsibility—and then expect the people whose property and whose social life is affected by the result to accept our ideal for the reality and take the consequences.

"For a short but disgraceful period in our national life we forced them to do this very thing. At the time of emancipation in 1864 more than one half of the 4,000,000 negroes in the U. S. had been imported from savage life in Africa during the preceding 50 years.

"In 1867 we put into the hands of these irresponsible people, just released from slavery and barely one generation removed from savage life, the ballot of sovereign citizenship. We placed in their hands, untrained and undisciplined as they were in the simplest rudiments of self-government absolute power over several Southern states, protected in their exercise of sovereign autohrity by the Federal army and directed by politicians of that class who are always willing to make easy money at the expense of taxpayers. The result of coudse was social and financial anarchy.

"From this condition the white population rescued themselves first by force and fear, then by manipulation of ballot boxes and returns and finally by legal enactments. But such an experience has left upon their minds a feeling of dread of any influence which might, by any possibility, lead to a return of the chaos from which they have suffered. This dread dominates of necessity all other political issues and leads to an unnatural and unwholesome condition which is bound to continue until the people of the North come to have a better understanding of the actual situation. It is evident that a desire to bring about such an understanding and not to create prejudice against the negroes, or to revive past bitterness, is the underlying purpose of the picture play known as "The Birth of a Nation."

"It might be well for all of us to consider seriously this feature of the matter and seek to disabuse our minds of prejudice and distdust."

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 11, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION at Tremont Theatre.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first-class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed, in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters' hours performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performance given at 2:10 P. M. are exactly the same as those at night. Besides affording the advantage of cheaper prices, they give opportunity to out-of town people to include a visit to the Tremont Theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

DIXON DENIES AN IMPROPER MOTIVE

Author of "The Clansman," Basis of Photo Play, "Birth of Nation" Talks.

Says Congregationalist Editor Formed His Views Without Seeing the Film.

BOSTON, MAY 10.—Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman" and of the photoplay on which it is based, "The Birth of a Nation," over whose presentation in Boston there has been considerable protest because of its alleged untruthful portrayal of reconstruction conditions, defends the play. He also makes vigorous denial of the assertion of Rollin H. Cobleigh, editor of The Congregationalist, that his (Dixon's) purpose was to exterminate the colored race. Mr. Dixon writes to the paper as follows:—

"The statement made by Mr. Rollin H. Cobleigh that I told him that Co was the author of 'The Birth of a Nation,' was the extermination of the negro race, is the hallucination of an overheated mind. The assertion is so foolishly absurd on its face that it would not require denial but for the widespread hysteria, which at present affects our colored friends in Boston.

"Early in March I received a letter from Mr. Cobleigh denouncing 'The Birth of a Nation,' which he had never seen. I suggested mildly that he suspend judgment until he had seen it, or at least until I could forward the verdict of the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, who had been asked to see it and make a special report from a clergyman's point of view.

"Mr. Cobleigh replied expressing his confidence in Dr. Parkhurst. A week later he wrote me again asking for the report from the distinguished clergyman reformer. I immediately mailed it and asked him to print it in full in The Congregationalist. This he failed to do. The reason was simple. It was not what he expected, or desired. He did not wish to know the truth. He wished only to attack the play.

"Dr. Parkhurst gave 'The Birth of a Nation' his 'unqualified approval' and specifically declared that the play was in no sense an attack on, or reflection on the negro race of today. On the other hand, he squarely affirmed that the final impression of the drama was the highest compliment to the negro of today because it showed so simply and plainly his progress from the condition of 50 years ago, when he had just emerged from his slavery.

"On my arrival in Boston on the 9th of April I called at Mr. Cobleigh's office to ask why, after demanding the report of Dr. Parkhurst, he had failed to print it. I met the gentleman for the first time in my life and had a very pleasant but unprofitable talk with him in his little sanctum.

"I again laughingly suggested that he suspend his final judgment until he should see the play that night. He frankly informed me that his mind was already made up and that no event in heaven or earth could move him. I told him, of course, he could see on the screen that which he had made up his mind to see. I laughed again and gave him two tickets for which he thanked me.

"The mental makeup of such men is a curious study. As a novelist I intend to use Mr. Cobleigh.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is an absolutely true record of the turbulent life of the civil war and reconstruction. It was produced to stimulate, through three thrilling hours, the study of American history. I find it is certainly accomplishing that purpose.

"To the man or woman who sees it with an open mind, it brings only inspiration and gratitude to God for the blessings we enjoy today as a free united nation.

"The play is much broader and more catholic than my book on which it is based. In fact, the film is so much broader that I insisted that Mr. Griffith change the title to 'The Birth of a Nation,' as 'The Clansman' was too narrow and controversial to fit the new production.

"Mr. Cobleigh is merely repeating preconceived ideas which he got long ago from an angry reading of one of my books. He certainly found no such idea in 'The Birth of a Nation.' The play speaks for itself. Its producers cannot be held responsible for what the critics of my book imagine must be in it.

"I never made the statement which came from Mr. Cobleigh's excited brain. I never made any such statement to any human being. It is hysteria pure and simple."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 11, 1915

POLICE QUELL FILM SHOW ROW

White Man Says His Toes Were Stepped on—Negro Says He Was Slapped.

An altercation between a white man and a Negro who occupied adjoining orchestra seats at last evening's exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre created a slight disturbance about 9 o'clock. Three Negresses, who occupied seats just beyond the Negro, startled the audience by shrieking, and several men and women in other sections of the theatre started to their feet. Superintendent of Police Crowley was at the immediate scene of the confusion almost instantly, and easily succeeded in quieting everyone so that the confusion was soon over and the play went to its end without further interruption. The two men and three women left the theatre after Superintendent Crowley went to them, receiving their money back at the box office.

The white man said his Negro neighbor stepped on his toes several times and that when he asked him to desist, repeated the offence. The Negro denied the charge and said that the white man slapped him. The three Negresses who shrieked declared that they were not with the Negro who was a party to the quarrel and that they had never seen him before.

The house was dark when the trouble occurred and no police officer saw the alleged assault on the Negro. The latter said he would apply to the court in the morning for a warrant for the white man's arrest. Superintendent Crowley obtained the names of both men and the three women, but only for the benefit of the parties to the controversy. The white man said if the colored man applied for a warrant for his arrest, he would see to it that application was made for an arrest of the Negro for creating a disturbance.

Because there was an unusually large number of colored persons at the show last evening and in view of the incident of the two men and three women, the management asked for an extra detail of police officers at the theatre for the remainder of the evening, and the usual detail of men was thereupon augmented by an additional detail of 16. No other incident marked the evening and the audience left the theatre quietly and in good order.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 11, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN ITS SECOND MONTH

"The Birth of a Nation" is [illegible] all by itself. Even without the extra- [illegible] it has excited, this film spectacle would undoubtedly be drawing crowds to the Tremont Theatre owing to its high rank as one of the wonders of the theatrical world. More beautiful picture plays have been seen, but not one offering such thrilling scenes and such vivid pictures illustrating American history.

Especially impressive are the Petersburg battle scenes, the burning of Atlanta, the episodes which, as it were, revive Lincoln and Grant, and the flights to and fro of the picturesque Ku Klux Klansmen. The films are shown every afternoon and evening.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 11, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered [illegible] second half century of its run at the Tremont Theatre. The play bids fair to surpass its records in Los Angeles and San Francisco, for the lines in front of the box office are as long as ever and a great advance sale is in progress. Everybody interested in the possibilities that finds in Mr. Griffith's spectacle a thrilling association with the issues of today. The North and the South in their internecine struggle; the strategy of the Petersburg campaign and Sherman's march; Lee's surrender to Grant, and the aftermath of war in the reconstruction period: all these form a chain of martial and political events that enlist the spectator's interest. There are daily matinees and evening performances.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 11, 1915

NEGRO AND WHITE QUARREL AT SHOW

25 Policemen Summoned to Performance of "The Birth of a Nation"

Twenty-five policemen were summoned to the Tremont Theatre last night during the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" and the performance was interrupted for 10 minutes because of a quarrel that arose between a white man and a Negro who were seated side by side in the orchestra.

Neither of the men was arrested, but it was stated by the police last night that a summons might be issued for them today.

The quarrel took place at about 9 o'clock when the white man claimed the negro was jostling him in his seat. But before their words became heated the film was stopped, lights thrown on, and the pair ejected from the house by the detectives regularly on duty at the theatre. Money was refunded to the negro, but the white man refused his money back and later returned to the performance.

No disturbance occurred at the close of the performance.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 11, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" continues its prosperous run at the Tremont Theatre.

As works of photographic art these pictures are of surpassing merit, and in dramatic interest are quite beyond compare. The North and the South in the throes of internecine struggle, the vast strategy of the Petersburg campaign and Sherman's march, Lee's surrender to Grant and the aftermath of war in the attempt to reconstruct the States recently in rebellion—all these form a chain of martial and political events that hold the spectators' keenest attention. There are daily matinee and evening performances.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 11, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" BILL ENGROSSED

TEACHERS' APPOINTMENT MEASURE DEFEATED

Board of Economy and Efficiency Attacked, but Report Is Accepted

The advancement to the third reading of the so-called "Birth of a Nation" censorship bill, providing that the question of revoking a license of a theatre shall be decided by the unanimous vote of the Police Commissioner, Mayor and Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, and the rejection by the Senate of the bill providing that appointments to the public schools shall not be made because of religious reasons were the feature of the legislative bill.

The defeat of the school teachers' religious bill was brought about when Senator Sheehan of Holyoke urged its rejection on the ground that every race should have sufficient mentality to meet whatever was put upon them and that his own race did not require this legislation to get their rights. By a vote of 5 to 23 the bill was rejected, Senators Sheehan and Timilty voting against it.

The moving picture debate was spectacular and nearly every member managed to get into it. The Rowley amendment to the bill providing that, instead of an unanimous vote of the board of three, a two-thirds vote would be sufficient to revoke a license, was rejected by a roll-call of 104 to 116. Then an amendment by Catheron of Beverly, reducing the board to its present form by striking out the provision for the Chief Justice, was defeated, 50 to 61. The bill was then passed to be engrossed, 175 to 43.

The House then amended the Senate bill relative to the registration of physicians by striking out the three sections which would allow persons healing by the use of herbal remedies to be admitted to practice, and passed it to a third reading.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 11, 1915

SAYS NEGRO STEPPED ON TOES

Causus Belli in Incipient Race Riot at "The Birth of a Nation"

For about ten minutes last evening the progress of the moving-picture show, "The Birth of a Nation," was interrupted and a hurry call for a large detail of policemen was sent from the Tremont Theatre, as a result of an altercation between a white man and a negro. They had seats side by side in the orchestra. The house was very quiet and dark, when suddenly there arose loud talking. The two men stood and exchanged blows, while women in nearby seats screamed. Immediately the show was stopped, the house lighted and policemen escorted the men out of the theatre.

The white man claimed the negro stepped on his toes and persisted in doing it after he had been asked to stop. The negro said he had been assaulted. Superintendent of Police Crowley was on hand and after the names of the two men and of witnesses had been taken the show proceeded. The negro threatened to swear out a warrant against the white man today.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 11, 1915

ROW IN THEATRE SOON STOPPED

Performance of "Birth of a Nation" Goes On.

White and Colored Man Ejected for Causing Disturbance.

An incipient row, which the management of the Tremont Theatre, as well as some of the police, believe was a prearranged effort to interrupt the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," was nipped last night by a large detail of police, under command of Supt Michael H. Crowley.

Shortly after 9 o'clock a white man, sitting in the fourth row of the orchestra, complained in loud tones of what he alleged was malicious annoyance by a colored man who sat next him. Hot words followed and blows were exchanged. Supt Crowley, who was in the theatre as has been his custom since the picture was first shown, hurried to the scene of the disturbance, and both men were ejected.

The white man who, the theatre management thinks purchased the ticket for the colored man, claimed that the latter annoyed him by stepping upon his feet and would not desist when told to do so. The police obtained the names and addresses of both men and a summons will be served on the white man today, charging him with assault and battery.

Fearing that the altercation was the signal for an attempt to break up the show, since there were about a score of colored men in the house, Supt Crowley ordered an extra detail of about 25 officers from Divisions 1, 2, 3, 4 and 18, and they arrived at the theatre during the intermission to augment the regular nightly detail of about a dozen men. There was no further disturbance.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 11, 1915

HOUSE ACCEPTS CENSORS' BILL

Board's Vote Must Be Unanimous to Stop Production of a Play.

The House, by a vote of 175 to 43, ordered to be engrossed yesterday the new bill for the censoring of theatrical performances in Boston which provides for a board to consist of the mayor, police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court. The bill also contains the provision that to stop a performance the vote of the three censors must be unanimous.

Mr. Rowley of Brookline sought to amend the measure with a provision that the vote of two of the three would be sufficient, but this was rejected, 104 to 116. Mr. Catheron of Beverly then sought to amend by striking out the chief justice of the municipal court. That was defeated, 94 to 23.

A vigorous address in behalf of his amendment to make the bill more acceptable to opponents of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," was made by Mr. Rowley.

"The author of the book on which this play is based," he said, "is one of the most notorious haters of the colored race the South has ever produced. He frankly admits he has no use for the colored race and would drive it from the country. In this play, by subtle and insidious perversions of the history of the reconstruction period, he would keep alive and foster this race prejudice on the part of one group of American citizens against another. The colored man is represented as a sensuous animal, lusting after the virtue of the white women and in his new freedom arrogant and defiant of law and order.

Pleads for Majority Vote.

"The bill reported by the committee seems to me too rigid in its requirement of the unanimous consent of the three officials in whose hands is placed the power to revoke licenses. Are not majorities with rare exceptions always controlling on commissions and other boards? In our various state commissions, in the supreme court, in the Governor's council, in our city councils, in our boards of selectmen and in our own committees, is not the principle of majority control universally found? What unusual or extraordinary circumstances have been shown here that should cause us to depart from this well known principle of government?

"The unanimous consent of the commissioners makes no allowance for the pressure and influence that may at times be exerted on one of their number whose political aspirations are quite likely to warp his judgment."

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 11, 1915

BOSTON CENSOR BILL WINS

Three-Headed Board Provided By Measure

Those who have been fighting to have the photo play "The Birth of a Nation" barred from production in this State, yesterday met defeat in their efforts to have the Boston censor bill now before the Legislature amended so as to make their desires easier of accomplishment.

The House after a long battle turned down all of the amendments proposed to the bill, and by an overwhelming vote passed the measure as it came from the committee.

AMENDMENTS LOST

Prominent colored people and others who have been opposing "The Birth of a Nation," rallied behind an amendment offered by Representative Rowley of Brookline, which provided that any two of the three theatrical censors provided for in the bill may suppress a production by revoking its license. The bill provides that to revoke a license requires the unanimous consent of the censors.

Representative Rowley attacked "The Birth of a Nation" as being based upon a book written by a man who is one of the most notorious haters of the colored people, and a man who would drive them from this country. The play, he said, "by subtle and insidious perversions of history of the reconstruction period, tenders to foster race-prejudice."

He maintained that the bill reported by the committee was too rigid in that to censor a play it required that the unanimous consent of three censors must be given. Majority rule, he said, is the order of things in this country, and should be in this matter.

A number of representatives again spoke for and against the censor bill before any vote was taken on the amendment offered. The Rowley amendment was voted down 104 for, to 116 against.

Representative Catheron of Beverly offered an amendment to eliminate the chief justice of the Municipal Court from the censor board. This, too, was defeated. The final vote on the main bill was then ordered, and it was passed, 175 to 43.

Three-Headed Board

The bill, which will now go to the Senate provides that the chief justice of the Municipal Court, the Mayor and police commissioner shall constitute a board of censors for Boston, which may for any reason, by unanimous vote, revoke a license for any public performance or entertainment.

The House, yesterday, concurred with the Senate in passing the Senate amendment to the Pure Milk Bill, which eliminates "common carriers" from its provisions.

Registration Bill Delayed

In the Senate yesterday the bill to bar teachers' agencies from requiring applicants for positions to state their religious affiliations was killed by an overwhelming vote, there being but five votes for the bill.

The electricians' registration bill was again ordered referred to the next general court. This is the second time this has occurred during the present session. Senator Wells saved the bill before.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 11, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) EVE. GLOBE
MAY 11, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" continues its prosperous run at the Tremont Theatre.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. U[illegible]
MAY 11, 1915

Race Film Censor Measure Has Last Reading In House

Opponents of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," won this afternoon, when in the absence of crowded galleries the bill was passed to be engrossed. The bill reported by the Committee on Judiciary to vest unlimited powers of play censorship in Boston with the Mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal Court. The bill requires that their decision must be unanimous.

The measure was passed to be engrossed on a rollcall by the overwhelming vote of 175 to 43, and now goes to the Senate.

At present play censorship is vested jointly in the Mayor and police commission, but they have power to stop only plays of an obscene or immoral nature. The bill passed by the House this afternoon is the result of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation."

The passage of the bill to engrossment was a big victory for opponents of "The Birth of a Nation," inasmuch as practically every member of the House who spoke against the bill was a defender of the photoplay, but the opponents of the latter lost in an attempt to amend the bill in a way which they believed would strengthen it.

This amendment was offered by Rep. Rowley of Brookline and provided that the decision of two would be sufficient. He opposed the unanimous decision requirement of the bill as one which would make it too difficult to stop objectionable plays. His amendment, however, was lost after long debate by a rollcall vote of 116 against to 104 in favor.

An amendment offered by Rep. Catheron of Beverly to eliminate the chief justice from the three-headed censorship was defeated by a rising vote of 94 to 32.

In support of his amendment Mr. Rowley said:

"The author of the book on which this play is based is one of the most notorious haters of the colored race the South has ever produced. He frankly admits he has no use for the colored race and would drive it from the country. In this play, by subtle and insidious perversions of the history of the reconstruction period, he would keep alive and foster this race prejudice on the part of one group of American citizens against another. The colored man is represented as a sensuous animal, lusting after the virtue of the white women and in his new freedom arrogant and defiant of law and order.

"Whatever may have been the original purpose of the Ku Klux Klan does not every student of history know that very shortly after their organization they became gangs of rapists and murderers, perpetrating crimes that in their heinousness stagger the imagination. And yet in this play they are represented as chivalrous knights of a holy order with the cross of Christ as their standard, whose sole purpose was to protect the virtue of Southern white women. Further reference to the details of the play are unnecessary. Is it not apparent to every thinking man and woman that it is an insult and an affront to our colored brothers and sisters, for they are our brothers and sisters. American citizens as much as we are American citizens and equally with us entitled to respect and protection?

"The bill reported by the committee seems to me too rigid in its requirement of the unanimous consent of the three officials in whose hands is placed the power to revoke licenses. Are not majorities with rare exceptions always controlling on commissions and other boards? In our various State commissions in the Supreme Court, in the Governor's Council, in our City Councils, in our Boards of Selectmen and in our own committees, is not the principle of majority control universally found? What unusual or extraordinary circumstances have been shown here that should cause us to depart from this well-known principle of government?"

Record. Boston Journal, May 11, 1915
Boston Post

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of Nation" has entered [illegible] second half century of its notable run at the Tremont Theatre, having rounded the first 50 Boston performances Saturday. The play bids fair to surpass its record in Los Angeles and San Francisco, for the lines in front of the box office are as long as ever and a tremendous advance sale is in progress. Among the recent visitors to the spectacle in New York city were Madame Sembrich, the singer, and Paderewski, the pianist. They predicted that the drama would have an equal success in Europe to that achieved here, because such a marvellous presentment of the crises of American history should appeal with a special force to Europeans at this time.

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in Mr. Griffith's spectacle a thrilling relevante to the issues of today. The North and the South in the throes of internecine struggle; the vast strategy of the Petersburg campaign and Sherman's march; Lee's surrender to Grant, and the aftermath of war in the attempt to reconstruct the states recently in rebellion—all these form a chain of martial and political events that enlist the spectator's keene[illegible]

FRANKLIN (Mass.) SENTINEL
MAY 11, 1915

A Birth or a Death.

Rep. McKenzie of Foxboro attended the complimentary performance of "Birth of a Nation" the[illegible] to the members of the [illegible] by the manager. The performance was given as a result of the bill now in the court which followed the demonstration by the colored people in protest of the pictures.

Negroes objected to the legislature seeing "The Birth of a Nation" as guests of the proprietors, before [illegible] on one bill to prevent its p[illegible] They say that the legis[illegible] urally be biased by [illegible] free show, and th[illegible] show would [illegible]

[illegible] picture [illegible] and longest show [illegible] ever offered.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 11, 1915

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Popular feeling in the South and the North is tense over the slavery agitation. The story opens with the scene of Dr. Cameron engaged in a heated discussion over slavery with other Southern gentlemen.

In the North, Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts, are strong in their convictions of the wickedness of slavery. Lydia Brown, the mulatto housekeeper of Stoneman, seeks to aid her race through his influence.

Ted and Phil Stoneman, his sons, are friends of the Cameron family of the Piedmont, which includes Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, their daughters Margaret and Flora and their sons Ben and Duke. The young men naturally are opposed when war is declared.

Ted Stoneman falls dead at Gettysburg after killing Duke Cameron. Phil Stoneman saves Ben Cameron and takes him to a hospital just before Lee's surrender, but charges of guerilla outrages are made against Cameron. His mother pleads for his life and President Lincoln intercedes for him. In the hospital Ben Cameron meets Elsie Stoneman for the first time.

By Gertrude Stevenson

Part VIII. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part VII. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

It was with renewed courage and happier spirits that Mrs. Cameron, after a lingering farewell to Ben, hastened back to her Southern home with the good news of his pardon and the speedy recovery predicted by the army surgeon who had taken such an interest in the handsome rebel soldier.

The mother was sorely needed in that desolate household. Father Cameron had failed visibly during the terrible bloody years of the war. Now that it had ended with the South's defeat, his body continued to go through the motions of living, but his heart seemed dead within him. Through years of devoted married life Mrs. Cameron had always leaned and depended on her husband. Now their positions seemed reversed, and in Ben's absence Mrs. Cameron found herself called upon to direct and manage the family affairs.

FINDS HOME TOWN DESOLATE

Three weeks later, Ben, having reluctantly torn himself away from the ministering angel who had made even convalescence a period of ecstatic happiness, arrived in Piedmont.

It was a changed Ben, and it was a changed town that met his gaze. In the deserted streets, the crumbling, dilapidated buildings, the general poverty-stricken air, he tried in vain to imagine the gala city from which he had ridden, his horse wreathed in roses, amid the cheers of an adoring populace. And he himself was quite as different.

The noble mount which had carried him out of the city had been shot from under him. He was 10, rather than four, years older, if one were to judge by the faltering gait, the pallid coloring and the hollows fever had burned in his cheeks.

There was no one at the station to meet him, because the hour of ... had been wholly uncering sobs. Ben reached out his arms. Tenderly, wearily he folded her close. Her slender young arms encircled his neck and clung there. She sobbed out all the horror and unhappiness of those four wretched years of separation on his comforting shoulder.

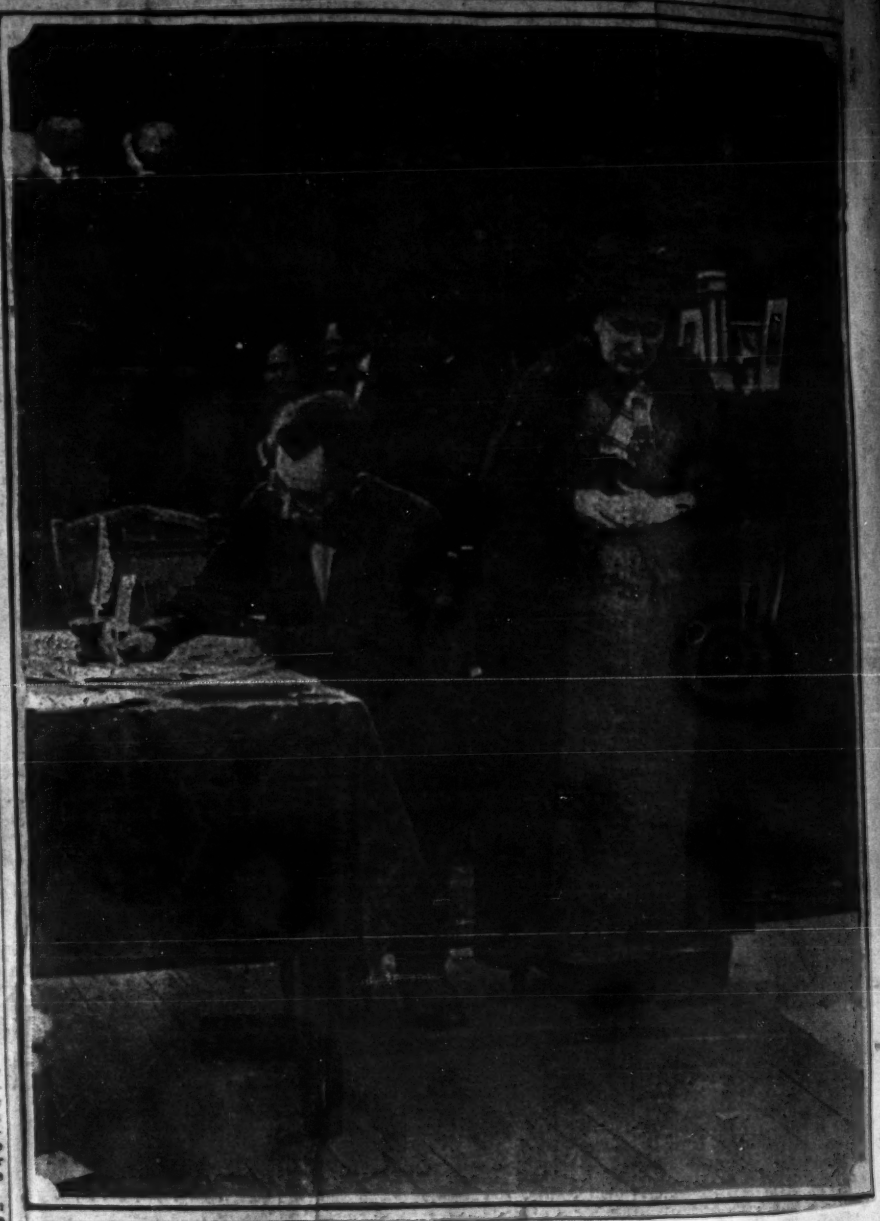
Thus they stood in the doorway. Presently came other arms and other tears. The conquered hero wore prouder garlands than even roses.

Everywhere throughout the country soldiers like Ben Cameron were returning to their homes, the only difference being that the Southerners found a devastated waste in the wake of Sherman's march to the sea, while in the North returning soldiers found their homes and business affairs in much the same condition they had left them.

The orgy of bloodshed and destruction was over. North and South alike looked to one man for the solution of all the problems which had arisen. And Abraham Lincoln, lamenting the awful loss of the young life of the nation, stood ready and waiting to bind the nation's wounds, heal its sores and do all he could to obliterate the scars the dreadful conflict had mide.

MOTHER'S PLEA TOUCHES LINCOLN'S GREAT HEART



grovelling at our feet. They've got to accept our will in this and all other matters. We've got them where they can't lift a finger or toe."

"And now that they're down, you want to kick them?" Lincoln asked, with his characteristic whimsicality.

"I'd Like to Hang 'Em"

"Kick them," sneered Stoneman. "I'd to hang them. I'd like to pull the ... with my own two hands. You ... get these Southern states are con... provinces. If Congress has any ...wer, they shall be treated as such. ...ey are to us what Poland is to Rus... and the bent back straightened at ... thought, as the aged Radical drew ...nself up on his cane and hurled the ...at of his defiance at the man oppo... him.

"They are safe at home," Lincoln ...ered, and his gaze seemed fixed on ...me distant horizon above the brats ...d cripple's head. "With my help ...ey shall never realize they have been ...road. I shall treat them as though ...ey had never been away."

His voice trailed off in penetrating ...veetness. He seemed to have forgotten ...s visitor completely.

"That's right," Stoneman muttered. ...Kill the fatted calf for the returning ...odigal, that came back home not willingly but by force, that beggared the ...ation not only of its material wealth ...ut of two generations of men."

His voice rose as his anger grew. A ...assion of rage shook his heavy frame. ...e lifted an accusing forefinger.

"Mark my words!" he shouted. "From ...his hour your day is done. From this ...moment you'll be the laughing stock ...f the whole world. Abraham Lincoln ...ill go down in history a soft-hearted ...mbecile, a dull-witted buffoon!"

The old man hobbled to the door and ...passed out.

For a long time Lincoln sat, his hands ...n his desk, his eyes filled with the ...same brooding peace, his gaze fixed on ...some unseen, distant point.

(To Be Con... [illegible])

...Of course we might have set that item as an example, and put a headline on it —"Domestic Finish."

The Woolworth of Worldiness is retained by a publishing house which advertises "the regular $old embossed, leather bound, gilded all around de luxe Edition."

"Be fair," counsels the Kaiser. "And," he might add, "as we are all rather busy over here, suppose You furnish 39 per cent. of the fairness."

Germany, we are informed, is having a large sign painted, to be stuck up across the universe. The sign says "Verboten." The sign say...

Crack! crack! went several thousand neutralities yesterday under the strain for

Let Samuel Taylor Coleridge have the last word this morning.

"The very deep did rot: O Christ! That ever this should be!" P. P. A.

FIRST U. S. MAIL EVER LOST AT SEA FROM WAR

Washington, May 10.—The loss of 32 bags of mail on the Lusitania is said by the Postoffice Department to be the first ever lost at sea by the United States as the result of war. Records for the last 100 years show no such loss.

Postoffice officials declined to discuss to what extent, if any, the loss of the mail may enter into the international complications arising out of the sinking of the ship.

State Auditor Cook

With some of the Republican statesmen still appears to be persona non grata on Economy and Efficiency to the auditor's department. Representative Butler of Lawrence asked if the House would like to see the work of that commission placed in charge of the present auditor.

It was from Butler's city that a certain gentleman named Monette came last fall in an attempt to wrest the Republican nomination for auditor from Cook, and perhaps the Butler remark yesterday was due to some unpleasant memories of the last primaries.

In yesterday's debate on the bill to transfer the duties of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency to the auditor's department, Representative Butler of Lawrence asked if the House would like to see the work of that commission placed in charge of the present auditor.

It was from Butler's city that a certain gentleman named Monette came last fall in an attempt to wrest the Republican nomination for auditor from Cook, and perhaps the Butler remark yesterday was due to some unpleasant memories of the last primaries.

Prorogation Day

A week from next Friday is the hope and expectation of some of the Republican leaders in the Legislature. They admit that much depends on the disposition of the New Haven and Boston and Maine railroad bills in the branches. Inasmuch as the Boston and Maine matter will probably be finally disposed of in the House today, it would seem as if there is little likelihood of further delay on account of that measure.

The New Haven bills were filed in the Senate yesterday and the feeling is that there will be a rapid lining up for or against those bills which will make it unnecessary to set back the prorogation clock.

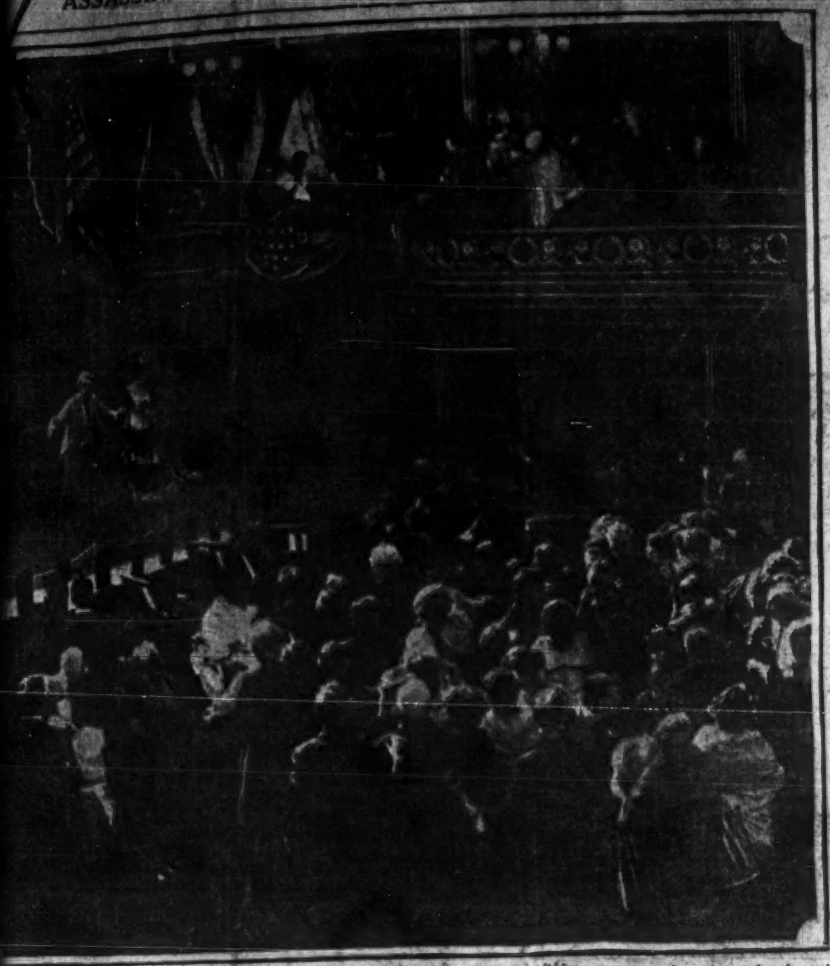
The pen was given to Senator Hayes of Brighton, who pushed the measure through all its stages in the House and Senate in less than 24 hours. The pen, accompanied by a note from the Governor, will be transmitted by the senator to Mrs. Woods.

Woods of Boston will receive the balance of salary which would have been paid to her husband if he had served out the rest of the year, was signed by the Governor yesterday.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 12, 1915

1709

ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN IN FORD'S THEATRE



The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Popular feeling in the South and the North is tense over the slavery agitation. In the North, Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts, are strong in their convictions of the wickedness of slavery. Lydia Brown, the mulatto housekeeper of Stoneman, seeks to aid her race through his influence.

Tod and Phil Stoneman, his sons, are friends of the Cameron family of the Piedmont, which includes Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, their daughters Margaret and Flora and their sons Ben and Duke. The young men naturally are opposed when war is declared.

Tod Stoneman falls dead at Gettysburg after killing Duke Cameron. Phil Stoneman saves Ben Cameron and takes him to a hospital just before Lee's surrender but charges of guerilla outrages are made against Cameron. His mother pleads for his life and President Lincoln intercedes for him. In the hospital Ben Cameron meets Elsie Stoneman for the first time. Ben returns home to find his family and village in poverty.

Lincoln and Stoneman disagree as to policies, Stoneman maintaining that Southern whites are traitors and should receive no consideration.

By Gertrude Stevenson.

Part IX. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part VIII. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

If Austin Stoneman had had any doubt of the firmness of the President's determination relative to his treatment of the South, it was dispelled when news of the next day's Cabinet meeting was brought to him.

With quiet force Lincoln had directed all the discussion of the day to the reconstruction of the Southern States and the re-establishment of their individual governments. Members of the Cabinet were soon to recall the depth of friendly sympathy which seemed to characterize every utterance of the man during that afternoon's meeting. Even his former tolerant attitude paled into insignificance before the new expressions of charity and good will.

Again and again he checked a bitter outburst and outlined his ideas on the rebuilding of the South. He deplored persecution in any form, he declared repeatedly, urged the extinguishing of all rancor and resentment for the sake of harmony and union and reiterated the statement that seemed to be uttermost in his mind—that enough and more than enough lives had already been sacrificed.

LINCOLN LETS REBEL AGENT GO

Later when word was brought to him that Jacob Thompson, former secretary of the interior and the chief Confederate agent in Canada, who, among other things, had planned the razing of all the larger northern cities, was about to jump the country and go to England, he remarked, with his quizzical smile: "I guess we'd better let him go. When you've got an elephant by the hind leg and he's trying to run away, it's best to let him run."

A few hours later every man who heard him remembered the tolerant words and the kindly voice that uttered them.

That day the whole capital was in gala array to celebrate a peace already assured, in spite of the fact that Sherman's army had not yet met Johnston's forces, and welcome the conquering hero, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, worshiped by the North because he had overcome the seemingly invincible Lee and endeared to every Southern soldier by his magnanimous treatment after the signing of peace at Appomattox, when he said: "Keep your horses, boys, you'll need them for the spring ploughing."

Every public building and business establishment was draped with bunting and illuminated arches spanned every prominent thoroughfare. The Stars and Stripes, victors over the Stars and Bars, flaunted their colors from every point. Exuberant and unrestrained excitement pervaded every corner of the city and filled every household.

Phil Stoneman, back from a war which had covered him with honors and from which he had escaped without even an illness, burst into the sitting room of his aunt's house, where Elsie sat reading the afternoon newspaper.

"Oh! I say, Elsie," he exclaimed, "Hurry up and get ready for the theatre. The President's taken a box at Ford's. Grant's going to be there and everyone's scrambling for tickets. I got there early, the minute I heard of it, and landed a couple of the best seats in the house."

"Oh, goody," Elsie cried, jumping up. "I'll be ready in a jiffy."

Ever since the day that Lincoln had been so kind to Mrs. Cameron, Elsie had held his image in her heart. Although she was well aware of her father's contempt for the man, she little dreamed of the deep-seated hatred which had sprung up in the closing months of the war. She was like a child in hero worship, and, next to her father, Lincoln and Grant took their places as the men of destiny of the nation.

Sees Lincoln Enter Theatre

It was with eager anticipation that she started off with Phil for Ford's Theatre in 10th street, where Laura Keene was giving the 1000th performance of the success of the season, "Our American Cousin," starring with Jefferson and Sothern. She noted with delight that their seats afforded a splendid view not only of the stage but of the presidential box, which was draped with flags and bunting and appropriately ornamented with a picture of the hero of the nation's first struggle, George Washington.

The play began. So absorbed did Elsie become in the excellent acting that she soon forgot to watch the President's box to see whether he had arrived until suddenly she was startled by the loud strains of the orchestra booming, "Hail to the Chief," and on the instant she was on her feet and joining in the burst of applause which went up all over the house as the President and Mrs. Lincoln appeared in their box. At the last moment Gen. Grant had decided not to stay over for the play because he wanted to see his daughter, who was attending school in Burlington, N. J. In his place Mrs. Lincoln had invited two of the younger official set, Clara Harris, daughter of the senator from New York, and her fiance, Maj. Rathbone.

Lincoln stood bowing and smiling before the plaudits of the audience which had completely forgotten the players and the play in their interest in the new arrivals. His homely face beamed as men shouted, women waved their handkerchiefs and scarfs and the orchestra thundered its tribute to the man of the hour.

It was noticeable that he had no guard and only one attendant. In spite of threats of assassination, which had been numerous throughout the years of the war, and against his wife's pleas, Lincoln positively refused to take any precautions for his safety. Again and again he remarked: "By the hand of a murderer I can die but once; to walk continually in fear would be to die a thousand deaths."

President Has Premonition?

Finally, realising that the actors stood silent waiting for an opportunity to go on with the play, Lincoln sat down, but the clamor and applause continued. Again and again he bowed. Then he took his wife's hand and drew her nearer to the front of the box to share in the ovation. Only when they had wheeled themselves hoarse and the orchestra had ceased playing, would the playgoers turn their attention to the stage and its performance.

"Now, that reminds me of a story," as the President would say," shouted William Hawk, one of the actors, endeavoring to divert attention from the President to the stage. There was a burst of appreciative laughter, and the play was allowed to proceed.

Once, looking toward the President, Elsie saw him turn and reach for his coat, which Mrs. Lincoln spread around his shoulders. Did he feel the sudden drop in temperature—was there a draft from an open door, which should have been closed and watched—or did he, perchance, feel that premonitory chill of approaching danger experienced by all persons of impressionably sensitive organization?

The second act was over and the third act was well underway when Elsie's wandering attention happened to fall on a striking figure walking down the side aisle. She nudged Phil with her elbow.

"Look, there's John Wilkes Booth," she whispered. "Isn't he the handsomest creature that ever walked on two feet?"

Booth Leaps From Box

She took up her opera glasses and fitted them to her eyes, the better to see the handsome actor who was the despair of feminine hearts wherever he went. As he walked down the aisle with all the poise and grace of generations of theatrical ancestors, Elsie thought she had never seen a more attractive or impressive figure. The next moment something on the stage caught her attention and she looked away. Suddenly she heard a revolver shot and, thinking it was behind the scenes, wondered what connection it could possibly have with the scene being enacted on the stage.

Turning quickly to the presidential box, she saw Booth climbing over the box rail, a smoking pistol in one hand, a blood-stained dagger in the other. She saw him jump, saw his spur catch in the folds of the flag that draped the box like a providential hand outstretched to detain him, saw him sprawl on all fours on the stage for a moment, then jump up and, waving his weapons aloft, heard him shout wildly:

"Sic semper tyrannis! The South is avenged!"

There was a moment of bewilderment for Elsie and everyone else in the audience, who scarcely knew what part Booth was performing. The next instant there was a woman's piercing cry and Mrs. Lincoln, leaning out over the box, screamed:

"He's shot the President. He's shot the President. Is there a doctor here?"

That panic-stricken cry of anguish turned the whole theatre into pandemonium. Men clambered into the box to support the wounded man, who still sat in his chair, a sunken heap, his head projected forward on one shoulder. Women screamed and fainted. Elsie turned faint as Phil attempted to pilot her through the crowd. In the confusion, the assassin escaped.

Crepe Follows Bunting

In a night, Washington changed from a city of rejoicing, draped with flags and bunting, to a temple of the dead. Crepe took the place of gay bunting. The gaudy flags which had but yesterday flaunted their proud folds in a stiff April breeze, hung limp in the drizzling rain—at half-mast. The nation mourned its martyred hero.

In one household alone there were no tears. It was the strange house near the Capitol where a strange leader lived with his strange mulatto companion.

When the news of Lincoln's passing was brought to him, this strange man raised himself on his unsightly foot and his crooked cane and with one arm aloft, shouted:

"At last! At last!"

At his side, the strange mulatto woman, beautiful in a certain dusky way and graceful with all a panther's feline, sinuous movements, exulted with him.

"You are now the greatest power in America," she fawned on him. He was only too willing to believe her.

Many, many miles away, where the first magnolias were perfuming the air, an awe stricken family gathered round to read the dreadful tidings.

"Our best friend is gone," signed Father Cameron. "What is to become of the South now!"

(To be continued tomorrow.)

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 12, 1915

Southerner Describes Ku-Klux of Old

Says Northerners Had Wrong Idea of the Clan

The Tremont Theatre management has received from Dr. W. E. Crockett of 435 Shawmut ave. a remarkable narrative of the Blue and the Gray, and of the Ku Klux troubles in the South which bears out historically several of the most important scenes of the play. Dr. Crockett is 82 years old and has led an active and vigorous life, having been one of the best known amateur athletes in this city.

He is a native of Maine and enlisted as sergeant in the 4th Maine Regiment under Col. S. G. Berry at the outset of the Civil War. In his letter he tells of saving the life of a Confederate soldier named Dominick D. Figuet, with whom he, after the war, corresponded. In a letter dated July 6, 1871, Figuet writes:

"About those dreaded Ku Klux, I will give you their correct history. Immediately after the war we had in our midst bands of mal-contents and disbanded soldiers who gave unbridled license to their every passion. Arson, rape, robbery and murder ruled the hour. The law was a dead letter and afforded protection to neither life, liberty, property or person. Still another phase was the swarming of political locusts, the offcasts of Northern society who came South to better their conditions by means fair or foul, to hoist themselves into places of power by leading the negro and securing his vote.

"The consequence was that good men and true, the most respectable quiet and law abiding citizens, were forced to establish vigilant committees and band together for mutual protection. These vigilantes were the dreaded Ku Klux. They were purely local societies. The terror of evil doers no good man ever saw them."

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 12, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION at Tremont Theatre.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first-class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters' hours performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of civil war history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants, drilled with the well known Griffith plan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performance given at 2:10 P. M. are exactly the same as those at night. Besides affording the advantage of cheaper prices, they give opportunity to out-of-town people to include a visit to the Tremont Theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 12, 1915

Discuss War and Films.

"Shall We Declare War on Germany" will be discussed tonight at the Maverick Congregational Church, East Boston, by Beecher Blanchard. This will be followed by a defence of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," with opening remarks by Henry R. MacMahon.

picture play, ... and longest show ... ever offered.

AUGUS (Mass.) HERALD
MAY 13 1915

827

NO EXCUSE FOR "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A monster meeting of protest, at which more than 1,200 were present, against the continuance of the film show, "The Birth of a Nation," now running at a Boston theatre, was held Sunday evening at the Twelfth Baptist church, Roxbury. The meeting was opened after the close of the regular church services and was continued until the early morning hours.

The Herald editor was one of a thousand who witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" last Friday night and we do not hesitate to say that we fail to see any justification for the production of the film. If, as is advertised, the promoters of the film expended $500,000 in its production, we think they showed mighty poor judgment in the selection of a subject on which to spend that amount of money. Even with the scenes of a licentious negro chasing a white girl in her teens over a rocky waste eliminated, the film cannot appeal historically or otherwise to any amusement loving citizen. There are some things even in the histories of nations that it is as well to forget, and the events pertaining to the reconstruction of the South, following the Civil war, the war which freed the negro, is one of them. We say this, too, while mindful of the fact that it was that war which left a young mother and three small children, of which we were the youngest, fatherless.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 12, 1915

Crockett Says History Is Shown in Photoplay

Dr. W. E. Crockett of 435 Shawmut avenue writes to the Post a remarkable narrative of the Blue and the Gray, and of the Ku Klux troubles in the South, which, he says, bears out historically some of the scenes of "The Birth of a Nation." He says:

"We were skirmishing near Fairfax Courthouse, Va., shortly before the first battle of Bull Run, when I succeeded in capturing the first Confederate prisoner of the four years' struggle. Our pickets had cut off a group of rebel sentries, among them a young Alabamian named Dominick D. Figuet. 'Don't kill me!' he shouted. 'I will give up my arms.'

"He yielded his equipment to me, when up came one of the Ellsworth Zouaves, who had been greatly embittered by the murder of their colonel by an Alexandria inn keeper and naturally thirsted for revenge.

"The Zouave pressed the muzzle of a loaded pistol against Figuet's temple, cursing him as he did so. 'He is my prisoner,' I said. 'If you kill him, I will kill you,' aiming my new Smith & Wesson directly at the Zouave. Other soldiers came up, and the life of the rebel whom I had protected was spared, my colonel threatening the Zouaves with bullets if they should try to turn the capture of prisoners into a massacre.

"The young Alabamian never forgot how I had saved him. In 'The Birth of a Nation,' Captain Phil Stoneman's saving of the little colonel, Ben Cameron, struck me as a close parallel. We corresponded regularly, and he asked me to join him in immigrating to the then new country of Texas, which, however, I was unable to do. I have preserved many of his letters. The most interesting one from Tuscaloosa, Alabama, bears date of July 6, 1871, soon after the disbandment of the Ku Klux Klan. In it my friend says:

"'About those dreaded Ku Klux, I will give you their correct history. There is no such an organization existing, as the Northern people believe. They consider the Ku Klux to be a bloody brotherhood, a secret political society, to drive men of Northern birth away, enslave the negro and control the ballot box.

"'These are the facts of the case. Immediately after the war we had in our midst bands of malcontents and disbanded soldiers who gave unbridled license to their every passion. Arson, rape, robbery and murder ruled the hour. The law was a dead letter and afforded protection to neither life, liberty, property nor person. Still another phase was the swarming of political locusts, the offcasts of Northern society, who came South to better their conditions by means fair or foul, to hoist themselves into places of power by leading the negro on and securing his vote.

"'The consequence was that good men and true, the most respectable, quiet and law abiding citizens, were forced to establish vigilant committees and band together for mutual protection. These vigilantees were the dreaded Ku Klux. They were purely local societies. In many places none were ever called for, and none existed.

"'There have been many crimes perpetrated by disguised men. With hellish devilitry the lying parasites of the body politic would flash them all over the North as Ku Klux outrages. In nine cases out of 10 they themselves were the perpetrators, and the Ku Klux proper were following fast and surely on their heels to mete out to them the punishment which the law prescribes, but was powerless to inflict. Desperate evils require desperate remedies, and the Ku Klux arose. But never in a single instance has a quiet, peaceable man who attended to his own business been disturbed or molested by this dreaded band. The good man never saw one. But evildoers, thieves and murderers saw them behind every tree, on every hill and in every vale. Fear enlivened their imaginations, and they became Argus-eyed.'"

Mr. Figuet studied law after the war and became one of the most prominent attorneys in Alabama. Doctor Crockett, who was an old Union veteran, says he finds nothing objectionable in Mr. Griffith's film play, and takes a special interest in it, from the fact that his daughter, Mrs. Harry G. Carleton, saw many of the scenes made out in Los Angeles.

(Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 13, 1915
17

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Popular feeling in the South and the North is tense over the slavery agitation. In the North, Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts, are strong in their denunciations of the wickedness of slavery. Lydia Brown, the mulatto housekeeper of Stoneman, seeks to aid her race through his influence.

Ted and Phil Stoneman, his sons, are friends of the Cameron family of the Piedmont, which includes Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, their daughters Margaret and Flora and their sons Ben and Duke. The young men naturally are opposed when war is declared.

Tod Stoneman falls dead at Gettysburg after killing Duke Cameron. Phil Stoneman saves Ben Cameron and takes him to a hospital just before Lee's surrender, but charges of guerilla outrages are made against Cameron. His mother pleads for his life and President Lincoln intercedes for him. In the hospital Ben Cameron meets Elsie Stoneman for the first time. Ben returns home to find his family and village in poverty.

Lincoln and Stoneman disagree as to policies, Stoneman maintaining that Southern whites are traitors, and should receive no consideration.

A Cabinet meeting is held at which Lincoln urges reconstruction of the Southern States and the re-establishment of their individual governments. His entire attitude is one of friendly sympathy.

In the midst of the gala rejoicing in Washington over approaching victory President Lincoln is assassinated during the performance at Ford's Theatre by John Wilkes Booth.

In a night Washington becomes a city of mourning. Dr. Cameron is stunned by the news of the assassination.

By Gertrude Stevenson

Part X. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part IX. was printed in Yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

With Lincoln's body being borne in an imposing funeral procession to its Western grave, the countryside for miles around scoured for the escaped murderer, the entire North seething with renewed hatred of the South and vowing vengeance on the Confederate leaders believed to have been the arch-plotters in the cowardly crime, Vice President Andrew Johnson sworn in as chief executive in due form and a price of $100,000 on Jefferson Davis' head, Austin Stoneman quietly gathered around him his satellites and henchmen, secretly preparing to gather the reins of power and government into his own ruthlessly capable hands.

SEES DUPE IN JOHNSON

He congratulated himself that Johnson was the right man for the right place, a blind tool to be used to the best advantages for the Stoneman purposes. His treatment of the South promised to be more vigorous and more to Stoneman's liking than Lincoln's policies. Before Lincoln's death Johnson had gone on record as believing that treason was the greatest crime, and that all traitors should be suitably punished. On negro suffrage he had gone so far as to say, "There is no difference between us." With such a man in the White House and all Congress at his beck and call, "Old Aust" was sanguine of success.

Such were his reflections as he sat late one afternoon, rubbing his hands in smug contemplation of his dearest projects and the furtherance of his choicest plans of confiscating all the richest of Southern properties and, by the control of black votes, controlling the government of all the Southern States, when the first word of the President's change of policy was brought to him.

In a flash the whole political horizon changed.

Johnson, instead of deviating from Lincoln's outlined plans of forgiveness and mercy to the South, had issued a proclamation of amnesty which followed the general plan of one already prepared by his predecessor.

In regard to North Carolina, he had arranged for a Reconstruction convention to be chosen only by persons qualified to vote before secession, thus excluding all negroes, leaving them freedom in name only and placing the reorganization of the States in the hands of men who had but a few months before borne arms against the Union.

That moment Stoneman knew that a gigantic conflict was before him, a battle of master minds in which he was determined to outwit this "presidential accident" and "this interloper in the White House," as he immediately dubbed Johnson. It was a signal for the gathering of his forces. One by one, officials, big and little, answered his summons, the last, but certainly not the least, to arrive being Senator Sumner.

Sumner Startles Stoneman

Sumner, fresh from a private interview with the President, mourned out the tender mercies of our 'border Presidents.' Eh, Sumner?"

Johnson Couldn't "See"

"I insist that the rebels ought not to come back except on the footing of the Declaration of Independence," Sumner answered, "with all persons equal before the law and government founded on the consent of the governed.

"I tried to make Mr. Johnson see that there ought to be no discrimination on account of color and he laughed at me. I tried to make him see that if all whites were to vote, so must all blacks. He taked me if I expected the men who had owned slaves for years and had lost them suddenly by what seems to them an arbitrary and unjust act ought to be ready to treat them as citizens at once. I tried to make him see that we cannot establish stable government without black votes, that without them the old enemy would reappear and under the form of the law take possession of the governments, choose magistrates and officers and, in alliance with the Northern democracy, put us all in peril again, postpone the day of tranquility and menace the national credit by assailing the national debt. In answer he declared that the passions which had brought on the war had not been quenched by fighting and that it wasn't in human nature that the defeated should become loyal at once."

"Can't the blundering old idiot see that we're interested in this negro suffrage not only because it's just but because it's absolutely necessary?" Stoneman interrupted. "This isn't a white man's government in the exclusive sense of the word. To say so is political blasphemy, for it violates the principles of our gospel of liberty. This is man's government—the government of all men alike. Without the right of suffrage, I believe the slaves had far better been left in bondage.

"If we are to follow our chief magistrate," again the contemptuous vocal inflection, "we have broken the material shackles of these poor blacks, but not the actual chains. We allow them locomotion provided they do not walk in paths trod by white men. We allow them, too, the unwonted privilege of attending church, if they can do so without offending the sight of their former masters. We have even given them the 'right to work,' but how have we enlarged their real liberty if we are to follow the President's lead? We have given them the privilege of fighting our battles, or dying in defense of freedom and of bearing their equal portion of taxes, but there we are apparently to stop. If Mr. Johnson has his way, they are not even to participate in forming the laws that are to govern them. Does he call this liberty?"

Laughs at "Freedom"

He paused for breath and looked around the circle of followers intent on his every word.

GRANT AND LEE MEETING AT APPOMATTOX murdered a thousand men, robbed a thousand widows and orphans, burned down a thousand houses and escapes, he ought not to feel so terribly abused if, owning $100,000, he is fined half that amount as a punishment and to repair his ravages. The next we may expect from Johnson, far from agreeing to our confiscation plans, he'll want us to pay a portion of the damages inflicted on the rebels and pay part of the rebel debt."

A hearty laugh greeted this bit of irony. Stoneman continued:

"I'm far from bloody-minded, but I'd like to see Jeff Davis and all the members of his Cabinet tried for the murders at Andersonville and Salisbury. Everyone of them is equally responsible for those crimes. Of course, I don't say they ought to be executed. Oh, no! There's such a sickly humanity prevalent that I'm almost catching it, too!"

As Stoneman's followers exchanged amused smiles at their leader's sarcastic wit, Sumner proceeded to explain that he had prepared a number of bills and resolutions for Stoneman to look over.

They provided for equal suffrage in the District of Columbia; the presence of negro jurors upon the panels at the trial of cases where the rights of such persons were involved; a form of oath which should be required of every voter or officer in the seceded States; forbade the denial in those States of rights, civil or political, on account of race or color, making all persons equal before the law, whether in the courtroom or at the ballot box; enforced the 13th amendment making it a crime to claim any right to control the services of any person in obstruction of its provisions, the last bill giving the federal courts jurisdiction of offenses committed by or against persons of African descent and annuled all State laws or customs making any distinctions of rights on account of race or color.

The Reconstruction Scheme

Stoneman beamed as he glanced over the closely written pages, especially of Sumner's complete scheme of Reconstruction, carefully drawn, giving Congress full control, insuring equal suffrage, preventing all distinctions of race and color and disfranchising the leaders of the rebellion.

"I guess those will straighten matters out a little," he chuckled as he handed the documents back.

"But what amazes me," Sumner went on, "is that, in spite of Schurz's report, I couldn't convince Johnson that 99 out of every 100 men and women in the South still continue to believe that slavery was and is right and that the war didn't prove secession wrong, but only that the North was stronger in arms. The South's policy, for the present at least, is to accept the best they

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 13, 1915
17

The so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill, which provides for ... censorship of all theatrical entertainments in Boston by a board composed of the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal Court, was postponed for consideration until Friday.

Senator Bean of Cambridge offered an amendment to provide a majority of the board should have authority to stop any production, instead of the requirement in the bill that the action of the three members must be unanimous. A like amendment was defeated by a close vote in the House.

Senator Sullivan of Boston, who dissented from the report of the judiciary committee on the bill, gave notice he will move a substitute bill which will provide that the mayor shall have full authority, as in other cities of the State, to stop any production, but that an appeal may be taken from his decision to the Municipal Court.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 13, 1915

LEGISLATIVE

sons, firms and corporations doing electrical construction work was ordered to a third reading, after reconsideration of a vote of reference to the next General Court had been secured.

Consideration of the House bill for a three-headed play censorship in Boston, reported by the committee on judiciary as the result of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation," was postponed by the Senate until Friday.

The bill gives the powers of censorship with the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court, but requires their decision must be unanimous. Senator Bean of Cambridge offered an amendment to provide that a majority vote of the three censors would be sufficient. The House killed a similar amendemtn.

Senator Sullivan of South Boston offered a substitute bill which makes the mayor censor, but allows an appeal to a

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 13, 1915

The "Birth of a Nation" bill was put over until Friday with amendments pending. A. Bean of Middlesex would amend by having the decision by a majority of the board of censors instead of by all which the House rejected; Mr Sullivan of Suffolk wants a new bill to make the mayor of Boston the censor, with an appeal from him to the appellate court.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 13, 1915

Says "Birth of a Nation" Is Historically Correct

Henry R. MacMahon, publicity manager of "The Birth of a Nation," defended that presentation before the Men's Club of the Maverick Congregational Church, Central square, East Boston, last night.

He declared the film play to be historically correct, and that many worse crimes were committed than are shown in the "Birth of a Nation." Mr. MacMahon also defended the Ku Klux Clan.

ATHOL (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 10, 1915

From Our Special Correspondent.

The members object to the Legislature seeing "The Birth of a Nation" as guests of the proprietors, before acting on the bill to prevent its production. They say that the Legislature will naturally be biased by gratitude for the free show, and that therefore the free show would amount to bribery.

The House has voted to appropriate $15,000 for an investigation of telephone rates by the public service commission. The House has also passed the bill to establish four model forms of city charter and to permit any city to adopt any of these forms at will without recourse to the Legislature for special legislation. The present system is for a city to petition the Legislature for special legislation, every time it wishes the least change in its charter.

A wholesome change has just been made in legislative procedure, by the adoption of a rule that discharged city employes must first resort to the courts before applying to the Legislature for reinstatement. This new rule will cut off the host of bills which every year invades Beacon Hill and which call for the use of the most pernicious kind of political influence.

The Legislature did see "The Birth of a Nation" after all, and appeared to enjoy it.

The Governor has called for still another investigation, this time of the sliding scale gas rates. It is a great year for investigations on Beacon Hill. The agreement by President Coolidge of the Senate and Speaker Cox of the House to suppress all legislation that they can has apparently resulted in forcing government activities into other channels.

EASTHAMPTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 13, 1915

WEEKLY STATE HOUSE LETTER

(From our own Special Correspondent)

The Legislators did see "The Birth of a Nation" after all, and appeared to enjoy it.

WORCESTER (Mas...
MAY 1...

BOSTON PREACHERS ASK JOKE CENSOR

Want Task Assumed by Mayor Curley, Who Made Gertrude Hoffmann Wear Stockings.

CONFERENCE NEXT THURSDAY

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, May 13.

Mayor Curley, who put stockings on Gertrude Hoffmann and on society girls attempting to dance barefoot in aid of suffrage, took another step toward the "uplift" of the stage to-day when he called a conference of theatrical men in regard to the purification of the stage jokes.

A delegation of ministers called on him and urged that all dialogues with double meanings be prohibited. Tae ministers said they had no particular act in mind, but that occasional complaints had been made about musical comedy and vaudeville and burlesque.

The Mayor arranged another conference with them on next Thursday. Meanwhile he sent out invitations to the managers of all the theatres in the city and all the booking agents to be present and discuss the subject with the ministers.

Theatrical men with whom the Mayor talked to-day pointed out that in other cities where such an agitation has been started the theatres have been able to demonstrate that almost any dialogue may have two constructions placed upon it. They asserted also that if there were a real public dislike for such dialogues their patrons would compel a change without the necessity of official censorship.

The Mayor has not interfered with any productions since he refused to stop "The Birth of a Nation" at the behest of negroes.

BOSTON CHRIS. SCIENCE MONITOR 1
MAY 13, 1915

The so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill, which provides for a censorship of all theatrical entertainments in Boston by a board composed of the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court, was postponed for consideration until Friday.

Senator Bean of Cambridge offered an amendment to provide [illegible] authority of the board [illegible] authority to stop any production instead of the requirement in the bill that the action of the three members must be unanimous. A like amendment was defeated by a close vote in the House.

Substitute Bill Planned

Senator Sullivan of Boston, who dissented from the report of the judiciary committee on the bill, gave notice he will move a substitute bill which will provide that the mayor shall have full authority, as in other cities of the state, to stop any production, but that an appeal may be taken from his decision to the municipal court.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 13, 1915

Scottish Clans Revived in Carolinas

Became the Famous Ku-Klux Of Reconstruction Period

The clans depicted in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, were not the accidental growth of the Reconstruction period of Southern history. They were the revival in the Carolinas of the Highland clans of Scotland, and most of their organizers bore Scottish names.

In Mr. Griffith's picture the riders are represented as they actually appeared, wearing the mysterious white robes, helmets with tall peaks, and the St. Andrew's cross emblazoned across the front. The St. Andrew's cross was the conventional sign of Scottish Clans, and there was nothing sacrilegious in its everyday use.

In some of the Carolina communities the inhabitants were almost exclusively of Scottish ancestry. Practically every able-bodied native white man, including the parson, the lawyer, the doctor and all the other notables, joined the order. Their grand parents or great-grandparents had come over from Scotland, and the memory of the old Scottish rites was still traditional among them.

After the government started the prosecutions for the operations of the clan many of the prominent members fled from their homes. They were conveyed by "under-ground railroad" to Arkansas, Texas and the far west, where they are known as "refugeed clansmen." For years strict secrecy was preserved, but after the general pardon and amnesty following the final settlement of Reconstruction the ban of silence was removed. Throughout the entire South stories of the doings and thrilling escapes of the clansmen have developed into a kind of semi-historical, semi-legendary, lore.

One secret of success, aside from the old Highland traditions, lay in the fact that almost every member of the community was an expert horseman. Roads being so poor, horseback riding was almost the only means of transportation.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 14 1915

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" SHOWING AN ASSEMBLAGE OF THE "CLAN."

ANDOVER (Mass.) TOWNSMAN
MAY 14, 1915

A Discreditable Attitude

"The Birth of a Nation" has aroused a great deal of criticism and is at present claiming the attention of the Legislature as one of the most important matters before it. Undoubtedly there is prevalent much hysteria in connection with this discussion, but it is also undoubtedly true that the colored people are justified in uttering a vigorous protest against certain parts of this picture show as it is presented in Boston.

One of the sidelights of the situation is particularly interesting to those who have a desire to see the press eminently fair in all cases, and who have an even greater desire to see that portion of the press which claims to stand for the highest ideals the press knows, namely, the religious press, prove that it has a right to claim such standing. If the writer had not had experience along similar lines, he probably would not at this time call attention to one of the publications which is shown in a very unenviable light, and is "caught with the goods on" in its attitude on this particular problem, as it has been in some other cases.

One of the editors of the Congregationalist, Rolfe Cobleigh by name, has made some statements upon which he has been brought to account by those who are responsible for the production of "The Birth of a Nation" in a startling manner. Mr. Cobleigh has not only had his word questioned with pretty strong support for those who questioned it, but he has had his position as a fair-minded newspaper man shown up pretty badly in a quarter-page advertisement published in all of the Boston newspapers. It seems that Mr. Cobleigh was willing to rest his attitude relative to "The Birth of a Nation" upon the judgment of Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst until he found that Mr. Parkhurst was in favor of it, and then he closed the case against the authors of this play by the statement that the Congregationalist had no space for Dr. Parkhurst's report.

The writer recalls a similar experience when a very prominent Congregational clergyman in Massachusetts went to the editor of the Congregationalist protesting against some statements that had been made regarding a candidate for a high State office, and the answer was almost identical,—that inasmuch as they were opposed to the particular candidate, they had no space to publish a statement which reflected criticism of their attitude and carried proof of the falsity of some statements they had made.

The public is in the habit of expecting from certain kinds of newspapers biased and prejudiced, and even untruthful statements, if sensational ideas are thereby to be exploited or if personal ends are to be promoted, but it hasn't been until recent years in the habit of feeling that statements made in newspapers claiming such standing as the Congregationalist does, were based upon either prejudiced opinion or untruth.

TEMPLETON (Mass.) RECORDER
MAY 14, 1915

Weekly State House Letter.

From Our Special Correspondent.

The negroes object to the Legislature seeing "The Birth of a Nation" as guests of the proprietors, before acting on the bill to prevent its production. They say that the Legislature will naturally be biased by gratitude for the free show, and that therefore the free show would amount to bribery.

The House has voted to appropriate $15,000 for an investigation of telephone rates by the public service commission. The House has also passed the bill to establish four model forms of city charter and to permit any city to adopt any of these forms at will without recourse to the Legislature for special legislation. The present system is for a city to petition the Legislature for special legislation, every time it wishes the least change in its charter.

A wholesome change has just been made in legislative procedure, by the adoption of a rule that discharged city employes must first resort to the courts before applying to the Legislature for reinstatement. This new rule will cut off the host of bills which every year invades Beacon Hill and which call for the use of the most pernicious kind of political influence.

The Legislature did see "The Birth of a Nation" after all, and appeared to enjoy it.

The Governor has called for still another investigation, this time of the sliding scale gas rates. It is a great year for investigations on Beacon Hill. The agreement by President Coolidge of the Senate and Speaker Cox of the House to suppress all legislation that they can has apparently resulted in forcing government activities into other channels.

The conversion of Senator W. lis, who up to a few days ago was a firm believer that a receivership was the only safe way out of the Boston & Maine muddle, makes things look a little easier for the trustees' bill.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 14, 1915
1709

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Popular feeling in the South and the North is tense over the slavery question. In the North, Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts, are strong in their convictions as to the wickedness of slavery. Lydia Brown, the mulatto housekeeper of Stoneman, seeks to aid her race through his influence.

Ted and Phil Stoneman, his sons, are friends of the Cameron family of Piedmont, which includes Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, their daughters Margaret and Flora, and their sons Ben and Duke. The young men naturally are opposed when war is declared.

Ted Stoneman falls dead at Gettysburg after killing Duke Cameron. Phil Stoneman saves Ben Cameron and takes him to a hospital just before Lee's surrender but charges of guerilla outrages are made against Cameron. His mother pleads for his life and President Lincoln intercedes for him. In the hospital Ben Cameron meets Elsie Stoneman for the first time. Ben returns home to find his family and village in poverty.

Lincoln and Stoneman disagree as to policies, Stoneman maintaining that Lincoln and southern whites are traitors, and should receive no consideration. Lincoln is assassinated by J. Wilkes Booth. Johnson, however, decides to follow out Lincoln's reconstruction plans, much to Stoneman's disapproval.

While Stoneman and Senator Sumner discuss their own plan for reconstruction Lydia Brown sends a negro into the room. He is snubbed by Sumner.

By Gertrude Stevenson.

Part XI. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part X. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

Never was sadder or completer ruin than the Cameron home—in Piedmont—than the entire South. Like Dr. Cameron, the planters were all reduced from affluence to poverty; the merchants were scattered to the four winds of heaven; the shopkeepers had closed their doors.

Everything of value the Camerons had owned, with the exception of a few precious gold pieces buried in the cellar, had gone into Confederate securities. Practically everything to eat and to wear had been consumed.

For months, in order to save the few dollars left the family had subsisted on corn bread when they could get it, and had even resorted to coarse cattle fodder known as "cow-peas." Men like Dr. Cameron, who had enjoyed an income of $100,000 a year before the war, were stripped of their last cent at its close. Like the rich, the poorer people were also pauperized. Though they had had but little, yet their little was their all, and they had lost it.

THIN BOARDS REPLACE GLASS

All over the Cameron house window glass had given way to thin boards, the furniture was marred and broken, and none had been replaced in four years. The dishes had been repaired in various styles and half the pitchers had tin handles. Tea, coffee, sugar or spices had been unknown during the last two years of the war. Candles had been replaced by cups of grease, into which pieces of cloth had been plunged for wicks. The real problem of this home, as of the entire South, was not only how to reconstruct their lives, but how to live at all.

Dr. Cameron, 68 years old, stooped down with the despondency of gloom, seemed incapable of grasping the situation or knowing what to do. Ben, too, could scarcely conceive a way of earning a livelihood in the ruin which confronted them.

On the day that the news of negro freedom had reached him, Dr. Cameron had walked down to the fields where the remnants of his slaves were still at work. He told them what had happened and explained to them that they were free. He asked them to continue to work the crop as they had been doing, promising them compensation for their labor at the end of the year.

At first there was no apparent change among the darkies. They worked in the fields as usual. In the house they went about their customary duties. They were quiet, serious and seemingly unimpressed.

Believing that the negro occupied a middle ground somewhere between the human race and the animal, Dr. Cameron could not help but regard it as a real misfortune to them that they should be stripped of a protector. He considered Lincoln's proclamation at best mistaken and a rash urge to society. Like many others he experienced certain vague and terrible fears of a servile insurrection, but his predominating feeling toward them was one of genuine commiseration, something the same emotion he might have felt for a suffering animal for which he had formed an attachment.

After a time he was conscious of a change, atmosphere in the darky quarters.

The ex-slaves were becoming restless, shiftless and suspicious of any restraint. Accustomed to having an owner or an overseer do their thinking for them, they were quick to exercise that prerogative wasn't when it was thrust upon them. In their perfect ignorance, they mistook liberty to mean license, complete unrestraint, the privilege of working when and how and as they pleased, regardless of contracts or moral obligation.

The realization of their freedom was slow to dawn, but when it did it swept them off their feet. They were like children suddenly released from guiding hands, running riot with a responsibility conferred upon them before they were ready to understand or meet it.

Acres of Cotton Wasted

With the cotton in perfect condition and the prospect of as fine and heavy a yield as even the oldest inhabitant had ever seen, the darkies, gay, thoughtless, sauntered away from the fields, thwarting through ignorance and idleness the one chance the Camerons had of restoring even a vestige of their lost fortune. Acres of the finest cotton that ever grew dropped out of the bolls and was wasted for the want of hands to save it.

In a despairing effort to save the crop, Dr. Cameron attempted to make contracts with a few that remained, but they proved unfaithful and deserted at the first opportunity. Although penniless, they refused to work for anything but wages, and wages neither Dr. Cameron nor the other impoverished planters were able to pay.

The negroes scoffed at the offer of their share of the proceeds and idled in the streets, spent their time attending funerals, which were more and more numerous on account of the scarcity of food among them, and holding religious meetings. They were free from the old plantation, but they had nothing but the dusty road under their feet. They were free from their old cabins, but slaves to the rains of summer and the frosts of winter. They soon found to their sorrow that negroes, no more than white men, could live without work or be comfortable without homes.

Uncle Jerry's Devotion

The children's old Mammy and Uncle Jerry alone refused to leave their master. They had lived through the family's affluence. They were determined to help bear its burden of poverty.

Touched by old Jerry's devotion, Dr. Cameron had said to him one morning: "Jerry, you're free. Why don't you follow the crowd?"

"Massa," and the old negro grinned, "I'd like to see any ob dem Yankees make me any freer den I is."

"Don't call me master," Dr. Cameron replied, trying to make a stern exterior conceal his true emotions. "I'm not your master any more."

"Yas, massa," Jerry agreed. "Yes, massa, I s'pose so."

One night, a little later, Mrs. Cameron came upon old Mammy Cindy weaving at her loom long after bed time, using corncobs for the spindles which were no longer procurable.

"Why do you work late, Mammy?" she inquired.

Cindy stopped long enough to reply. "Cindy's got no massa to look after her in her ole age now—she's got to look out for her own rainy day herself."

Repast Is Frugal

It was evening in the Cameron home. Reluctantly the family gathered around the supper table, for the repast was far from enticing. The great table which had once groaned with its burden of good things tonight offered little but parched corn and sweet potato coffee.

"What are we to do?" Dr. Cameron groaned rather than questioned, as he turned, appetiteless, from the unsavory food.

It was the appeal for which Mrs. Cameron had long been listening. Knowing her husband's proud spirit she had hesitated to unfold the plan which had been in her mind for sometime. Now she felt the time was ripe for him to consider and submit to her scheme for providing for the family. Already the town swarmed with Northerners, treasury agents and pseudo treasury agents, despised carpet-baggers and adventurers of every description. The idea had come to her one night as she prayed for guidance and help in the family extremity.

"I'd like to take boarders," she announced, while the family, with the exception of Margaret, looked at her in startled surprise.

"Boarders!" repeated Dr. Cameron.

"Boarders!" echoed Ben.

"Yes. Why not?" Mrs. Cameron answered cheerfully and proceeded to outline her plan. "Mammy can cook all the meats and vegetables, Margaret can turn her hand to the pastry and help wait on the table and I can help in both dining room and kitchen."

"There doesn't seem to be anything else, and I'd just love to help," seconded Margaret, her beauty more striking and intense in these days of sobered, saddened countenances.

Moment of Humiliation

Dr. Cameron looked at his eldest son. Ben gazed back at him. It was a bitter moment of humiliation for these high-spirited Southern gentlemen, kind and practical as the women of the family had meant to be.

Ben was the first to drop his eyes, gazing as if fascinated at his soldier's suit of gray which he still wore for lack of other clothes, as he fingered the places where the buttons once were—buttons roughly and ignominiously torn off that gray coat when on his way home from the hospital, weary, weak and travel-stained, he had been set upon by negro soldiers, to whom those Confederate buttons constituted an affront.

Dr. Cameron was the first to find his voice.

"Gen. Sherman said he would like to bring every Southern woman to the washtub and, by heaven, this looks as if he's going to have his way," he declared, sinking into an attitude of abject depression.

Mrs. Cameron laughed—the cheery laugh that had brightened many a desperate hour.

"Come, Richard, it won't be quite as bad as that. Mammy—bless her old black soul—still insists on doing the washing in spite of Gen. Sherman or Gen. Anybody Else."

Both men remained silent, but the proud, resourceful woman felt that she had won the day.

In the morning she set Uncle Jerry at work digging up the buried treasure, determined to invest it all, if necessary, in an undertaking she hoped would afford ample and speedy returns.

(To be continued tomorrow.)

BEN CAMERON IN CHERISHED SUIT OF GRAY

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 14, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION at Tremont Theatre.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first-class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two-dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters' hours' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith élan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performance given at 2:10 P. M. are exactly the same as those at night. Besides affording the advantage of cheaper prices, they give opportunity to out-of town people to include a visit to the Tremont Theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
MAY 14, 1915

MAY PRESENT "BIRTH OF A NATION" HERE

Hector R. Tremblay has a chance to book "The Birth of a Nation," for presentation at the Colonial. This is the film that created a furore in Boston where, upon suggestion of Mayor Curley, certain especially objectionable features like the pursuit of a white girl by a negro were eliminated. Mr. Tremblay is to confer with Mayor Faulkner for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is any pronounced objection to the showing of the reels here. Owing to the great publicity given the pictures in Boston, they proved to be among the most profitable ever shown in that city.

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 14, 1915

AFFIRMATIVE WINS.

"The Birth of a Nation," Subject of Debate.

Resolved, that the photoplay, "The birth of a nation," should be suppressed, was the question under debate last night at the meeting of the Adams debating society of the Night high schools, in room 12 of the city hall.

The debate was spirited, but the affirmative was given the decision, the speakers on that team being William Young, Cornelius F. Mahoney and Joseph P. Sullivan. The negative team was Walter Crowe, Edward H. Stonequist and John E. Ratigan.

In the preliminary program there was a reading by Cornelius Bresnihan, and an oration on current events by Arthur B. Morrison.

The society voted to have a whist party at 566 Main street on the night of May 28.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 14, 1915
1709

By E. F. Harkins

This is certainly the heyday of the film play in Boston, and probably this city is no exception to the rule.

In the case of "The Birth of a Nation," which everyone from Providence to Calais must know is at the Tremont, the Boston attendance leads even that reported in New York, and this is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that in New York there is an extra Sunday night performance to swell the returns. Only the more popular musical comedies have enjoyed larger receipts in Boston this season than this extraordinary Griffith photoplay.

SOMERVILLE (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 14, 1915
8

Tremont Theatre—A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first class theatrical attraction, crowding the house. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week. "The Birth of a Nation" is now in its etaoin etaoinetaoin Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters hours' performance. Mr. Griffiths photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South.

CLIPPING FROM
Boston Traveler
14 May 15

BOSTON THEATRE

A revolution in motion pictures is being offered at the famous Boston Theatre. This is nothing more or less than the most stupendous array of feature pictures and comedies ever offered on one bill, presented in a continuous performance from ten a. m. to ten-thirty p. m. for the admission scale of 15 and 25 cents. It is the intention of the management to convert the Boston Theatre into a gigantic picture palace, presenting the biggest and longest show for the money ever offered.

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 15, 1915

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Rev. Lyman V. Rutledge, of Harvard Street Unitarian Church, Says Photo-Play Deals in Tremendously Powerful Way With Most Sacred National Experiences

"The Birth of a Nation, First Impressions," was the subject of a sermon, Sunday, at the Harvard Street Unitarian church, by the pastor, Rev. Lyman V. Rutledge. It was the first in a series of three sermons on the photo-play, about which there has been so much discussion. Next Sunday Rev. Mr. Rutledge will speak on "Historical Accuracy," and the following Sunday on "Final Conclusions."

REV. L. V. RUTLEDGE

Rev. Mr. Rutledge, who witnessed the presentation, said in part: "It is a matter of supreme importance that the children of this nation, now and in all the years to come, shall have a good understanding of those issues of the Civil war and a correct attitude toward them. Volumes and volumes of written accounts cannot give the vivid and permanent impression that burns itself into the mind of one who sees the whole picture in motion.

Two things make the film, 'The Birth of a Nation,' of great importance to our national life. First, it is dealing with our most sacred national experiences; second, it is dealing with them in a tremendously powerful way. It is no passing show. What are my most vivid impressions? The film presents the horrors of war. Next in vividness is the glory of the Ku Klux Klan. There is no possibility of ever effacing the vivid memory of those night riders, and their memory is to be forever associated with a thrill of joy. They stand here for that divine spirit which is above law, which in defiance of inadequate law rises to defend its honor in the face of tyranny. America has always stood for that kind of authority.

In contrast to these heroes of the white sheet are the despicable carpet baggers. A sullen white tyrant appears who is determined to crush the white south under the heel of the black south. But he is overcome, caught in his own trap. The Ku Klux Klan came riding out of the dusk and the sunny south was saved.

Over the whole panorama is thrown the mystic light of 'The Poet's Dream,' that out of the conflicting interests and character of thirteen American states there could be built one mighty people. In the mortal agony of four years of civil war and eight years of more horrible reconstruction a nation was born.

These are the major impressions after seeing the film. There are numerous minor impressions which can be brought to mind, but which do not voluntarily intrude themselves. For me, I cannot speak for anyone else; it is better than I had expected, much better. If it is true then I must pronounce it a most valuable contribution, and should urge that it be preserved and that our histories be rewritten, our school histories I mean, so that our children may get a correct impression of what the south had to suffer in the reconstruction period.

If it is true, I am half ashamed to be a northerner anyway. The north was a terrible bloodthirsty pack of guerillas, a vast army of renegades marching to the sea, a villainous procession of carpet baggers depriving the southern white of his rights and practicing the grossest forms of tyranny. To be a northerner is to be one of those 75,000 volunteers called out by Lincoln to begin this bloody massacre. I am truly not so proud of being a northerner as I was before I saw this film. That is my deepest impression.

Then I remember that something is lacking. History as represented in this film is incomplete. The north did not begin the fight after all. Fort Sumpter was fired upon before there was a call for volunteers. A little incident, to be sure, but if it had appeared on this film it would have given a different color to the light which formed the halo over the Ku Klux Klan.

After all, if this film is historically accurate, I am glad to be set right on these things. I must, however, get out the history and see how this thing ... historian's page. If I ... it."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 15, 1915

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS

Popular feeling in the South and the North is tense over the slavery agitation. In the North, Austin Stoneman, radical leader of the House, with Charles Sumner, senator from Massachusetts, are strong in their convictions of the wickedness of slavery. Lydia Brown, the mulatto housekeeper of Stoneman, seeks to aid her race through his influence.

Ted and Phil Stoneman, his sons, are friends of the Cameron family of the Piedmont, which includes Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, their daughters Margaret and Flora and their sons Ben and Duke. The young men naturally are opposed when war is declared.

Ted Stoneman falls dead at Gettysburg after killing Duke Cameron. Phil Stoneman saves Ben Cameron and takes him to a hospital just before Lee's surrender but charges of guerilla warfare are made against Cameron. His mother pleads for his life and President Lincoln intercedes for him. In the hospital Ben Cameron meets Elsie Stoneman for the first time. Ben returns home to find his family and village in poverty.

Lincoln and Stoneman disagree as to policies, Stoneman maintaining that Southern whites are traitors and should receive no consideration. Lincoln is assassinated by J. Wilkes Booth. Johnson, however, decides to follow out Lincoln's reconstruction plans, much to Stoneman's disapproval.

While Stoneman and Senator Sumner discuss their own plan for reconstruction Lydia Brown sends a negro into the room. He is snubbed by Sumner.

Dr. Cameron's slaves having left him when their emancipation was effected by President Lincoln's proclamation, the Cameron's are reduced to poverty. Mrs. Cameron unfolds a plan to the family for taking in boarders. After much opposition Mrs. Cameron wins her way in the matter and sends Uncle Jerry, a slave who has never left the Camerons, to dig up some buried treasure left.

By Gertrude Stevenson

Part XII. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part XI. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

With the devastated, plundered and pillaged South wearing its crown of thorns and mantle of poverty as proudly as possible, President Johnson and Congress hopelessly at odds on reconstruction policies, Stoneman's mulatto protege, Silas Lynch, hastened Southward to do his master's bidding, to aid the carpetbaggers, as the Northern newcomers were called, in organizing and wielding the power of the negro vote.

With the sympathetic pulsing of the "Great Heart" stilled in death, the South was once more in the hands of its enemies—political warfare, more bitter and more degrading than the four years of civil war had ever been. At the moment of surrender the South had courageously believed that honor, at least, had been saved from the ruin. Now even honor hung in the balance and was destined to suffer terrible onslaughts.

TOLD TO KEEP SOUTHERNERS DOWN

As Stoneman said good-by to Lynch on his way to establish headquarters at Piedmont, he slapped the giant mulatto on the shoulders and declared:

"The only way to make those arrogant Southerners know where they belong is to keep them down. They'll have more respect for a man who goes there and shows decision than they will for one who wavers. Pin them down to the point of the bayonet so close they won't have room to wiggle and allow intelligent colored men to go up and vote in preference to them. The only Union element will be the colored people. Remember, the Southerners are deceitful. I've often thought that there is so much deception down there since the Rebellion that if an earthquake should open and swallow them up, I'd be afraid the devil would be dethroned and some of them take his place.

"But don't do anything bloody. There are punishments quite as appalling and longer remembered than death. Strip that proud nobility of its bloated estates, reduce them to a level with common folks, send them out to work with their own hands and make their children enter the workshops or handle the plows and you'll humble those proud traitors more effectively than if you killed them. Make them respect labor and eschew treason. Remember! Conspirators are bred among the idle and vain—among the elegant aristocrats. I trust you to see that my plans are fully executed and with the greatest despatch."

Lynch Arrives in State

Filled with such logic from the man he rated little less than a god, Lynch drove in state from the Piedmont railroad station to the best quarters the place afforded. Profligate with his patron's money, he proceeded to establish himself in a spacious three-story double mansion which he appropriated as abandoned property. It was in the most aristocratic section of Piedmont, but a short distance from the Cameron home. He at once filled it with credulous negroes as servants, henchmen and supernumeraries, and proceeded to forward Stoneman's campaign. Armed with credentials which gave him access to all the government officials already installed by Stoneman and his loyal Congress, to the Union army officers and to the treasury agents busily engaged in mulcting the ruined planters of every bale of cotton to be found, Lynch was at once a leader and a power.

The ex-slaves flocked about him like flies around honey, finding in him a proof of their ultimate hope of rising to power in the community where they had so long been only of the low.

Lynch first took advantage of the resources of the Freedman's Bureau, authorized by Congress to protect the negroes, to aid them in want, to secure work for them and to act as an official friend in any difficulty the negro might find himself—an arrangement described by Sumner as a bridge from slavery to freedom, and one which had deteriorated into scandalous abuse.

Urging the negroes not to work, and showering upon them food and clothes from the Freedman's Bureau, thus deluding the ignorant by misusing the charity the North had attempted to provide, Lynch made himself instantly popular with every negro, not only in Piedmont, but in all the country places for miles about.

Makes Negroes Pliant Tools

By eloquent exhortations and frequent speeches he made them believe that unless they banded together and stood up for their rights, the white people would put them back into slavery. The negroes became his pupils, his wards, his servitors and his pliant tools, furthering the schemes of the political and extremely partisan leader whose representative Lynch was and whose vaunted ambition was to crush the neck of the white South under the black heel.

Lynch played upon the weaknesses and impulses of the negroes which he himself knew so well, drawing from them shouts of joy and responses of applause and approval as easily and skilfully as a master organist brings out the great swells of music by the gentle touch of the keys. Sympathetically he would depict to the eagerly listening audiences the horrors of slavery and the cruelty and oppression they had undergone, resorting to every device to embitter the black men against their former masters.

What incendiary harangues failed to accomplish he was able, with the prestige of being Stoneman's right-hand man, to effect by exhibition of the Northern newcomers' power over the resident whites, which was displayed in frequent acts of the grossest tyranny, by setting at defiance the orders and decrees of the courts and the municipal authorities. The legitimate fruit was soon in evidence. Feelings of the bitterest hostility were awakened in the breasts of the white persons who were the victims of such injustice and insult.

Resort to Orgies

The negroes, on the other hand, resorted to orgies of license and brutal behavior which was but the natural outburst of a race so long held in bondage and subjection and now so quickly and unscrupulously thrust into power.

As a crowning effort to consolidate the credulous, ignorant blacks into a solid voting power Lynch let it be known that all the abandoned and confiscated lands were to be cut up into 40-acre lots and distributed to every deserving negro the following January. For good measure he promised to throw in a stout mule.

With every material want satisfied and the prospect of becoming landed gentlemen in the near future held out before their eager, greedy eyes, the negroes proceeded to do less work than ever and labor conditions were finally completely demoralized.

Ever since peace had been declared, numerous regiments of negro troops under the command of white officers had been stationed in and about Piedmont. Silas Lynch at once accorded these soldiers every license, impressed upon them their own importance and urged them to annoy, irritate and insult the white people on any and every occasion. Each succeeding day saw the Southern patience more sorely tried. The breaking point seemed not far away.

Dr. Cameron, mortified, pained and shocked at the course events were taking, was constantly encountering these armed and uniformed negroes, among whom he recognized many of his own former slaves, arrogant and valorious with their bright muskets and gleaming bayonets.

Camerons Are Jostled

Acting under Lynch's direction, these dusky guardians of law and order never lost an opportunity to jostle the Camerons, father and son, from the sidewalks as they walked four abreast along the main streets. Again and again the Camerons were halted in rude and sullen tones by negro sentinels, in strong contrast to the kind and fraternal hail of the old Confederate sentinels in their treadbare gray or dilapidated homespun.

Mrs. Cameron, Margaret and Flora, along with all the other women of Piedmont, no longer walked outside their own grounds. Ben's heart sickened as he saw his mother and sisters practically prisoners in their own home. White troops he could have tolerated as a suitable if unnecessary patrol, but the sight of his own slaves, freed, armed and put on guard over him was too galling a yoke for the Confederate soldier to bear.

Again and again he found one of his ex-slaves, Gus, skulking around the gate, peering in the windows and lounging about the sidewalk before the Cameron home. Again and again he had ordered the young negro away, realizing that in him Lynch had effected a terrible and complete demoralization. Gus had been advanced to captain in his company and was as proud of his uniform and official epaulets as a child with a new dress. He not only thought himself Ben's equal but actually his superior in that he wore the victorious Union blue, while Ben could only boast the conquered Confederate gray.

Mrs. Cameron Frightened

Mrs. Cameron, watching Ben and the young negro from a front window, was frightened and wretched as she had never been, even through all the grey sacrificing years of the war. She was in hourly apprehension of Ben's bitter temper bringing him to end with the renegade negro, since on more than one last soldier who had served in Ben's regiment had just recently been cursed and bayonetted to death in a street altercation with negro soldiers.

Another pair of eyes was watching the cologue, also. Miss Flora, from his pretentious headquarters on the other side of the street, had been attracted by the loud tones of angry voices. He had witnessed Ben's haughty demeanor and had heard his every word from the sidewalk.

In a flash he started to the defense of his colored brother, inspired by a twofold purpose of humiliating the high-spirited young Cameron and of befriending Gus in his rights. His eyes sparkled and his elastic mouth worked, he listened to Ben's side.

"This sidewalk belongs to us as much as it does to you, Col. Cameron," he declared, with a contemptuous curl of his mouth as he voiced Ben's title. "You seem to forget that the time has passed when a Cameron could browbeat a respectable young colored man. Hereafter I don't want you to interfere with Gus in any way."

Gus struck out his chest at his champion defended him.

"This is still the Camerons'," Ben answered quietly, "and while it is I shall not allow any insolent nigger to prowl around here. I shall see that he and every other idle, thieving nigger is kept away from you."

"You will, eh?" said the young mulatto, stuck out a dominant chin and curled a scornful upper lip. "You better put in your horse, Cameron. In here's authority in this town to arrest anybody in this town to arrest anything. What's more, you better not try."

Ben looked unspeakable things with his dark eyes, but, convinced of the sheer futility of argument, turned on his heel and walked into the house, where, from a window, he assembled family could hear the mulatto urging his colored henchman to a struggle and do anything he pleased regardless of anything "the poor white trash" might say.

Lynch was following Stoneman's orders to the letter. The upheaval was being sown. The grim reaping belonged to a future date.

(To be Continued Today)

FLORA CAMERON, IDOL OF FAMILY

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 15, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" draws ... at the Tremont Theatre, because of ... beauty and interest of the spectacle. The Civil War and the period of Reconstruction are pictured vividly and on a scale of great magnitude, and a powerful story — the sentimental one of a Northern soldier and a Southern girl — set against this historical background. Music written for the films accompanies the performance. There are daily matinees and ... performances.

HAVERHILL (Mass.) GAZETTE
MAY 15, 1915

State House happenings in brief today:

Senate — "Birth of a Nation" ... to a third reading, ... amendment, providing ... censorship of ... stop play, ... Fitchburg ... plan, ... street railway ... tried recently on a ... Ellis ... Tuesday.

WORCESTER (Mass.) GAZETTE
MAY 15, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation, Should it be Suppressed?" is the topic to be discussed by Rev. Nathan H. Gist at the evening meeting of the Congregational church society tomorrow. "Is there Economic Gain in War?" will be discussed by the Good Citizen class. Samuel Healy will be leader.

PING FROM NEW YORK PRESS

MAY 15 1915

H OF A NATION" EPISODE STARTS RUMPUS.

have been rumblings for some time by who were strong for a motion picture ip law in Massachusetts. A fair portion umerous would-be reformers are actuated tionably honest motives, prompted by the nan inclination to mind somebody else's On the other hand, it is claimed by s of the measure that a goodly portion of ment for censorship emanantes from cer- tical factions who are always on the alert reation of official p sitions with attendant ings and patronag btedly the action some three thousand tizens who objec strenuously to certain n D. W. Griff "Birth of a Nation," esented recently in Boston, gave impetus nsorship movement. Prior to the "Birth ation" episode, "Hypocrites," the Bosworth featuring the "naked truth" in rather fashion, started a mild rumpus in its way. Governor of the State ordered certain ons, which were complied with by the pro- f the picture, but somehow the pro-censor- wd set the ball arolling with the Carstens as a concrete result of continued agita- ed principally, it is said, on the wave of sentiment aroused by "The Birth of a affair.

OSTON TRAVELER
MAY 15, 1915

th of a Nation"—Tremont

e Birth of a Nation" at the Tre- eatre has now been seen by 10,000 Bostonians and residents vicinity. The play entered on its week with the matinee this after- in many respects, this is develop- to the most extraordinary run in story of Boston theatricals. At the loudly voiced opposition to the seemed so great that many persons ht the spectacle would be driven f the city. As more people saw it the leading authorities viewed it manifest that most of the objec- were the product of imagination the others were all removable by changes and eliminations in the Now the popularity of the civil and reconstruction story is such it bids fair to play the Tremont re right up to the real hot weather n.

TON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 15, 1915

IRTH OF A NATION" ENTERS SIXTH WEEK

he Birth of a Nation" at the Tre- nt Theatre has now been seen by 10,000 Bostonians and residents the vicinity. The play enters on its h week with the matinee this after- n. In many respects this is develop- into the most extraordinary run in history of Boston theatricals. At the loudly voiced opposition to the y seemed so great that many persons ught the spectacle would be driven t of the city. Now the popularity of Civil War and reconstruction story such that it bids fair to "play" the emont Theatre right up to the real weather season.

The spectacular features of the big ttle and Ku-Klux scenes, the spirited ting of the large cast, the elaborate cidental music interpreted by Di- ctor Arundel's orchestra and the ex- ordinary photography wherein D. W. riffith and G. W. Bitzer proved them- ives the masters par excellence of this w form of art have provided rare en- rtainment.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 15, 1915

THE CENSORSHIP BILL ought to e killed and forgotten. This quite part from all discussion of the merits r objectionable nature, according to our point of view, of the "Birth of a Nation." That subject has been ated and advertised about all it will und from any point of view. But to uild a piece of general legislation on specific case such as this is pre- arious business. The Legislature has had hysterics and recovered so many times since this agitation was begun that the average man on the street could not tell you in ten guesses where the members of that body now stand, what they intend to do or why they are go- ing to do it or not to do it. And we be- lieve the minds of the legislators are more or less splotched with perplexity. Why not drop it and come back to the common sense conclusion that a rigor- ous censorship is more likely to cause mischief than do good? We believe an objectionable performance can be stopped now, under the present law, if properly directed and enforced. We believe that such a censorship bill as is proposed will work badly, will pro- voke and promote prejudice and trouble, and tend to excite just those things which the critics of the "Birth of a Na- tion" have wanted to allay.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 15, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magni- tude and scope. The earlier reels un- roll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to tur- bulent episode. Finally comes an apothe- osis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spec- tacle.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 15, 1915

House caused some debate. Mr Bean spoke for having a decision by a majority of the board of censors, instead of by a unanimous vote. Mr Sullivan of Boston wanted the mayor to pass upon the pictures, with an appeal to the appellate court. He wanted the property rights in moving pictures given more protection than the judgment of one, two or three persons. He argued that pictures that are lewd are therefore immoral, and would come under the present law. The bill would apply to the pictures of "The Birth of the Nation" and bring them under condemnation. He commended the colored people for their orderly conduct in spite of the provocation given in this play. But those with large investments in such property are entitled to full protection.

Mr Norwood of Essex supported the House bill, which came from his judiciary committee. Messrs Bazeley of Worcester and Ellis of Middlesex favored the amendment of Mr Bean, as a unanimous decision being required would give too much power to one man. Mr Cavanagh of Middlesex feared any amendment in the Senate, calling for concurrence by the House, might result in killing the bill, but favored the Bean amendment, understanding that the theater people are satisfied with it. The amendment of Mr Bean was then rejected, 11 to 14. The Sullivan substitute bill was than rejected by a nearly unanimous vote, and the House will was ordered to a third reading without a count.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 15, 1915

CENSORS' BILL IS ADVANCED

Senate Refers Change in Fish and Game Commission to Next Legislature.

The bill to vest complete powers of play censorship in Boston with the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court and requiring that their decision must be unanimous was advanced to a third reading in the Senate yesterday.

By a standing vote of 15 to 11, the Senate rejected an amendment to provide that a majority vote of the three proposed censors should be sufficient for a decision and by a voice vote killed a substitute bill offered by Senator Sullivan of South Boston.

Senator Bean of Cambridge, who moved the amendment for a majority decision, gave notice after its rejection that he will move its adoption again when the bill comes up in the Senate Monday on the question of passing it to be engrossed. The House killed a similar amendment when the bill was before that body.

Senator Norwood of Hamilton, Senate chairman of the committee on judiciary, opposed both amendments, and said that the bill as reported by the committee was a fair compromise measure.

Senators Bazeley of Uxbridge, Ellis of Newton, and Cavanagh of Everett supported the Bean amendment, but opposed the Sullivan bill on the ground that the latter would give too much power to the mayor, and even then would not provide a remedy for situations like that caused by "The Birth of a Nation."

Record. Boston Mass
MAY 15, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre has now been seen by nearly 10,000 Bostonians and residents of the vicinity. The play enters on its sixth week with the matinee this afternoon. In many respects, this is developing into the most extraordinary run in the history of Boston theatricals.

At first the loudly voiced opposition to the play seemed so great that many persons thought the spectacle would be driven out of the city. Now the popularity of the Civil War and Reconstruction story is such that it bids fair to play the Tremont Theatre right up to the real hot weather season.

The spectacular features of the big battle and Ku Klux scenes, the spirited acting of the large cast, the elaborate incidental music interpreted by Director Arundel's orchestra, and the really extraordinary photography wherein D. W. Griffith and G. W. Bitzer proved themselves the masters par excellence of this new form of art, have provided an entertainment which for merit and universality is unequalled here. The crowds still continue to pack the Tremont Theatre every afternoon and evening.

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
MAY 15, 1915

OBJECT TO HAVING FILMS SHOWN HERE

The possibility of the presentation of the moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial theatre has already given rise to considerable opposition and members of the colored race in this city as well as others, will take the matter up with representatives of the theatre and point out to them the inadvisability as they see it of presenting such pictures here.

It was said today that men interested financially in the Pittsfield Theatre company, which controls the Colonial theatre, would also oppose the presenting of the pictures there.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER
MAY 15 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old-fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters' hours performance. Mr Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective.

into the secret. How this is accomplished, while absurd as the idea of the creation of life in a mannikin is, is better not related, as it would detract from the enjoyment of the farce by future patrons; and the finale is the most absurd of all, and the most original.

Courier-Belmont Mass
May 15, 1915.

J. O. FAGAN ARGUES AGAINST "BIRTH OF A NATION."

Mr. James O. Fagan of Cutter street, upheld the negative in a debate on the question "Resolved, that the play 'The Birth of a Nation'" is an educational benefit to Boston," at the Maverick Church, East Boston, last week.

Dr. Fleisher spoke for the affirmative.

Mr. Fagan contended that it was the purpose of the play to awaken antipathy toward the colored people, that it was a part of a movement of the enemies of this race not only to deprive it of the rights of citizenship but to segregate and transport it to its former African home or some other feasible place. He showed wherein the play is false to history and that it misrepresented facts such as showing the colored people perfectly happy and contented in slavery and none of the dark and cruel features of slavery; that it showed the ruthless destruction of the Northern soldiers but none of the desolation that followed the entrance of the Confederate soldiers into the Northern states.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 15, 1915

HE BIRTH OF A NATION at Tremont Theatre.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first-class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two-dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters' hours performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performance given at 2:10 P. M. are exactly the same as those at night. Besides affording the advantage of cheaper prices, they give opportunity to out-of town people to include a visit to the Tremont Theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 15, 1915

1707

SENATE ADVANCES BILL FOR 3 "MOVIE" CENSOR

Defeats Amendment Providing That Two May Stop Production.

LEGISLATIVE

After defeating two amendments proposed, the Senate yesterday ordered to a third reading the bill growing out of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation" which provides that the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal Court of Boston shall have power, acting unanimously, to stop any theatrical production at their pleasure.

An amendment offered by Senator Bean of Cambridge, which would give two of the three censors the right to stop any production, was defeated by a rising vote of 11 to 12, and a roll call was refused.

Senator Sullivan of Boston moved a substitute bill which would give the mayor of Boston the power to stop a play, just as similar power is given to each of the other mayors in Massachusetts cities. His motion to substitute was defeated on a voice vote.

Sullivan Would "Go Slow"

Senator Sullivan said he has seen the play and he believed the colored people had a right to protest against it on the ground that it was offensive to them. He said the Senate should go slow in passing legislation, however, and should have an eye to the protection of property. He said the mayor of Boston should have the same power that other mayors have and for that reason he offered his substitute bill.

Senator Bean said the bill reported by the judiciary committee, requiring unanimous action by the board of censors, would nullify the whole intent of the Legislature and for that reason his amendment should be adopted.

Senator Norwood, chairman of the judiciary committee, said h's associates were unwilling to place in the hands of two men the absolute power to stop a production at pleasure.

Senators Bazeley of Uxbridge, Ellis of Newton, and Cavanagh of Everett, favored the Bean amendment.

LOWELL (Mass.) COURT-CITIZEN
MAY 15, 1915

his amendment to the "Birth of a Nation" moving picture bill, that a unanimous vote of the three censors created under the act should not be required, because such a requirement might nullify the purpose of the bill, but that a majority vote should be substituted.

Senator Sullivan of Boston moved his substitute bill that the mayor should be the censor as to the morality or immorality of a show, but that there should be an appeal from his decision to the appellate court of the municipal court of Boston. He said that he had seen the performance that the colored people objected to and he thought that they had a right to protest against it as offensive to them, but he said that there is law enough now on the statute book to remedy this. He felt that in passing any new act that the legislature should go slow in doing anything that would unwarrantably injure the rights of property. He felt that the mayor should be the censor and that the court would be a proper

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 16, 1915

Tremont Theatre

David W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," bids fair to outlast any other attraction in Boston for the spring and summer seasons. The play entered on its sixth week yesterday, with increased popularity, if such were possible after the wonderful record of the first five weeks. The patronage is not only state-wide, but includes many visitors from all over New England, especially from New Hampshire and Maine. The Tremont Theatre is packed twice daily with the enthusiastic crowds, the hours of opening being 2:10 and 8:10 respectively. The Tremont Theatre, with its many entrances and exits, is one of the coolest playhouses in town, but a refrigerating plant is also being installed to keep the theatre at an even temperature of 68 degrees throughout the summer. Business Manager Sheehan, Treasurer Orvitt and Assistant Treasurer William Murphy will keep on the job during the supplementary season so that there will be no change of friendly faces at the box office window.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 16, 1915
170

The other afternoon I enjoyed watching the two girls attired in colonial costume who hand out programmes to the patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, and I was reminded of an episode in "Ben-Hur." It will be recalled that when the Hebrew prince was condemned to the galley he requested that the hortator change him from one side of the ship to the other so that the muscular development of his body might be evenly distributed. These girls hold a bunch of programmes in the left hand and pass them to the patron with the right. It is done with a swinging motion and accompanied by a dainty courtsey.

I observed that the right arm of the taller of the two girls, the one with blond curls, was larger than her left, and the biceps and triceps muscles were quite conspicuous. It was the same with the other and smaller girl, the one with the black tresses. I asked a few guarded questions and learned that about 1100 programmes were given out at each performance, making 2200 for the day, or 1100 for each girl daily. As "The Birth of a Nation" has been running for five weeks, which means 60 presentations, each girl has swung her right arm and crooked her knees 66,000 times. No wonder the muscles have grown.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 16, 1915
1709

Lillian Gish, Who Plays the Role of Elsie in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 16, 1915

Dr W. E. Crockett of Boston has sent "The Birth of a Nation" management at the Tremont Theatre some interesting information regarding the formation of the Ku Klux Klan which is depicted in that spectacle. The doctor as a sergeant in the 4th Maine Regiment captured the first Confederate prisoner of the Civil War, who was Dominick B. Figuet, an Alabamian. He saved Figuet's life from an Ellsworth Zouave who was bent on killing him. Crockett and Figuet became warm friends, and a few years after the war Mr Figuet sent Dr Crockett the complete details of the so-called K. K. K. conspiracy, showing how they were purely local societies and protected the friendless and oppressed in a time of anarchy. The letter, under date of July 8, 1871, is still in good condition. Dr Crockett is a well-known veteran amateur athlete.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 16, 1915

ABOUT THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Its Producers Set Forth Categorically Its Virtues.

An itemized statement has been issued by the sponsors of the film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now running at the Liberty theater, New York, preliminary to a country-wide tour. The points made are the following:—

1. The drama has been shown for four weeks in the metropolis and for nine weeks in Los Angeles, Cal., without the slightest disturbance of any kind. The New York run is expected to continue for many months to absolute capacity at the regular price-scale of first-class theatrical attractions.

2. One hundred and fifty thousand patrons have seen and approved the play. The only opposition has been voiced by members of the national association for the improvement of colored people. Their reason, as admitted, is the effect of the play on those northern states permitting the intermarriage of blacks and whites. "The Birth of a Nation" exhibits the folly of such mongrelization.

3. The play has been officially approved by the national board of censorship, who say: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production." It is likewise approved as clean and morally pure.

4. Unlike its predecessor, "The Clansman," which was severely criticised artistically and otherwise, this play received the greatest verdict of praise ever given to a production in New York city. The critics hailed as "the triumph of a new art" this work by a native southerner, David W. Griffith, who has advanced the motion picture from a toy to the dignity of epic drama.

5. The events of the war between the states and of reconstruction, pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," are matters of authentic history. Every detail has been verified. So confident is Mr Griffith of its accuracy and truth that he has invited a committee of representative editors to come to New York at his own expense and see the play, with the promise that if they find "The Birth of a Nation" objectionable he will withdraw it from the boards.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 16, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"

Pictures at the Tremont

David W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," entered on its sixth week at the Tremont Theatre yesterday with unabated patronage, which is not only State-wide but includes many visitors from the other New England States, especially from New Hampshire and Maine.

The Tremont Theatre, with its many entrances and exits, is one of the coolest playhouses in town, but a refrigerating plant is also being installed to keep the theatre at an even temperature throughout the Summer. Business Manager Sheehan, Treas Orvitt and Asst Treas William Murphy will retain their positions during the supplementary season, so that there will be no change of friendly faces at the box office window. Special arrangements have also been made to retain the same orchestra personnel, and the expert operators whose work has been largely responsible for the wonderful projection of the picture will likewise stay on duty.

The acting of the very large cast, the wonderful spectacular battle and horsemanship scenes, the beautiful instrumental music, the marvelous photography achieved by Mr Griffith and his camera man, G. W. Bitzer, mark the play as the most extraordinary entertainment in the art of spectacular picture drama that has ever been seen in Boston.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 16, 1915

Tremont Theatre

David W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," began its sixth week yesterday in the Tremont [illegible] with increased popularity. The patronage is not only state-wide, but includes many visitors from the other New England states, especially from New Hampshire and Maine. The theatre is packed twice daily with the enthusiastic crowds at 2:10 and 8:10, respectively. The superlative acting of the very large cast, the wonderful spectacular battle and horsemanship scenes, the instrumental music, the marvellous photography achieved by Mr. Griffith and his camera man, G. W. Bitzer, mark the show as the most extraordinary entertainment in the new art of spectacular [illegible] seen here.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 16, 1915

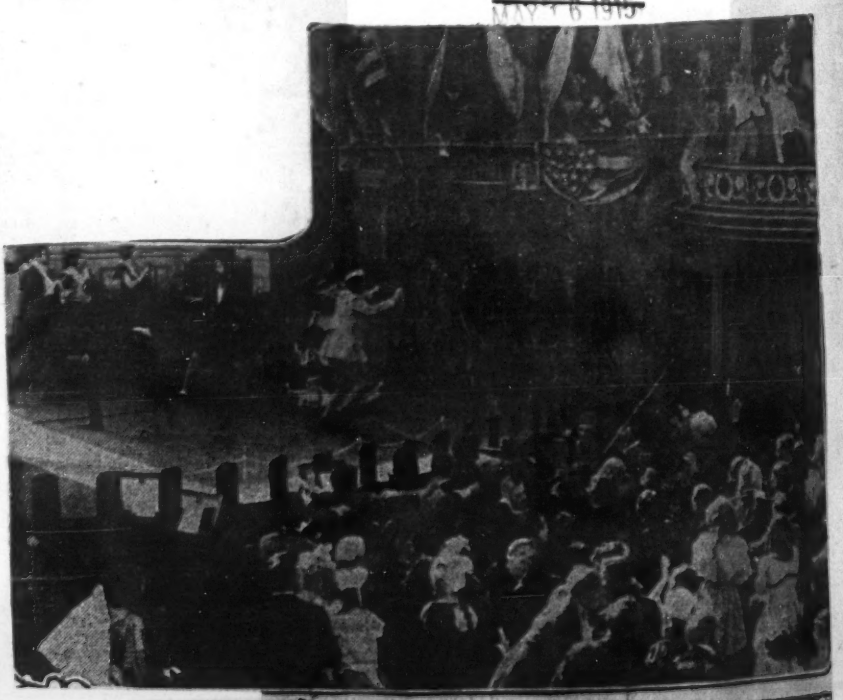
Unusual success.

Tremont Theatre.

David W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," holds fair to outlast any other attraction in Boston for the spring and Summer seasons. The play entered on its sixth week yesterday with increased popularity, if such were possible, after the wonderful record of the first five weeks. The patronage is not only Statewide, but includes many visitors from the other New England States, especially from New Hampshire and Maine. The Tremont Theatre is packed twice daily with the enthusiastic crowds.

The superlative acting of the large cast, the wonderfully spectacular battle and horsemanship scenes, the beautiful instrumental music, the marvellous photography achieved by Mr. Griffith and his camera man, G. W. Bitzer, mark the show as a most extraordinary entertainment in the new art of spectacular [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 16 1915



SCENE SHOWING THE ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE TREMONT

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 17, 1915

ASKS FOR SQUARE DEAL.

Harry Elliot at Forum Says Record of Negro Shows Race Deserves It.

The forum organized by Rev. William B. Perry, Bethel church, conducted its first meeting at the church yesterday afternoon.

"The negro is not understood by the people among whom he lives," declared Harry Elliot. "He asks but for equal opportunity with the whites in the trades and the schools, and his past record shows he deserves it.

"The photoplay, 'The birth of a nation,' is a libel and a slander to the colored race, and it should be immediately suppressed. It was written to prejudice the minds of the people of the North against the negro, and it places the negro in a false light.

"The discrimination against the negro reacts upon the whites in the South—and in Worcester."

He pleaded for better social and home conditions among the negro saying that much of the dislike for him is caused by careless conduct, rather than immoral conduct.

Officers chosen were: President, R. E. Potter; first vice president, Walter Scott; second vice president, L. Stovall; third vice president, A. F. Gunn; fourth vice president, E. E. Rickard; recording secretary, R. J. Griffin; treasurer, P. Greenleaf. Rev. William B. Perry was appointed advisor, and will select his own committee, to consist of 12 men and 12 women.

At the next meeting a constitution will be presented. The officers and the advisory board comprise the executive committee. Public meetings will be conducted once a month.

WORCESTER (Mass.) POST
MAY 17, 1915
99

OFFICERS ARE ELECTED BY BETHEL CHURCH FORUM

"The Forum," organized by the Rev. William B. Perry, [illegible] of Bethel Church, yesterday [illegible] had its first meeting yesterday afternoon and elected officers. Henry Elliot spoke at length on the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation" and [illegible] libel and a slander to the colored race and should be immediately suppressed. It was written to prejudice the minds of people of the north against the negro and it places the negro in a false light. He pleaded for better social and home conditions.

The officers are: R. E. Potter, president; Walter Scott, first vice president; L. Stovell, second vice president; A. F. Gunn, third vice president; E. E. Rickard, fourth vice president; R. J. Griffin, recording secretary; P. Greenleaf, treasurer, and the Rev. William B. Perry, advisor.

Pittsfield (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 17, 1915

[illegible] of the colored race in Pittsfield has started opposition to showing the film "The Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial theatre this city, as was announced [illegible] be done in the near future, and [illegible] representatives of men financially [illegible] matter. It is also understood [illegible] members of the Pittsfield [illegible] which controls the theatre [illegible] showing of the pic-

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 17, 1915

18

RIDING DOWN "CARPET-BAGGERS" AND INSURGENT NEGROES

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

By Gertrude Stevenson.

Part XIII. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part XII. was printed in Saturday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

While his henchman was busily engaged in organizing the negroes into a solid, cohesive body, intent on 40 acres and a mule and exulting in their new supremacy over their old masters, Austin Stoneman was active with his obedient Congress, preparing to legalize the plans which surged through his brain of making the former slavemasters the slaves of slaves. Openly hostile to "the man at the other end of the avenue," as he always called President Johnson, he pushed forward his own plans and systematically checkmated every move made by him.

PLANNED IRONCLAD TEST OATH

On the reassembling of Congress for the second session, he urged the passage of the most drastic Reconstruction act he had yet conceived, one which would not only enfranchise the blacks, but at the same time disfranchise the leading Southerners by its clause requiring an ironclad test oath which disbarred from suffrage or holding of office any man who had fought on the side of the Confederacy, or who had aided the Confederacy in any way, shape or manner.

Feeble, almost to the point of collapse, he managed to pull his depleted physical forces together to make an impassioned speech in order to still further impress his ideas of the duty of the hour and to warn the country that mercy is oftentimes the worst form of cruelty. An old man, broken with the storms and cares of state, he could no longer walk solely with the aid of a cane, but was obliged to be carried up the Capitol steps, always by two brawny negroes whom he had himself selected. As they set him down and assisted him to his seat, he would invariably remark jocularly: "What shall I do when you die?"

With one foot in the grave and his voice so weak he could not be heard in the galleries, except when worked up to a point of frenzy, he flamed with eloquence and excitement his voice carried his message to the remotest corner, and he succeeded in having his plans put through with consummate ease and triumph. Before him the President stood helpless.

Lynch and his cohorts were ready the moment the Reconstruction act was passed. It was a simple matter to enroll the negro vote. As soon as the registration was complete elections were ordered and Stoneman's policies were at last in full swing in every Southern State.

Piedmont had never seen such an election day. Darkies for miles around poured into the city from morning until night, many of them exercising the new and intoxicating prerogative of suffrage at least three times the first day and again on the succeeding day, for the polls were kept open for three days so that no recreant negro should be denied his new, North-given privilege.

"White Trash" Turned Down

Dr. Cameron and Ben, with several friends, had attempted to vote the first morning. The shambling old negro in charge of the ballot box refused to accept any ballots from "low down white trash." Gus, more insolent and high-headed than ever, with his newly-acquired job of keeping order at the polls, ended the altercation with despatch by planting his bayonet squarely in the middle of Dr. Cameron's back and ousting him bodily from the place. Ben and the other men were similarly humiliated. Crushed beyond speech, they sought the quiet of the Cameron home.

The negro was the man of the hour. White blood was not asset unless it flowed in the veins of the "scalawag" or the "carpet-bagger."

Most of the negroes could not tell, and probably never knew, the name on the ballot they dropped in the box. As a rule they did what the bureau agents or the soldiers told them to do without the faintest glimmering of an idea of what it was all about.

Ex-Slave Representative

The election returns showed 101 negro representatives and 21 whites. Silas Lynch was elected lieutenant governor by an unprecedented majority. Ulster county, in which Piedmont was situated, sent as its representative one of the Cameron's former slaves, who could neither read nor write and who had never worn a pair of shoes in his life. Some time later Charles Sumner had the pleasure of welcoming a colored senator to the Capitol. Stoneman's mad dream of power was a reality. His principle of rule or ruin was established; its despotic phases and Africanizing evolutions fully installed.

The celebration of the black landslide was a night the Camerons never forgot. Because they had been one of the proudest and richest families of the town, the street in front of their house was selected for the largest bonfire and the center of the night's activities.

The shrieking and howling kept up far into the night, the black figures of the new and highly successful voters outlined against the flaming fire like so many uncanny wraiths of another world.

Flora In Terror

Flora clung to her mother in spasms of terror. Mrs. Cameron, stout-hearted and indomitable as she had been through all her trials, could offer scant comfort, knowing that nearly every member of the exuberant mob outside was armed with some sort of weapon.

Sleep was out of the question until, from very exhaustion, the black victors sank down to sleep in their tracks like a beleagured army encamped in a city.

Neither the Camerons nor any of the other Southerners so sorely oppressed suspected Austin Stoneman as the master conspirator of their misery. Recognizing him as a Radical of the most extreme type, they looked upon him as an individual rather than the leader of the party.

Therefore when Elsie, writing that her father had been ordered South for his health, asked for accommodations at the Cameron house, Mrs. Cameron was glad to open her doors with something of the old-time hospitality. Ben was elated at the prospect of Elsie's visit and Margaret certainly not displeased when she learned that Phil was also to accompany his father.

Misplaced Sympathy

Mrs. Cameron's kind face became instantly sympathetic and her manner solicitous when she got the first sight of Elsie's father. His face had grown thinner and thinner, his lips were bloodless and his dark wig, with its hair drooping on the pale cheeks, gave him a weird aspect, not unlike a corpse. His strength was at a minimum, so much so that his movements were stiff and constrained, his gestures angular and automatic and his voice reduced to a faint whisper. Only the fire of his purpose and its flames of determination seemed alive, illuminating the dying shell and keeping it alive by its sheer intensity.

"I'll disappoint everybody yet," came the shrill whisper to every inquiry about his health, as though, loath as he was to die, he suspected that everyone was eagerly waiting his end.

When the motley State convention assembled, he insisted his health was sufficiently improved for him to attend. Supported by the suave and smirking Lynch, he saw his colored wards in action.

The wildest session of Congress he had ever seen paled into insignificance before the orgy and riot of that day's meeting.

Every word uttered which met with the black approval was greeted with cheers and shouts of delight, and religious exhortations calling upon the Lord to witness the blessed deliverance of the negro.

An Uncouth Orgy

Anything which displeased them was hissed and jeered and drowned in uncanny howling, in which the race was proficient. Missiles flew with disturbing frequency. Members drank from the bottles they had brought with them, and ignoring the cuspidors, spat on the floor. The helpless and wretched white minority were often obliged to leave their chairs and squat under their tables until the riot should subside and the colored speaker demand some order out of the confusion.

The order from the chair that all members must wear shoes was greeted with sullen disapproval, quickly forgotten, however, in the joy of the vote requiring all whites to salute negro officers on the streets. The session broke up in a hilarious outbreak of congratulation upon the passage of a bill permitting the intermarriage of blacks and whites. Lynch was seized, hoisted on black shoulders and carried in a triumphal procession around the hall. It had been the most eminently satisfactory session the negroes had ever known. At its close, Stoneman hastened to congratulate Lynch as that "gentleman," flushed with victory and prestige, helped him out of the hall.

"Need a little coaching—a little training," Stoneman declared, "but they'll come along all right. Give them a little time. That's all they need."

Thus the old man bolstered up his first surprise and shock at the day's proceedings all the way back to Piedmont, where weary and exhausted from the trip, Elsie tried to make him comfortable and to minister to his wants.

Messenger of Love

She had spent the day with Ben, a glorious, wonder day, as they rode, side by side, along the country roads leading out from Piedmont. On their return he had brought her a dove, which he declared must be the messenger of his love for her.

Startled and blushing, she had carried the snowy bird to her room where Mammy Cindy, only too delighted at adding to her family of interesting young folks, had produced an old bird cage in which to imprison the captive. Knowing her father's attitude toward the South, Elsie wondered what his verdict on a Southern son-in-law would be, and dreaded the possible conflict of opinion.

"At any rate, he's the best daddy that ever lived and I'll never marry against his wishes," she murmured. "Never, never, never!"

At the same moment her fertile young brain busied itself with arguments in Ben's favor, to be enforced on the aforesaid "daddy" at some future date.

Ben had learned of the doings at the State House immediately after parting with Elsie. Quick color mounted his dark cheeks and an expression neither his mother nor Elsie had ever seen gloomed his glowing eyes.

Disgusted with life in general, in spite of the sweet promise in Elsie's eyes; heartsick and desperate at this latest evidence of the degradation and ruin of his people, he walked down to his favorite retreat at the river's edge.

One thought predominated. The thing could not, must not, would not be endured. The one problem was how to raise the black heel that was already on his own neck and on the neck of every other Southerner. Armed conflict had failed in one instance. It was not to be thought of in this.

Birth of the Clan

At the end of the war, Ben had resignedly and unequivocally accepted the situation. His every thought and action since he had relinquished his arms had been in good faith. He intended to be loyal. By that he meant to abide by the laws of the land, to fulfil all his obligations and to keep his word sacredly. He believed the conquering North had no right to demand more. He felt the Union had no right to ask, let alone expect, that a man immediately profess unbounded love for a Union against which he had been fighting for four years. More than that, he did not intend to be so unutterably hypocritical or base as to declare that the Union flag had already usurped in his heart the place which had so long been sacred to the Southern Cross for which he had fought and bled.

As he sat struggling with the problem of the South, his attention was suddenly attracted by the shrill cries of children playing on the shore farther down the river.

Two delicate white children, their rightful inheritance wiped out by the war, were running from a crowd of kinky-haired pickaninnies, who had started something not unlike a pitched battle. As the black youngsters became more and more annoying, the two white children hid behind a rock.

Ben could see them covering themselves with a big piece of white cloth. The pickaninnies found their prey and were about to resume the childish hectoring, when the white youngsters started to run, still covered by the piece of cloth. The little darkies stood rooted to the spot. The next instant they were running wildly in all directions, screaming with fright and terror. The white children suddenly realized that their pursuers had fled in the other direction and laughingly emerged from the ghost-like covering.

In a flash—a veritable inspiration—a thought surged through Ben's brain.

Negro Fears Spirits

The negro's instinctive fear of spirits—his innate awe of the supernatural—That was the answer!—This the way. What couldn't be accomplished by force or moral suasion, Ben saw possible by preying upon the superstitions and ignorance of the black race he knew so well.

That moment saw the beginning of the "invisible Empire"—a last desperate effort to save the white South from the black ruin which enveloped her—a struggle which was destined to be bloodier and more spectacular than any battle of the war.

(To Be Continued Tomorrow.)

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 17, 1915

PHOTO PLAY DENOUNCED

Rev. Mr. Gist Scores "Birth of a Nation"

BREEDS CONTEMPT AND PREJUDICE

Webster Man Flays Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr.

Special to The Telegram

WEBSTER, May 16.—Nathan H. Gist, pastor of the Congregational church, tonight scored the picture play, "The birth of a nation," in a sermon at the Congregational church. Rev. Mr. Gist deplored the fact that Boston, where "America" was sung for the first time, should have flouted before them the doctrine of Mr. Dixon, as shown in the photoplay.

"The Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., persists in showing his countrymen his radical doctrines concerning the negro, and we are told by one or our leading periodicals that he wished to show the colored Americans in such a light that he shall be driven from the country. None but the most radical reformer will adopt such a method to bring about that ungodly thing.

"Such works as Mr. Dixon gives us breeds contempt and prejudice, sow the seeds of discontent, increase racial antipathy, glorify crime and widen the breach between the two races. His book, entitled "Leopard's spots," is surely anything but history. The very title has a stinging implication that cuts like a knife.

"If the story typified southern life generally, it could be tolerated. But it does not give us real history, for the author would have us think that as a leopard never changes his spots, neither does a negro change. But is that true? Compare the negro of today with the negro of 50 years ago. The contrast is wellnigh incredible. . . .

"Every time the negro has been given advantages he has seized them and developed wonderfully. His enthusiasm and patience might well be held up before our youth today for emulation. The public-spirited citizens of the South are opposed to Mr. Dixon's doctrines. They agree with their northern brethren that the people have a right to know the truth, whatever the sentiments of the author may be.

"Neither time nor expense has been spared in producing the photo drama, 'The birth of a nation,' which is based on Mr. Dixon's story, 'The Clansman.' The play is typical of Dixon, but not typical of conditions during the reconstruction period. We quite agree with one of our leading magazines, that the opportunity afforded in 'The birth of a nation' would have been the delight of any great and careful novelist, and one which would have taxed the knowledge of a great historian. But, unhappily for the value of this drama, Mr. Dixon is neither.

"As Mr. Dixon sees the story, according to this picture, New England slave traders brought the slaves to the South. During the period of slavery the negroes are happy, working, as we are told in large letters on the screen, from 6 in the morning until 6 at night, with two hours off in the middle of the day. Abolition grows, the South secedes, war comes.

"The principal characters in that struggle are passed in sublime review upon the screen. The North triumphs, the radical element in Lincoln's party adopts a policy of reconstruction, involving social and political intercourse between the black and white races Then the Ku Kluxlan springs into being, with all of the selfish and intrepid chivalry of the middle ages, marshaled into legions which never existed, suppresses the insurrection and saves the South from destruction.

"And that drama is now flaunted before the eye of countless thousands in the chief city of New England, within 10 minutes' walk of the old cradle of liberty, where the eloquent Wendell Phillips, despite social ostracisement, made his debut, took his stand proudly beside the black man of the South and said he would be the champion of his rights until the streets of Boston became too white for the tread of the slave; in the city where 'America' was sung for the first time; in the city where William Lloyd Garrison began his crusade

against slavery, and where that man was dragged over the cobblestones with a rope around his neck, and was the only cool man in that devilish mob; in that city which was the hotbed of the American Revolution; in that city which sent forth the Adamses, Hancock, Franklin, Quincy and Sumner, all of them the voice of the oppressed.

"Shouldn't Boston be indignant over such unfair and vicious scenes as those from this play, 'The birth of a nation.' Mr. Dixon is a partisan. His doctrines make the masses restless. He is unfair. Gross immorality and dastardly vilifications are in this play. We do not wonder that the negro race protests against such a propaganda. And as citizens in this land of the free they have a right to ask protection of their rights. They should not be compelled to submit to such indignities. The Ku Klux-Klan that Mr. Dixon holds up as mighty heroes were guilty of mob murder, and their insurrections reached such a state that the federal government was forced to call troops to suppress them. Their rise growth and operations would have been impossible in any period or construction period

BOSTON

when there was death and desolation and decay on every side. Mr. Dixon does not mention either demise, nor the unlawful acts that led to their suppression.

"The birth of a nation glorifies crime. What is ever gained by uncovering the diseases and leprosies of society? Sin and filth are plentiful enough, we all know, but how can any one justify crime? Why should our youth be permitted to feed upon such husks as Mr. Dixon would give them? We ought to teach them history, but not poison their minds with prejudice by presenting such material as this and then call it 'history.'

"No doubt the things portrayed by Mr. Dixon did exist in some places in the South, but they are far from representative, and they do not typify conditions throughout the South. The vigorous crusade against the showing of such pictures ought to continue until they are prohibited.

"Massachusetts has never been found wanting when this nation was leading a fight for liberty. This state has led it alone, and it should lead it today, that there may be justice, love and liberty to every citizen in our land.

"It is not a land of freedom where such ferocity is allowed to prevail. May the vision of Wendell Phillips be fulfilled. Years hence, when the smoke of this conflict clears away, there will be seen under our flag all tongues, all nations, all creeds, one kindred, and on the banks of the Potomac, the goddess of liberty, robed in light, four and thirty stars for her diadem, broken chains under feet, and the olive branch in her right hand."

Motion Picture World
New York. May 15, 1915
(about Boston)

18FF Censor Bills Aplenty

Massachusetts Legislature Swamped with All Kinds of Censorship Measures—Wave of Excited Protest Said to Be Due to the Boston Showing of "The Birth of a Nation"—Some of the Bills Offered—Standing Against the Agitation.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

As a result of the great agitation caused by the Boston production of "The Birth of a Nation," the Massachusetts Legislature is swamped with all kinds of censorship bills, submitted by various interested persons who believe that they have the solution to the problem.

The joint legislative committee on judiciary granted a hearing on the Sullivan bill last Monday. This bill would prohibit the performance of "any show or entertainment which tends to excite racial prejudice or tends to a breach of the public peace."

So great a crowd assembled in the largest room in the State House to listen to the arguments of the opponents that Senator Norwood felt it necessary to warn the spectators that comment would not be tolerated and that hissing and applause would result in the clearing of the room.

J. Mott Hallowell offered the committee a bill as a substitute for the Sullivan petition which would amend the present law so that no entertainments or shows could be given that would cause race hatred or religious prejudice.

M. Sumner Coggan has also offered an amendment which would give authority to stop any production to a board of three members, if in their opinion the show was immoral, obscene or in any manner disagreeable to public tastes. This board would consist of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner and a judge of the municipal court. This bill has since been reported favorably.

Rev. Chauncey J. Hawkins, of Jamaica Plain, told the committee that he came to protest against the attack on American freedom. "We suffer many things from the press that we do not like," he said, "and I think that the same should apply to the stage. I, therefore, protest against any restriction of this freedom and I believe that no race should be beyond criticism." He also stated that he had no other interest in the matter. He said that his limits to restriction on censorship would be immorality. The majority of the negroes present in the room loudly hissed the remarks of Dr. Hawkins.

Dr. Charles Fleischer, one of the most prominent Jewish rabbis in this country, declared he thought the present law to be sufficient.

The Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, for fifteen years on the editorial staff of the New York American, and a Southerner by birth, said that the scars of the war were practically eliminated, and spoke on the truthfulness of the play. He declared that everything depicted by the play was true since he had seen them with his own eyes. The play, he said, is merely educating the people to facts.

Eugene Walter, the playwright, said that long after the negro problem was solved there would be many playwrights who would wish to make a living, and these people would want to know how far they might go. He strenuously objected to any proposed law which would allow any one to stir up ill feeling by rivals or enemies.

Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan, representing Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, said that the Sullivan bill was inadequate from any point of view. While it inflicted a penalty in this case, it would also penalize any play tending in the remotest degree to incite race prejudice. The play has a recognized and valuable part in the life of the people and it would be unfair to impose such a law. He said that laws cannot be broken because of the whims of a body of people.

Judge Brackett, representing the Boston Theater Managers' Association, said that the proposed legislation would affect the interests which he represented.

N. Y. Motion Picture News
(About Boston)

New Laws And Court De

This department is designed to keep the industry informed of all news concerni Federal, State, County or Municipal, that may affect the business, and o any branch of the trade with the authorities in all sections of the

18FF

100,000 Patrons Protest Boston Censo

"Do you want Bill Jones and Mary Jane Busy Body, to tell you what moving pictures you can or cannot see?"

That is only one of the battle cries spread broadcast throughout the State of Massachusetts by the Co-operative Anti-Censorship committee, organized to fight the bill in the legislature which would place motion picture censorship in the hands of three officials and, say the picture men, "put 80 per cent. of the picture theatres of this state out of business the first week after the bill went into effect."

The Carstens bill, they call it, and it is the outgrowth of circumstances which have involved the police court and the pulpit, the governor, mayor and negro agitator. The film men had their legislative program all mapped out, with certain prospects that "next general court" would lull the censorship bill to sleep until at least another session. Then "Hypocrites" came along. The mayor ordered Truth to be clothed and the first faint rumblings of the coming storm were heard.

Starts Over "Birth of a Nation"

Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" brought the lightning, thunder and the demagogue. Eleven arrests were made, 3,000 negroes and their sympathizers marched to the State House, the governor wept with them (and has since been accused of playing politics in the matter) and the demand for a rigid censorship bill became a roar.

Promptly the motion picture men came to the front. Their committee began sending letters to every exhibitor in the state, enclosing blanks to be signed by public men in the various cities and towns.

"And they went to it right off the reel," said Manager Murphy, of the United Film Service to the News representative. "Why, at one theatre in Boston alone, our appeal for support from the people against the censorship outrage has brought to me more than 100,000 signed protest blanks."

"But isn't some sort of rigid censorship necessary?"

National Board Is Enough

"We have it now," was the decisive reply. "The National Board is composed of 132 prominent people who are trained observers. They are doing an extremely arduous work well. And what can a board of three do in this State? We run the reels off at the State House for official approval. We never run them faster than 15 minutes to the reel. With an eight-hour day, no lunch, and steady work right through till Saturday night, just 192 reels could be examined. Last week alone 252 reels were released here. Three men can't do the work."

"What effect would cutting down the film supply have?"

"The only possible outcome of such a cut would be to put 80 per cent. of the theatres out of business. This would throw a thousand people out of work. And why? So that three more political jobs may be created. And they will kill the film with the punch, which will cut down the attendance at the theatre. Then the exhibitor will want to raise the price to make up; and he will have a poorer show to offer. I tell you, this bill must be killed; it's unnecessary, unjust; a bit of political meddling in a business which should be entirely free from politics; because the picture business is the people's business. Their films are properly censored now."

The committee in charge of the opposition consists of Mrs. Alice R. Carroll, social worker; James F. Burke, president Motion Picture Operators' Union, Alden Washburn, exhibitor, Film Exch exhibitor.

Committee This com in the thea sign the pr read:

A Senate bi by needless B The Workin It would ma Do you wan Sign the ma

The Bos ship bill wo of investme ness in this people and of three fo 135, which years."

Another f one dollar t of a reel und two dollars f

WANTS STRICTER CENSORSHIP.

Lieutenant Governor Has Been No Show But Cites Reports of Them.

At a meeting of the Twentieth Century Club, Boston, Lieutenant Governor Grafton D. Cushing declared his belief in governmental censorship of moving pictures and favored the Carstens bill, which is now before the Massachusetts Senate.

Mr. Cushing admitted that he had never been inside a moving picture house, but based his judgment that censorship is necessary on the reports of private inspections that have come to him.

He stated that the inefficiency of commercial censorship of moving pictures had been showing, adding that of 616 films reviewed in Boston by forty volunteers, 134, or about one-fifth, violated certain standards as follows: Twenty-nine were obscene, thirty made vice attractive, seventeen were grossly degrading in taste and thirty-eight explained methods of crime. He estimated that 120,000 children viewed these films in seventeen weeks.

Another inspection covered 1,301 films in other Massachusetts cities, 236 of which violated standards, fifty-six for obscenity, twenty-five for making vice attractive, eighty-nine for being of grossly degrading tastes and sixty-five for illustrating methods of crime.

He believes it easily possible for the board of three provided for in the bill pending to censor 225 films a week, and said that the provision providing for an appeal to the superior court would safeguard the theaters' interests.

"It is easy to talk of the freedom of the press and of speech," he said, "but to allow people to traffic in unfit scenes of life is absurd. There are numerous good pictures, educational; many of them which can be enjoyed by old and young alike, and it is incomprehensible that Massachusetts should allow the present state of things. This censorship is necessary. If a picture like 'The Birth of a Nation' —I have not seen it myself—but if it ought to be stopped, as many have said, then there ought to be authority to stop it somewhere."

Carl C. Carsten, father of the bill, said that he thought the important bill for "Can this censorship be carried on intelligently? Undoubtedly there are dangers involved that this censorship would become so strict and unreasonable as to be stupid.

world's events have sensible some films, an more detrimen people than a

MAYOR CENSOR

Mayor Charl Calif., is prep to provide for ville and movi He proposes dress, characte deville perform tures by elim characters, ma robbery scenes consist of five the mayor an council.

The board formances an outline of each lic presentatio is to carry a to exceed thre omment in jail

As such an effect until thi approval by present mayo hand in it the of office expi

Cosm

American R Producers

THE Cosm

Boston Journal. May 18

The Birth of a Nation

The story here told is the story shown in the remarkable motion picture production now in Boston.

By Gertrude Stevenson

Part XIV. of "The Birth of a Nation." Part XIII. was printed in yesterday's Journal.

The narrative of "The Birth of a Nation" is protected by copyright. All rights to the use of this narrative version are reserved.

Ben entered into his new adventure with all the enthusiasm of a boy and all the lofty earnestness of a chosen deliverer of his people. Friend after friend was visited and told of the simple but highly effective scheme of outwitting the Northern politicians and terrorizing the negroes into some semblance of order and decency. The idea spread like wildfire and everyone concerned was swept along by a wave of sanguinity and hopefulness which seemed certain to assure the success of the plans.

BEN DESIGNS "KLAN" UNIFORM

Ben himself designed the costume and put the first pattern together with pins. The idea was to envelop each man and his horse in a long, white, ghostlike robe, which would serve the two purposes of intimidating the negroes and concealing the identity of the wearer. With much of the mystic in his own nature, Ben immediately conceived the idea of ornamenting the front of the garb with a cross within a circle, the cross to carry out the idea of the Southern cross and the circle to signify the unbroken circle of men who were to engage in the work.

The next thing was to think of a name for the organization. Descended as he was from the clansmen of old Scotland, Ben first suggested the Greek word, Kukloi, meaning band or circle, and thus clan, to a group who were discussing ways and means. Stephen Wade repeated it.

"Ku klu! That sounds good!"

"Why not Ku Klu Klan?" Sam Small suggested.

"That would certainly be alliterative," Ben agreed. "Why not put an 'x' on the second word?"

Thus it was agreed and the group of men, determined on the protection of their homes and property, their own lives and the safety of their women folks, became the Ku Klux Klan, at once a more solid and dignified body because it had a name. Nothing could have been more meaningless and nothing more mysterious, which was exactly the spirit and aim of the men concerned. The very sound was suggestive of bones rattling together. Like the costumes it seemed a symbol from a spirit world. Even the members at once felt its weird influence, its uncanny significance, as later the general public was to be mystified and terrified by those three fantastic Ks. From the moment of the decision on the name, everything connected with the order was made to harmonize with its spooky syllables and the spectral costume.

In addition to the face mask with holes for the eyes, nose and mouth, Ben devised a tall, cardboard hat of hobgoblin design, so fashioned as to make the wearer look tremendously tall and impressive. To add to the phantomlike apparition he insisted that no word should be spoken unless absolutely necessary and that all orders be given by a sharp whistle according to a secret code which he worked out late one night when his family thought him sound asleep.

Reveals Secret to Family

His frequent absences and mysterious comings and goings had already aroused comment in the family circle, and Elsie was beside herself with pique and curiosity because she had not been taken into his confidence.

To every inquiry he answered:

"Don't ask me. You'll all know later."

In spite of his unusual actions for days, the family was scarcely ready for the denouement. One afternoon he came in, flushed and excited, took his mother, Margaret and Flora into the sitting room, locked both doors, peered out of the windows to be sure no one was about and then produced the fantastic model he had made from under his coat.

Breathlessly he explained that he wanted them to make costumes just as fast as their nimble fingers could sew. Mrs. Cameron's sad eyes filled with alarm and her cheeks blanched. This was a new danger—a new risk for her one remaining son.

But Margaret looked at him with renewed admiration. To her, as to hundreds of other young women in that Southland, the war had been a period of horror, but the latest developments were more than her proud spirit could stand. She bitterly resented the loss of her freedom—her inability to go and come as she pleased, and as she had been accustomed to even in the worst days of the war. It was with rising color and hope that she picked up the strange costume to examine it and find out how it was made.

The whole present position of the South rankled in the heart that had had such high hopes and proud ambitions for her brothers, and the last few months had seen her oldest and cleverest brother completely outwitted by Northerners; she felt to be inferior, helplessly futile before former slaves equipped with muskets the Northerners had put into their greedy black hands.

"I'll work day and night for this thing," her voice vibrant with repressed passion. "Between us we can make dozens in two or three days."

Margaret Enthusiastic

Ben's face lighted. It was sweet to find an answering enthusiasm—a spirit surpassed only by his own.

"We must get Elsie to help, too," Flora suggested, with youthful eagerness. She had fallen head over heels in love with the beautiful Northern girl, with her handsome clothes and her dainty ways, and followed her every chance she got like a faithful page.

Ben looked up in quick alarm.

"Oh, no, Flora," he said sternly. "Elsie must never know about this. Don't mention it to a living soul."

He turned to his mother and Margaret.

"Guard my secret as you would my life," he instructed them. "For that would be the forfeit if my part in this work were ever known."

Flora's bright smile faded.

"I'll never breathe a word about it, Ben," she declared earnestly. "Hope to die, cross my heart, black and blue!"

As if that awful vow were not enough, she rushed to the old desk, where, carefully folded, she had preserved the flag Ben had given her when the Confederacy was born.

"Now, will you trust me, if I promise with this on my heart?" she demanded.

Ben smiled down at her fondly.

"I'd stake my life on you, little sister."

"Hide All These Things"

"We'll go right to work on these," Mrs. Cameron put in, practically, her thimble already on and needle and thread in her hand.

"I've got to rush off now," Ben answered. "Be sure and hide all these things when you're not working on them and keep the door locked when you are," he admonished, as he started out.

Flora ran gaily after him.

"You're such a funny boy," she declared as she caught up with him in the hall. "I should think Elsie'd be the first one you'd tell."

Ben laughed.

"This is the South's secret," he answered.

Flora, filled to the brim with mischievous fun, took his face in both her hands and kissed him boisterously.

"That's to make up for Elsie," she teased.

"Elsie will, too, some day," he bantered in return, and hurried out of the door.

"Can't I sew, too?" Flora demanded, upon returning to the sitting room.

"You'd better wait until morning," her mother answered. "Then we'll have some more all cut out and ready."

Flora sat down and watched her mother and sister for a few moments, but she was too lively to remain long inactive.

"Ben forgot to get the spring water," she announced suddenly. "Guess I'll go down myself."

"No, I don't want you to go," her mother answered sharply. "Ben won't be gone long and he'd be fit to be tied if he came back and found you'd been down there alone."

"Oh, bother!" Flora exclaimed. "I can't do this and I can't do that! What can a girl do? You won't let me go just down to the spring in broad daylight. This whole business makes me tired. I can't stir outside the house but Ben looks daggers at me. Those silly darkies won't touch me. They wouldn't dare."

With that she jumped up and, darting into the kitchen, reappeared with the bucket on her arm.

"No, Flora, I won't let you go," her mother declared. "Put that bucket down and behave yourself."

Flora Dares Danger

"Please, mama—just down to the spring," she begged. "My feet are just itching for a good walk, and I'm dying for a breath of fresh air. I hate being cooped up in the house ALL the time."

She was already at the door. Her mother dropped her work and started after her, but the younger feet were fleeter. Flora, healthy young animal that she was, was already half way down the lane.

When she was sure she had eluded her mother she slackened her pace and proceeded to enjoy the bit of freedom now so rare. A scarlet poppy attracted her for a moment. A butterfly, black and yellow and purple, called forth a low, delighted cry as she watched it poised on a great flat leaf.

FLORA IN TERROR AFTER CHASE

"La, la, dee," she caroled, instinctively bursting forth into song as soon as she was out of doors and among the flowers.

"Oh, me—Oh, my," she mimicked to herself. "What will that big brother of mine say?"

"He'll say, Flora's a very naughty girl!" she answered herself, reproducing Ben's sternest tones.

"Then I'll kiss him and kiss him and kiss him," she chuckled, "and he'll have to laugh—and then he'll forgt all about it."

She tripped on, the sinking sun catching the burnished gold of her hair, glinting in her blue eyes, radiating pink in her cheeks.

Arrived at the spring, she dipped her bucket into the cool, clear waters, babbling with pristine purity. With something of an effort, she drew the full bucket to the surface with her slender fingers strained to the effort. She set the bucket down to rest them a minute. As she did so, she caught the chatter of a squirrel, scolding away at a great rate. Delighted, she looked up into the branches above her. There, on a low branch, was the fat, furry creature, poised on its haunches, his beautiful tail curved like a rich plume.

"Oh, lookee!" she exclaimed to herself, forgetting the bucket, forgetting her brother's warning as she gazed in unalloyed delight at the antics of the little animal.

Frightened by Ex-Slave

Suddenly she heard a sound in the bushes back of her. She turned. There stood Gus, her father's former slave, now captain in the negro regiment stationed in Piedmont.

In an awful sickening flash, Ben's warnings, his fear for her, the awful dread that had gripped every Southern woman's heart since the black reign had made such outrages possible, swept over her, leaving her faint and trembling.

She waited for nothing more.

A terrible desire to flee possessed her. The sun had sunk and quick shadows were filling the glen. She seemed impelled by some outward force, onward, onward.

Meanwhile Ben had returned home. His mother rushed into the hall as she heard him come in.

"Oh, Ben, I wish you'd go after Flora," she greeted him. "She ran away down to the spring and——"

Ben to the Rescue

Ben's eyes filled with alarm.

With a speed born of fear and despair he hastened down the path and through the woods, hoping at every step to meet Flora on her way back. As he got nearer the spring he ran faster, realizing that he ought to have met her sooner.

At the spring he saw the bucket, full of water, just as her slim fingers had pulled it out of the spring. He looked around for her, but she was nowhere in sight.

"Flora!" he shouted, and again—"Flo-ra-a!"

The squirrel twittered in the treetop overhead. A bird flying nestward with the setting sun called to its mate. Otherwise the wood was still.

"My God!" he exclaimed. "Where can that girl be?"

He hurried forward.

Something caught his eye. He stooped and picked it up. It was a Union army coat, with the gold epaulets of a captain's rank.

His teeth set. His hands clenched as he dropped the garment.

Without knowing which direction to take, he started forward, calling his sister's name at every step.

"Floo-raa, Floo-raa," he called, and "Flo-ra" came the answering echo.

The Leap to Death

Flora had hurried on until, breathless, weak, she found herself on the edge of the cliff, called Lover's Leap, the favorite trysting place of young sweethearts ever since Piedmont was first settled.

A spirit of frenzy seized her. She stood fascinated by the sheer drop before her. The next moment she threw up her hands and flung herself, head first, into the yawning chasm below.

Scarcely a minute later Ben, panting, dashed frantically to the spot. There was not a soul in sight. He was sure he had heard Flora's voice. A terrible fear clutched him. He started to look over the cliff and drew back. He dared not. The next moment he was impelled to the edge. He looked over. Something stirred at the base of the rocks. He looked again. The bright plaid of Flora's dress caught his eye.

For a moment his heart seemed to stop beating. The next he was hurrying down the footpath, heedless of his clothes as they tore on the sharp rocks, scarcely feeling the bruises that made his feet and hands bleed as he made his torturous way down to the base of the cliff.

There she lay, a limp, broken thing, a faint breath still moving her breast. He caught her up, hoping against hope. She sagged pitifully. He held her close, a terrible agony numbing his senses, blinding his vision, clouding his thought.

"God Give Me Strength"

"Flora, my baby sister," he breathed, holding her slight form close.

The closed lids stirred ever so slightly, flickered weakly and opened. Eyes of anguish, already set with the seal of death, gazed into his, knew him and closed. A convulsive spasm shook her frame—blood flowed from her mouth—her body settled in his arms. She was dead.

Ben gathered her up. He must carry her home—home to the waiting mother—home, already so sorely afflicted.

His eyes turned to heaven.

"God give me courage!" It was more a demand than a prayer. "God give me strength!"

Bearing his tragic burden he toiled up the incline. A light rain began to fall, softly, steadily. He staggered through the gathering gloom.

(To be continued tomorrow.)

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 18, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION at Tremont Theatre.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first-class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two-dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters' hours performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith élan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performance given at 2:10 P. M. are exactly the same as those at night. Besides affording the advantage of cheaper prices, they give opportunity to out-of-town people to include a visit to the Tremont Theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 18, 1915

Senate Amends and Passes "Birth of a Nation" Bill

After a long drawn out fight, the Senate this afternoon passed the motion picture bill [illegible] the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," to be engrossed, the rising vote of 15 to 14, which was not doubted. The action did not come, however, until after a lengthy debate, during which no less than seven rollcalls were taken on various amendments.

The bill provides for a three-headed board of censorship for motion picture and other theatrical productions. The bill was amended by the Senate so that a majority decision of the board should rule—an amendment which had previously been defeated in the House. An attempt to put the matter over until the next General Court was lost.

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
MAY 17, 1915

START A PROTEST ON "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Pittsfield People See It in New York—H. R. Tremblay to See Show in Boston.

Announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" might be presented in motion pictures at the Colonial has given birth to vigorous protest on the part of colored people in the city.

Among those who feel that the films should not be shown here is James Hunter who signs himself "poet and writer" and who is circulating a petition in opposition to the films. The pictures have attracted great houses wherever shown. In Boston, to appease clamor, Mayor Curley discreetly, suggested that certain objectionable reels be eliminated and with this concession to those who objected, the pictures are going on.

A number of Pittsfield people who were in New York yesterday witnessed the show at the Liberty. Two performances are given there daily—one in the afternoon and one in the evening—and the place is always packed. These films are as originally run—there have been no expurgations—and those who saw them say they are a marvelous spectacle and give the present generation a fresh new glimpses of events in the South in the reconstruction period.

There are hundreds of horses and the deeds of danger and daring surpass belief, many of them. These include the apparent trampling of people in the street and the leap of a white girl over a precipice.

Hector R. Tremblay, who is in charge of bookings for the Colonial said this morning that he was going to Boston shortly for the purpose personally of witnessing the production and deciding whether in the form in which it is offered in that city there would in his opinion any objection to its presentation here. The date of the Pittsfield production—if date there is to be—is indefinite.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 16, 1915

GROUPS HUMAN SCENES WITH ARTISTIC SKILL

Grouping of a Scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's studio in Los Angeles recently remarked on the film director's gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures as an artist in oils or water color rather than as a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but his mass pictures have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the allegory scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation." The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is remarkable. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps one near [illegible] and the other removed about 100 feet.

In striking contrast is Griffith's treatment, in "The Birth of a Nation," of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wan, skeleton-like figures are selected. Their dress of many lands and nations suggests crime and sordidness. Some of the lean, emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled-up victims of a battlefield. Arms are raised in entreaty to heaven. Bodies, legs and arms, as it were, shreds of human beings are mixed inextricably. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused an artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who feel the mighty thought, the deep emo-

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 17, 1915

TRY IN SENATE TO AMEND 'BIRTH OF A NATION' BILL

An effort will be made today in the Senate to amend the so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill, which comes up to be engrossed, so that two of the three local censors of photoplays and public entertainments may suspend an objectionable performance instead of having the judgment of the triumvirate unanimous.

The bill enlarges the present statute by adding the chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court as a censor with the Mayor and police commissioner. But it eliminates specific causes, such as "obscene" and "immoral," and permits the three officials to object to a show on any ground.

That is an arbitrary power at first objected to by the rank and file of motion picture men, but within the past few days the film forces have changed their attitude toward the measure, which they wish to remind the public applies only to Boston.

TRIUMVIRATE SAFER.

Film distributors and exhibitors now consider that the "three-headed" bill is safer than the present law, in that all the Boston officials would have to agree before they stopped a show or suspended a license.

On that account the attempt to remove the unanimous clause will be opposed with spirit. Motion picture men claim the bill was not necessary. The majority object to "excess legislation," but they are far more interested in State censorship than in a law that affects Boston only and has to do solely with the right of local officials to revoke the licenses of theatres that persist in producing improper shows. The only interests anxious for the success of this bill are "The Birth of a Nation" lobbyists; hence its title.

The Judiciary Committee reported the bill and it was railroaded through the House and Senate to a third reading. Many appear to have confused the proposed local law with the grist of censorship bills and amendments before the Senate Committee on Ways and Means. They are distinct. The film distributors and exhibitors throughout Massachusetts are seeking satisfactory censorship regulations and had been for months before the photo-play at the Tremont stirred the fuss.

The tumult over the scenes of the Reconstruction period befogged the issues and delayed the needs of the film industry in this State. But the horizon has at last cleared and the antis and motion picture men are not so estranged. The only feature they differ on now is the right to censor films before they have been displayed at least once to the public.

MILLER BILL SANE.

The film men say citizens ought to object first and then a proper hearing can be held, but that prior censorship would stifle the industry and reject many worthy and harmless pictures. The antis say damage will be done by a single picture display of a film with improper suggestions.

The censorship bills and amendments with which the Senate Ways and Means Committee has been deluged have been obscured by the sane and liberal measure submitted by Hiram F. Miller of Lynn. This bill provides for the appointment by Governor Walsh of seven men and two women to serve without pay and to be known as the Board of Rules and Appeal for Film Examination. Three members are to serve for one year, three for two years and three for three years, the only paid attache to be the secretary.

Motion picture men all over the State are backing the Miller measure with an enthusiasm made intense by the weary weeks of conflict and confusion. They look upon it as a beacon. They say it solves all the problems in a manner satisfactory to the public, to the antis and to the film forces.

Post, Boston, May 18, 15

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its sixth week at the Tremont Theatre, attracts crowds as large as ever at the matinees and nights. Obviously, no fixed outdoor play or circumscribed pageant can compare with a work like "The Birth of a Nation," the staging of which extended over hundreds of miles of locations and included the most diverse landscapes, environments and atmospheric effects. And no three-hour spoken play can possibly include the sweep of time, the historical range of this film drama, with its 5000 scenes and comprehensive depiction of the Civil war and reconstruction.

Globe, Boston, May 18, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

D. W. Griffith's remarkable photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is in its sixth week at the Tremont Theatre.

Tht staging of these pictures extended over hundreds of miles of locations and included the most diverse landscapes, environments and atmospheric effects. This historical film drama with its 5000 scenes gives a comprehensive depiction of the Civil War and Reconstruction. "The Birth of a Nation" has received a very large number of tributes of praise from distinguished men. Scores of letters are received by the management every week from pleased patrons.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
MAY 18, 1915

PRODIGY OF THE FILMS

19 Year Old Girl Shows Genius in "Birth of a Nation"

Film actors appearing in "The Birth of a Nation" out in Los Angeles last summer woke one morning this Spring and found themselves famous. To be exact, it was the night of March 21 the first night of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, New York, that brought this sudden change. Subsequently the long New York run and the tremendous success of the play as now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, have added to their renown.

MISS MAE MARSH

While deserved laurels were won by Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Ralph Lewis, Josephine Crowell, Robert Herron, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Joseph Henabery and many others, the finest hour and crowning wreaths went to a little girl named Mae Marsh. She is a young woman of 19. Two years ago she was a freckle faced, awkward, overgrown "tad" who occasionally flashed out in the Majestic-Reliance Studios there her big sister was employed. Mr. Griffith, the director, noticed her and passed wonderful possibilities for her in characters." She made good in every role entrusted to her, under his careful tuition, but her depiction of Flora, the pet of the Cameron household in "The Birth of a Nation," has shown her true genius both as a "comedienne and in the big tragic moments."

And with it all she is just at the threshold, as it were, of her artistic career, and nobody can prophesy as to whether or not she will become the Duse or the Bernhardt of the films.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 18, 1915

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its sixth week at the Tremont Theatre, attracts crowds as large as ever at the matinees and nights. Obviously, no fixed outdoor play or circumscribed pageant can compare with a work like "The Birth of a Nation," the staging of which extended over hundreds of miles of locations and included the most diverse landscapes, environments and atmospheric effects. And no three-hour spoken play can possibly include the sweep of time, the historical range of this film drama, with its 5000 scenes and comprehensive depiction of the Civil war and reconstruction.

Boston, Herald, May 18, 1915

SALEM (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 18, 1915

SENATE AMENDS CENSORSHIP BILL

Makes Majority of Board Sufficient to Stop Play—House Yet to Act.

The objectors to the presentation of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," scored in the Senate yesterday. After seven roll calls had been taken, they secured the engrossment of a bill with an amendment, which the House has once rejected, providing that a theatrical performance or entertainment may be stopped in Boston provided two of the three censors so vote.

The original bill, constituting the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court a board of censorship, provided for a unanimous vote of the three.

Although the bill as amended was passed to be engrossed, a new struggle will now come in the House to secure acceptance of this modification. The House originally turned down the same suggestion by a vote of 116 to 104.

The colored people, who had been advised that the bill was coming up, were present in considerable numbers in both galleries when the measure was called. Senator Bean of Cambridge made the amending motion, which was adopted by a vote of 20 to 18 on a roll call.

Struggle to Kill Bill.

As soon as it had been added the struggle to kill or further modify the bill started. Senator Doyle of New Bedford declared that with this amendment the bill was dead, for the House would never accept it.

Senator Sullivan argued for his amendment making the general state law apply to Boston, and constituting the mayor sole censor with full power. The newly amended bill, he said, was a reflection on the mayor, whose hands might actually be tied by the other two members of the board.

Senator Hays expressed the hope that the bill would be sent to the next General Court. A motion to refer was made by Senator Doyle and seconded by Senator Norwood, but was rejected, 24 to 16. A new suggestion for an appeal to the superior court was offered by Senator Hays, and Senator Leonard wanted to amend by making the mayor and police commissioner the censors. Both amendments were rejected.

A motion to amend the bill to make it operative Aug. 1 was offered by Senator Fitzgerald, but was lost. A new amendment was offered to attach a referendum placing the question before the voters at the state election, but when Senator Hays finished his presentation of the plan, Senator Norwood [illegible] it was too frivolous. This was lost. [illegible] amendments to postpone further, later in the week [illegible] and the bill as [illegible] to be en-

BAY STATE LEGISLATURE

The senate, yesterday, passed to be engrossed the bill commonly known as the "Birth of a nation" bill, creating the mayor and police commissioner of Boston and the chief justice of the municipal court as a board to pass on theatrical licenses in Boston.

The resolve to pay Marlboro $18,000 or certain filter beds which, it was alleged, were to have been used by the metropolitan water and sewerage commission but wes left on the hands of that city was rejected.

The committee on mercantile affairs reported a bill, based on the petition of N. D. T. Trefry, to revive the charter of the Massachusetts Loan company and to confirm its acts.

The house began the discussion of the bill for reorganizing the Boston & Maine railroad and was still talking on it at adjournment.

By a vote of 130 to 87 the house concurred with the senate in amendments to the bill apportioning the cost of the new Wellington bridge.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 18, 1915

CROWDS FLOCKING TO "BIRTH OF A NATION"

David W. Griffith's historical photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Tremont Theatre. This is the sixth week of the remarkably successful engagement. All New England is represented among the audiences that flock to the theatre twice a day.

The Tremont is one of the coolest houses in town, owing to its many doors and wide lobbies, but a refrigerating plant is being installed for the purpose of insuring the comfort of the audience if the weather should happen to shift—and you never can tell about that in Boston. The production, of course, remains the same, and this includes the presence of the chorus and the orchestra that accompany scenes in the [illegible] film drama.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 18, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 18, 1915

Now that the excitement and hysterics over the production of the motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in Boston have died down the sensible thing for the Legislature to do is to kill the mischievous censorship bill. That incident was not of enough importance to justify the enactment of a piece of general legislation which is likely to cause more harm than good. It lies within the power of the licensing authority in any city to shut out objectionable plays or parts of plays, and in almost every instance this power is exercised intelligently and well. A censorship such as the proposed legislation would establish would be a dangerous thing to set up and might easily become an instrument of persecution rather than protection.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 18, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to attract large and interested audiences to the Tremont Theatre. The spectacular features of the entertainment excite the warmest admiration. There are two performances daily at 2.15 and 8.15

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 18, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

D. W. Griffith's remarkable photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is in its sixth week at the Tremont Theatre.

Tht staging of these pictures extended over hundreds of miles of locations and included the most diverse landscapes, environments and atmospheric effects. This historical film drama with its 5000 scenes gives a comprehensive depiction of the Civil War and Reconstruction. "The Birth of a Nation" has received a very large number of tributes of praise from distinguished men. Scores of letters are received by the management every week from pleased patrons.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 18, 1915

"Birth Of A Nation" Still Prospers

Big Film Play as Popular As When First Exhibited

D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its sixth week at the Tremont Theatre, attracts crowds as large as ever at the daily matinees and nights. It remains the only large attraction in town and is adjudged to be the greatest spectacular attraction in the world, not only surpassing the so-called "indoor drama" but also al fresco entertainment of all kinds. Obviously no fixed outdoor play or circumscribed pageant can compare with a work like "The Birth of a Nation," the staging of which extended over hundreds of miles of locations and included the most diverse landscapes, environments and atmospheric effects.

And no three hour spoken play can possibly include the sweep of time, the epical historical range of this film drama with its 5000 scenes and comprehensive depiction of the Civil War and Reconstruction. "The Birth of a Nation" has received a larger number of tributes of praise from distinguished men than any other attraction on the boards in recent times. Scores of letters are received by the management every week from pleased patrons, and the overwhelming majority of Boston and New England theatregoers and of the public generally are thankful that the movement to drive the play from

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 19, 1915

TE SENDS THE AMENDED FILM BILL BACK TO HOUSE

ch stand was made in the ty the work of the pro- in passing the amended hip bill permitting a ma- d of a unanimous vote of Police Commissioner and of the Boston Municipal uppressing objectionable oking theatre licenses.

orwood of Hamilton, who the amendment as "too ed to reconsider. Senator mbridge, author of the and his colleagues show- der. It was put to a roll ng in a vote of sixteen for tion and fifteen against.

tight situation for the champions, who had ex- scrap of infl ce with ican majority to obstruct the form in which it had the House. Bean and the ious for colored votes, at the ways were so well the so-called "Birth of a nsure that the only hope rob it of its power by the ote amendment.

to reconsider promised to fruits of days of strategy, were turned on Senator f Quincy, who remained in nd refused to vote either ote would have deadlocked cast for Bean and would the day for reconsidera- own for the Norwood mo- as later proved. Langelier prompt to vote for the on Monday.

K TO THE HOUSE.

Bean argued that the mat- oroughly threshed out on s day and the amendment a vote of 20 to 18. This decide the question, he Senators Fay of Medford gh of Everett also opposed ation. The roll-call had ded by a rising vote of 15 resident Coolidge saw that ll vote of 18 to 15 was like- , he said:

rk will call the name of ent of the Senate."

t Coolidge then voted for me this year and made it a 8. This killed reconsidera- the amended censorship eturned to the House for e.

ll-call for reconsideration mmings, Eldridge, Fitzger- Hays, Jackson, Leonard, McGonagle, McLane, Nor- ley, Sullivan, Tetler, Timil- -16.

rtlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, anagh, Clark, Coolidge, El- fford, Gordon, Halgis, Kim- n, Tufts—16.

Yes—Hobbs, Doyle, Shee- Garst, Farnsworth, Bagley, Mason.

of the fact that the House rejected a similar amendment by a vote of 116 to 106, it is predicted that the amended bill will die a natural death between both branches.

The amendment was carried in the Senate on Monday by a roll-call vote of 20 to 18, as follows.

Yes—Bagley, Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Ellis, Farnsworth, Fay, Gifford, Gordon, Haigis, Kimball, Langelier, Martin, Mason, Perley, Timility—20.

No—Cummings, Doyle, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Hobbs, Jackson, Leonard, Marshand, McGonagle, McLean, Norwood, Sheehan, Sullivan, Tetler, Tufts, Wells—18.

Garst of Worcester was absent and President Coolidge did not vote.

PRESSURE IN HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation" lobbyists were much disappointed over the passage of the amendment and the colored forces were jubilant. While the colored people were anxious for a more drastic law, they were gratified to have the bill altered in such a way as to strengthen, in their opinion, the local system of censorship.

The colored people and their sympathizers do not feel any too kindly toward Mayor Curley and they claim now that if the amended censorship bill is concurred in by the House and made a law, it will give the Police Commissioner and Chief Justic of the Municipal Court, both appointed officers, a chance to obstruct any political decisions that the present or future Mayors might be tempted to make.

Pressure is already being brought to bear in the House to kill the amended measure when it comes before that body. The promotors of the bill would prefer the present statute to the amended bill, the present statute authorizing the Mayor and Police Commissioner jointly to suppress plays, if improper productions are persisted in. The present law, therefore, vests in the Mayor, whose function it is to award licenses, a half share in revoking the same, but the amended bill returned to the House would make it possible to eliminate the Mayor, the only elected officer of the censorship board, should his views differ from those of the Chief Justice and the Police Commissioner. It was this encroachment on "home rule," as Senator Hays of Brighton called it, that caused many of the Senators to fight the amendment.

"The Birth of a Nation" and City Hall interests would be much better off if no new measures had been introduced than they would with the amended law, according to the opinion of the mapority of motion picture men who showed no interest in the juliciary measure from the outset.

The rank and file of film distributors and exhibitors are awaiting with a great deal more eagerness the report of the Senate Ways and Means Committee on the grist of bills and amendments advocating State-wide censorship.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 18, 1915

ENATE FIGHTS OVER FILM BILL

ngrossed at Last by 15 to 14 Vote.

ly One Amendment, Making Majority of Censors Rule.

olve to Pay Marlboro for Filter Beds Rejected.

State Senate yesterday passed to ngrossed the bill commonly known e "Birth of a Nation" bill, creat- he Mayor and Police Commissioner ston and the Chief Justice of the cipal Court as a board to pass on rical licenses in this city with one dment, that a majority of the shall control its act. The House required that the board must be imous before it could suspend li- s.

debate occupied most of the aft- n. Various other amendments, genuine and some intended to kill ill, were offered and frequent at- s were made to postpone the mat- r a year, but all were voted down he Senate finally voted, 15 to 14, on nding vote to pass the bill to be ssed. There were seven rollcalls one was asked for on engrossment. ator Doyle seemed to lead the op- n, but his motion to refer to the General Court was lost, 15 to 18. rollcall. The motion of Senator of Boston providing for an appeal Superior Court was rejected on a vote. Senator Leonard of Boston that the board consist of the and Police Commissioner, but defeated, 8 to 12.

tor Fitzgerald of Boston moved he act should not take effect until , but lost, 7 to 17. Senator Hays moved for a referendum, but it ejected, 14 to 22, on a rollcall. by Senator Wells of Haverhill postpone the matter until today was 19 to 12, and Senator Hays mo- lar ...until

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 18, 1915

OPPONENTS OF 'BIRTH OF NATION' WIN

Amendment to Censor Bill Is Passed by Senate

Victory yesterday crowned the efforts of the colored people and others who have been fighting the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," when the Senate placed on the Boston censor bill the amendment the colored people have been struggling for, and then passed that bill to engrossment.

Under the amendment put on the bill yesterday a majority of the three proposed censors may revoke a license for a public entertainment.

THREE MUST AGREE

The original bill as passed by the House provides that the chief justice of the Municipal Court, the Mayor and the police commissioner may for any reason satisfactory to them revoke a license for a public entertainment. This bill, however, provided that the three censors must unanimously agree before a license could be revoked.

At present the Mayor and police commissioner may revoke a license if a show be deemed by them immoral. The colored people and other opponents of "The Birth of a Nation" did not want to take the chance of a unanimous agreement on this show. They tried in the House to get an amendment passed which would permit a majority of the proposed censors to suppress a show but failed.

Yesterday, however, Senator Bean of Cambridge again offered this amendment and it was carried by a vote of 20 to 18.

Hottest Fight of Year

Yesterday's fight over this bill was the hottest waged in the Senate this year. It took up nearly all of the afternoon and kept the Senate in session well into the early evening. In all seven roll calls were taken on it.

An effort was made to have the bill sent to the next General Court, to amend it to give the theatrical men the right of appeal to the courts, to postpone action until today and to amend it so that the act should not take effect until Aug. 1. All were defeated, although several of the votes were very close, that on postponement until today being lost on a tie.

The final vote on the bill was also close, it being 15 to 14. This was on a rising vote.

An effort will be made today, it is understood, to have the vote of yesterday reconsidered.

Under the amendment the bill will have to go back to the House again.

In the House the amendment passed in the Senate yesterday was offered by Representative Rowley of Brookline. The vote was 104 for to 116 against.

Committees on conference were appointed by President Coolidge on the physicians' registration and mechanics' lien bill, over which the Senate and House are deadlocked.

The New Haven bills are still in the hands of the committee on bills in the third reading.

The report of the fisheries and game committee, "reference to the next General Court," on the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency urging the reorganization of the fisheries and game department, was acepted.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 21, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION at Tremont Theatre.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first-class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two-dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters' hours performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith plan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvelous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performance given at 2:10 P. M. are exactly the same as those at night. Besides affording the advantage of cheaper prices, they give opportunity to out-of-town people to include a visit to the Tremont Theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 18, 1915

'BIRTH OF NATION' OPPONENTS WIN SENATE FIGHT

Bill Amended to Provide Majority Rule in Censors Board.

VOTE IS 20 TO 18 ON A ROLLCALL

Attempt Will Be Made to Defeat Engrossment of Act.

The opponents of "The Birth of a Nation" won out in the Senate yesterday, when they had the bill to provide for a board of three censors amended to provide that action by two of the three shall be sufficient to stop any production at their pleasure. The amendment was adopted by a vote of 20 to 18 on a roll-call.

Various amendments proposed by senators favorable to the passage of the bill as reported by the committee on the judiciary were defeated, one after another, and the bill was passed to be engrossed on a voice vote, 15 to 14.

May Defeat Engrossment

An effort to reconsider the engrossment of the bill will be made today, but if the Senate maintains its attitude of yesterday, the bill will have to go to the House for concurrence in the amendment.

An amendment to give two of the three members of the board the power to decide questions as to any production was defeated in the House, 104 to 116.

During yesterday's discussion of the bill in the enate the galleries were thronged with colored men and women and their sympathizers.

The roll-call on the Bean amendment was as follows:

Yes—Bagley, Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Ellis, Farnsworth, Fay, Gifford, Gordon, Haigis, Kimball, Langelier, Martin, Mason, Perley, Timilty—20.

No—Cummings, oyle, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Hobbs, Jackson, Leonard, Marchand, McGonagle, McLane, Norwood, Sheehan, Sullivan, Tetler, Tufts, Wells—18.

Senator Doyle of New Bedford then opposed the bill, saying that the adoption of the Bean amendment made it apparent there will be no legislation enacted this year, because, in his opinion, the House will again reject the "two of three" amendment.

Doyle then moved reference of the bill to the next General Court, which motion was defeated on a roll-call, 15 to 22.

Senator Hays of Boston moved an amendment to provide for an appeal from the board of censors to the Superior Court. This motion was defeated on a voice vote. Senator Leonard's motion to amend by eliminating the chief justice of the Municipal Court was lost, on a rising vote of 8 to 13.

A motion by Senator Wells to postpone further action until today was lost, 19 to 12 on a roll-call. Senator Fitzgerald moved to amend the act so it will take effect Aug. 1, but that motion was defeated on a rising vote of 7 to 17.

Senator Hays moved an amendment that the act shall take effect when accepted by a majority of the voters at the next annual election and further moved that consideration of this amendment be postponed to Wednesday. The motion to postpone was lost by a vote of 18 to 22. The referendum amendment was defeated, 14 to 22, and the bill was then passed to be en...

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
MAY 18, 1915

It is quite impossible at this distance to say whether the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," that local Negroes do not want shown here because they feel it is a reflection on their race, is even in its modified form an improper exhibit. But in the majority of such cases, that is where objections to plays are made on account of race or religious prejudices, the best way is to bar them and forget all about them. It is not essential that any of us see this disputed exhibition. The easiest way is not always the best way, but in this case it is.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
MAY 19, 1915

Negro Capacity.

The capacity of the black race, as a race, is of prime importance in the world, national and state politics. If the Southern conception, which is shared by far too many Northern people, that they are hopelessly inferior to the whites and so much so that they will never be fit for self-government, is the correct theory, then it is of large importance in the world where over half of the population is of some sort of color, where the blacks, pure and simple, largely outnumber the whites, and where the ratio of increase is much faster than among the whites. It is one of the incidental good things of the agitation over the "Birth of a Nation" that it brings out, even incidentally, some of the great gains by the black people, as a race, since the Civil War.

Here is an incident to show that the entire race has much greater capacity than it has yet developed and that it is not only to exceptional instances, like a few leaders, to whom we may look for better things, but that the entire body of black people is on the upgrade at a rapid gait. In the Springfield Republican is a letter from Kowaliga, in the black belt of Alabama. The story is that of a young negro man who, by the foresight and energy of his father, who was born a slave, was able to get an education in Fisk and Howard universities. That young man returned home to Kowaliga to lift up his entire race in that town. The original situation is thus described:

"When William E. Benson departed from Kowaliga to get his education, he left behind him a vast wilderness of splendid pine trees, sandy waste and a country inhabited almost entirely by negroes, all living in small one or two room cabins, under the most primitive conditions. The young man had lofty ideals of what he could do and of what his people could become. He has built up a school and has revolutionized the entire community. Here is a picture which is well worth the attention of those who doubt the inherent capacity of the negro to rise or to assimilate the civilization of the whites:

"All the work of the various industries is done by colored people. The engineer and trainmen on the railroad are negroes. Mr. Benson has plans for opening up further occupation for his people, including work for women. In the school the girls are taught sewing, cooking, millinery and housework. For the boys there is blacksmithing—enough to enable the men to shoe their own horses, mend their wagons and farm implements—carpentry and cabinet-making and farming, including breeding and care of stock. Each pupil has a chance to learn how to take part in the community life and work and the work is provided. There is land enough for everyone who wants a farm and the Dixie Industrial company will sell and stock farms on credit for those who have not the means to buy outright. About 15 years ago I made my first visit to Kowaliga and was taken all over the territory. One-room cabins, with only holes and wooden shutters for windows, were what most of the people occupied. At this time I found the old cabins replaced by neat cottages, with windows and piazzas. Fences, flower gardens and vines; everything showing that Mr. Benson has transformed the whole physical aspect of the place. Four or five years ago all the fine school buildings were burned, but new and better ones have been built on a more desirable site."

There is no intimation, and there is no probability that the negroes in Kowaliga are of any different stock from that of the entire South, nor that those in this place have done more than can be done elsewhere with equal leadership. The story is most inspiring for the future of the black race and these simple facts ought to open the minds of doubters and fill them with a spirit of helpfulness and patience for the benefit of these people whose race has been wronged unspeakably by the whites and who are now proving their title to our common humanity.

WORCESTER (Mass.) GAZETTE
MAY 19, 1915

President Calvin Coolidge sprung a surprise on the members of the Senate yesterday, when he jumped into the fight on the so-called "Birth of a Nation" film and by voting against reconsideration defeated a motion to that effect and at the same time, it is believed, prevented the defeat of the bill. At the Monday session the bill, which provides for a board of censors of three, consisting of the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court, to stop any theatrical production at their pleasure, was amended so that two of the three members should have the power to decide a question, instead of the requirement for unanimous action by the members.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 19, 1915

THE SENATE.

[illegible] President Coolidge voting to make the tie, a motion of Mr. Norwood of Essex to reconsider the engrossment of the "Birth of a Nation" bill was defeated, the president voting against reconsideration. Otherwise there was no material change from the line-up of yesterday for and against the bill. Mr. Bean stated that if his motion prevailed he would offer amendments to strike out the [illegible] for a decision by

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 19, 1915

Coolidge Saves "Movie" Bill; President's Vote Creates Tie

President Calvin Coolidge of the Senate saved "The Birth of a Nation" bill in the Senate this afternoon. On a motion to reconsider the engrossment of the bill yesterday the motion to reconsider at the end of the first roll call of the roll stood 16 "yes"—15 "no." With three pairs President Coolidge directed the clerk to call his name. He voted "no," thus creating a tie and killing reconsideration.

Mayor Curley has, according to State House gossip, taken a hand in the so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill. It is said that his representatives were working hard to induce senators who yesterday voted for the engrossment of the bill with the Bean amendment to shift their votes this afternoon and to favor a motion to reconsider the engrossment of the bill as amended.

The Bean amendment, which was adopted late yesterday on a rollcall vote of 20 to 18, places the authority to revoke and suspend licenses for theatrical and like exhibitions in the hands of a majority of a board consisting of the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal Court, instead of requiring a unanimous vote of the board.

The bill as amended was passed to be engrossed yesterday afternoon by a rising vote of 15 to 14, with no rollcall asked.

The rollcall was:

Yes—Cummings, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Jackson, Leonard, Marchand, McGonagle, McLane, Norwood, Perley, Sullivan, Tetler, Timilty, Wells—16.

No—Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Coolidge (president), Ellis, Fay, Gifford, Gorton, Haigis, Kimball, Martin, Tufts—16.

Paired—For, Hobbs, Doyle, Sheehan; against, Garst, Farnsworth, Bagley.

Not recorded—Mason, Langelier.

On yesterday's vote for the amendment Senators Perley and Timilty were recorded in favor and today they both voted in favor of reconsideration.

HOLYOKE (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 19, 1915

COOLIDGE SAVES BILL.

"The Birth of a Nation" Bill Has Narrow Escape—Springfield Borrows Money.

It took President Coolidge of the Senate yesterday to save "The Birth of a Nation" bill when a motion was made to reconsider the engrossment of the day before. At the end of the first roll-call the Senate stood "Yes" 16, "No" 15. The president asked the clerk to call his name and he voted "No", creating a tie and killing reconsideration. Senator Sheehan of this city was paired against Senator Garst.

The committee on roads and bridges held a private celebration in the Quincy House Monday night at which time they presented Senator Haigis of Montague, chairman of the committee, with a silk hat.

Rules in both branches of the Legislature were suspended yesterday and the bill authorizing the city of Springfield to borrow $200,000 as an addition to its underpass loan got in. No opposition was met.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 19, 1915

SENATE STANDS BY CENSOR BILL

President's Vote Blocks Reconsideration of Amended Measure.

President Coolidge of the state Senate blocked reconsideration of the engrossment of "The Birth of a Nation" censorship bill yesterday by having his name called and voting no, thus creating a tie.

Reconsideration was first refused by a tie vote of 15 to 15, the men rising. On the roll call the vote ran 16 to 15, but Senator Langelier of Quincy, who was present in the chamber, did not vote. President Coolidge waited a minute, when the poll had reached this point, and then availed himself of his right to vote.

The refusal of the Senate to allow reconsideration of the engrossment, which would have opened the way for striking off the amendment added on Monday, providing that a majority of the three Boston censors might stop a performance, has brought about a general change in the situation.

The current opinion is now that the House will accept this amendment, although Mayor Curley is strongly opposed to it on the ground that it allows the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court to revoke a license which the mayor alone can grant.

The roll call in the Senate on reconsideration was as follows: Yes—Cummings, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Jackson, Leonard, Marchand, McGonagle, McLane, Norwood, Perley, Sullivan, Tetler, Timilty, Wells—16.

No—Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, Bean, Cavenaugh, Clark, Coolidge, Ellis, Fay, Gifford, Gordon, Haigis, Kimball, Martin, Tufts—16.

Paired—Yes, Hobbs, Doyle, Sheehan; no, Garst, Farnsworth, Bagley.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 19, 1915

CENSORS BILL NEAR BAD SNAG

Coolidge's Vote Stops Reconsideration By Senate

The Boston triple censor bill advocated by the opponents of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation" came within an ace of striking a bad snag in the Senate yesterday.

COOLIDGE VOTES

Only the action of President Coolidge in ordering his name called during a roll call prevented a reconsideration of the vote of Monday whereby the bill was amended to provide that a majority of the Board of Censors shall be sufficient to revoke a license for a public entertainment. Originally the bill required a unanimous vote of the three censors.

Those opposed to the show "The Birth of a Nation" have been fighting for the majority provision.

Yesterday Senator Norwood asked for a reconsideration of Monday's vote.

On a rising vote the count was 15 yes and 15 no and reconsideration was declared refused. A roll call was asked, however, and the vote on this was 16 for to 15 against, when President Coolidge for the second time this year said "The clerk will call the name of the president of the Senate." Then the president voted "No," making it a tie and killing reconsideration.

Representative Langelier, who voted for majority rule Monday, sat in his seat and did not vote yesterday.

The bill will now go back to the House for concurrence in the amendment. There yesterday afternoon a quiet canvass was being made for and against the Senate amendment.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 20, 1915

PHOTO PLAY OPPONENTS WIN AGAIN

Amendment to Censor Bill Is Passed by House

Another big victory was added yesterday to the already long string of successes which the opponents of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation" have achieved at the State House when the House of Representatives voted to concur with the Senate's "majority rule" amendment to the Boston triple censor bill.

NEARLY TWO TO ONE

By a vote of nearly two to one, the House reversed the position which it took on this amendment when the bill was first before the House. The vote on the amendment yesterday was 136 for, to 71 against. When the amendment was presented in the House last week the vote was 104 for to 116 against.

Yesterday's shift was accomplished by a coalition of the Governor's forces and those of the Republican leaders. Incidentally Mayor Curley's representatives from City Hall made a desperate fight to defeat the amendment. They lobbied the House against the measure.

One of the Governor's secretaries was busy in the lobby lining up the Democrats, while the Republican leaders cracked the "whip" and tore a number of the members away from the theatrical men who fought the amendment bitterly.

The question is expected to come up in the Senate in the enactment stage today, and the opponents of the bill put in the latter part of yesterday afternoon and evening in an effort to kill the amendment.

Last night the advocates and opponents of the bill were "neck and neck," as it were, in the battle for votes in the Senate. Each side had pretty near an equal number of votes.

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 19, 1915

Calvin Coolidge voting to make the tie, a motion to reconsider the engrossment of the "Birth of a Nation" bill was defeated, the president voting against reconsideration. Otherwise there was no material change from the line-up of yesterday for and against the bill. Mr. Bean stated that if his motion prevailed he would offer amendments to strike out the [illegible] for a decision by

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 19 1915

COOLIDGE SAVES BILL AIMED AT PHOTOPLAY

Votes Against Reconsideration of Engrossment, Creating a Tie—Rumor Says Republicans Fear to Alienate Negro Voters of the State.

President Coolidge of the Senate came to the rescue of the opponents of "The Birth of a Nation" yesterday, and by voting against reconsideration of engrossment created a tie vote and defeated the motion.

The action of the president was something of a surprise, even to the advocates of the bill, who, although they realized his influence had been with them, did not believe he would "go the distance."

When the vote was 16 to 15 in favor of reconsideration at the conclusion of the roll-call, and the president directed that his name be called, it was explained by some of the opponents of the measure that the Republican party leaders had come to the conclusion that the defeat of the bill would alienate the negro vote in the State and cause the party serious injury in the coming State election.

Threat to Kill Bill

It was said at the opening of the Senate yesterday that the opponents of the bill had the votes to reconsider its engrossment, and that if they were unable to strike out the Bean amendment, which provides that two of the three censors shall have the power to stop any production at a Boston theatre at their pleasure, the Senate would kill the bill entirely.

There was much scurrying around the chamber on both sides at the opening. It was announced that Senators Timilty of Boston and Perley of Salem, who were in favor of the Bean amendment Monday, would shift, and that Senators Langelier of Quincy and Mason of Medway, also in favor of the Bean amendment on a previous roll, will not answer to their names.

As the Bean amendment was carried by a margin of only two votes [illegible] the change was expected to be made to accomplish the purpose of the measure's opponents.

Senator Tufts of Waltham has [illegible] the program, however. On Monday he voted against the Bean amendment, yesterday he voted against reconsideration.

Senators Timilty and Perley [illegible] and Senators Langelier and Mason did not vote, according to station, but the Tufts' shift, the other way gave President 16 chance to win the [illegible] and he took it.

Back to the House

The bill will go back to the House today for concurrence with the Senate amendment, and it was said last night by those leading the opposition to the same amendment when it was there in the House last week, that they believe there will be enough shifts in the House branch to insure the adoption of the amendment when it is next voted on. The "two-of-three" amendment offered by Representative Bowler of Boston, when the bill was last before the House, was defeated by the narrow margin of 26 to 24.

The Senate yesterday divided on the question of reconsideration as follows:

Yes—Senators Cummings, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Jackson, Leonard, Marchand, McGonagle, McLane, Norwood, Perley, Sullivan, Tetler, Timilty, Wells—16.

No—Senators Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Coolidge, Ellis, Fay, Gifford, Gordon, Haigis, Kimball, Martin, Tufts—16.

Paired—Yes, Senator Hobbs; [illegible] Senator Doyle; no, Senator Garst, Farnsworth, Bagley.

Not voting—Senators Langelier, Mason.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
MAY 20, 1915

Censorship Bill in House.

The House yesterday concurred with the Senate in its amendments to the theatrical censorship bill for Boston, with the result that the measure, which next goes to the Senate for enactment, provides that the mayor, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court of Boston may by a majority vote of their number revoke the license of any exhibition or performance for any cause whatever if they believe its continuance to be against public welfare.

The vote for concurrence was unusually large, 136 to 71, and shows that the energies of the colored people and others who are interested in stopping the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," was not without result, as originally the House passed the bill providing for a unanimous vote of the three censors and rejected the amendment, 104 to 116.

Notice was received from the Senate that the upper branch had refused to concur in the House amendments to the Boston and Maine bill. The House voted to insist upon its amendments, however, and Messrs. Jewett of Lowell, Bothfeld of Newton and McMorrow of Boston were appointed a committee on conference.

By a vote of 202 to 6, and without debate, the House agreed to an amendment of the constitution striking out the requirement that taxes shall be assessed proportionally.

PALMER (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 20 1915

[illegible] has been hot in both houses over the moving picture bill, the most [illegible] cause for which is the "Birth of a Nation," which is running at Boston to-day after several weeks of [illegible] performances and which is very objective to the colored people. The bill before the House relates to Boston [illegible] As it passed the House it required [illegible] unanimous action of a [illegible] board of three in order to [illegible] removal of any offensive subject. [illegible] the colored people wanted it [illegible] and the Senate has amended it so that the vote of two of the three will [illegible]

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 20, 1915

[illegible] publican victory this year.

THEATRICAL CENSORSHIP.

Bill Through Both Branches—House Favors Taxation Amendment.

The Massachusetts House Wednesday concurred with the Senate in its amendment to the theatrical censorship bill for Boston, with the result that the measure, which next goes to the Senate for enactment, provides that the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal court of Boston may by a majority vote revoke the license of any exhibition or performance for any cause whatever if they believe its continuance to be against public welfare.

The vote for concurrence was unusually large, 136 to 71, and shows that the energies of the colored people and others who are interested in stopping the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," was not without results.

By a vote of 202 to 6, and without debate, the House agreed to an amendment of the constitution striking out the requirement that taxes shall be assessed proportionally.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 20, 1915

House Concurs with Senate in "Birth of Nation" Bill

By a vote of 176 to 31 the House this afternoon concurred with the Senate in an amendment providing that the Boston Censorship Board may act by a majority of its members, instead of unanimously.

LEGISLATIVE. MASON.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
MAY 20, 1915

...olored brethren, and the sis... are terribly stirred up over ...th of a Nation." They have ...own such interest in any legis... since the state house was built. ...ve thronged the galleries to ... debate. They have hung on ... of the different speakers ... closest attention. They have ...erfect models of proper be... during the arguments. They ...med to feel as if their dignity ... respect were challenged and it ... them to make good ... presence of a harsh ...ical world. They have insist... their common humanity with ...man beings and it is this as... of race dignity and worth which ...entral feature of all the talk. ...ling legislation applies to Bos... and the essence of the bill ...there shall be a board of three ... who shall have power to say, ...mous vote, whether a play is ...tionable that it ought to be ... from the stage. That was ... the house passed it. The ken... ...nded by making a two-thirds' ...tead of a unanimous one, suf... ...r action by the board. This ...at the colored people wanted, ...ould be easier to get two men ...an to get a unanimous board. ...he question was on the concur... ... the house with the senate ...ent. Debate was hot. Mr. ...of Barre innocently moved the ... question near the beginning ...rgument, but the sharp protest ...Donovan of Boston led him to ...w it. Mr. Cross of Royalston ... stirring speech against the en... and the amendment, telling of ...er's experience in South Caro... ...the terrible reconstruction days. ...house, by roll call, voted, 136 to ...ncur and thus the colored peo... ...gratified.

WORCESTER (Mass.) POST
MAY 20, 1915

Photoplay Censorship

...colored brethren and the sis... too, are terribly stirred up over ..."Birth of a Nation." They have ...shown such interest in any leg... ...n since the state house was ... They have thronged the gal... to hear the debate. They have ...on the words of the different ...ers with the closest attention. ... have been perfect models of ... behavior during the arguments. ... have seemed to feel as if their ...y and self-respect were chal... ...d and it was for them to make ...in the presence of a harsh and ...al world.

...y have insisted upon their com... ...humanity with other human be... ...and it is this assertion of race ...ity and worth which is the cen... ...feature of all the talk. The pend... ...legislation applies to Boston alone ... the essence of the bill is that there ... be a board of three censors who ... have power to say, by unanimous ..., whether a play is so objectionable ... it ought to be removed from the ...e. That was the way the House ...ed it. The Senate amended by ...ing a two-thirds' vote, instead of ...nanimous one, sufficient action by ... board.

...his was what the colored people ...ted, for it would be easier to get ... men to act than to get a unani... ...s board. Wednesday the question ... on the concurrence by the House ...h the Senate amendment. Debate ... hot. Mr. Adams of Barre inno... ...tly moved the previous question ...r the beginning of the argument, ... the sharp protest of Mr. Donovan ... him to withdraw it. Mr. Cross of ...ralston made a stirring speech ...inst the entire bill and the amend... ...t, telling of Dr. Oliver's experience ... South Carolina in the terrible re... ...struction days. But the House, by ...call, voted, 136 to 71, to concur, and ...s the colored people were gratified. ...epresentative Crowley of Abington ...d Gov. Walsh a high compliment ... the occasion of the debate on the ... for correspondence and university ...ension courses. He said that we ... a governor who was not ashamed ... his humble origin, nor of the efforts ...ich he made to secure a liberal edu... ...tion. He praised the governor's ...ssage in favor of university and ex... ...sion courses and helped stir up the ...pport of the bill, and was able by ... margin of 20 votes, to prevent the ...ference of the bill to the next Legis... ...ture. Possibly they will get back ... ...metime later. But the debate Wed... ...sday forenoon was fair, and it is not ...pected that any soreness will be left.

LAWRENCE (Mass.) SUN-AMERICAN
MAY 20, 1915

By a vote of 136 to 71 the House yesterday agreed to the amendment to the so-called "Birth of a Nation" censorship bill, added by the Senate, which provides that a majority and not a unanimous vote of the censorship board shall be sufficient to revoke a theatre's license. A fight was waged by the Boston Democrats, but it was ineffectual and the bill now goes before the Governor for sig...ture.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 20, 1915

...Next was the moving picture bill, the question being concurrence with the Senate amendment to permit action by a majority vote of the board of censors, instead of by unanimous vote. Mr Sheehan of Boston opposed concurrence. His main ground was that local self-government LEGISLATIVE ... the bill related to Boston alone. Mr Donovan of Boston followed on the same line. Mr Cross of Royalston was strongly against the amendment and against the bill as a case of hysteria. He affirmed his regard for the colored people, but insisted that the "Birth of a Nation," except for the Ku-klux phase, is historically correct and he quoted former Representative Dr James Oliver of Athol, who was in South Carolina during reconstruction times as saying that political conditions there were perfectly horrible with the ignorant Negroes under scalawag carpet baggers. Mr Rowley of Brookline said the matter must be discussed as a legal proposition, not on account of this particular case. The same rule of majority action should obtain as in the cases of all other boards. Mr Drury of Waltham said that if all three censors must act, no action could be taken if one were absent. Mr Abbott of Haverhill regretted the undue sensitiveness of the Negroes. Mr Kennard of Somerville believed it good policy for the House to concur. W. H. Sullivan of Boston, as a matter of fairplay to the colored people, favored concurrence. The appeal to logic and to the American heart are on the same side and for the petition of the Negroes.

Mr Dowse of Sherborn favored concurrence, on the ground of applying the same rule as applies to other boards of public officials. Moreover, this particular play is a perversion of history and an insult to Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson, George S. Boutwell and other men of that era.

General debate was closed at 4.15, according to previous vote, and Mr Burr of Boston had the close and opposed concurrence. He gave some time to Mr Mildram of Boston. A rising vote on concurrence had 82 yeas to 61 nays. On a roll-call there ...

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 20, 1915

...BIRTH OF A NATION" BILL AGAIN AMENDED

House Agrees to Give Majority of Censors Authority

By a vote of 136 to 71 the House yesterday agreed to the amendment to the so-called "Birth of a Nation" censorship bill, added by the Senate, which provides that a majority and not a unanimous vote of the censorship board shall be sufficient to revoke a theatre's license.

A fight was waged by the Boston Democrats, but it was ineffectual and the bill now goes before the Governor for signature.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 20, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Mass Meeting

A public mass meeting on the latest phase of the fight against the "Birth of a Nation" photo-play will be held tonight at St. Mark's Church, 1042 Tremont street, under the Guardian defence fund committee at 8 o'clock. Dr. C. G. Steward will preside. Among the speakers will be Dr. I. L. Roberts, the Rev. M. A. N. Shaw, Mr. Wm. D. Brigham, the Rev. A. W. Fuller, W. M. Trotter and Mr. S. Craig.

Times, New Bedford, Mass. May 20, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE SHOWN HERE.

FF

Manager Lefebvre of the Orpheum and Thevien theatres has just returned from New York where he went for the sole purpose of making arrangements to present in both his playhouses here "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Lefebvre was unable to secure the production immediately as it cannot be shown in New England at any theatre while the Boston engagement, which will last for six weeks longer, is in progress. At the expiration of that time and just as soon as it can be released for New Bedford, Manager Lefebvre promises that he will book it.

In speaking of the picture Mr. Lefebvre said: "So much has been said and written about this really wonderful film that I am determined to give New Bedford people an opportunity to see it and shall do so at the very earliest moment possible. It has been my policy ever since I came to this city to offer the best at all times and although I have booked some of the biggest attractions ever produced here it goes without saying that "The Birth of a Nation," will be without question the biggest thing which mine or any other theatres in the city have ever attempted. The expense is going to be tremendous but I firmly believe that I shall receive the hearty support of people not only of New Bedford but from miles around who will want to see this famous film

MILFORD (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 20, 1915
5

ACT WITH DELIBERATION.

"Look before you leap" is an old admonition that concerns men of action in every walk of life. Its import is to weigh thoroughly the end in sight before the adoption of means with which to attain it. Such a course of deliberation is especially desirable when the mind of the actor is subject to any kind of agitation. It is not safe to act when one's sensibilities are aroused or when a special incitement is dominant. Legislators who make the laws of the land should hesitate to undertake to frame an enactment to regulate public affairs when under the stress of irritating circumstances. In the face of a special flurry they are apt to overlook the true end and aim of all legislation, which is not to suit or discipline a class of people, but to serve the greatest good of the greatest number.

Recently a storm of angry feeling has been aroused by the moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation," the colored population and its champions having been scandalized and offended by its interpretation of southern life in ante bellum days. The negro race and its friends insist that great injustice has been done those who were freed from slavery by the edict of emancipation, and they have sought to have the offending film tabooed. Some members of the General Court, acting in the interests of the black man, are trying to enact a bill to establish a censorship of the movies, their whole aim being to cut out "The Birth of a Nation." Granting that the movie is as objectionable as it is represented, it is wholly false to frame a general law in order to meet a special source of irritation.

Neither the American nation nor the state of Massachusetts recognizes the existence of classes. Much less does either justify the passing of laws to appease the anger of a few. If the legislature really wants to do justice to the question of a censorship of the movies it should wait until the present agitation has died out, and then frame a bill that will the best conserve the interests of all the people of the state.

Fitchburg Mass. May 20, 1915

BRITISH CENSORSHIP AND THE CRISIS

All the troubles which now confront the British government can be traced directly or indirectly to its censorship of news. The censorship has been pushed to such extremes that editors and reporters of obscure provincial papers have suddenly leaped into fame through being haled into court and fined. A reporter is offered a private letter from the front whose writer is locally well known. He copies it or makes extracts from it and turns it in for publication. The editor passes it and the next day he and the reporter are fined and incidentally are stigmatized as semi-traitors. The British press patiently endured this treatment for months, but its patience is becoming exhausted, and it is now either leading or pushing the movement for a coalition ministry. The newspapers want the news and the public wants them to have it. The British press is sensible enough and responsible enough not to publish war secrets. It would heed any reasonable request the government might make for reticence, but when editors and reporters are fined for printing what are not secrets but simply matters of local interest to their readers, such as the whereabouts and condition of "the company," it realizes that the censorship has attained inquisitorial powers smacking more of Russia than Great Britain.

Besides stirring up the opposition of the press the censorship has had another very unfortunate effect. It has kept Britons in the dark as to what progress they have made in meeting the military requirements of the realm. The two questions the British public wants answered are:

How many men have been enlisted since the war began?

How many men do you require to meet the needs of the nation?

The answer to one question involves the answer to the other. So far there has been no plain yet comprehensive answer to the first. Outside the limited "inner circle" at headquarters no man can accurately state the exact number of soldiers Great Britain has under arms today. Generalities are the only things Britons get in response to their inquiries, round numbers applying only to certain sections of the great war area. Lord Kitchener's confession the other night that he needs and wants 300,000 more recruits, and Mr. Tennant's hint that the government may yet resort to compulsory service, that is, conscription, must give additional impetus to British criticism of the censorship as an obstacle to a full exhibition of the military strength of the empire.

Inasmuch as Kitchener is regarded as responsible for the severity of the censorship, and has been in effect the dictator clothed with the powers that Wellington himself never possessed, he is the head and front of the offending to the British press. In the present crisis the newspapers have found both courage and opportunity to say things they have long been thinking, and such remarks about Kitchener as "Hercules is growing old" and the suggestion that India is his proper sphere of action, measure the intensity of the revolt.

At this distance it seems that Kitchener has done a great work, even if we are unable to measure its numerical proportions. It also seems to us that Great Britain will commit not a mistake but a blunder if it does not frankly recognize and fully continue Kitchener's great services.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 21 1915

FF

JOSEPH HENABERRY
As President Lincoln in "The Birth of a ...

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 21, 1915

PURSUER PROTESTS.

...ings of Those Opposed to "Birth of a Nation" Held at Roxbury.

Further protests against "The Birth of a Nation" were heard last evening at a meeting of the Guardian Defenders at St. Mark Congregational Church, 1047 Tremont st, Roxbury. Dr C. G. Stewart presided and the speakers included Sherwin L. Cook, Joseph Manning of Alabama, Rev S. A. Brown, Dr I. L. Roberts, William D. Brigham, Dr A. B. Lattimore, Joshua A. Crawford and W. Monroe Trotter.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 21, 1915

"What Humperdinck's music is adapted to 'The Miracle,' which I in Boston, was the first big photoplay seen in Boston," says David W. Griffith, "Yards of music had to be sawed off, so to speak, to fit the reels. No one thought of adapting the music, scene by scene, as music is adapted to stage and opera. But for 'The Birth of a Nation' I have utilized the grand opera technic.

"With 12 reels there are several hundred scenes, each from four to a dozen long. When the pictures were taken I had my musical director, Joseph Carl Breil, supply each principal character with a musical theme or motif. A provisional score of our 'opera' was prepared on the field, and after the camera had done its work this score was amplified and made to fit the pictures."

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 21, 1915

RECORD LETTER BOX

Negro Representation

To the Editor of The Record:—

Having attended many Legislative sessions at which debates were held upon the photo play, "Birth of a Nation," especially, and censorship of moving picture plays in general, I was led to consider the fact that negro representation was needed at the State House, in order to properly represent the colored race.

There were able and fair Legislators who advocated the amendments desired by the colored proponents of the censorship bill.

However, it does seem to be a fair conclusion that among the 20,000 members of the colored race in Boston, there might be a voter and citizen among them who could adequately and capably represent their interests. If there has been in the past, men of political aspirations who held such representative positions in the Legislature or the Common Council, who were not proper representatives, but were considered as politicians only, of unsavory record, I am sure there are, today, men of quite a different character who should consider the advisability for going into political life as a fit representative.

Surely, the time has now come for a new course to be pursued, for the colored race, have now, during this recent agitation, a great opportunity to declare themselves and vindicate their character before the public.

Carrie G. Barr.

Boston, May 20.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 21, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Bill Is Enacted in the Senate

The bill providing for a board of censors for Boston motion pictures, an outgrowth of the agitation over the photo play, "Birth of a Nation," was enacted in the Senate this afternoon. There was a large delegation of colored people in the galleries, some of them with opera glasses. An attempt to postpone enactment was defeated by a vote of 18 to 17. The bill was then enacted by a viva voce vote and Senator Martin Hays of Boston gave notice that he will move for reconsideration.

PORTLAND (Me.) PRESS
APRIL 21, 1915

The advertising the photo play "The Birth of a Nation" is securing in Boston is making the press agents of other moving picture productions green with envy.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 21, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Passing into its third month of a wonderful run at the Tremont Theatre in Boston, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the dramatic sensations of the season.

With the approach of the memorial day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstanings of the past we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

NO. ATTLESBORO (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 21, 1915

NOTES FROM STATE HOUSE

State House, Boston, May 21.—Another effort was made yesterday to kill "The Birth of a Nation" censorship bill. The bill was enacted without opposition in the house but when it reached the senate a determined effort was made to kill the measure.

The first opposition move was to postpone enactment. This was voted down, 17 to 18, and the opponents then realized they didn't have the votes and permitted the enactment to be made without a roll call. They gave notice, however, that an effort to reconsider would be made today. This is not likely to win out. The measure is expected to again win out this afternoon by a single vote.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 21, 1915

FUND STARTED FOR TROTTER

Mass Meeting Acts in Recognition of Work Against "The Birth of a Nation."

At a crowded mass meeting in St. Mark's Congregational Church, 1042 Tremont street, last night, steps were taken toward raising $1000 for William Munroe Trotter, in recognition of his services as editor of the Guardian in leading the contest against "The Birth of a Nation." It is planned to transform the Guardian from a weekly to a daily.

The principal speakers were ex-Representative Sherwin L. Cox, Joseph Manning of Birmingham, Ala.; William Dexter Brigham, the Rev. Dr. Isaac L. Roberts, the Rev. M. A. N. Shaw, the Rev. S. A. Brown, the Rev. A. W. Puller and the Rev. Dr. Latimore.

Sherwin L. Cook lauded Trotter's motives as "always honest and pure, although he once flayed me on a public question concerning which I believe I was right and he was wrong." Mr. Cook described Charles Sumner Bird as "the son of an abolitionist and the namesake of the Sumner who is so shamefully traduced in the play," and added: "I wrote to Mr. Bird asking him to stand shoulder to shoulder with those who denounce this play as false to history and false to the nation, this play which represents the colored troops, led by a Shaw, a Hallowell, or a Higginson, in the midst of rapine and arson, and represents a union soldier about to bayonet a wounded confederate.

"But Mr. Bird, who doesn't have to run a paper for profit, replied that he had seen the play twice, and found more good than bad in it. He added a lot of sympathy for the colored people, but I replied that it was a pity he could not find something concrete that he could do for them, and to that I have received no answer. How a man with the blood of abolitionists in his veins can take such a stand is astonishing."

Reports were received from several heads of the women's clubs. One woman said her club had already organized with 19 members, each pledged to at least $1.

"Mr. Trotter went to Washington and got the President, and then he came back here and got the mayor, and then he got the Governor, and if you told him to go to Germany he'd get Emperor William himself!" she declared, amid shouts of laughter and applause. "Whether 'The Birth of a Nation' goes or stays, we'll fight on, and we'll have a daily paper," she concluded.

Joseph Manning made a vitriolic speech in which he declared:

"The day of free speech for the colored people in Alabama no longer exists. Twenty years ago a colored man might speak or write down there, but if he dares to utter or write anything now concerning his own rights he is likely to leave for a faraway place. The same sort of menace to the colored race hangs over Boston today. As for me I am called to go back to Birmingham, and you may not hear me speak again. Indeed, this may be my last public talk, but I am as ready to die with my boots on as with them off. But as for you, build up your breastworks, by such a paper as the Guardian."

The Rev. S. A. Brown, pastor of the church, denounced Senator Martin Hays, as having "disgraced his constituents," in preventing the enactment of the censorship bill yesterday. The speaker praised Senator Timilty for standing firm through seven roll-calls, but regretted that he finally yielded to pressure and voted for reconsideration. The audience were all urged to go to the State House for the final battle at 11 A. M. today.

BOSTON (Mass.) GLOBE
MAY 21, 1915

SENATE ENACTS CENSORS' BILL

...ut Contest Will Be Reopened Today.

Two Compensation Act Changes Beaten and Two Accepted.

New Haven Measures Pass With Amendments.

The State Senate yesterday passed to be enacted the bill which makes the Mayor and Police Commissioner of Boston and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court a board to pass on theatrical productions. This is the "Birth of a Nation" bill.

It took the Senate very few minutes to act on this matter. When it came up, Senator McLane moved that it be postponed until today; Senator Bean opposed postponement, and the motion was lost, 17 to 18, on a rollcall. The bill was then passed to be enacted by a voice vote.

But the troubles of the friends of the bill have not yet ended. Senator Hays announced that he should today move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was enacted, but later in yesterday's session he made the motion to reconsider, and, under the rules, that motion went over to today. Consequently there will be another fight at today's session.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 21, 1915

Negro Representation

To the Editor of The Advertiser:—

Having attended many Legislative sessions at which debates were held upon the photo play, "Birth of a Nation," especially, censorship of moving picture plays in general, I was led to consider the fact that negro representation was needed at the State House, in order to properly represent the colored race.

There were able and fair Legislators who advocated the amendments desired by the colored proponents of the censorship bill.

However, it does seem to be a fair conclusion that among the 25,000 members of the colored race in Boston, there might be a voter and citizen among them who could adequately and capably represent their interests. If there has been in the past, men of political aspirations who held such representative positions in the Legislature or the Common Council, who were not proper representatives, but were considered as politicians only, of unsavory record, I am sure there are, today, men of quite a different character who should consider the advisability for going into political life as a fit representative.

Surely, the time has now come for a new course to be pursued, for the colored race have now, during this recent agitation, a great opportunity to declare themselves and vindicate their character before the public.

Carrie G. Barr.

LYNN (Mass.) ITEM
MAY 21, 1915

NEGRO BUSINESS LEAGUE THANKFUL FOR HELP

The Boston Negro Business league, by a special committee, Julius B. Goddard, Jacob W. Powell, William C. Lovett, C. Alexander Johnson and Daniel F. Hall, has issued resolutions disclaiming any responsibility and refusing to accept as true charges that Philip J. Allston and William A. Cox had endorsed the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," as had been stated in some Boston papers.

The league also thanks all who aided in the warfare against the exhibition of the picture which it characterizes as a "dastardly exhibition of race hatred and calumny."

HUDSON (Mass.) MERCURY
MAY 21, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Passing into its third month of a wonderful run at the Tremont theatre, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the dramatic sensation of the season.

With the approach of Memo... half a century after the scenes ... which call for these observances, over the country this highest deve... ment of the motion picture art bears keen relationship to current events.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 21, 1915

...will to-morrow. Moore Bean and Fay of Middlesex opposed postponement, and it was refused, 17 to 18, with four pairs. The bill was then passed to be enacted by a voice vote. Mr Hays of Suffolk gave notice that he would move reconsideration to-morrow.

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 21, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION FOES WIN; CENSOR BILL NOW A LAW

The bill for a three-headed play censorship board in Boston giving unlimited power to its members, was signed by Gov. Walsh today at 1:30 P. M.

It went to him for his signature as the result of the Senate's action in refusing to reconsider its enactment of the measure.

The roll call in the Senate today, refusing reconsideration, was 22 to 16, the biggest margin the bill has had during its appearance before the upper body of the Legislature. The Senate galleries were crowded during the debate on reconsideration.

The measure gives the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court unlimited powers to revoke the license of an objectionable production and provides for majority vote decisions. The bill in its original form, required unanimous decisions, but was amended after sharp and bitter fighting to provide for decisions by majority vote.

After the measure was enacted by the House yesterday it was sent to the Senate for enactment, the last step necessary before it goes to the Governor. Shortly after the Senate met in the afternoon, supporters of the measure learned that it was mysteriously missing, and after a hasty and excited search discovered it in the possession of a Boston senator who has steadily opposed the measure. The measure was then placed on the desk of President Coolidge of the Senate, and after the Senate had disposed of the matters on its daily calendar, the measure was passed to be enacted by a voice vote, following the refusal of the Senate, by a roll-call vote of 18 to 17 with three pairs, to postpone consideration until today.

Senator Hays of Boston then gave notice that he would move reconsideration of enactment today, but just before the Senate adjourned for the day he attempted to catch the friends of the measure napping by making an unexpected motion for reconsideration at that time. This motion, to be considered, required unanimous consent, however, and Senator Bean of Cambridge promptly objected. As a result, Hays's motion for reconsideration went into the orders of the day for today.

Supporters of the measure are confident that the Hays motion for reconsideration will be rejected today and that any attempt to secure postponement will also be voted down.

The Senate meets at 11 A. M., Fridays, and an early disposition of the matter is expected today. Supporters of the measure have no doubt but that Gov. Walsh will sign the bill when it reaches him.

Not for some time has so much underground wire-pulling at the 11th hour been resorted to in an attempt to kill a measure as in the case of this three-headed censorship bill. All the weight of Mayor Curley's influence has been thrown against the measure, and interests friendly to "The Birth of a Nation" are said to have been also working hard. Opponents of the measure worked desperately yesterday to secure votes enough to kill the bill, and, failing in this, attempted to get sufficient votes to obtain a day's postponement. In the latter campaign, they also lost out.

The tactics used by the general staff of the opposition and Hays's snap motion for reconsideration yesterday afternoon, after his public notice that he would move reconsideration today, have disgusted several senators who have heretofore voted against the measure, and if they are in the same frame of mind this morning as they were last night, the motion for reconsideration is likely to be defeated by a comparatively wide margin. One senator, who has voted steadily against the measure served notice on the opposition leaders, Senators McLane of Fall River and Hays of Boston, that he would vote against reconsideration today.

The measure was enacted without opposition in the House yesterday shortly before the House took its noon-day recess. The measure was then sent to the Senate. Knowledge that the foes of the bill were planning an attempt to kill it on its enactment stage in the Senate drew one of the largest crowds of the year to galleries and floor, and for the first time in several years, the president's private gallery was thrown open to the public. Practically all of the men and women who have been prominent in the protest against "The Birth of a Nation" were attending.

Shortly after the Senate met, at 2 P. M., all sorts of rumors regarding the attempts being considered to kill the bill were in circulation. Finally, several House members who have supported the measure, walked quietly to the desk of President Coolidge, where the bill was supposed to be, and, to their consternation, discovered that it was missing. Clerks knew nothing about it, and an impromptu search began at once. The bill was found in the possession of a Boston senator, an opponent of the measure. He had it in a pocket and brought it in to the president's desk.

Some of the supporters of the measure then stated that information had come to them which indicated that certain opponents of the measure, in a desperate

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
MAY 21, 1915

...attempt to secure delay for at least one other day, had planned to have the bill temporarily "disappear." They stated, however, that the absence of evidence which would definitely confirm the apparently authoritative information they had received prevented them from making public charges of any nature. The senator who was found with the bill was not implicated in any way, they said.

After the Senate had recovered from the successful search for the missing bill the regular business of the day was taken up with the result that those interested in the photoplay bill had to sit through several long debates on other matters.

When the measure was finally reached Senator McLane of Fall River made a motion for a day's postponement. The motion was opposed by Senator Bean of Cambridge, who said that with practically every senator on record, there was no need for any delay.

"It may be a weak excuse to say that there are senators absent," replied McLane, "but such is the fact. There are several who are unable to be here today."

Senator Fay of Medford opposed postponement, stating that he hoped no one would be able to throw sand in the eyes of the Senate, as the "Bandana" of his childhood was reported to do to sleepy youngsters. Senator Fay's little speech closed the debate.

Postponement was refused on a rising vote, 18 to 15, and McLane then secured a roll call, this time being defeated by a vote of 18 to 17 with three pairs. The roll call vote was as follows:

For postponement—Cummings, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Hibbs, Jackson, Leonard, Marchant, McGrath, McLane, Norwood, Porter, Sullivan, Tobin, Timilty and Wells.

Against postponement—Bagley, Bartlett, Bates, Beasley, Beal, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Ellis, Farnsworth, Fay, Gifford, Gordon, Kimball, Langone, Martin, Mason and Tufts.

Paired for postponement—Doyle, Sullivan.

Paired against postponement—Hodgdon, Garst.

Every senator was recorded with the exception of President Coolidge, who is a supporter of the measure and whose vote would have been cast against postponement if necessary. Counting in his vote, the supporters of the measure had a leeway of two votes.

The measure was then enacted on a voice vote, and Hays served notice that he would move for reconsideration the next day. Hays's motion for reconsideration was blocked by Bean's objection.

OXFORD (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 21, 1915

SCORES PICTURE PLAY.

Rev. Nathan H. Gist Speaks on "Birth of a Nation," Sunday Evening.

Rev. Nathan H. Gist of the Congregational church took for the theme of his address at the service Sunday evening, "The Birth of a Nation. Should It Be Suppressed?" This timely topic was ably discussed and the congregation showed the liveliest interest.

Dr. Gist scored the photo play as being clannish and breeding prejudice and contempt. He placed the author as being anything but a historian and severely criticised the handling of a subject that could have been made a masterpiece.

(Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 21, 1915

TH' PROTEST ILL PASSED BY SENATE

Prospect That Movie ensor Measure Will Be "Killed."

ITICAL ISSUE, ASSERTS LEADER

ure Expected to Reach sk of Governor This Afternoon.

subdued expressions of bad feel- mutterings of treachery and frowning," and whispered alle- that one member of the Senate ing to "Jimmy Valentine" the picture censorship bill, presented sult of the protest against "The f a Nation," the Senate yester- to be enacted, after g, by a vote of 17 to 18, a mo- postpone action until today.

tion of Senator Hays of Brighton nsider the enactment of the bill e the opponents of the measure opportunity to try to kill it he Senate meets this morning.

w of the developments of yes- however, even the most ardent ts of the bill have little doubt will be passed and laid on the r's desk early this afternoon.

rday's developments in and the Senate chamber and corri- were the most mysterious that ccurred during the session.

Rumor of Shifts

e the Senate opened its session were rumors of shifts on the bill would bring about its defeat. nts of the bill were rushing the Senate corridors and reading- buttonholing their fellow men- nd trying in every way possible made them to vote against enact-on it was stated by one of the nergetic opponents of the bill that of the action of some of the ican leaders in making the meas- political one, there was little of defeating it. Later it was ere was to be a shift which would e opponents the votes necessary at the bill.

supporters of the bill were equal- e. They understood that stren- forts were being made to "whis- e bill to death at the last mo- and they were watching every f their opponents with suspicion. the bill came over from the where it was enacted before ithout any trouble, the supporta- fessed to have discovered a plot up action on the measure until suspicions were aroused to the hen Senator Green, a member of mmittee on engrossed bills, whose is to read all measures before re put on their final passage, he bill and petition from the of the Senate and passed out of amber into the Senate reading His absence from the chamber longer tim ethan the supporters bill believed was necessary forced tter into a state of mind border- hysteria.

Suspects a Plot

ediately it was said that Green's e was a part of the plot to put ction until today in order that the nts might have 24 hours more in to persuade the Senate to kill ill.

n it was learned that Green was from the Senate reading room, he was supposed to have gone to the bill, there was consternation the advocates of the measure, was not assured until the atown member returned to the er with the other members of the ittee on engrossed bills and with easure duly reported.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MOR. UNION
MAY 22, 1915

Boston Movie Bill NOW LAW; Walsh Quickly Signs Measure

Gov. Walsh lost no time today in signing the so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill, after [illegible] to recess [illegible] bill to be enacted. The Governor's approbation culminates the long fight which the Negroes have been waging against the photo-play at the Tremont Theater and the act was done shortly after the bill reached him from the Senate. He gave the quill to the Negro messenger, William Read. Whether the Mayor and police commissioner will now exercise their authority remains to be seen.

When the Governor signed the bill he said: "Any show that cannot get the approval of two of these three men ought not to be permitted to continue."

As a final effort the opponents of the measure attempted today to reconsider the Senate's vote of yesterday in passing the bill to be enacted, but the Senate refused the motion by a rollcall vote of 23 to 16, and the measure was sent to the Governor. Three of the senators, Hobbs, Doyle and Norwood, who were recorded in favor of postponement yesterday, voted against reconsideration today.

The standing vote was 15 to 20, and Senator Leonard then asked for a rollcall vote. All of the Democrats and nine Republicans voted in favor of reconsideration. The vote was:

Yes—Cummings, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Jackson, Leonard, Marchand, McGonagle, McLane, Perley, Sullivan, Tetler, Timilty, Sheehan, Wells—16.

No—Bagley, Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Doyle, Ellis, Farnsworth, Fay, Garst, Gifford, Gordon, Haigis, Hobbs, Kimball, Langelier, Martin, Mason, Norwood, Tufts—23.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 22 1915

GOVERNOR SIGNS CENSORSHIP BILL

Opponents Make Final Effort in Senate to Reconsider, and Fail.

LEGISLATIVE [illegible] the legislative side of the Boston theatrical censorship contest which has been raging on Beacon Hill over the presentation of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," by signing the bill providing for a board of three censors. He acted within a few minutes after the bill was delivered to him from the Senate.

The measure became effective when signed, but Butler R. Wilson and W. H. Lewis, the attorneys who represented the Negroes in this agitation, said they had no immediate step in view; that now the measure had become a law the next move rested with the authorities. They expressed their confidence it would be taken in due time.

The new law establishes a board to consist of the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the Boston municipal court. Under it two of the three can stop any theatrical performance or entertainment at their pleasure. There is no limitation on their acts and there is no right of appeal. Under the old law only immoral performances could be stopped, and then only by joint action of the mayor and the police commissioner.

Opponents of the measure made a last dying gasp in the Senate to secure reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate Thursday passed the measure to be enacted, but they were decisively routed by a vote of 23 to 16—the widest margin the bill has secured in the Senate—and the measure was sent to the Governor.

Senator Hays of Brighton made the motion to reconsider, and after admitting that he did not expect to obtain it, made a bitter speech attacking the supporters of the measure, particularly the colored men employed at the State House, and dared the Negro voters in his district to oppose him for re-election.

"I serve notice on them now that I'll be elected anyway," he shouted.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 22, 1915

"NATION" FILM IS NOW UP TO CENSOR BOARD

Governor Signs Bill Naming Curley, O'Meara and Judge Bolster.

MAJORITY VOTE WILL PREVAIL

Hays Charges Legislature Influenced by Fear of Colored Vote.

Whether or not "The Birth of a Nation" may continue to be produced at the Tremont Theatre is now up to Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court, the bill created those three a board of censors with power, by majority vote, to stop any theatrical production at their pleasure having been signed by Gov. Walsh yesterday.

The governor gave the measure his approval within half an hour after the Senate finished its consideration of it and refused by a vote of 16 to 23, to reconsider its enactment.

"Any show that cannot get the approval of two of these three men ought not be permitted to continue," said Gov. Walsh as he affixed his signature and handed the quill to William L. Reed, the negro messenger at the executive chamber.

Last Stand Not Strong

The last stand of the opponents of the measure was not as strong as their previous efforts to kill the bill. Three of the senators who have voted against the measure ever since the amendment providing for majority vote was attached—Senators Hobbs of Worcester, Norwood of Hamilton and Doyle of New Bedford—voted against reconsideration yesterday.

Announcement that Senator Hobbs would change was made by that member after the fight on the enactment in the Senate Thursday.

During the debate yesterday Senator Norwood said while he believed the bill as drawn to be a bad one, the Senate had decided otherwise and he would not prolong the fight further.

Senator Doyle of New Bedford, one of the most strenuous opponents of the bill, said it was apparent the friends of the bill had the necessary votes and therefore further attempt to defeat it would be futile. He also announced in advance his intention to vote against reconsideration.

Hays Fights to End

Senator Hays of Brighton, who made the motion to reconsider, fought to the very end, and charged that the members of the Legislature had been influenced by fear of the colored vote. He said that he had a large number of colored men in his senatorial district, but defied them to carry out threats he said had been made that they will defeat him for re-election.

He criticized colored employes at the State House for lobbying the Senate on the bill. This brought from Senator Sullivan of Boston, also an opponent of the bill, a retort that Robert Taylor, the elevator operator, had a right to be looking after his own interests while he was on his noon hour.

Hayes replied that he did not refer to Taylor, and that, in fact, he had not seen him in the chamber. He called attention, however, to the presence of William L. Reed, the governor's messenger, in the chamber.

On the roll-call the senators divided as follows:

For reconsideration—Senators Cummings, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Jackson, Leonard, Marchand, McGonagle, McLane, Perley, Sheehan, Sullivan, Tetler, Timilty and Wells—16.

Against reconsideration—Senators Bagley, Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Doyle, Ellis, Farnsworth, Fay, Garst, Gifford, Gordon, Haigis, Hobbs, Kimball, Langelier, Martin, Mason, Norwood and Tufts—23.

Censorship Board Refuses to Talk

Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court, who together form the Board of Censors, each stated that he would say absolutely nothing about the law, whether or not the question of "The Birth of a Nation" would immediately be considered, whether or not it would be considered at all or anything regarding the general considerations of censoring which, under the law, he felt would be likely to govern the board's action.

No date has been set for the first meeting of the board.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 22, 1915

FILM CENSORSHIP BILL NOW LAW

GOV. WALSH AFFIXES HIS SIGNATURE TO MEASURE

Charges Hurled in Heated Debate in Senate Preceding Vote

Gov. Walsh signed the so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill yesterday. He signed the bill, which provides for a three-headed play censorship in Boston with unlimited powers, just half an hour after the Senate finished with it.

Hardly had the Governor signed the bill than leaders of the colored race rushed from the State House to take steps immediately to protest the further production of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre to the new board of censorship created by this act.

This board consists of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court who, under the terms of the act, are enabled by a majority vote to revoke the license of any theatre in Boston.

As the Governor signed the bill he said:

"Any show that cannot get the approval of two of these three men ought not to be permitted to continue."

The quill with which the Governor signed the bill was presented to executive messenger, William Reed.

The Senate's last act was to refuse to consider enactment of the bill, which has caused more excitement and spilling of ink than any bill with which the Solons have had to wrestle in many a day. The signing of the bill was preceded by plenty of excitement in the Senate.

Charges Hurled

Senator Martin Hays hurled charges of cheap politics, dereliction of duty on the part of colored State House employees who have been lobbying, and submission by Legislators to outside pressure instead of to legitimate argument, at the members in favor of this "Birth of a Nation" censorship bill, in a vain attempt to obtain reconsideration of its enactment.

On a roll call the vote stood 16 for reconsideration and 23 opposed. On a rising vote, prior, 15 Senators voted for reconsideration and 20 against. The roll call was asked by Senator Leonard, Mayor Curley's Senator, Senator Hays having stated previously that he would not ask that the Senate be put on record as he was too ashamed of the Senate for its stand on the matter.

The charge of lobbying against the colored employees was made by Senator Hays, while the veteran colored elevator man of the State House, Robert Taylor, was standing within the rail watching the proceedings.

Straightway Sen. Sullivan of South Boston arose and defended Taylor, declaring that he was there on his lunch hour watching his rights.

Thereupon Hays declared that he had not seen Taylor but named the Governor's colored messenger, William Reed, whom he said had been around the Senate for three days.

Opening Argument.

In opening his argument for reconsideration Hays declared that he did not hope to change any votes and knew that he was defeated, but declared it to be because Senators had been influenced by outside pressure and not by legitimate arguments. He marvelled that the Senate had allowed itself to be controlled by interests outside the State House and that they would take away the power from the Mayor of Boston in face of the overwhelming sentiment of the people against this and against the desire of the Boston legislators.

Diverting to the colored people and addressing himself straight at the galleries filled with members of that race, Hays congratulated them that they could take three days off from their work to lobby for this bill.

"I appreciate the devotion to the Commonwealth shown by the members of the colored race fortunate to have jobs at the State House when they take three days off from their work to lobby and argue with us for this bill. I am sorry to see such large numbers of that race in the galleries, and I wish they had jobs that would keep them from hanging around our corridors and lobbies.

"They tell me that they are going to lick me for re-election. But I would like to know whom they are going to vote for. My opponent is to be a Democrat, and every Democrat they know has been against them. Further, I serve notice on them that I am going to win.

"Every one of them and every member of this Senate knows that the Mayor of Boston could have stopped this play by merely getting the Tremont Theatre on the telephone, but he did not."

On this point he was later challenged and to back up his argument he cited the case of the Copt Theatre and the play "Maternity." In this case he declared the Mayor had called the manager and said: "I will take away your license if you put that play on." And the play was not put on, neither was it down in a hall as the manager threatened, he said.

Hays then turned his attention to the members of the Legislature and congratulated them on their remarkable inconsistency. Reading from the House Journal he showed that the first vote on this bill was 104 in favor and 116 against and on the very next stage was 136 in favor to 71 against, the influence changing this vote he would not attempt to analyze.

"I congratulate this body on its wonderful consistency. One day they vote one way, another day another and some days they don't vote at all."

The reference of the last statement was to Senator Langelier, who promptly got to his feet and accused Hays of shifting his vote on another proposition which Hays admitted.

Senator Norwood, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, reporting the bill, after being subjected to a tongue-lashing by Hays, declared that he considered the bill a bad bill, had voted for postponement Thursday, but since the Senate had voted differently he was willing to let the matter drop.

Senator Jackson of Lynn then jumped into the debate to make a very brief statement about members voting for the bill because they said to him that "they had from 80 to 600 colored voters in their district."

Senator Doyle, who has been opposed to the bill, then disgustedly announced that he was going to vote against reconsideration. "We have not got the votes, so what's the use?" he said.

The roll-call on the bill was as follows:—

For reconsideration—Cummings, Eldridge, Fitzgerald, Green, Hays, Jackson, Leonard, Marchand, McGonagle, McLane, Perley, Sheehan, Sullivan, Tetler, Timilty, Wells—16.

Opposed—Bagley, Bartlett, Bates, Bazeley, Beal, Bean, Cavanagh, Clark, Doyle, Ellis, Farnsworth, Fay, Garst, Gifford, Gordon, Haigis, Hobbs, Kimball, Langelier, Martin, Mason, Norwood, Tufts—23.

Every Senator was present, and all are recorded but the president, who under the rule, does not vote except to cast the vote of the Senate in case of a close division.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 22, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SHOWS OLD WAR DAYS

D. W. Griffith's wonderful photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is approaching the third month of a sensational run at the Tremont Theatre. In clean-cut style this new art has revealed with unequaled realism the great battles of the Civil War, the loss of the guiding hand that had directed the North and the last flickering shadows of the hates and passions which war always engenders. This is the sum and substance of Griffith's art. It is a striking thing that sets up new standards and new ideals.

The record in Boston and elsewhere demonstrates how effectively Griffith has touched the dramatic chord that stirs audiences and makes for a great success. The engagement at the Tremont continues with every evidence of the picture remaining here for a longer period than anything of a like nature ever offered.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 22, 1915

Reconsideration of Play Censorship Bill Fails.

The State Senate Thursday passed to be enacted the bill to censor theatrical performances in Boston through the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal court, a majority vote to decide. This is the bill advocated by those wishing to suppress "The Birth of a Nation." To-day a move to reconsider failed and the bill now goes to the governor who is expected to sign. Through this bill it is expected that the play will be stopped.

In line with this movement there came the suggestion Thursday night at a protest meeting in Boston of colored citizens that war pictures should be censored so that no nation be ridiculed.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 22, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin its seventh week at the Tremont Theatre on Monday. Large and deeply interested audiences are still present at every performances. This story of the Civil War and the Reconstruction era is shown on a scale of unusual magnitude through a series of 5,000 scenes. The films are notable for their scenic beauty. A sentimental story between a northern soldier and a southern woman runs through the historical depiction. There are two performances daily at 2.10 and 8.10 p.m.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 22, 1915

DEMAND CENSORS ACT IMMEDIATELY

Colored People to Insist That Board Stop "Birth of a Nation" at Once

"The Equal Rights League will lose no time in insisting that 'The Birth of a Nation' be taken off at once," said W. Monroe Trotter last night, after a three-hour's meeting of the local officers in the "Guardian" office.

The organization will have another meeting today, and will send a delegation at once to wait upon Mayor Curley.

BILL NOW A LAW

"Every performance heaps new undeserved ignominy upon the negro race, and we think it should be stopped at once. We hope to let not a day elapse before we request the censors to act," explained Mr. Trotter last night, speaking for the Equal Rights League, which is a State branch of a national protective association among the colored people.

The "censorship bill" now being a law, the armies on both sides of the "Birth of a Nation" war are reconnoitering and massing their forces, preparatory to beginning fresh hostilities.

Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster, the three censors, are the "neutrals" who are the bone of contention in the conflict.

But the three official censors are saying not a word. They have not yet met, but will do so today and will decide on a policy to be carried out not only as regards the present picture-play, which began the trouble, but as regards all future theatrical productions. Under the provisions of the bill, they have full jurisdiction hereafter.

Think Photo-Play Is Safe

The theatre men yesterday expressed the belief that, unjust as such legislation as that just passed might be, the three censors named would not interfere with "The Birth of a Nation" since it did not come under the provisions of the statute.

The supporters of the bill, on the other hand, are jubilant over its passage and express the opinion that the censors must immediately suppress "The Birth of a Nation."

It is given out by leaders of the colored people that Mayor Curley has now no longer the excuse that there is "not sufficient law" to back up his prohibition of the movie play. They will ask him to act at once. If he does not the colored people will put the matter publicly up to the censors.

The Equal Rights League met last night at the offices of the newspaper, the Guardian, to discuss precise action in the matter.

The managers of the Tremont Theatre and the film concern are simply waiting for action. They declare, however, that the censors will favor them

PLAYING POLITICS ON BEACON HILL

Before the censorship bill as amended is placed upon its final passage, it behooves the Legislature, and in particular the Republican members, to consider and reconsider the cause and effect of this legislation. The cause is to be found in a motion-picture play now nearing the end of its run to which some of the colored citizens of Boston object. For several months the patronage of the play has been limited only by the capacity of the theatre. All classes of citizens, including many of the objecting class, are among its patrons. Under the existing law the objectors were unable to shut down the play, although an appeal to the courts was taken. The court held that with the elimination of one scene the play could not be considered as coming within the prohibition of the present law, which empowers the Mayor and Commissioner of Police to revoke the license of any theatre whose managers persist in the performance of a play which, in the joint judgment of the Mayor and Police Commissioner, is "obscene and immoral."

The expurgation ordered by the court was made, but failed to satisfy the objectors. Their next appeal was to the Governor and later to the Legislature. After a long and patient hearing a bill was reported from the legislative committee, which at first went through both houses of the Legislature. It authorized the Mayor, Chief Justice of the Municipal Court and the Police Commissioner to stop the production of any play which ran foul of their unanimous judgment. Even this concession failed to satisfy the objectors and finally, upon reconsideration, the House and Senate have amended the bill by substituting a majority for a unanimous verdict. In that form it is favored by the objectors for the sole reason that they believe they can then, by the same threats with which they have bulldozed the Legislature, force the Mayor, the Chief Justice and the Police Commissioner to shut down the motion-picture play in question.

If the legislators believe that the objections to that particular play are well founded, and that the State should intervene to prohibit its continuance, they should forthwith enact a law prohibiting the performance of the play anywhere in the Commonwealth and calling it by name. Whatever else may be said of such action, at least the legislation would be honest. The bill as amended is a thoroughly dishonest measure. It represents a cowardly attempt on the part of the Legislature and the Republicans in particular to sacrifice public rights for party votes. It commits the Republicans to a censorship of the stage utterly at variance with the attitude which the party will assume in the coming campaign against the censorship of business saddled upon the country by the Democratic administration in State and nation. We hope, upon reconsideration, that there will be enough Republicans in the Senate to stand up for the rights of the public, for the principles of the Republican party, and vote against any change in the existing law, unless it be that recommended by the legislative committee.

To pass the censorship bill in its present amended form is to place the Legislature on record as surrendering the rights of the whole people of the Commonwealth to the whim of a small minority who threaten retribution at the polls unless their unreasonable demands are granted. The Republicans will stultify themselves at the outset of their campaign against the "new freedom," which is, after all, only the tyranny of the minority over the majority, if they inflict upon Boston a censorship of the sort provided in the amended bill now pending. Nor can they fool the public into the belief that they are not playing "cheap politics" by so legislating.

KLINE (Mass.) TOWNSMAN
MAY 22, 1915

Theatres

TREMONT THEATRE.

Passing into its third month of a wonderful run at the Tremont Theatre, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the dramatic sensation of the season.

With the approach of the memorial day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of a motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which their fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past that we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

NEW ORLEANS (La.) PICAYUNE
MAY 4, 1915

RACE-CENSORSHIP OF THE "KOVIES."

A committee of the Massachusetts legislature gave public hearings last week on several pending bills aimed at suppression of a motion picture play which displeases the negro citizens of Boston. The embattled "photodrama" deals with a period of the nation's history. The Boston blacks who lead the attack insist that it should be suppressed because it is offensive to their race. A bill directed solely against this particular play would not be seriously considered, of course. So that the effort is made to suppress it by "general" legislation. One of the bills introduced, which may be assumed typical, provides that on petition of 200 citizens of Boston, the mayor of that city must view any film objected to and prohibit its exhibition, if he sees fit, on no other grounds than that 200 of his fellow-citizens object to it.

The legislative hearings have been largely attended by negroes, who have launched the fight and are insisting upon legislation. The moving picture people naturally oppose it, and we are glad to note that several disinterested citizens of standing have taken the trouble to appear and protest against a proposal so dangerous. One of these—a clergyman, by the way—argued that no race should be placed by law above criticism in a country where freedom of speech and expression was valued and safe-guarded. Another Protestant, of Jewish descent, was hissed by his negro auditors for declaring that "if a race is to be pampered and protected from criticism, it will never grow up." He did not particularly enjoy, he said, the portrayal of Shylock as a "typical Jew," but he contended that the Jews had been strengthened by criticism. "The negroes," he said in conclusion, "have made splendid progress in the last fifty years, but the large majorit, of them are still children, and this statement is proved by their actions in Boston."

If there is nothing to be said against the play in question, save that certain members of a certain race find it offensive, the Massachusetts legislature should dismiss the protest. If legislatures undertake the regulation of films and plays to suit the whims of oversensitive groups, there will be no end of the thing. There are fat men who do not like the comedy-portrayals of their peculiar style of architecture; widows who do not like the comedy-widow; bankers who probably object to the avaricious banker who forecloses the mortgage on the old homestead, in the next to the last act of the rural drama. Among national and racial groups there are always super-sensitive folks who take offense at the counterfeit presentment of any member of their nationality or race in the role of villian or low comedian. To humor the whims of all these, once we set up in this country a censorship for that purpose, it would be necessary to suppress perhaps 90 per cent of all dramatic and photo-play productions, destroy the bulk of our literature and make the writing of history a felony punishable by life imprisonment.

Happily, the supersensitive constitute a very small minority of our population. The number is growing, we hope, of those who take the broad and truly American view of such matters.

TREMONT THEATRE BOSTON

NOW PLAYING

Daily Matinees 2.10 p. m. Evenings 8.10 p. m
(The one best place in Boston to enjoy a really great show!)

David W. Griffith's colossal spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction.

18,000 people — America in the making — Comedy and Pathos

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 horses — Wild rides of the Clans — World's eight wonder

See the Civil War-time exhibit of "The Birth of a Nation" Company on parade in Portland. Mr. Frank A. Johnson, the manager, will explain about tickets and excursion rates.

PRICES TO SUIT ALL PURSES.
Matinees 25 and 50c. A few at $1.00
Evenings 25, 50, 75, $1.00. A few at $2.00

SPECIAL NOTICE.
"The Birth of a Nation" will play no other New England city than Boston this season.
Now playing to Equally Enormous Business in Boston, New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco.
750,000 people have seen it. Have You?
Special exursion to Boston, July 8th.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 22, 1915

Play Board Asked for Hearing

New Turn by "Birth of Nation" Opposition

The fight of the opponents of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," took a new turn this morning when the new five-headed board of play censorship was appealed to for a hearing to hear the protestsants against further production in Boston of the film drama.

Friday Gov. Walsh signed the so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill which provides for a censorship board consisting of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner of Boston, and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, who, by a majority vote, are enabled to revoke the license of any theatre in Boston.

This new board was appealed to by Butler R. Wilson, William H. Lewis and J. Mott Hallowell, counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The members of the Board have not as yet stated when they would give any such hearing.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 22, 1915

Mayor Curley was opposed to the Birth of a Nation bill and swung his influence against it. The Governor signed it one half hour after it had passed its final stage. However, there is no connection between the two things except as they affect relations that fall during compaign time.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 22, 1915

Rev. Charles F. Dole heads a group of ministers of various denominations, who have discussed together about the "Birth of a Nation," and are not satisfied with merely repressive measures. They believe that the occasion emphasizes a great need of constructive effort to set forth the common enterprise of the friendly people of all races to create a civilized world. They therefore advise the use of Memorial Sunday, as not only a day for noble memories but also for the consideration and fostering of friendly relations between all races. They ask ministers and other public speakers to bring to light the wide range of facts showing the perils and the superficiality of race distinctions, and especially the mischief of race antagonisms and on the other hand the wonderful and beautiful illustrations of the working among all peoples of the principles of the common intelligence, humanity and devotion. They would call attention to our immense American responsibility to bring people of many races into one high-minded and righteous citizenship. And they would ask specific reference at this time to the relations between the white and colored people, wherein we are still paying atonement for the evils of slavery, and which demand the utmost sympathy on all sides, but chiefly towards those who through our national laws were made the victims of an injustice. They say: "If the "Birth of a Nation" has given a perverted and one-sided view of the cruel and degrading results of slavery to both races, the opportunity is now given to show the enormous and encouraging effects of the civilizing work of the best men and women of both races. We should not appeal in vain on this side to the generosity and chivalry of our people.

"It is hoped all the more on account of the anger that has been stirred by the sinking of the Lusitania, that the day may be so used as to dispel bitterness, bigotry, prejudice and angry feeling, to express our humanity, and to draw together all the elements of our people in the attitude of friendliness. Let us devote a day to tell the good that we know of every people. Let us not merely make use of a single day, but take such practical measures as may serve to cure the ill conditions that hamper the good life of any of our neighbors."

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 22, 1915

NEGROES APPEAL TO CURLEY

Mayor Receives Petition for a Hearing on "The Birth of a Nation" Before New Board

The negro protestants against the production of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," have not been slow to take advantage of the law which was signed yesterday by the governor and which regulates theatrical performances in the city of Boston. Counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, Butler R. Wilson, William H. Lewis and J. Mott Hallowell, today petitioned the new board composed of the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal Court for a hearing on the subject.

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 22, 1915

Members of the Legislature are wondering what Mayor Curley will do now that "The Birth of a Nation" bill has become law. [illegible] the mayor's [illegible] statements that the play was a "rank [illegible]" and that he would drive it out of Boston if [illegible] quill would [illegible] the [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 22, 1915

ASK OPEN HEARING ON 'NATION' FILM

Counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have filed a petition with Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster, comprising Boston's new censorship board, for a public hearing on the question of prohibiting further production of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," in Boston. The petition reads:

To the Hon. James M. Curley, Mayor; Stephen O'Meara, Police Commissioner, and Wilfred Bolster, Chief Justice of the Municipal Court of the City of Boston:

The undersigned, counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, respectfully petition your honorable board, constituted under Chapter 384 of the Acts of 1915, for a hearing as protestants against the further production in Boston of the film entitled "The Birth of a Nation."

BUTLER R. WILSON,
WILLIAM H. LEWIS,
J. MOTT HALLOWELL.

HEARING NEXT WEEK.

It is believed that a hearing will be granted next week. The opponents of the photoplay took this action under the new statute which went into effect Friday. This law adds the chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court as a censor. The old law provided that the Mayor and the Police Commissioner act jointly in revoking the license of a theatre which persisted in showing an improper show. The new censorship board held its first meeting shortly after the petition was filed.

"The Birth of a Nation" lobbyists suported the present bill in its original form, when it called for a unanimous vote. But Senator Bean of Cambridge managed to tack on, after a fight in the Senate, the amendment permitting a two-thirds vote. This was considered a victory by the colored forces. The most alarming feature of the new law from the standpoint of theatrical interests is the arbitrary power it gives the three censors to object to any film or stage performance or public entertainment without specifying the cause.

CURLEY AGAINST FILM.

The attitude of Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara toward the show at the Tremont Theatre is not known. Motion picture men are inclined to think that Police Commissioner O'Meara does not object to the show in view of the fact that police representatives who attended a performance reported they could find nothing obscene or immoral or in any way objectionable and that the show, in their judgment, came within the law.

Mayor Curley, at a hearing on the moving picture several weeks ago, said:

"I believe the play is an outrage on the colored people of the country. But I believe the white man have more right to object to the play than the negroes, for the picture depicts a white man assassinating President Lincoln, and a white man stirring up the negroes to revolt. It is obvious that the whole thing is a continued attack upon negroes. But there is nothing immoral or obscene in it, and consequently nothing contrady to law."

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 22, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation.

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 22, 1915

WALSH SIGNS THE CENSORSHIP BILL

Gov. Walsh yesterday closed the legislative side of the Boston theatrical censorship contest which has been raging on Beacon Hill over the presentation of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," by signing the bill providing for board of three censors. He acted within a few minutes after the bill was delivered to him from the Senate.

FRAMINGHAM (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 22, 1915

PLAY CENSORSHIP MUCH BROADENED

Arbitrary Powers Placed In the Hands of Three Bostonians

Boston, May 22.—The bill backed by opponents of the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation," to vest unlimited powers of play censorship in Boston with the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court, was signed by Governor Walsh a few minutes after it reached him.

The law now gives to the three censors the power to stop any photo-play, theatre performance or public entertainment for any reason that may appeal to them on a two-third vote.

Opponents of the photo-play are expected immediately to renew their fight for the revocation of its license before the new board of censorship.

The new law, which is the result of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation," changes the method of censorship, which previously has been vested jointly in the mayor and police commissioner. They had power, however, only to stop plays of an immoral or obscene nature.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 22, 1915

In the censorship discussion over the Dixon and Griffith abortion, which they miscalled the "Birth of a Nation," the trail of money spent to keep this money-making nuisance in the theater, and to prevent the passage of an effective censorship law, should not be lost sight of. Over all the opposition to the bill that goes through this week, a commission of three required to be unanimous was as near the present ineffective law for Boston as the money-makers dared to go; but two out of three to decide the question is next door to the proper law, which would leave action to the mayor and make him responsible, as in other cities. Advertising, or bribes in grosser forms, must account for the editorial silence of the Boston dailies, while this affair was the talk of the town for a month past. Now and then a paper, like the Journal, puts itself practically on the side of the champions of the Kuklux, by printing Dixon's novel in all its treacherous falsehood. But that has worked the other way, for it shows those who read the stuff how it contradicts history.

NO. ATTLEBORO (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 22, 1915

PLAY CENSORSHIP IN HUB

Placed in Hands of Three Men by Bill Signed by Governor

Boston, May 22.—The bill backed by opponents of the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation," to vest unlimited powers of play censorship in Boston with the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court, was signed by Governor Walsh a few minutes after it reached him.

The law now gives to the three censors the power to stop any photo-play, theatre performance or public entertainment for any reason that may appeal to them on a two-third vote.

Opponents of the photo-play are expected immediately to renew their fight for the revocation of its license before the new board of censorship.

The new law, which is the result of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation," changes the method of censorship, which previously has been vested jointly in the mayor and police commissioner. They had power, however, only to stop plays of an immoral or obscene nature.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER

MAY 22 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Passing into its third month of wonderful run at the Tremont Theatre in Boston, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the dramatic sensation of the season.

With the approach of the Memorial Day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a new born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past that we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

PRACTICAL POLITICS (Boston)

MAY 22 1915

CENSORSHIP BILL OUT OF WAY.

The censorship bill was passed in its amended form by the house this week to the accompaniment of a full gallery of negro citizens and citizenesses. It is now a law, Gov. Walsh having signed it on Friday. They won a tremendous victory, according to popular verdict, although in what way nobody seems to know. Rep. Cross of Royalston made the speech of the day in favor of the "Birth of a Nation," and assured everybody that he favored letting the present law alone, hoping, he said, that the house would kill the whole censorship scheme when it came to vote on the measure.

DAVID I. WALSH

Rep. Rowley of Brookline also delivered a fine speech, favoring the senate amendment, providing for a majority vote of the three censors to bring about the revocation of a play license. That was the senate amendment and the fact that it was concurred in by the house was due as much to Mr. Rowley's effort as to anything else.

The act as it now reads is far from satisfactory to Mayor Curley or to any of the city officials, for the matter of that. The mayor has no wish to be the lone democrat on a board of censors that is apt to be very political on occasion, as it was in the case of the "Birth of a Nation," for instance, and no one [illegible] enemies will wish to [illegible] or any other mayor in that position.

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 22, 1915

FROM TRAVELER READERS

Exonerating Messrs. Allston and Cox.

To the Editor the The Traveler:

At a meeting of the Boston Negro Business League at its headquarters, 121 Kendall Street Roxbury, Monday evening, May 17, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted; and the members whose names are attached were elected a committee to give the resolutions the widest possible publicity through the public press:

Resolved—That, after thorough investigation, the Boston Negro Business League cannot accept charges made against Messrs. Philip J. Allston and William A. Cox, of having knowingly endorsed the photo-play known as "The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] being made by the management of said play to the several newspapers of Boston under date of April 17, 1915, and, further, disclaims any responsibility, as an organization, for such alleged statements.

And whereas, this league is unanimous in strengthening the righteous protest of the colored people of Massachusetts against the production of said vicious and libellous exhibition in Boston and elsewhere.

Be it further resolved, that it is the sense of this meeting that the thanks of the league be and are hereby given to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Independent Political League, kindred organizations of churches, and all civic bodies and individuals, for the splendid fight begun and continued by them for the extirpation of that dastardly exhibition of race hatred and calumny; and we stand ready to further the personal efforts of individual members of the league and through concerted action as an organization, to the full extent of our moral and financial ability.

By unanimous vote of the Boston Negro Business League: Julius E. Goddard, Jacob W. Powell, William C. Lovett, W. Alexander Johnson, Daniel F. Hall, committee on resolutions.

Boston, May 17.

HONOR WARDEN BRIEF

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 22, 1915

PLAY CENSORSHIP MUCH BROADENED

Arbitrary Powers Placed In the Hands of Three Bostonians

Boston, May 22.—The bill backed by opponents of the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation," to vest unlimited powers of play censorship in Boston with the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court, was signed by Governor Walsh a few minutes after it reached him.

The law now gives to the three censors the power to stop any photo-play, theatre performance or public entertainment for any reason that may appeal to them on a two-third vote.

Opponents of the photo-play are expected immediately to renew their fight for the revocation of its license before the new board of censorship.

The new law, which is the result of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation," changes the method of censorship, which previously has been vested jointly in the mayor and police commissioner. They had power, however, only to stop plays of an immoral or obscene nature.

AMESBURY (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 22, 1915

PLAY CENSORSHIP MUCH BROADENED

Arbitrary Powers Placed In the Hands of Three Bostonians

Boston, May 22.—The bill backed by opponents of the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation," to vest unlimited powers of play censorship in Boston with the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court, was signed by Governor Walsh a few minutes after it reached him.

The law now gives to the three censors the power to stop any photo-play, theatre performance or public entertainment for any reason that may appeal to them on a two-third vote.

Opponents of the photo-play are expected immediately to renew their fight for the revocation of its license before the new board of censorship.

The new law, which is the result of the protest against "The Birth of a Nation," changes the method of censorship, which previously has been vested jointly in the mayor and police commissioner. They had power, however, only to stop plays of an immoral or obscene nature.

BOSTON (Mass.) EVENING GLOBE
MAY 22, 1915

APPEAL TO NEW CENSORS ON "BIRTH OF A NATION"

[illegible] was the bill making the Mayor, the Police Commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal Court of Boston a Board of Censors for theatrical performances, signed by Gov Walsh yesterday, than those who are opposed to the "Birth of a Nation," now before the Tremont Theatre, took action shown at the Tremont Theatre, took action and the following petition was addressed to the newly created board:

"The undersigned, counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, respectfully petition your honorable board, constituted under Chapter 384 of the Acts of 1915, for a hearing to hear the protestsants against the further production in Boston of the film Drama entitled, "The Birth of a Nation."

"Butler R. Wilson,
"William H. Lewis,
"J. Mott Hallowell."

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 23, 1915

...and that D. W. Griffith is planning ...ring trip to Boston in a few days to ... mammoth picture, "The Birth of ... has been going during his absence. ... has been in California for the past ... hing up another great picture, which ...ng out in the fall. It is called "The ...nd the Law" and deals with a new ... American sociology.

...busy director has his activities spread out ... entire continent at present. He left ...ria to go to Chicago, where "The Birth ...tion" has just been introduced. With his ... base in Los Angeles and his financial ...rters in New York, the director is forced ... lose much time on the trips between ...oints. When one figures that he earns ...0 a year for directing pictures the finan... of his trips is nothing compared to the ... cost in time required to make the trips. ...hortest time he can allow for one of these ... journeys is 15 days. When it is realized ... earnings in salary alone reach nearly $300 ... it means that by the time he leaves Cali... and is back on the job, after completing ...siness affairs in New York, it has cost the ...ration he works with the tidy sum of $4000. ...erages about 10 trips a year between these ... When figuring on the cost of motion pic...productions you realize that every day ... by a high-priced director adds a heavy ... the final expense.

...t. Griffith saves some of this time by taking ...cretary with him and going over scenario ...future plans and getting up on his delayed ...pondence. I heard a slip he made that cos... penny. He is a great walker, and to keep ...ff in trim when travelling gets out at the ...stations and walks up and down the plat... On one trip he was so absorbed in thought ...he wandered away from the train, and when ...alized where he had walked the train had ...and left him behind at a desert way station. ...was delayed there two days before he could ... suitable arrangements to secure another ...ing room on an East-bound train and pick ...is things at the next stop, where the trainmen ...put them away for him.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 23, 1915

...SK HEARING ON PHOTOPLAY

...ponents of "Birth of Nation" Say Mayor Is "Cornered," Under New Law.

The colored people of Boston who ...k to drive "The Birth of a Nation" ...t of the city on the plea that it ...ridicules their race, claim they have ...Mayor Curley cornered by the ...assage of the new censorship law.

They say he can no longer hedge ...hind the excuse of "insufficient ...aw." They have asked the new ...oard of censors—Police Commission... O'Meara, Chief Justice Bolster of ...he Boston Municipal Court and ...Mayor Curley for a hearing, to vent ...their objections to the photoplay ...which deals with the reconstructive ...period in the South following the ...Civil War.

A formal petition was filed yester...day by former Assistant United ...States Attorney General Lewis But...ler R. Wilson and J. Mott Hallowell, ...acting as counsel for the National ...Association for the Advancement of ...Colored People. The new censors ...have not yet fixed a date, but the ...opposition feel comfident they will ...be given an inning next week.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 23, 1915

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Tremont Theatre, where it is turning into the third month of its local run. The engagement includes daily matinee and night presentations of the biggest story ever unfolded in dramatic form before American audiences. It is a new force in the theatres of the world and justifies its claim of establishing an epoch. Its human interest unfolds amid larger surroundings than ever reached the stage before, but despite the bigness there is never a lack of the essential drama to hold the interest. The great battle scenes, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wild rides of the Ku-Klux clansmen are the high lights in the development of this dramatist's appealing story.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 23, 1915

PETITION NEW CENSORS FOR HEARING ON FILM PLAY

Opponents of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," filed a formal petition yesterday with Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court for a public hearing on the question of prohibiting the further production of the play in Boston.

It is believed the petition will be granted and the hearing held some time this week.

The mayor, police commissioner and chief justice are now, by the bill signed Friday by Gov. Walsh, constituted a board of play censorship in Boston, with unlimited powers to revoke the license of an objectionable production. A majority vote of the three censors is sufficient to revoke a license.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 23, 1915

D. W. Griffith's famous film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," has been seen by nearly 1,000,000 Americans in five different cities since it was originally brought out in March, in Los Angeles 200,000 people saw the picture during its run of 14 weeks. In New York in 12 weeks 250,000 attendants have filled the Liberty Theatre. In Boston over 75,00 playgoers have already viewed it and in San Francisco and Oakland, Calif. another film has been seen by 225,00 patrons.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 23, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Pictures at the Tremont

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Tremont Theatre, where it is turning into the third month of its local run. The engagement includes daily matinee and night presentations of the biggest story ever unfolded in dramatic picture form before American audiences.

The current week lends additional timeliness to the picture because of its close relationship to the golden memorial anniversary of the days and things which make the dramatic basis of this play. Nothing more compact to illustrate the development of this new art could be shown than these stirring and actual representations in such vast outlines of the struggles of 50 years ago, when this Nation was passing through the labors of the days which were to assure a peaceful future.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 23, 1915

CAMPAIGN STARTS ON FILM PLAY

Petition to Censors and Protest Meeting Are Features

With a formal petition presented yesterday to the three official theatre censors, with a meeting of prominent colored people today, and with discussions of "The Birth of a Nation" from various pulpits today on the occasion of "Race Day," a new offensive against the film play is being launched with energy.

Mayor Curley is expected to cast one of the votes against the play. He is already on record as sating that he considered the film an "outrage" and that if he had the power he would stop it.

The opponents of the play will call the censors' attention to the fact that the Mayor of Chicago has refused to allow the film to be shown there, and the courts have upheld his action.

PETITION PRESENTED

Butler R. Wilson, William H. Lewis and J. Mott Hallowell, representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People yesterday took decisive action in forwarding to Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Wilfrid Bolster the following petition under the law just passed:

"The undersigned, counsel for the N. A. A. C. P., respectfully petition your honorable board constituted under chapter 284 of the Acts of 1915, for a hearing to hear the protestants against the further production in Boston of the film entitled "The Birth of a Nation."

The petition reached the three censors last night. Today the Equal Rights league will hold a meeting at the Camden street Baptist Church at 3 p. m., and the film will be one of the principal matters brought up for discussion. Prominent men will speak.

The theatre people say they are confident that their play will not be interferred with. John J. Cusick, representing both the Tremont Theatre people, said last night:

"While I sincerely believe that this new law is one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation of recent years, I trust implicitly in the sane judgment of the three men who are named as censors.

"While this law may, under other circumstances, work out to injure the public and deprive them of the right to witness worthy theatrical performances, I feel that, with the fortunately sane and calm censors at present constituting the board, that 'The Birth of A Nation' will be permitted to go on without interference at the insistence of a few persons who have been excited by agitators."

William Monroe Trotter, editor of "The Guardian" and a leader in the protest against the play, said last night:

"We have no reason to suppose that the censors will act on their own initiative. They know how we feel all along, and the play might have been stopped on the day the new law went into effect. We shall therefore push the matter at once and will select a committee to call upon the Mayor, as representing the board, and to request him to withdraw the piece at once."

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 23, 1915

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Tremont Theatre, where it is turning into the third month of its local run. The engagement includes daily matinee and night presentations of the biggest story ever unfolded in dramatic form before American audiences.

The current week lends additional timeliness to the picture because of its close relationship to the golden memorial anniversary of the days and things which make the dramatic basis of this epic. Nothing more compact, to illustrate the development of this new art, could be shown than these stirring and actual representations in such vast outlines of the struggles of 50 years ago, when this mighty nation was passing through the labors of the days which were to assure us our peaceful future. Just now there is an added touch to the dramatic purposes of the narrative, for it gives us a careful perspective and lends vigor to our forward glances as we face the thought of a world crisis in which this reunited people may become involved.

The Boston Comedy Co

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 23, 1915

Objectors to Photoplay Ask Hearing.

A petition has already been sent to the new board of censors asking for a hearing for protestants against the further production here of the play "The Birth of a Nation." It is signed by counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People—Butler R. Wilson, William H. Lewis and J. Mott Hallowell.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 23, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Tremont Theatre, where it is turning into the third month of its local run. The engagement includes daily matinee and night presentations of the biggest story ever unfolded in dramatic form before American audiences.

The current week lends additioanl timeliness to the picture because of its close relationship to the golden memorial anniversary of the days and things which make the dramatic basis of this epic. Nothing more compact to illustrate the development of this new art could be shown than these stirring and actual representations in such vast outlines of the struggles of fifty years ago, when this mighty nation was passing through the labors of the days which were to assure us our peaceful future.

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 22 1915

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is approaching its third month of a sensational run at the Tremont Theatre. Now that the big picture has settled down for a continued run its relationship to current events is especially timely. Half a century after the mighty struggle upon which this story is founded it is a remarkable exposition of a new form of art that permits us to sit calmly by and watch these scenes re-enacted with a realism never dreamed of before in the theatre.

CHARLESTOWN (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 22, 1915

Bridget E. Mullen and Miss Lillian McIntire.

The Birth of a Nation

Passing into its third month of a wonderful run at the Tremont theatre, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle The Birth of a Nation continues the dramatic sensation of the season. With the approach of the Memorial Day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a newborn realism the things which fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive to point out the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past in order to face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

DORCHESTER (Mass.) BEACON
MAY 22, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Passing into its third month of a wonderful run at the Tremont Theatre in Boston, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the dramatic sensation of the season.

With the approach of the Memorial Day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a new born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past that we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

JAMAICA PLAIN (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 22, 1915

Now that the Birth of A Nation has somewhat subsided and a calmer and more unprejudiced view can be taken of the situation, the net result of the whole excessive and excited protest seems to be valuable and almost unlimited advertising for the production, and a consequent swelling of the purses of the producers. And besides, after many competent judges are unprejudiced spectators have seen the films, the evidence seems to indicate that the protestants have protested too much and unwisely. Many of the films are commonplace and certainly not worth the price of the tickets, which price thousands of patrons have paid entirely because of the free and prolific advertising the crusade against the production has given it. Many zealous reformers and highminded citizens appear not yet to have learned that ignoring an undesirable thing before the public is a more effective way of killing it than advertising it by indiscriminate and intemperate protestations.

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 22, 1915

...President Coolidge [illegible] the senate, saved "The Birth of a Nation" bill in the senate, Tuesday afternoon. On a motion to reconsider the engrossment of the bill, Monday, the motion to reconsider, at the end of the first call of the roll, stood 16 "yes"—15 "no," with three pairs. President Coolidge directed the clerk to call his name. He voted "no," thus creating a tie and killing reconsideration. Mayor Curley has, according to state house gossip, taken a hand in the so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill. It is said that his representatives were working hard to induce senators who Monday voted for the engrossment of the bill with the Bean amendment to shift their votes Tuesday, and to favor a motion to reconsider the engrossment of the bill as amended. The Bean amendment, which was adopted late Monday on a roll call vote of 20 to 18, places the authority to revoke and suspend licenses for theatrical and like exhibitions in the hands of a majority of a board, consisting of the mayor, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court, instead of requiring a unanimous vote of the board. The bill as amended was passed to be engrossed Monday afternoon by a rising vote of 15 to 14, with no roll call asked. Yesterday reconsideration was refused.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 24, 1915

PETITIONS TO STOP PHOTO-PLAY

Many Signatures Secured in Brookline Churches—Negroes Adopt Resolutions

Petitions protesting aginst "The Birth of a Nation" were circulated in Brookline churches Sunday and received many signatures. It was at the Harvard Congregational Church that the idea originated, it is said. Signatures were also secured at the First Presbyterian Church and St. Mark's Methodist Episcopal Church.

At the service in the People's Baptist Church on Camden street a resolution was adopted petitioning the new board of play censors to remove the photo-play from the Boston stage. William Munroe Trotter, publisher of the Guardian, openly defended Mayor Curley when he was being assailed by George Blackwell, a negro business man of Cambridge. Trotter interrupted and declared that the mayor should not be assailed until he had been given time to act as member of the new board. Charges were made at this meeting that champagne suppers, auto trips and theatre parties had been given to legislators by those interested in the photo-play to induce them to vote against the censorship bill.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 24, 1915

MANY SIGN PETITIONS.

Circulated in Several Brookline Churches in Protest Against "The Birth of a Nation."

Many Brookline church people signed petitions protesting against the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," yesterday.

At the Harvard Congregational Church, where the idea of signing the petitions in Brookline is said to have originated, the largest number of signatures was obtained. There were also many signers in the First Presbyterian and St. Mark's Methodist Episcopal Churches.

The protest was not unanimous, however. The introduction of the petitions started discussion among the parishioners. Some declined to commit themselves on the ground that they had not seen the performance and had formed no opinion. Others declined to sign because they felt that the performance was above reproach since the objectional features had been eliminated.

The petitions were addressed to the chief justice of the Municipal Court and asked that the license be revoked.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 24, 1915

ADOPT RESOLUTION TO STOP "BIRTH OF A NATION"

A resolution petitioning the new board of play censors to remove "The Birth of a Nation" from the stage in Boston was adopted at a meeting of 1000 colored men and women in the People's Baptist Church on Camden street yesterday afternoon, under the management of the National Independent Equal Rights League and in observance of "Race day."

Atty. John M. Burrell presided. Prayer was offered by the pastor of the church, the Rev. A. W. Puller. Addresses were made by George Blackwell, J. A. Crawford, Joseph C. Manning of Alabama, E. R. Movius, president of the Massachusetts branch of the league, William D. Bingham and William Munroe Trotter, secretary of the league.

LOWELL (Mass.) COURIER-CITIZEN
MAY 24, 1915

Is the Birth of the Nation another way of saying the Death of the Movie? That censorship has been created, you know.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 24, 1915

TROTTER IN APPEAL FOR THE MAYOR

Asks He Be Given Chance to Act on Film Play

While George Blackwell of Cambridge was in the midst of a bitter attack on Mayor Curley at yesterday's mass meeting of colored people at the People's Baptist Church, the speaker was interrupted by William Monroe Trotter, editor of the "Guardian" and leader of the anti-"Birth of a Nation" crusade, who insisted that Mayor Curley's name be unmentioned until he had been given time to act in his new capacity of censor.

The speaker, however, continued and declared that "even if Curley did stop the play, he would never get my vote."

OBSERVING "RACE DAY"

The meeting was held in commemoration of "Race Day," and it was devoted to an elaborate criticism by most of the speakers on the present South and the Democratic party.

Resolutions were passed and read by Mr. Trotter and unanimously indorsed by the assemblage. They are addressed to Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster of the Municipal Court, comprising the board of censorship, and they read:

Text of Resolution

"We, the undersigned citizens of color and others, assembled in public mass meeting in the People's Baptist Church of Boston, May 23, 1915, under the auspices of the Massachusetts branch of the National Independent Equal Rights League, do hereby represent to your honorable Board of Censors of Theatre Plays in Boston, that the photo-play styled 'The Birth of a Nation,' by the methods of misrepresentation of American history, by racial slander and manifest evil design, seeks and tends to create, excite and augment prejudice against colored Americans, and thereby to deprive them of equal opportunity, of the pursuit of happiness, and to replace peace, harmony and friendliness amongst all citizens with discord, distrust and hatred. Hence our appeal for the removal of this play from Boston right speedily."

The meeting was presided over by John M. Burrill of Cambridge. The first speaker was Joseph C. Manning of Alabama, a white man, who spoke of the conditions now prevailing in the South. He was followed by George Blackwell of Cambridge, who violently assailed the Democratic party, blaming it for the poverty and misery of the negroes of the South today. He called upon the colored people to support the Republican leaders, and cited as a typical politician of the Democratic-anti negro type, Mayor Curley. In the midst of his philippic against the Mayor, Mr. Trotter, from the back of the church, called to the chairman who, after some moments, was able to give Mr. Trotter the floor.

Trotter's Protest

"It is not seemly that the name of Mayor Curley should be attacked here today," said Trotter, "since he is one of those to whom we look for the removal of 'The Birth of a Nation.' I think he should be given proper time in which to act, and I deplore language, at this time, such as that which has just been heard here."

Mr. Blackwell replied that in his remarks he had only been quoting somebody else, but this fact had not been evident to those in the assembly or to Mr. Trotter, hence his interruption. Moreover, Mr. Blackwell continued to declare the Mayor as unworthy, and wound up by saying:

"Whatever he may do with this play, whether he prohibits it or not, he will never again get my vote!"

William D. Brigham—characterized by Speaker Burrill in a complimentary way as a "white man with a black heart," was given an ovation as he mounted the platform. Joshua Crawford, who was one of the leaders of the fight against "The Birth of a Nation," was the next speaker. He said in part:

"The things that are going on in the South today are worse than any of those that happened in reconstruction times—far worse than the alleged history portrayed in that vile film. The robbery, extortion, exploitation, murder, burning and slaughtering of the colored people of the South is greater and on a larger scale than ever.

Until Women Get the Ballot

"We shall demand that this film get out of our city, our State and our country. But it only represents the systematic attempts to blacken the negro's character in order that these villainies may be continued with impunity.

"We have not only fought, bled and died for the white people, but our fathers and mothers gave the years of their lives to amass wealth and fortune for them, and, in return, we get 'The Birth of a Nation!'

"But we shall fight and continue to fight, till not only every man, but every woman (loud cheers) gets the ballot in fact as in theory, and until the Declaration of Independence is a living document, which it isn't today."

Boston Journal May 25, 1915

GRIFFITH'S BIG FILM STARTS SEVENTH WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation" began the seventh week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday, with interest in this big series of dramatic pictures still keyed to the highest pitch. The great battle scenes, the ante-bellum color, the historic events in Washington during the 60s, the exciting days of reconstruction and the great display of horses and men in the rides of the vigilantes of that strenuous period of American history continue to thrill audiences.

The great attraction remains intact as presented for the first public performance in this city. There are two performances daily.

The Tremont will be closed between 11 and 12 today out of respect to Charles Frohman.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 25, 1915

NOW WAITING FOR CENSORS

Opponents of Photo-Play to Fight Film Again

The "Birth of a Nation" was allowed to rest yesterday by both the opponents to the film and the new board of theatre censors.

William Munroe Trotter, whose activities to have the photo play run out of the city have been unceasing, yesterday declared that the next move depended on the announcement of the first meeting of the three new censors, when an effort will be made to have a large representation present to offer argument to show why the film ought to be forbidden in Boston.

Mayor Curley has not decided upon the date for the first meeting of the new board to consider the photo play. Neither Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster nor Police Commissioner O'Meara, the other members of the board, have any knowledge of the proposed action of the board, of which the Mayor is recognized as the head.

Mr. Trotter speaks tonight at the Columbus Avenue A. M. E. Church, taking for his subject "The Birth of a Nation and American Race Pro[gress]"

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 25, 1915

Frohman Memorial.

During the noon hours today while the funeral services of the late Charles Frohman, the American producer, who lost his life when the Lusitania was sunk, were being held in New York City, the Tremont Theatre was closed and a wreath placed upon the front of the building by Manager John B Schoeffel as a tribute to the memory of the director whose plays were often seen in this and other Boston theatres. This kindly observance of the Frohman funeral was arranged by permission of the managers of "The Birth of a Nation," the attraction now playing at Tremont Theatre. Theatres in all parts of the country paid a like tribute to the memory of the late director.

Post, Boston May 25, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" began the seventh week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday with interest in this series of dramatic pictures still keyed to the highest pitch. The great battle scenes, the ante-bellum color, the historic events in Washington during the '60s, the exciting days of reconstruction and the great display of horses and men in the rides of the vigilantes of that strenuous period of American history, continue to thrill audiences as no dramatic offering of the decade has ever offered before. The great attraction remains intact as presented for the first public performance in this city.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
MAY 25, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" began the seventh week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday with interest in this big series of dramatic pictures still keyed to the highest pitch. The great battle scenes, the ante-bellum color, the historic events in Washington during the 60s, and the exciting days of reconstruction and the great disply of horses and men in the rides of the villigantes of that strenuous period of American history continue to thrill audiences as no dramatic offering of the decade has ever offered before. The great attraction remains intact as presented for the first public performance in this city and is meeting with the approval of all admirers of this effort in theatrical spectacle wonk.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 25, 1915

FILM PROTESTERS ASK QUICK ACTION

It is the contention of the colored people this week to drive "The Birth of a Nation" out of Boston that the censorship board created by the law that went into effect last Friday ought to stop the photo-play without a hearing. They say Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court have the power under the new statute.

Counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Equal Rights League, both of which bodies have submitted petitions to the censorship board, have not yet received a reply. No date has been fixed for an audience or hearing.

The colored protesters feel the delay is due to the fact that the censors have not organized. The colored organizations are working shoulder to shoulder. There is no conflict. They are said to have 5,0000 petitions ready to file with the Boston censors.

LOBBYISTS IN OWN TRAP.

There is an interesting story back of the fight that resulted in the new censorship law. It is a story of how lobbyists for "The Birth of a Nation" fell into their own trap. It tells how Governor Walsh jumped into the breach and saved the day for the negroes, although a coterie of Republicans sought the credit.

Through M. Sumner Coggan they filed a bill seeking the right to appeal from decisions of the Mayor and Police Commissioner, the only censors under the law just wiped out, and to be heard by a justice of the Superior Court, sitting in equity.

The Coggan bill fell by the wayside with the vicious Sullivan measure and a grist of others stifled by the House Judiciary Committee, which reported the bill adding the chief justice of the Boston Municipal Court as a censor with the Mayor and Police Commissioner and demanding that their decisions in the suppression of shows and the revoking of theatre licenses be unanimous.

The motion picture men were at the time too much absorbed in Statewide censorship legislation to give their attention to the local measure, which soon was christened "The Birth of a Nation" bill, because of the strong support given to it by those working on behalf of the show.

Meanwhile the colored forces were fighting the judiciary measure tooth and nail. They induced champions in the House to offer an amendment to change the vote of the proposed triumvirate of censors to a majority, but on May 10, the House killed the amendment by a vote of 116 to 104 and passed the judiciary bill by a margin so decisive as to reflect the support given to it by City Hall and the show lobbyists

REACHING FOR VOTES.

It was in the Senate that the sleight of hand work was done by Senator "Jim" Bean of Cambridge and his Republican colleagues who saw a chance to nail down the negro votes in their districts and to pose as emancipators.

That amendment idea launched in the House looked good to them with an overwhelming Republican influence in the upper branch. So the amendment bugaboo was revived and fought and carried.

When the measure was sent back to the House for concurrence, Governor Walsh crossed swords with Mayor Curley for the first time in the censorship agitation and opposition to the amendment faded. The Governor sent Secretary Connelly the lobby and in a jiffy the odds were swung in favor of the colored people.

The amended bill encountered feeble opposition when it was returned to the Senate for enactment. There was bitter editorial comment by no less a Republican organ than the Boston Transcript, which denounced the Republican Senators who supported it, calling the bill "thoroughly dishonest" and accusing the Republican solons of "playing cheap politics" to please a misguided minority in the community who "threatened vengeance at the polls." The Transcript also reminded the Republican Senators that they were committing themselves to a stage censorship that would hurt the party.

APPEAL TOO LATE.

But the Transcript appeal came too late, although it was indorsed by all the theatre managers and film producers who saw their error in not having whipped up opposition from the start. Too late also were "The Birth of a Nation" lobbyists in discovering that in pushing across this compromise which they considered a "harmless joker," they furnished a dummy that the Republican majority put teeth into by the two-thirds amendment.

Arguments by film men that new legislation was dangerous and unnecessary when "The Birth of a Nation" was running with crowded houses under the law as it stood were not heeded by the show lobbyists until the trap had snapped on them.

But in putting one over on "The Birth of a Nation" and City Hall forces, the Republicans subjected themselves to the political mercy of Governor Walsh. If they killed the amended bill at the eleventh hour the Republican leaders would have been confronted by the reminder of a Democratic Governor that he had done all he could for the passage of the measure by changing sentiment in the House. And in enacting it the Republicans still faced the annoyig realization that they were adding to Governor Walsh's prestige.

But it was too late to retreat then. They had used up all their thunder and were caught between two fires.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 25, 1915

1000 DELEGATES EXPECTED IN HUB

Opinion Divided as to Protest Against "Birth of a Nation."

More than 1000 delegates are in Boston for "Anniversary week," which began yesterday, and during which the annual convention of the American Unitarian Association and organizations allied with the Unitarian Church will be held.

The first service was morning prayer in King's Chapel, conducted by the Rev. William L. Walsh of Billerica.

"The Sunday school has thus far failed as a substitute for the religious training commonly given in the home of a hundred years ago," was the statement of the Rev. Dr. William C. Gannett of Rochester, N. Y., who addressed the annual meeting of the Ministerial Union held in Channing Hall at the headquarters of the American Unitarian Association, 25 Beacon street, at 10.30 yesterday morning. He emphasized the need of religious training for children and believed that neither the schoolboy nor the church could satisfactorily do what he considered as primarily a work for the home.

"Birth of Nation" Not Opposed

Divided opinion on the wisdom and desirability of passing resolutions condemning the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," and urging that its license be revoked caused a spirited discussion at the opening meeting.

The resolution was introduced by the Rev. Christopher Eliot of the Bulfinch Place Church, who was prepared with petitions to receive individual signatures against the play at a meeting of the Ministerial Union. A number of ministers obected to action nasmuch as a large number of those present were from outside Boston and knew little of the merits of the case. On motion of the Rev. Joseph N. Pardee of Bolton the resolution was tabled.

The following officers were elected: President, Rev. Charles R. Wendte, Boston; vice presidents, Rev. Thomas Van Ness, Boston, and Rev. Bradley Gilman, Canton; secretary treasurer, Rev. Frederick M. Eliot, Cambridge. Directors, Rev. Joseph H. Metcalf, Winchester; Rev. Adolph Rossbach, East Boston, and Rev. J. M. Wilson, Lexington.

The meeting was presided over by Rev. Frederick R. Gill of Arlington.

BOSTON TRAVELER
MAY 25, 1915

Film Play in Seventh Week

"The Birth of a Nation" began the seventh week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday. The great battle scenes, the ante-bellum color, the historic events in Washington during the 60s, and the exciting days of reconstruction and the great display of horses and men in the rides of the vigilantes of that strenuous period of American history continue to thrill audiences as no dramatic offering of the decade has ever offered before.

Tremont in Mourning

During the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock today while the funeral services of the late Charles Frohman, the American producer who lost his life when the Lusitania was sunk, were being held in New York, the Tremont Theatre was closed and a wreath placed upon the front of the building by Manager Schoeffel as a tribute to the memory of the director whose plays were often seen in this and other Boston theatres.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 25, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 25, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

"The Birth of a Nation" began the seventh week of its run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday.

The great battle scenes, the ante-bellum color, the historic events in Washington during the 60s, the exciting days of reconstruction and the great display of horses and men in the rides of the vigilants of that strenuous period of American history continue to thrill large audiences.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 25, 1915

1709

PLEADS FOR REVIVAL OF HOME LIFE

Dr. Gannett at Unitarian Meeting Urges Return to Family Altar.

Topics secular and religious came up for consideration yesterday at the Unitarian anniversary week meetings in Boston. At the morning gathering in Channing Hall resolutions opposing "The Birth of a Nation" were discussed and tabled, and remedies were suggested for "the disintegration of the home and the abdication of the parent."

In the afternoon addresses were delivered at the South Congregational church on "The Conservation of the Religious Spirit." The evening meeting at the Twentieth Century Club was given to a discussion of the value to the church of men's clubs and the open forum.

The day opened with morning prayer in King's Chapel, led by the Rev. William Walsh. At 10:30 A. M. the Unitarians met in Channing Hall for the annual conference of the ministerial union. The Rev. Frederic Gill of Arlington presided, and the address was delivered by the Rev. William Channing Gannett of Rochester, N. Y.

"Disintegration of the home and the abdication of the parent," said he, "are parts of the price we have paid for our nineteenth century advance in civilization. The home of a hundred years ago and the home of today stand in strongest contrast as places for the religious training of children. As the modern parent has surrendered the mental training of his child to the public school, so he has surrendered the religious training to the Sunday school. He has abdicated his highest function. And so far the Sunday school has failed as substitute.

"Yet religious training is needed. Conscious reverence is to character what the green bark is to the tree; it is the part where the sap runs and the new growth forms. Reverence is a form of aspiration; it is the love of ideals. What a parent owes to his child above everything else is passionate love of moral ideals."

Urges Return to Family Altar.

Dr. Gannett urged a return to "some form of 'family altar' fitted to our own time."

Rev. C. R. Eliot offered a resolution of protest against "The Birth of a Nation" and looking to its suppression in Boston. After the motion was tabled, the Rev. C. F. Dole asked all the preachers who heard him to deliver positive and constructive sermons, today and so, if possible, turn the minds of the people toward the brotherhood of man.

These officers were elected: President, the Rev. Charles W. Wendte, D. D.; vice-presidents, the Rev. Thomas Van Ness and the Rev. Bradley Gilman; secretary and treasurer, the Rev. Frederick May Eliot; directors, the Rev. Joel H. Metcalf, the Rev. Adolph Rossbach and the Rev. J. M. Wilson; committee on pulpit supplies, the Rev. B. R. Bulkely, the Rev. T. J. Horner and the Rev. Harry Luts.

The annual two days' meeting of the Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women was opened in the afternoon at the South Congregational Church, Miss Anna M. Bancroft of Hopedale presiding. Selections from the history of the alliance, written by its former secretary, Emily A. Fifield, were read by Mrs. Edward H. Atherton.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 25, 1915

8

JOHN A. LEWIS, Editor.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Passing into its third month of a wonderful run at the Tremont Theatre in Boston, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the dramatic sensations of the season.

With the approach of the memorial day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstanings of the past we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 26, 1915

THEATRE CENSORS ORGANIZE TODAY

Mayor, O'Meara and Justice Bolster to Consider "Birth of Nation."

The organization of the newly established commission of censorship, which is comprised of Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara, will probably be accomplished at 4 o'clock this afternoon at a special meeting called by Mayor Curley to be held in his office at City Hall.

The question of censoring or forbidding further presentations of the film, "The Birth of a Nation," will not be touched at the first meeting of the new commission which was established by legislative act by the opponents of the film play.

The petition of the Equal Rights League asking a hearing on the photoplay will probably be considered, however, and a date set for the hearing of the protests.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 26, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" is running strong [illegible] week at the Tremont. The average receipts have exceeded $10,000 weekly—a new record for the motion-picture drama in Boston.

It [illegible] D. W. Griffith's next big film production will be a drama called "The Mother and the Law." Domestic problems, so they say, will be cast in a rather lurid light. This production is pretty well under way. Mr. Griffith is allowing it to simmer out in his Los Angeles studios while he is wrestling with the mayor of Chicago over "The Birth of a Nation." He has used in this new play much the same cast to been in the film drama now at the Tremont.

The talk about his conjuring up a big spectacular play out of the Grail paintings at the Boston Public Library is inconsequential compared with the monumental plans that Griffith has lately taken under consideration—plans based on one of the great universal problems uppermost in the talk of the day. But this project, which has the moral and material support of several of the wealthiest philanthropists of the times, is still under cover.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 26, 1915

CENSORSHIP BOARD MAY ORGANIZE TODAY

The new board of censorship, created by [illegible] of the present Legislature, will [illegible] this afternoon for the first time if Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court and Police Commissioner O'Meara, members of the board, consider favorable the recommendation of Mayor Curley, the third member.

He requested them to meet in his office to elect a chairman and to take under consideration the objection filed against "The Birth of a Nation." Commissioner O'[illegible] said that he would attend today "if other business did not interfere." Chief Justice Bolster had not answered last night.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 26, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION

Passing into its third month of a wonderful run at the Tremont Theatre in Boston, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the dramatic sensations of the season.

With the approach of the memorial day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstanings of the past we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXPRESS
MAY 25, 1915

The Clansman Again on View

The Clansman at Clune's Auditorium theater opened its [illegible] week yesterday to a most enthusiastic audience. The tourists, who have heard of The Clansman throughout the East, are making a visit to Clune's Auditorium to see this remarkable production one of the features of their visit here. This has increased the interest to a marked degree, making a record for The Clansman that has never been equalled.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 25, 1915

Representative Cross of Royalston took an active part in the House debates last week, and drew further attention to his capacity as a speaker and debater. Unlike some of the members, our representative does not attempt to mix in with discussions just for the sake of talking. He speaks only on matters that he has carefully studied, and then briefly and to the point. He talked very effectively on the bill to censure dramatic plays in Boston, especially the picture drama "The Birth of a Nation." Last week he was a leading speaker on the Boston & Maine reorganization bill, and it was his motion to have the House set apart a few hours and listen to the presentation of the whole matter by railroad experts that caused several hours' debate. His idea struck many members as an exceedingly good one, but certain interests killed it. Mr Cross got much applause for his strong denunciation of the Hampden branch, and the purpose to foist that corrupt and costly measure on to the Boston & Maine. A sort of compromise was finally reached. On Wednesday Mr Cross spoke with effect in favor of the university extension bill, relating some of his own experiences in getting an education, and showing how, in his opinion, the bill would be of great benefit to people in moderate circumstances who cannot afford to send children to college. It is with pleasure that we note the growing prominence of our member as a speaker.

Telegraph (N.Y.) [illegible]

CENSORSHIP BILLS PUT OVER TO NEXT COURT TERM

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, May 26

All bills relating to State-wide moving picture censorship [illegible] until the next session of the General Court, as a result of the [illegible] filed in the Senate to-day by the Ways and Means Committee.

Film distributors and exhibitors regard the action as a big victory and are highly pleased.

United opposition by the "movie" men and the tremendous political power of moving pictures, revealed by recent censorship agitation due to the [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation," is held responsible for the postponement. They feared that the Lowell bill, which they regarded as the most [illegible] would be passed in the face of their opposition because of its powerful backing, but has been put over with the others.

N (Mass.) ADVERTISER
MAY 27, 1915

...L VIEW FILM PLAY

...oard of Censorship Will ...ce Decision Next Wednesday

... Board of Censorship for ...trical performances in Boston ... the first time yesterday af... in Mayor Curley's office and ...s individual members, to in... photoplay, "The Birth of a ..." On Wednesday next ...rs will meet to determine ...r any action shall be taken. ...or Curley was elected chair... and it was agreed that the ...gs shall be held at the Mayor's ... John M. Casey was elected ...ary of the board, to serve with...

...ppropriation was made for the ..., as a result of which any ex... incurred for postage, etc., ...e met out of the private funds ... three members of the board.

...ON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 27, 1915

...NSORS TO VIEW 'BIRTH OF NATION'

...lster, O'Meara and Cur...ley Will Pass on the Photoplay.

...f Justice Wilfred Bolster of the ...ipal courts, Police Commissioner ...ew O'Meara and Mayor Curley ...attend a performance of the photo... "The Birth of a Nation," at the ...ont Theatre before next Wednes... afternoon.

...s was agreed upon yesterday after... at a meeting in Mayor Curley's ... by these three officials, at which ... organized themselves under the ...isions of the new legislative act ...blishing this Censorship Commis... for Boston.

...e mayor was elected as chairman ...o definite action was taken, other ... to agree to see the production in... ...ually and to meet again at ... ...ck next Wednesday afternoon, ...r consider the matter of a further ...ring or to finally dispose of the ...roversy concerning the propriety of ...lm play.

...OSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 27, 1915

...AYOR IS CHAIRMAN OF THEATRE CENSORS

...embers Will Separately See "Birth of Nation."

Meeting Next Wednesday Some Action on Play Is Possible.

...he new Theatre Censor Commission, ...nsisting of Mayor Curley, Chief Jus... Bolster of the Municipal Court and ...ommissioner O'Meara of the Police De...rtment, met in the Mayor's office late ...terday afternoon and perfected or... ...ization by the election of the Mayor ... chairman and John M. Casey, chief ... the license division, as secretary.

...he motion that the Mayor be chair... was made by the Chief Justice and ...onded by the Police Commissioner.

...ll will serve without pay, even the ...retary. In fact, as no provisions were ...de for the spending of any money, ...tage stamps must be bought by the ...mbers when they desire to use the ... as a medium of communication.

...t was voted at yesterday's meeting ... the three members separately at... ... a performance of "The Birth of a ...ion." At the next meeting, at 4 p m ...dnesday, matters before the com... ...ion will be taken up and discussed. ...s possible that it will pass on "The ...th of a Nation" that that meeting.

...n the ordinary run of things John M. ...sey will represent the Mayor and ... McNamara the Police Commissioner ...the matter of visiting theatres for ...poses of censoring. In cases of great ...portance the members of the com... ...ion will attend performances.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 27, 1915

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE

ATTACKS BIRTH OF NATION

NEGRO THE IDEAL AMERICAN

Armond W. Scott Speaks at Meeting of Civic League.

Armond W. Scott, one of the leading lawyers of Washington, D. C., in an address entitled, "The Ideal American," before the Negro civic league in the Buckingham school last night, strongly condemned "The Birth of a Nation," which has produced so much feeling in Boston, denounced President Wilson for his segregation policy in the departments at Washington and served notice on the republican party that the Negro voters would not support William E. Borah for president because of his record. He asserted that the American Negro is "the ideal American."

Thomas Dixon and "his co-conspirators" produced the "Birth of a Nation" with the purpose of nullifying all we have accomplished and stirring up race hatred, especially in the North, Mr Scott asserted. The production is not only a wicked and unfounded libel against the Negro, but is an attempt to discredit the part played by the white people of the North who fought, bled and died that this nation might live. It glorifies the Klu Klux Klans of the South, which is composed of gangs of ruffians, who not only murdered innocent men, but outraged women and children. President Wilson, Mr Scott asserted, in an address recently delivered to 4000 naturalized American citizens in Philadelphia said: "There is but one longing and utterance of the human heart, and that is for liberty and justice." He further said: "You cannot become thorough Americans if you think of yourself in groups." Yet the Negro is not only discriminated against all over this country simply because he is a Negro, Mr Scott maintained, but in the departments at Washington, over which our honored president presides, the Negroes have been segregated, humiliated and discriminated against for no other reason than that God created them black.

In the course of reviewing the part played by the Negroes in our national life, the speaker sounded a political warning. He said the Washington Post had recently made the statement that the delegates from New England to the next national republican convention would support as their favorite son, United States Senator John W. Weeks, and their second choice would be Senator William E. Borah of Idaho. This same Senator Borah, he asserted, is the man who voted to repeal the 15th amendment and he is the same man who voted for the amendment to the immigration bill, the purpose of which was to forever hereafter exclude from this country all people of African descent. The Negro voters of the North and West owe it to their own self-respect to put the republican party on notice that if this man is put up as the standard-bearer of that party he will not get their votes.

The authors of "The Birth of a Nation," Mr Scott asserted, pictured the Negro to be a brute, unfit for freedom and unworthy of the protection of the laws of his country. They have assailed the good name of Gen Grant and have attempted to blacken the character of Charles Sumner. And yet these evil conspirators had the brazen impudence to select Massachusetts as the place for the introduction of this outrageous and slanderous play. If the people of this country had the right to suppress the moving pictures representing Jack Johnson's victory over James Jeffries, the speaker continued, certainly they have the right to suppress these pictures which are evil per se, which are against good morals and which have for their purpose the stirring up of race prejudice, and arraying class against class. They are against the peace and good order of any community, and it is the right and duty of every municipality to use its strong arm to suppress every movement of this character.

But let us remember that in this fight we have not been without friends. Gov Willis of Ohio announced the play would not be produced in that state. In Boston, notwithstanding the fact that Mayor Curley first took sides with the enemy in the production of the play, the people became so aroused that he was compelled to take back water. His predecessor, ex-Mayor Fitzgerald, reminded him that when he was mayor he found a way to prevent the presentation of "The Clansman." He reminded Mayor Curley that if he were mayor now he would find a way to prevent the production of "The Birth of a Nation." Massachusetts has always stood for liberty and justice, and though there may be a few exceptions where men have become contaminated by their contact with rabid, race-hating southerners, the great masses of the people of this state stand for human rights and human liberty.

Mr Scott said the American Negro has served his country in every war and has been a good citizen. The race, like Banquo's ghost, will not down and all the Thomas Dixons, the Vardemans, the Tillmans and the John Sharp Williams cannot stop its onward march. Speaking of earlier days Mr Scott said it is unnecessary to paint a picture of the privations and injustices to which their ancestors were subjected for a period of 250 years. The picture would be too lurid and revolting. "We all know too well the awful story," he said. "We were brought here from our native land against our will, plunged into involuntary servitude and made to do the biddings of our self-constituted masters, while in their laziness they revelled in luxury and enjoyed the fruits of our labors. Think of the inconsistency of the early settlers coming to this country, looking for a land of freedom and yet as soon as they landed instituting the most nefarious institution ever known in the history of the world."

R. S. Frazier, president of the league, presided at the meeting and Mr Scott was introduced by Dr W. E. Jones. A musical and literary program preceded the address and a reception followed. Among the numbers on the program were a piano solo by Miss Bolling, reading by Miss Whitten, vocal solo by Mrs Ivey Shepard, reading by Miss Eva Gibson and selections by the mandolin and ... club.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
MAY 27, 1915

BOSTON FILM CENSORS ORGANIZE WITH MAYOR CURLEY AT THE HEAD

Foes of "The Birth of a Nation" will know next Wednesday what the new Boston censorship board thinks of the photo-play that caused such a furore.

Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court, the new show censors of Boston, held their first meeting yesterday in the Mayor's office and organized. Mayor Curley was chosen permanent chairman and Licensing Clerk John M. Casey was made permanent secretary.

The members of the new board of censors declined to comment on the photo-play at the Tremont Theatre. They said they were to attend performances as individuals and at their meeting next week will make public what they think of the film which the negroes of Boston claim holds their race up to ridicule.

This plan of quietly witnessing the motion picture for themselves indicates that the censors have decided not to grant the remonstrants any public hearing on their petitions to stop the show.

CLAIM VICTORY.

The motion picture men regard as a victory the vote of the Senate Ways and Means Committee to defer until the next General Court all bills relating to State-wide film censorship.

There was danger up to the last hour of the committee reporting the James A. Lowell bill, which was no better, in the opinion of the film distributors and exhibitors, than the Carstens bill. The latter bill was roundly denounced on slides displayed in motion picture theatres all over Massachusetts.

The Carstens bill died from its own defects, but the measure which Mr. Lowell, fellow official with Secretary Carstens in the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, filed with the committee, would have worked even greater injustice on the film forces.

The Lowell bill sought to place film censorship power in charge of the State police and to have appointments made under civil service regulations and to have the censors paid the same salaries as inspectors receive or the State police force. This would have saddled an extra expense on the State, to say nothing of the dangerous powers it would vest in the district police department.

The Lowell bill, like that framed by Carstens, also provided for a tax of $1 on films of 1,000 linear feet and $2 on films over 1,000 feet.

LIBERAL MEASURE.

The film men, anxious to protect the public morals, swung their support to the Miller bill, which they considered far more sane and liberal. The Miller bill sought the appointment of a censorship commission by Governor Walsh. The censors were to serve without pay. The board was to include two women and a film and labor representative. On petition of fifteen persons the commission would hear any complaint.

These unpaid public servants were to stand between theatregoers and improper films. The film men felt such a law would protect them and their heavy investments in photo-plays, which are constantly assuming a more elaborate scale. They felt costly productions would be safeguarded by so liberal a commission.

But the antis insisted on a paid commission, to be under the domination of the State police. The antis changed their bills and amendments so frequently that the Senate Ways and Means Committee were confused. Members admitted it. They sought light and assistance.

FUTILE CONFERENCE.

Desiring to be fair to all concerned, the Ways and Means Committee arranged for a conference between the antis and motion picture men. It was held in the committee's private chamber at the State House. It lasted several hours, but it was futile. The factions adjourned, unable to agree on the question of whether films should be censored before they were given a public display.

The antis insisted that all films be viewed before they were shown to the public. The film men were just as determined that films should be given at least one display to permit the public to judge, rather than a few fanatical critics. The motion picture delegates argued that as all films were censored originally by the National Board of New York, there really was no need of a State censorship, but that they were willing to have an unbiased and unpaid State board pass upon films approved by the national censors which might not meet with local favor.

The motion picture forces felt this was a concession, but the antis couldn't see it. And so the breach remained and the Ways and Means Committee were still at a loss. After rummaging over the grist of bills and amendments for weeks the members of the committee yesterday decided to postpone the agitation until the next session of the Legislature.

It was first announced at the State House that the Senate Ways and Means Committee was "unanimous." An hour later Senator Bean arrived on the scene and was chagrined to learn that he couldn't change the situation.

Bean, the author of the troublesome amendment that clamped an unnecessary censorship law on Boston simply to reach "The Birth of a Nation," promptly recorded a dissenting vote. He has earned the sobriquet, "Film Foe" Bean.

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
MAY 27, 1915

EXCITING PEOPLE'S PREJUDICES.

In its review of the movies Harper's Weekly touches on one point in a popular photoplay that ought to engage the attention of all those who are intelligently interested in the advance of civilization. "The Birth of a Nation," it says, "is done upon a scale that would be utterly impossible with canvas, paint and a dialogue. Those wonderful battle scenes and rides of the Ku-Klux Klan could not even have been approximated on the largest stage or in any enclosure. But even 'The Birth of a Nation' is advertised by lithographs of the shooting of Lincoln. On the bill-boards we may see Booth jumping from the presidential box in Ford's theatre, Washington." This arouses prejudices and passions long since, to a large extent, buried and forgotten. Why revive them to inflame a tense and nervous generation, always on feather edge for misunderstanding and trouble? Harper's arrives at this sage conclusion:

> The most enthusiastic admirer of the movies today cannot maintain that the pictures, often admirable and well acted as they are, tend to prepare audiences that will arise and demand a higher standard for our stage. The theatre is vital and will find its own salvation from commercialism. It does not need the movies, but the movies might have done better than to ape some of the worst features of the stage.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 27, 1915

THEATRICAL CENSORS PICK MAYOR AS CHAIRMAN

Will View "Birth of a Nation" Before Acting.

Boston's new board of censorship, created by an act of the present Legislature, met for the first time yesterday in the mayor's office, elected Mayor Curley its chairman, on the motion of Police Commissioner O'Meara, and postponed until next Wednesday any action on the protests filed against "The Birth of a Nation." Each of the members of the board, the mayor, the police commissioner, and Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court will attend a performance of the photo-play before the next meeting.

Record. Boston Mass. May 27, 1915

WILL VIEW FILM PLAY

New Board of Censorship Will Announce Decision Next Wednesday

The new Board of Censorship for all theatrical performances in Boston met for the first time yesterday afternoon in Mayor Curley's office and agreed, as individual members, to inspect the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation." On Wednesday next the members will meet to determine whether any action shall be taken.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 27, 1915

CENSORS TO SEE PHOTO-PLAY

Board Organizes with Mayor Curley as Chairman—Verdict Expected Wednesday

Whether the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," will be longer permitted at the Tremont Theatre will be decided next Wednesday afternoon by the newly created board of censors. Meantime each of the three members will see the film. The first meeting of the board was held at the mayor's office yesterday afternoon. Mayor Curley was chosen chairman and License Clerk John M. Casey, secretary. Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara are the other two members.

All members and the secretary will serve without pay as no provision was made in the legislative act for the spending of money. Ordinarily John M. Casey will represent the mayor and Secretary McNamara the police commissioner in judging theatrical exhibitions. In cases of great importance the members of the commission will attend performances.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 27, 1915

VERDICT ON PHOTOPLAY WEDNESDAY

Censors to See the Film in the Meantime

A decision as to whether the "Birth of a Nation" will be permitted to continue to run may be handed down by the newly created censor board Wednesday afternoon. In the meantime each of the three members of the board will see the film so that he may better judge of its character.

BOARD ORGANIZED

The board held its first meeting yesterday afternoon at City Hall, and organized with Mayor Curley as chairman and License Clerk John M. Casey as secretary. Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara, the other two members, were present.

Mayor Curley announced later that the board voted that each member should see the photoplay individually, and that the next meeting of the board would be held next Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. At that time the question will be considered as to whether the show shall or shall not be permitted to continue.

When pressed for further information, Mayor Curley stated that that was all the board had decided to give out at this time. He admitted, however, that the meeting of Wednesday would be significant, as it would then be determined whether the view which the members had was sufficient to convince them one way or another as to whether hearings should be granted to those who are protesting against the play.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 22, 1915

Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Mayor Curley, who constitute Boston's new board of censorship, met in the latter's office Wednesday and organized by making the mayor chairman. The three agreed as individual members to inspect the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," and [illegible] week to compare notes and decide what to do about it, if anything.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 28, 1915

UNITARIANS DENOUNCE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Call It "Disgraceful Attack on Worthy Citizens"—Wilson Commended—Anti-Enlistment League's Aims Approved by Convention.

Unitarians were in hot debate yesterday afternoon in Bulfinch place Church over war and "The Birth of a Nation" resolutions which came before the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice.

Protest against the photoplay was finally passed, but the meeting tabled a resolution condemning the sale and shipment of munitions of war to belligerents by this country or its citizens, after a fight in which the parliamentary rules were strained.

"The Birth of a Nation" contest came early in the afternoon business session. The contest on this largely centered around the phrase "a deliberate perversion of history." This phrase was stricken from the resolution before adoption, not because there was anything like agreement that the film was historically accurate, but because there was much considerable doubt whether the meeting was competent to pass upon this point and, further, whether a drama, even a historical one, could be held to historical accuracy, and, finally, whether the author had not a prejudice which made it impossible for him to "see straight," as one speaker put it, so that any perversion of history by him might not be deliberate but inevitable. The resolution as adopted follows:

"Resolved, That the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice denounces the moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," as a disgraceful attack upon a great and worthy body of our fellow citizens and welcomes every effort to expose its character and to correct its influence."

Endowment Fund Attacked

A resolution favoring equal suffrage was unanimously passed. A resolution implying that there was "economic error" in the policy of supporting the Unitarian work by an endowment fund and favoring the encouragement of individual giving for the work of the present, was killed. The American Unitarian Association has an endowment fund of about $2,500,000.

A government-owned news service of federal scope, which should make available unprejudiced news and offset the influence of news prejudiced by advertisers in newspapers, especially that of the liquor interests, was favored in a resolution which was lost because of the feeling that nothing could be done about it, anyhow, and that, even if it could, matters might not be much improved, as the federal service would likely be prejudiced, too.

President Wilson Commended

A telegram will be sent to President Wilson as follows:

"The Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice desires to express their earnest appreciation of the noble humanitarian spirit in which your administration met the grave problems of state arising from the sinking of the Lusitania, and to express their confidence in you to lead our nation in the way of justice and peace."

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was not sympathized with by the fellowship which sends "greetings to the Hon. Frank Walsh chairman of the United States Industrial Relations Commission, and rejoices at his wisdom and courage in pursuing a relentless investigation of the Rockefeller interests and the Colorado strike."

The "anti-enlistment league" was approved both as to its work and statement, part of which follows:

"In view of the fact that the advocates of armament are gathering in leagues of defense those who hold themselves ready to serve their country by killing other men, it seems that the time has come for a roll-call of those of us who are prepared to serve our country by a refusal to engage in, or endorse, the murder called war."

The league is being promoted by Rev. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, Jessie Wallace Hugham and Tracy D. Mygatt.

"The establishment of a new peace party," the statement says, "is not contemplated, but the banding together in a personal policy of those whose opposition to war has become unconditional."

Officers Elected

The following officers were elected: President, Alson H. Robinson; secretary-treasurer, Miss Frances M. Dadmun; director, Frank C. Doan; chairman editorial committee, Rev. A. J. Wilson; chairman publication committee, Charles W. Casson; chairman cooperation committee, Lyman V. Rutledge; chairman comity committee, Rev. Franklin K. Gifford, chairman finance committee, William W. Peck; vice presidents, John Graham Brooks, William M. Brundage, Horace Davis, John Haynes Holmes, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, B. Fay Mills, Samuel A. Oliver, Anita T. Pickett, Charles E. Snyder, Anna Garlin Spencer and Charles Zeublin.

Young People's Meetings

The Young People's Religious Union held its annual meeting in Second Church yesterday afternoon and reelected Sanford Bates president.

The annual graduation exercises of the Tuckerman School, which trains young women for social service, were held yesterday morning at the American Unitarian Association headquarters. President Samuel A. Eliot of the association presented diplomas to the class of five.

The annual meeting of the Unitarian Historical Society was held yesterday morning in King's Chapel. At the business meeting the following officers were elected: President, Henry H. Edes of Cambridge; vice president, Rev. James DeNormandie of Roxbury; treasurer, John Ware Denny of Boston; librarian, Rev. L. C. Cornish of Hingham; secretary, Rev. George Hale Reed of Fairhaven; directors, Miss L. Freeman Clarke of Boston, Hon. Winslow Warren of Dedham, Rev. Roger S. Forbes of Dorchester, Rev. Dr. William H. Lyon of Brookline.

At the open conference of alliance workers Miss Edith G. Pecker spoke. Miss Pecker will sail in the fall for China and will be the first Unitarian woman missionary.

The wives of ministers were entertained yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Samuel A. Eliot, wife of the president of the American Uuntarian Association. After a discussion of the subject, "Being a Minister's Wife," tea was served.

Conferences of the Cheerful Letter Workers and the Postoffice Mission Workers were held and brought forth interesting reports and suggestions on the work of those two departments of activity.

WATERTOWN (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 28, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

With the approach of the memorial day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights, "The Birth of a Nation" brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past that we may face he crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

The dramatic form has often been employed by the greatest minds of the world to express underlying truths and as regards the usages and the sufferings of war no pen has been able to make as impressive a picture as Griffith has encompassed in this masterpiece. A born realist he cuts into the quick of facts that he may establish his dramatic plot. He masses great armies upon a historic plane to reproduce the records of a mighty struggle and by the human interests of two families makes a great nation's efforts a topic of a dramatic construction which appeals to the heart and the sympathies as no bald narrative of facts could hope to do. It is well worth while and when one has seen it it is easy to understand why it has created such a stir.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 28, 1915

Tremont.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" with this week's presentation at the Tremont theatre, Boston, rounds out the final week of its second month in the Hub.

With no sign of abatement in the interest aroused by the daily performances of this big production the indications are that the piece will continue there for a record run as far as spring and summer theatrical offerings go in this section.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic portraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18,000 people visualizing a story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 2000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is unfolded.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the developments of America and its final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world.

MALDEN (Mass.) MIRROR.
MAY 23, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" with this week's presentation at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, rounds out the final week of its second month in the Hub.

With no sign of abatement in the interest aroused by the daily performances of this big production the indications are that the piece will continue there for a record run as far as spring and summer theatrical offerings go in this

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 29, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" FILMS VERY POPULAR

With the Memorial day matinee and night performances on Monday, D. W. Griffith's wonder-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters the final week of its second month at the Tremont Theatre.

The production has made such a deep impression upon local theatregoers that all the signs point to its remaining here for the longest run ever recorded in this city by a presentation of its classification. The engagement will continue with daily matinees and nightly performances.

It is a wonderful creation of art that can make the historic events of 50 years ago pass before the public eye today with a graphic completeness which makes them seem like reality itself. The pictures are among the wonders of the times.

The Grant, Sherman and Lincoln scenes are but part of the background of the romance that runs all through this photodrama.

LOWELL (Mass.) COURIER-CITIZEN
MAY 29, 1915

...ston's show censors have organized with Mayor Curley as chairman. Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court and Police Commissioner O'Meara and the other members of this censorial authority. If two of the three agree that a show shall be stopped or not allowed to be put on, that settles its fate in the city. The censors individually will take a peek at "The Birth of a Nation" and in a few days decide whether it may continue. Almost everybody must have seen the photo-play by this time and the decision will make little difference. But wait till the musical revues hit the town next season. Then the censors will have real business on their...

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
MAY 29, 1915

Boston

STATE OF RACE PREJUDICE BILL.

The censorship bill directed against "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by the Massachusetts House of Representatives on a roll call vote of 175 to 43. It is now up for a third reading in the Senate, where it is predicted to die.

The bill vests unlimited authority of censorship in the Mayor of Boston, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal Court.

Immediately after the bill was passed in the house, the Rev. Benjamin W. Smith, pastor of the Columbus A. M. E. church and a leader of Boston's colored people in the fight against the Griffith spectacle, said: "We are supremely disappointed. This is not the bill we wanted. The House killed the Rowley amendment which would allow any two of the censor officials to stop any entertainment and also killed the Cutheon amendment which would eliminate the chief justice. The board must be unanimous before a film is barred in Boston.

Condemning the bill, Representative Fred W. Goss of Royalston said in a two-hour debate: "This is a weak attempt to satisfy a mistaken hysteria on the part of a very small number of people, and a piece of legislation which would give to three men the power to stand taking a long step in suppressing the freedom of the stage, which is second only to the freedom of the press."

Representative Essex S. Abbott of Haverhill said: "The Birth of a Nation has been tried by a jury and found not guilty. We soon will be asked, whenever a court renders a decision unsatisfactory to a small number of people to over turn the judge, the courts, the juries and the laws."

When the bill reached the Senate, Senator James W. Beane of Cambridge presented the seventh amendment to be made to this bill. His amendment was practically the same as the Rowley amendment.

Senator Sullivan of Boston moved a substitute bill, which would give the Mayor of Boston the power to stop a production. Both the Beane and the Sullivan amendments were killed.

Senator Sullivan said that he had seen "The Birth of a Nation" and he believed that the colored people had a right to protest against it on the ground that it was offensive to [illegible]. He said the Senate should go slow passing legislation, however, and should have an eye to the protection of property. He said that the Mayor of Boston should have the same power as other mayors and for that reason offered his amendment.

Senator Bean said that the bill passed by the house requiring unanimous action by the board of censors would nullify the whole intent of the legislature and for that reason his amendment should be adopted.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
MAY 29, 1915

SPECIAL SUNDAY SERVICES

"The Birth of a Nation," and other plays similar in spirit but less able in character, have focussed attention on the negro. The pastor of the Central Congregational church will speak tomorrow evening on the latest phases of the question. It is Memorial Day. We are thinking of the heroes and the results of the war. The negro has had only 60 years of freedom. Has he made good? Does not the present agitation challenge us all to a fairer estimate of the race, so sadly handicapped?

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK WORLD
Date MAY 29 1915

NEW CENSOR LAW FOR MASSACHUSETTS.

MAYOR, POLICE CHIEF AND CHIEF JUSTICE INVESTED WITH UNLIMITED CENSOR POWERS.

The Mayor, Police Commissioner and Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, of Boston, Mass., will form a censorship triumvirate hereafter that will be invested with unlimited powers in the censoring of motion picture films.

The appointment of the censorial trio is the result of Governor Walsh having signed the Massachusetts censor bill last week. The measure recently passed both legislative houses, and its enactment is considered throughout Massachusetts as a direct result of the agitation by Boston's colored population, following the presentation in that city of Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation."

Heretofore the powers of censorship have reposed in the Chief of Police and Mayor jointly. While the censorship measure was in process of becoming a law it caused several acrimonious arguments in the law making bodies of the State. Representative Goss, of Royalston, bitterly opposed the passage of the bill, and Senator Hays, of Brighton, declared in effect that the bill was more or less of a political move to please the colored citizens who, as Senator Hays pointed out, have votes in Boston.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
MAY 29, 1915

An altercation between a white man and a negro, who occupied adjoining seats at last Tuesday night's performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theater, was the cause of a slight disturbance, which was immediately quelled by police reserves who were hurried to the scene.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 29, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," with this week's presentation at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, rounds out the final week of its second month in the Hub.

With no sign of abatement in the interest aroused by the daily performances of this big production the indications are that the piece will continue there for a record run as far as spring and summer theatrical offerings go in this section.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic protraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18,000 people visualizing a story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 3,000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is unfolded.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the development of America and the final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
MAY 29, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Passing into its third month of wonderful run at the Tremont Theatre in Boston, David W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the dramatic sensations of the season.

With the approach of the memorial day period half a century after the scenes of war which call for these observances all over the country this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flights it brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstanings of the past we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

DORCHESTER (Mass.) BEACON
MAY 29, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" with this week's presentation at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, rounds out the final week of its second month at the Hub.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic portraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18,000 people visualizing a story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 3,000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is unfolded.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the developments of America and its final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world.

BOSTON (...) TRANSCRIPT

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BROOKLINE (...) CHRONICLE
MAY 29, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation," which contains nothing that deserves to be censored, will begin the eighth week of its Boston run on Monday. The pictures continue to crowd the theatre through the attraction of their historical interest and scenic beauty. The realistic war scenes, the ante-bellum Southern color, the days of Reconstruction, and the great displays of men and of horses in the rides of the Ku Klux clansmen of that period are shown on a spectacular scale. The historic story has interwoven with it a romance between a Southern woman and a Northern soldier. Charming and artistically appropriate incidental music accompanies the admirable production.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) TOWNSMAN
MAY 29, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic portraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18,000 people visualizing a story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 3,000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains and you begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is unfolded.

MAE MARSH - TREMONT.

Record-Boston Mass. May 29, 1915

Tremont Theatre

With the Memorial Day matinee and night performances on Monday, D. W. Griffith's wonder-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters the final week of its second month at the Tremont Theatre.

The production has made such a deep impression upon local theatregoers that all the signs point to its remaining here for the longest run ever recorded in this city by a presentation of its classification. The engagement will continue with daily matinees and nightly performances.

It is a wonderful creation of art that can make the historic events of 50 years ago pass before the public eye today with a graphic completeness which makes them seem like reality itself. The pictures are among the wonders of the times.

The Grant, Sherman and Lincoln scenes are but part of the background of the romance that runs all through this photodrama.

Telegraph
N.Y. Herald.
About Boston)

BOSTON WON'T BAN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Despite Race Riots, Mass Meetings and Protests Censors Decide for Film.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, June 2.

Despite the widespread agitation following numerous mass meetings, sensational protests, race riots and court proceedings against the production of "The Birth of a Nation" the photo-film play will not be barred in this State. This was the unanimous decision reached by the newly created Board of Censorship to-night at the end of a three-hour session in Mayor Curley's office.

"Having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protestors and the licensee, and having given full consideration to the entire subject," the official statement read, "we have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended."

The board which placed the stamp of official approval on the production consisted of Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court, Mayor Curley and Police Commissioner O'Mear. Petitions bearing 6,000 names were presented the board against the play. Ex-Assistant United States District Attorney William H. Lewis, J. Mott Hallowell and Butler R. Wilson waged the fight in behalf of negro objectors.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 30, 1915

The "Birth of a Nation" manager have decided not to take the spectacle on tour this season. Touring is a the simple matter it seems to the average exhibitor that is, merely making more copies. At the Liberty theater, New York several score of persons are employed in the musical and mechanical effects incidental to the spectacle. Three months were occupied in getting ready for the production, after the film was completed. The ceaseless labor of D. W. Griffith and his assistants in putting forth a "film grand opera," so to speak, of the civil war and reconstruction days, is being rewarded by large audiences.

American
Boston Mass.
May 30, 1915

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
MAY 30 1915

CENSOR BILLS ARE ALL HELD OVER

Massachusetts Legislators Defer Action on Recommendation of Ways and Means Committee.

VICTORY FOR THE FILM MEN

F.F.

(Special Correspondence The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, May 28.

As a result of the unanimous report returned to the Senate to-day by the Ways and Means Committee all bills concerning State-wide motion picture censorship have been put over until the next session of the General Court.

Exchange men and exhibitors regard the action as a big victory and are highly pleased.

United opposition by the film men and the tremendous political power of moving pictures, revealed by recent censorship agitation due to the opposition to "The Birth of a Nation," is held responsible for the postponement. It had been feared that the Lowell bill, which was regarded as the most obnoxious, might be passed in the face of the opposition of the motion picture men because of its powerful backing, but it has been put over

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
MAY 30, 1915

MAYOR SEES PHOTOPLAY

Attends 'Birth of a Nation' With Mrs. Curley

Mayor Curley and Mrs. Curley attended last night's performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara, the two other newly-appointed censors, saw the piece a few days ago, and the three will meet on Wednesday to discuss the play.

The management made no changes in the performances, they declared last night. Mayor Curley declined to make any comment on the play last night, since he wished to go over the matter first with his two confreres.

Several of the protestors and sponsors of the censorship bill were on hand also, to see that nobody should "put anything over" on the Mayor.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 1, 1915

5-30-15

Tremont Theatre

The Tremont Theatre remains one of the few local theatres open for the regular Summer season, with "The Birth of a Nation" going as strong there as ever, two performances a day, as it did upon the opening. With this week the big production turns the final week of its second month of success in Boston, with all signs indicating that it will remain for the longest period ever played by a presentation of this kind in this city. Memorial Day will be of special interest for the opening of the week with the matinee and evening presentations at the Tremont tomorrow. It is just fifty years ago that the scenes which are so vividly portrayed in this story were being enacted and made a party of history.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
MAY 31, 1915

IRTH OF NATION" ROTESTED AGAIN

inion Club Sends Res- olutions to Mayor From Faneuil Hall.

neuil Hall was taxed to its ca- y yesterday afternoon at a public ing held under the auspices of the Public Opinion Club to commemo- the semi-centennial observation of orial day and the fiftieth anniver of Negro freedom.

W. E. B. Dubois was the principal ker, taking as his subject, "The ook for the Future." At the con- ion of Dr. Dubois' address it was to send to Mayor James F. Curley resolution, adopted by a rising vote olored Americans assembled under auspices of the New Public Opinion on Memorial Sunday, to be ad- ed by Dr. W. E. B. Dubois, on y Years of Negro Freedom,' in uil Hall, sacred edifice which, as on's mayor rightly says, has ever d against prejudice, contempt, in- ice, enslavement of race, petitions Boston Censor Board to stop the photo-play, 'Birth of a Nation,' which teaches race prejudice, racial injustice, racial disfranchisement against colored Americans, falsifying reconstruction.

"From Faneuil Hall itself, we protest the proposition that the pictured slander and disparagement of a minority race shall make public licensed amusement for the rest of the people. This is but a step from that brutal tyranny when men were slaughtered to make a Roman holiday."

The meeting was presided over by President F. B. Washington, and on the platform with Dr. Dubois were these officers of the club: Vice President Miss Crystal Byrd of Boston Normal School, Secretary Nadine Wright, Radcliffe, 1917; Treasurer John Bowen, Rev. Osmond Walker, Harvard Divinity School; Miss Gertrude O'Neil of the Boston Conservatory of Music, Wesley Howard and Louris Jones.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
MAY 31, 1915

FILM PLAY CALLED UNTRUE.

Rev Harry Lutz of Newton, Preaching on "Our Finest Memory," Condemns "Birth of a Nation."

NEWTON, May 30—Rev Harry Lutz in his Memorial Day sermon at the Channing Unitarian Church, this morning, spoke on "Our Finest Memory," dwelling impressively on the patriotic inspiration in the utterances of Lincoln.

As an instance of what is opposite to the finest memory, he said in part:

"The bad is conspicuous to attention in the much discussed photoplay miscalled 'The Birth of a Nation.' It is bad, in the first place, because it falsifies the historic realities.

"To represent the times when our National idea was on trial for its life as 'the birth of a Nation' is untruthful. If it had not been born more than fours score years before, and well born, too, of stalwart, high-minded and far-seeing fathers, the Nation would not have endured, nor any Nation been born, in those times of sectional hatred and divisional strife.

"The more ingeniously this falsehood is represented, the easier is the decline to the worse way, in the second place, of its initial motive to renew the racial inequality of former days.

"The more subtly this motive is insinuated into the feelings of the patronizing public, the deeper will be the descent toward the worst way; in the third place, of sectional hatred and racial subjugation; which goes to affect

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 31, 1915

TION" NOTE IS SOUNDED

Commander Powell at Shaw Memorial Exercises Urges Negroes to Go to City Hall Wednesday When Motion-ture Play Is Considered ercises before the Robert Gould Shaw ument opposite the State House were this noon by the R. G. Shaw Veteran iation and by Robert A. Bell Post 134, R., and a Veteran Association speak- ook occasion to score "The Birth of a on."

st Commander George Henry Powell, thus criticized the motion picture show, he son of Benjamin Powell of Shaw's pany, and his words, in part, were as ws: "The negroes, not only under nel Shaw, but before and after, showed they were equal, as fighters, with e men. It was the Tenth Cavalry, for nce, that saved from annihilation at Juan Hill, Roosevelt and his Rough rs. Since the Civil War, the negroes made much progress, but they must mber that a ballot is as dangerous a thing as a gun, and that complete en- chisement comes with education. So, friends, be careful of your votes. As are American citizens, honor your citi- hip. Stand together! Go to City Hall nesday afternoon, and, by your resent- t, show Mr. Curley that you're going to here in spite of that damnable play, Birth of a Nation.'" oint was given to the remarks of Post mander Powell by the presence, with members of the association, of Rev. on W. Puller, pastor of the People's rch, who was among those tried on the ge of making a disturbance at the mont Theatre one Saturday evening, acquitted.

haplain Smith of the association, more- , prayed conspicuously for Governor lsh.

he Shaw Veteran Association had an rt of Sons of Veterans, daughters of erans, and Boy Scouts, and the exer- opened with the hymn, "Onward, istian Soldiers."

mediately after these exercises, the ert A. Bell Post took possession of the drangle in front of the Shaw Memorial, listened to an address by Rev. C. A. rd.

ne of the members of the Robert A. Post, present with his comrades this rnoon, was Richard Holmes, who has passed the century mark.

he various organizations placed wreaths the monument until not only Colonel w, but his horse were well covered h floral decorations.

here were a thousand people at the rcises, and Robert H. Smith, represent- the army, and William Smallwood, resenting the navy, stood guard in front the monument for two hours before n, keeping back the youngsters, evi- tly bent on the collection of souvenirs.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
MAY 31, 1915

NOTHER PROTEST AGAINST FILM

wo Thousand Negroes at Faneuil Hall Ask That Photo-Play Be Stopped

At a meeting of two thousand Negroes ho crowded into Faneuil Hall Sunday ternoon to hear an address by Dr. W. Burghardt DuBois of New York, who oke under the management of the New rk Public Opinion Club, resolutions peti- ning the Boston board of censors to p "The Birth of a Nation" were adopted. he resolutions were read by Forrester B. ashington, president of the club, a Har- rd business school man.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
MAY 31, 1915

2000 NEGROES ASK THAT FILM PLAY BE STOPPED

Appeal to Censors to Prevent Showing "The Birth of a Nation."

Resolutions petitioning the Boston censor board to stop the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," were adopted yesterday afternoon at a meeting of 2000 Negroes, who crowded into Faneuil Hall to hear an address by Dr. W. E. Burghardt DuBois of New York, who spoke under management of the New Public Opinion Club.

The resolutions which will be presented to the censor board, which is to decide the fate of "The Birth of a Nation" Wednesday, are:

"Colored Americans assembled under the auspices of the New Public Opinion Club on Memorial Sunday to be addressed by Dr. W. E. B. DuBois on 'Fifty Years of Negro Freedom,' in Faneuil Hall, the sacred edifice, which as Boston's present mayor says, stands against prejudice, contempt, injustice and enslavement of race, petitions the Boston censor board to stop the photoplay, 'The Birth of a Nation,' which teaches race prejudice, racial injustice, racial disfranchisement against colored Americans, falsifying reconstruction.

"From Faneuil Hall itself we protest the proposition that the pictured slander and disparagement of a minority race shall make licensed amusement for the rest of the people. This is but a step from the brutal tyranny when men were slaughtered to make a Roman holiday."

PROTESTS FILM PLAY TO CENSORS

Faneuil Hall Meeting Adopts Resolutions on Matter

Resolutions declaring that the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," teaches race prejudice, falsifies the Reconstruction, is but a step from "that brutal tyranny when men were slaughtered to make a Roman holiday," and petitioning the Boston Board of Censors to stop the play, were adopted in Faneuil Hall yesterday afternoon by 800 colored people, meeting under the auspices of the New Public Opinion Club.

The resolutions will be sent to the censorship board. As read from the stage by Forrester B. Washington, president of the club, a Harvard Business School man, they are:

TEXT OF RESOLUTIONS

"Colored Americans assembled under the auspices of the New Public Opinion Club on Memorial Sunday to be addressed by Dr. W. E. Burghardt DuBois on 'Fifty Years of Negro Freedom' in Faneuil Hall, sacred edifice which, as Boston's present Mayor rightly says, stands against prejudice, contempt, injustice and enslavement for race, petitions the Boston Censor Board to stop the photoplay, 'Birth of a Nation,' which teaches race prejudice, racial injustice, racial disfranchisement against colored Americans, falsifying reconstruction.

"From Faneuil Hall itself we protest the proposition that the pictured slander and disparagement of a minority race shall make the public licensed amusement for the rest of the people. This is but a step from that brutal tyranny when men were slaughtered to make a Roman holiday."

Endangers Free Speech

Dr. William E. Burghardt DuBois, Ph. D., author of "The Souls of Black Folk" and director of publicity and research of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, who addresesd the meeting on "Truth About Reconstruction," said that he has sympathy with those who protest against stopping such plays as "The Birth of a Nation" on the ground that it endangers free speech and expression of opinion, but he declared that in this particular instance one of the parties to the discussion is bound and gagged by disfranchisement and by an extraordinary state of public opinion.

"If the people who are anxious for a free discussion of the part the negro took in United States history, then it is the business of those people to see that the negro has the right to vote and to express himself in a free way," said Dr. DuBois.

Serfdom in South

Dr. DuBois asserted that we have in the South today a system which must be called serfdom, that people are employed in industry who have no right to say what shall be the conditions which govern that industry, that industrial conditions are different in the South than in the North.

Conditions which were similar before the Civil war led to disaster, he declared, and they are bound to do so now unless changed.

"It was said then that the nation could not remain half slave and half free," said he. "It is impossible to have serfdom in the South and free labor conditions in the North."

It is necessary for those who seek the settlement of the negro question, he argued, to see it in the light of the present labor problem.

The Biloxi Daily Herald
Mississippi Biloxi
(about Boston) no date

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Dixon's "Birth of a Nation" has caused an uproar among the negroes of the Bay state and this commotion has found its way into social affairs and politics. Dr. Charles Fleisher, of Boston, a Jew, seems to have drawn forth the right idea from the whirlpool of conflicting opinions, however, and he refuses to join the protest against the play that is proving obnoxious to Massachusetts black men. He refused to say that it was objectionable, after seeing it.

"I can stand all the villification and hysteria that will come to me for my stand," he said, "if this play tends to make the North and the South face the negro problem. I am glad the play is being given."

The significant remark in connection therewith from this talented Jew was that if a race is pampered and protected from criticism it will never grow up. He added that the negroes have made splendid progress in fifty years, "but the majority of them are still children and this statement is proved by their actions in Boston."

Dr. Fleisher hit the nail on the head when he declared that pampered races never grow. History might be replete with such instances if it were not for the fact that a pampered race is a curiosity among the children of men. He has an example of the truth of his statement in the history of his own, the Jewish, race. The Jews have lived as a separate race in the midst of many people because of persecution. They are one of the world's most wonderful races by reason of their tenacity in existing with vigor and stamina for many centuries, but the mystery subsides when one takes into account the persecution that has followed these people in all lands. Men thrive as a result of persecution, because it unites the home life, stops trivial jealousies and destroys luxury.

Rome and Carthage fell because of luxury and so will other nations go the same way, but never as a result of persecution. But pamper the negro race and you will block its progress, and, in a measure, the negro race has been retarded in the last fifty years by such steps. Too many northern people have desired to help the black men, but the help must come from within. All the white race can do for them is to help supply the conditions and let the negroes work out their own salvation.

JUNE 1, 1915

Eighth Week Of Birth of A Nation

Big Picture Shows to Large Holiday Audiences

"The Birth of a Nation" began the eighth week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. Two enormous holiday audiences witnessed the spectacle. This thrilling story of the South before the war, the struggles of the Civil conflict, the detailed representation of President Lincoln, and the final emergence of the Southern people from the terrors and trials of the reconstruction period is the most graphic telling of history and romance that has ever been seen upon the American stage.

The holiday gave additional interest to the scenes and many of the veterans who, half a century ago, passed through the actual events which are reproduced in this narrative, enjoyed the presentation with a fervor and zest quite unknown to those who view its dramatic incidents in the perspective of these days.

D. W. Griffith's wonderful offering will remain at the Tremont for a long time, judging by the interest manifested in the story by local theatregoers.

LILLIAN GISH—TREMONT THEATRE

BOSTON TRAVELER
JUNE 1, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"—Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" began the eighth week of its run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. Two large holiday audiences saw the spectacle. Many of the veterans, who half a century ago passed through the actual events which are reproduced, were present yesterday.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 1, 1915

Tremont Temple

"The Birth of a Nation" began the eighth week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. This thrilling story of the South before the war, the struggles of the civil conflict, the detailed representation of the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln and the final emergence of the southern people from the terrors and trials of the reconstruction period is the most graphic telling of history and romance that has ever been seen upon the American stage.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 1, 1915

MANY VETERANS SEE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation" began the eighth week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. Two enormous holiday audiences witnessed the spectacle. This thrilling story of the South before the war, the struggles of the civil conflict, the detailed representation of the assassination of President Lincoln and the final emergence of the Southern people from the trials of the reconstruction period is vividly, even, wonderfully, pictured.

The holiday gave additional interest to the scenes, and many of the veterans who half a century ago passed through the actual events which are reproduced in this narrative enjoyed the presentation.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
JUNE 1, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" began the eighth week of its record run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. Two enormous holiday audiences witnessed the spectacle. This thrilling story of the South before the war, the struggles of the civil conflict, the detailed representation of President Abraham Lincoln and the final emergence of the Southern people from the terrors and trials of the reconstruction period is the most graphic telling of history and romance that has ever been seen upon the American stage.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 1, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" began the eighth week of its run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. Two large holiday audiences saw the spectacle. Many of the veterans, who half a century ago passed through the actual events which are reproduced, were present yesterday.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 1, 1915

The "Ku-Klux Klan" in Boston

Sifting Fact from Fallacy at "The Birth of a Nation"—The Play as an Illustration of the Negro's Progress

By E. W. Thompson

WHETHER in chains or in laurels, Liberty knows nothing but victories." So spoke Wendell Phillips. The words are chiselled over that new statue to him in Boston's Public Garden. On reading them one abolitionist who has revered Phillips during more than half a century, while ever worshipping the name and deeds and immortal memory of John Brown, fell to pondering what those two heroes would have thought, or may be thinking, of the proposed suppression of that disturbing "movies" show, "The Birth of a Nation." Your correspondent (who rejoices to have had the honor of serving against slavery in the Third Pennsylvania Cavalry) saw that show last week. Instead of regarding it as injurious to Americans of color, he considers it so essentially beneficial to them that they might reasonably promote its presentation throughout the Union—with some accompanying publication of a correct interpretation of its teaching. What is that teaching? Surely it is (1) that the colored race, held in slavery for generations, denied rights to education and property, treated as chattels, being liable to be sold and separated from their families, became such a wretched multitude of tatterdemalions as the movies declare they were after some generations of Southern slaveholders' care; (2) that those decent, seemly, composed, self-respecting, wholly respectable pupils and graduates of Hampton and Tuskegee who appear in the show illustrate what some fifty years of "abolition," freedom, education, property rights, etc., have done for colored Americans.

The print-parts relate that hundreds or thousands of the formerly enslaved race now serve in the learned professions. The high values of the property holdings of colored fellow citizens are visibly declared. What better demonstration can thinkers desire to illustrate than that the black advances magnificently when given a white chance?

I rejoiced in the exhibit all the more because of the idiotically farcical attempt, or pretence of attempt, to glorify the Ku-Klux Klan. That is "too thin." No thoughtful spectator, even if too young to remember the deeds of the Klan, can be seriously impressed by a notion that valuable reforms ever rigged themselves out, for night-riding or day-parading, in those preposterous costumes. To me it seemed pretty clear that the operators of the show stuck in all that Ku-Klux bosh with no worse design than to pull in a sort of mean negrophobes, who must eventually perceive what they were insidiously tempted to the show in order that they might get some sound instruction as to the intellectual capacity of our colored folk; as to how abominably they were long maltreated; as to how swiftly they progressed in the fair field of Liberty and Equal Rights. Can any negrophobe be so stupid as not to reflect that white folks, if long treated as black folks were in the South before 1861, would probably appear as degraded, as subservient, as ignorant, as timid as the old-time black crowds in those movies?

The "Birth of a Nation" makes its visitors think it all over and over and over again. Thought is good. If lies be mixed in with truth, the lies are detected soon. I cannot imagine Wendell Phillips or John Brown or William Lloyd Garrison, or Father Abraham Lincoln wishing suppression of that amazing show. They'd just repeat in a sort of chorus "Whether in chains or in laurels, Liberty knows nothing but victories."

JUNE 1, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 1, 1915

SHAW ASSOCIATION HOLDS 3 MONUMENT SERVICES

Exercises were conducted by the members of the Robert Gould Shaw Association yesterday morning at several monuments. The first call was made at the association's monument on Commonwealth avenue, and there, with brief exercises, the monument was decorated with flowers.

The next stop was at the Crispus Attucks monument on the Common, a wreath being placed at its base, with a few remarks from Commander G. Henry Powell.

The association then marched across the Common to the Shaw Memorial, opposite the State House, and there the exercises of the day were held with an address by Commander Powell, who scored "The Birth of a Nation."

"Colored men who fought [illegible] with Col. Shaw," he said, "showed that they were equal as fighters to white men. It was the 10th cavalry that saved from annihilation, at San Juan Hill, Roosevelt and his rough riders." He asked his listeners to go to City Hall Wednesday afternoon and "show Mr. Curley that you are going to stay here in spite of that damnable play, 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

The association had as escort the sons of veterans, daughters of veterans and boy scouts. Following these exercises, Robert A. Bell post listened to an address by the Rev. C. A. Ward, in front of the memorial. After luncheon the association left for Mt. Auburn Cemetery, where several graves of past members were decorated with flowers.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" began the eighth week of its run at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon.

This thrilling story of the South before the war, the struggles of the civil conflict, the representation of the assassination of President Lincoln and the final emergence of the Southern people from the trials of the reconstruction period are shown in graphic moving pictures.

BANGOR [illegible]

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS AT BOSTON

Petition to Suppress Photoplay Is Refused by Board of Censors; Will Continue Fight

The newly formed Board of Censors for theatres and photo-plays in Boston refused a petition of more than 6,000 people, Wednesday night, to suppress The Birth of a Nation at the Tremont theatre.

A brief statement, issued by Major Curley, chairman of the board, announced the defeat of the protesters after a lengthy hearing had been held in City hall. Although the corridors of City hall had been thronged throughout the afternoon, few people were left when the decision came, and there was no demonstration.

It proved a severe blow to the colored people, who have conducted a six weeks' agitation against the photoplay. On their request the Legislature had created the Board of Censors, which has now found against them.

But the leaders of the agitation against The Birth of a Nation are still confident of suppressing the pictures which they allege libel the entire negro race. Attorney Butler R. Wilson, who has championed the cause of the colored people, declared the other night that the action of the censors has caused widespread disappointment, but has not discouraged his people from the belief that there is another way.

None of the leaders could state positively what their next step would be. All insisted that the fight would continue, but in what form they could not state until after conferences. Equally confident are the producers of the photo-play in the belief that the pictures are not immoral and cannot be suppressed.

[illegible]

The Unitarian convention at Boston Thursday, after a hot debate, voted in condemnation of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," calling it a disgraceful attack upon a great and worthy body of our fellow-citizens." How many of those who voted had really seen the play?

ON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 2, 1915

The Manchester (Eng.) Guardian "Birth of a Nation" from-eat hubbub has arisen in varies of America over the kinema

The Birth of a Nation.'
a meeting of protest held the day in Faneuil Hall, Boston, enthusiasm was aroused by the nce, in the chair, of Mr. Frank nborn, the last survivor of the of New England abolitionists included Wendell Phillips and am Lloyd Garrison.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN UNION
JUNE 3, 1915

...ted a revival of Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country."

"THE OUTCAST."

"The Outcast," a four-reel Mutual masterpiece, said to be a play of excitement and thrill, humor and pathos, that strikes every note in the scale of human emotions, will be seen at the Bijou Theater today, tomorrow and Saturday. The author is the Hon. Thomas Nelson Page, ambassador to Italy. The story is of a girl of the slums, who makes her living as a dancing girl in a cabaret in which her sweetheart is employed. Both had their dreams of a little home in the country under happier conditions. Then comes a tragedy. Bob shooting an idler in the cafe for forcing attentions on his sweetheart. Bob disappears, and the girl is tried for murder. The judge is noted for his sternness. The girl finds a locket containing portrait of her mother, visits the to... where it was made and in the hou... where the mother had lived finds t... picture of the man who had deser... the mother years before. It is th... of the judge. During the trial, wh... locket is produced in evidence, a... when the judge finds that it is his ow... daughter that he is trying, faints awa... Another judge takes up the trial, se... timent toward the prisoner change... and she is acquitted, and Bob and sh... are reunited at the mother's old home. The courtroom scene is said to be a triumph of motion picture realism. The part of the outcast girl is played by Mae Marsh, who scored a triumph in the famous "Birth of a Nation" picture. A great [redacted] play is a running fight over the roofs of a tenement section of New York. Mary Alden, Spottiswoode Aitken, Robert Harron and Ralph Lewis are other members of the cast. "The Heart of Cerise," a two-reel Universal drama, will also be seen. Pauline Bush and William Clifford play the leading roles in this drama of love, pathos, jealousy and revenge. The story is of the internal strife in a small French dramatic company, which results in the heroine, Cerise, an actress possessed of great talents, being placed in a false position. After many thrilling episodes, she and her sweetheart are reunited, and her good qualities are attested by all.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 3, 1915

FILM BARRED FROM THIS CITY

Mayor Will Not Permit Showing of "The Birth of a Nation" Here

DECISION IS FINAL

Negotiations Were in Progress to Bring Production to Springfield

"The Birth of a Nation' will not be shown in Springfield," said Mayor Frank E. Stacy this afternoon when informed that Goldstein Bros. were negotiating with the owners of the picture for an engagement at the Broadway Theater. The mayor said that no theatrical offering likely to offend any class of people will be permitted to show in this city while he is mayor.

The mayor's ultimatum will not be contested by Goldstein Bros., who expressed a desire to show the film here and at the same time said that the picture would not be shown if the mayor objected. The announcement that negotiations for a local engagement had been entered into came first, and the interview with the mayor followed.

Nathan Goldstein spoke for the theater management. He said negotiations had been entered into with the Epoch Motion Picture Producing Company, owners of the picture and that the company desires to hire the theater and produce the picture. He said that he and his brother, Samuel, undoubtedly would close the deal if the mayor would allow the picture to be shown.

After talking with Mr. Goldstein the proposition was plated before the mayor, who said that under no consideration would he permit the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation." This picture has been the cause of trouble in Boston and Providence, he said, and he does not propose to have any chance for trouble in Springfield.

The picture offended members of the colored race in Boston, and a riot at a Boston theater resulted when negroes were refused admittance. Last night a board of censors appointed by authority of the Legislature decided that the picture can be continued as an attraction at the Tremont Theater in Boston, but this decision did not change Mayor Stacy's opposition.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a 12-reel picture, based on Rev. T omas Dixon's play "The Clansman," and depicts life in the South just after the Civil war. The negroes claim that their race is grossly insulted in some of the scenes, and that actions pictured do not give a true idea of conditions at the time the picture is supposed to represent.

Nathan Goldstein said this morning that his brother has seen the picture and has said that there is nothing objectionable to it. Some of the scenes have been cut out, he said, and the picture is one that is educational as well as interesting. He said he would not permit any objectionable picture to be shown at the Broadway, but that he felt there is a demand for "The Birth of a Na... by his patrons.

Mr. Goldstein thought the theater would be remiss in its duties to its patrons if it failed to show "The Birth of a Nation." He said that it undoubtedly is the greatest motion picture ever produced and that any theater having a chance to show it and failing to do so would not be doing its duty by its patrons.

Mayor Stacy said that the agitation over "The Birth of a Nation" is only one of the perplexing problems that has come before him recently. He said he has refused permission for at least 10 films to show here in the past few weeks. Among these he said are "Three Weeks," a neurotic play based on sex relations, and "Nabbed," a film that shows degeneration resulting from the use of intoxicating liquors.

The mayor said he also refused permission recently for the showing of posters advertising the "Passion Play," because the pictures of Christ showed the Savior being taken from the cross with blood flowing from his wounds. The film itself was allowed to be shown but the posters were eliminated.

"The public does not know anything about the troublesome motion picture problems that have come up recently," said the mayor in discussing the films and posters that have come under his censorship. "There has been a lot of trouble about motion pictures under previous administrations, and I do not intend to have any trouble while I am mayor.

"I will refuse sanction for any picture that will be likely to offend any class of people or which depicts conditions which are not proper for any person to see. I am running the motion picture censorship in Springfield and there isn't a chance that any picture like 'The Birth of a Nation' will be shown here."

Under the terms of the negotiations between Goldstein Bros. and the owners of "The Birth of a Nation," the owners were to take over the house during the engagement, and were to fix prices and have full control of the theater while the picture was being shown. The picture takes an entire afternoon or evening to produce, and in other cities the public has been eager to pay high rates for the privilege of seeing the screen play.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 3, 1915

CENSORS 'PASS' FILM PLAY THAT STIRRED CITY

New Board Refuses to Revoke or Suspend License of Tremont Theatre, Where "The Birth of a Nation" Is Produced—Unanimous Decision of Official Critics.

Performances of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, will not be stopped. This was the unanimous decision reached by the new board of censorship last evening at the end of a three-hour session in the mayor's office.

"Having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protestors and the licensee, and having given full consideration to the entire subject," the official statement of the board reads: "We have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended."

This action places the official stamp of approval on the production which resulted in numerous public hearings in a clash between the mayor and the Negroes of the city, in a demonstration at the doors of the Tremont Theatre, followed by court action, and finally in legislative action that ended in creating the present board of censorship, consisting of the mayor, as chairman; the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court.

Both Sides Present.

One hour was allowed each side to present its case. Representing the objectors were J. Mott Hallowell, William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson. They rehearsed the case from the beginning, re-stated the objections already aired in City Hall, in churches, the courts and in the State House, and presented a petition bearing the names of more than 6000 who oppose the production of the film.

John F. Cusick appeared for the producers, and Corporation Counsel Sullivan was present in an advisory capacity.

The details of the session were not made public by the board, although, at the end of two hours of testimony taking, the attorneys for the objectors explained the proceedings to a group of nearly 100 Negroes who had waited outside the mayor's office. After hearing the testimony, the board sat for nearly an hour, in executive session.

As soon as the decision was reached, shortly after 7 o'clock, the mayor jumped into his automobile for a trip to New Bedford, where he had promised to act as the godfather at a Christening at 7:30. On leaving, his chauffeur told him that he would not be more than two hours and 15 minutes late.

Schoeffel Satisfied.

John B. Schoeffel, manager of the Tremont Theatre, said last night:

"I am sincerely glad that 'The Birth of a Nation' has been passed and application to revoke the license refused, because the judgment of the directors in booking the play has been thereby justified. Whatever inequality may have been felt in regard to the historical treatment of the Negro in some parts of the film has been removed by the incorporation of the Hampden Institute film, which shows the marvelous progress of the colored race since Reconstruction. We believe 'he Birth of a Nation' to be not only legally permissible, but also as now given a thoroughly impartial story holding the scales of justice even. We therefore invite the support of all the people of New England, and we beg to say that no malice is felt toward anyone whomsoever that has opposed the production in this city. To the more than 100,000 patrons who have seen it and to the 15,000 persons, who in the last 10 days have signed petitions protesting against any interference, we extend ou hearty thanks."

NEGROES INDIGNANT AT ACTION BY THE BOARD

Receive Trotter's Report with Threats of Violence.

When William Monroe Trotter announced to a gathering of Negroes at St. Mark's Congregational Church, 1042A Tremont street, last night, that the board of theatrical censors had refused to suppress the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," groans and hisses spread through the audience.

Gov. Walsh was lauded by Mr. Trotter and the audience, but the mayor was branded as a "traitor," and his name hissed.

"He broke his word to us," said Trotter, referring to the mayor. "This decision by the board was rendered behind closed doors, and our people who were there to attend the meeting were forced into the mayor's outer office, and finally into the street.

"I did not learn that this meeting was to be held until 3:30 this afternoon. I was there at 4, but the mayor's secretary, who was guarding the door, refused to let me in. I showed him a petition which I had with me, and introduced him to the Equal Rights Association lawyer who was with me, as our representative, and said that it was his right to be present at the meeting, fully as much as the three lawyers from the National Association who were already in there. The secretary replied that there were already enough in there, and that he, as the mayor's secretary, had no right to enter the room, or even open the door, as the mayor in there was not the mayor, but simply a member of the board of censors.

"After all this agitation and waiting, after all this presentation of a righteous cause, the board meets and solemnly sends out its verdict "that 'The Birth of a Nation' can play and play in Boston just as long as the management wants it to."

From the audience: "Well, we'll move it."

"Our work," continued Trotter, "has resulted in our putting additional money in the pockets of the theatre management and getting certain elements of the white race prejudiced against us. Our entire fight simply resulted in our getting Boston's official indorsement for the continuance of this instigation to race hatred.

"We have come to a new marking place. What are we going to do?" ("Blow it up") from the audience. "The censor board, whose jurisdiction is final, has rendered its decision. The voices raised, and the petitions signed by the several thousands of persons, at the 18 meetings of colored citizens, held in the last eight weeks in Greater Boston, have met with deaf ears. What more would they have us do?

"They say that arguments have not much weight as evidence when they are made in favor of a theatrical production unless there is something great at stake. Evidently the drawing of the color line in an open city like Boston is not considered great, nor the fact that we produced convincing evidence that the color line was drawn.

"So far as I can see, the case now rests in the hands of you people. I, as one of you, can only warn you to be very, very careful what you do."

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 2, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" with this week's presentation at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, rounds out the final week of its second month in the Hub.

With no sign of abatement in the interest aroused by the daily performances of this big production the indications are that the piece will continue there for a record run as far as spring and summer theatrical offerings go in this section.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic protraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18 000 people visualizing a story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 3,000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is untolded.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the development of America and the final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 3, 1915

CENSORS PUT THEIR "O.K." ON "NATION" FILM

Decide License of Tremont Theatre Should Not Be Suspended.

ALSO REFUSE TO ORDER IT REVOKED

Hearing Lasts Four Hours at City Hall Behind Closed Doors.

"The Birth of a Nation," the photo-play around which has waged a bitter controversy for months, with the negro organizations conspicuous in protests, was last evening officially sanctioned by the newly established Censorship Commission, comprising Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court and Police Commissioner O'Meara.

Each of the three members of the new commission which was established after an exhaustive legislative wrangle to secure a change in the former laws, had individually visited the Tremont Theatre during the week preceding yesterday's sitting and had witnessed the film play.

Behind Closed Doors

The meeting yesterday was behind closed doors, Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan being present to give his legal opinion of the interpretation of the legislative act which established the commission, Licensing Clerk John Casey being present as unpaid clerk, the licensees being represented by Attorney John F. Cusick and the protesters by J. Mott Hallowell, William H. Lewis and Butler Wilson.

The official statement issued at the [illegible] ory of licensing of theatrical performances in this city and State from 1849, when the first law was passed which gave the same powers which the board now has to grant or revoke any theatre's license without cause. Decisions and constructions of that act by the Supreme Court upholding its constitutionality in the broadest sense were cited.

Surprised at Action

"I understood from the letter of notification of this hearing which I received, that it was to be preliminary only, a hearing merely on the scope of the authority of the board and as to what principles and rules should govern them in their action. I am surprised that the board has given a decision against the proponents of the law establishing started at 4 o'clock, under the impression that there might be a chance for them to attend the meeting and register their protests.

Although they were informed that only the attorneys could be admitted, many of them remained until the meeting had adjourned, shortly after 7 o'clock.

Present Petition

According to Mayor Curley, each side had been originally given half an hour in which to present its case, but that in each instance more than a hour was taken, after which the three members of the commission deliberated for more than half an hour on the merits of the case and the legal intent of the legislative act which established the commission.

None of the three members of the commission at the conclusion of the hearing would discuss his opinion of the film or any of the details upon which he based his vote sanctioning the performance.

A petition was introduced as part of the evidence of those in protest. It contained 6181 names not made public, and a list of 70 citizens, including Gov. Walsh and Charles W. Eliot, as well as over 20 prominent clergymen of different denominations.

RPRISED BY THE CENSORS

the board of censorship without having given a full public hearing. The board has full authority as to law, fact, procedure and everything else, and chose to act without giving a hearing on the facts."

Says Feeling Will Be Strong

Butler Wilson, who also represented those opposed to the film, said: "We made a fight to the finish; I think we were right, but the new board didn't take the same view. There will certainly be deep-seated feeling against the action of the board and this will be throughout the community, not merely among colored people. Perhaps there never was a stronger petition presented for any cause than that placed before the board urging that the film be suppressed in Boston.

"The board has absolute power and, in my judgment, nothing was disclosed to show any obstacle to action against the film. If I had been a member of the board, acting in a strictly judicial capacity, I should have felt it my clear duty to vote to stop the run of the film."

Judgment Justified

John B. Schoeffel, manager of the Tremont Theatre, said last night:

"I am sincerely glad that 'The Birth of a Nation' has been passed and application to revoke the license refused, because the judgment of the directors in booking the play has been thereby justified. Whatever inequality may have been felt in regard to the historical treatment of the negro in some parts of the film has been removed by the incorporation of the Hampden Institute film which shows the marvelous progress of the colored race since Reconstruction.

"We believe 'The Birth of a Nation' to be not only legally permissible but also as now given a thoroughly impartial story holding the scales of justice even. We therefore invite the support of all the people of New England, and we beg to say that no malice is felt toward anyone whomsoever that has opposed the production in this city. To the more than 100,000 patrons who have seen it, and to the 15,000 people who in the last 10 days have signed petitions protesting against any interference, we extend our hearty thanks."

WARNS NEGROES TO BE CAREFUL

Trotter Tells Them Film Case Is Now in People's Hands.

More than 200 colored people attended a meeting held at St. Mark's Congregational Church, 1042 Tremont street, last night, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Branch of the National Independent Rights League, for the purpose of considering the decision made yesterday by the new censorship board relative to the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation."

The board, which is composed of Mayor Curley, Police Commissioner O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court, decided to permit the photo-play to continue.

At the meeting last night, W. Munroe Trotter, editor of the Guardian, was the principal speaker. He reviewed the efforts made by the colored people to have the play suppressed, and asserted that they had only succeeded in securing for the photo-play the official approval of Boston.

"The case is now in the hands of the people," he concluded. "Be very, very careful what you do."

SALEM (Mass.) [illegible]
JUNE 3, 1915

REFUSED TO CENSOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

The photo play, "The birth of a nation," so far as the new board of censors is concerned, will be allowed to continue.

This was the conclusion reached yesterday after hearing arguments by both sides of the controversy about it and an executive deliberation of 40 minutes. The conclusion of the board was announced in the following language:

"The officials designated by Chapter 345, Acts of 1915, having received petition from certain citizens requesting that performances of "The birth of a nation" be stopped by them under the authority given to them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protesters and the licenses and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the licenses of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 3, 1915

BOSTON, TH[illegible]

CENSORS "OK" THE FILM PLAY

Vote Not to Stop "The Birth of a Nation."

Hear Arguments, Then Spend 40 Minutes in Debate.

Members of Board Decline to Give Reasons.

The photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," so far as the new Board of Censors is concerned, will be allowed to continue.

This was the conclusion reached yesterday after hearing arguments by both sides of the controversy about it and an executive deliberation of 40 minutes. The conclusion of the board was announced in the following language:

"The officials designated by Chapter 345, Acts of 1915, having received a petition from certain citizens requesting that performances of 'The Birth of a Nation' be stopped by them under the authority given to them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protesters and the licensees and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended."

No Reasons Are Given.

Mayor Curley, chairman of the censorship board, after the other two members, Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court and Police Commissioner O'Meara, had retired, declined to add to the official announcement. The Chief Justice and Commissioner O'Meara also declined to comment.

The board was in session from 4:15 to 7:15 p. m. At 7:15 Mayor Curley was speeding in his auto to New Bedford, where he was under promise to attend a christening, being due at 7:30.

The fact that the Mayor postponed his departure emphasized the determination of the board to reach a decision last night. The entire session was behind closed doors.

Soon after the board assembled Mayor Curley opened a door to the outer corridor and told the large gathering of colored remonstrants who had been collecting for two hours that the board would admit a lawyer representing the remonstrants and one representing the Tremont Theatre.

Four Lawyers Admitted.

J. Mott Hallowell, William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson said they represented the remonstrants, and were admitted, as was John F. Cusick, for the theatre.

John A. Sullivan, corporation counsel, was also present.

W. Munroe Trotter arrived late and vainly sought the room with the censors. The 100 remonstrants remained about until 5, when under the City Hall rules, the Mayor's office was closed officially. They then retired to the corridors and there remained until Mr Wilson and Mr Lewis appeared, about 6:30. Mr Hallowell left soon after and in a few minutes Mr Cusick came out and the board went into executive session.

The Mayor, in summing up the hearing, said that the board had agreed to allow each side a half-hour to argue, but each side took an hour. The censors, after counsel had retired, went over the petitions and all other papers in the case, taking 40 minutes to arrive at its conclusion.

The leaders of the remonstrants said petitions had been handed to the board containing 6181 names.

AGAIN VOICE PROTEST.

Meeting of Colored Men and Women in Roxbury Hears of Action of Boad of Censors.

The meeting of colored men and women last night under the auspices of the Guardian Defenders in St Mark Congregational Church, 1042 Tremont st, Roxbury, to voice further protest against "The Birth of a Nation," developed into a lively affair late in the evening when William Monroe Trotter arrived and announced that the Board of Censors had decided to let the show go on.

The more than 250 present did not take kindly to the announcement, though Mr Trotter urged that the colored citizens be calm and patient.

He related that he went to City Hall in the afternoon as representative of the Equal Rights League and expressed himself as not being pleased with the manner in which he was received, saying he was forced from the meeting place.

WON'T STOP FILM PLAY PRODUCTION

BOARD OF CENSORSHIP ANNOUNCES DECISION

Ruling Made on Question of Revocation of Theatre License Not Halting Production

"The Birth of a Nation" will continue to be produced at the Tremont Theatre according to an absolute final decision rendered after a three hour session of the new Censorship Commission created by recent legislative enactment. From this decision there is no appeal, as the question came on the revocation of the license.

Whether the decision was unanimous or not could not be learned, for no details were given out concerning the executive session of the Commission, which is composed of Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court, Mayor Curley and Police Commissioner O'Meara.

The Commission convened at 4:15 p.m. J. M. Hallowell, William H. Lewis and Butler Wilson represented the protestants and John F. Cusick represented the licensee. W. H. Trotter was in the anteroom for a considerable period of time arguing for admission to the meeting on the ground that his organization, the Equal Rights League, had no representative present. He was not admitted, however.

At the opening of the meeting each side was given a half hour to present its case, but as the proceedings developed each took more than an hour. Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan was present and expressed his views at various times concerning the powers conferred by the recent legislation. A petition was presented by the protestants signed by more than 4200 citizens. The petition included the signatures of Charles W. Eliot, Rev. William Ewing, Rev. O. P. Gifford, A. H. Knowles, Joseph Lee, Rev. W. C. Gannett, Francis P. Sprague, Charles W. Townsend, Francis J. Garrison, Prof. Joseph H. Beale, William Lloyd Garrison jr., Lawrence G. Brooks, and numerous other prominent persons.

The executive session of the Commission lasted an hour, at the end of which, the decision was announced to the press by Chairman Curley. At that time the Mayor stated that he was unable to give any of the details of the meeting, as there had been an agreement between the members to this effect.

BOSTON CHRIS. SCIENCE MONITOR
JUNE 3, 1915

NEW CENSORS PASS PROTESTED FILM

Boston's new board of censorship consisting of Mayor Curley, chairman, Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court and Police Commissioner O'Meara met yesterday afternoon and after a three-hour session decided not to interfere with the performance of the motion picture film, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont theater.

One hour each was allowed the representatives of the negroes who have objected to the play and the attorneys for the theater. The objectors were represented by J. Mott Hallowell, William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson. Attorney John F. Cusick appeared for the theater and Corporation Counsel Sullivan was present as an adviser.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JUNE 3, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" MAY GO ON.

Newly-Created Board of Censors Refuses to Bar Much-Discussed Photo-play.

Special Dispatch to The Republican.

BOSTON, Wednesday, June 2.

Despite the widespread agitation following numerous mass-meetings, sensational protests, race riots and court proceedings against the production of "The Birth of a Nation," the photo-play will not be barred in this state, according to the unanimous decision reached by the newly-created board of censors to-night after a three-hour session in Mayor Curley's office.

Although witnessing the performance, though counsel representing the protestors want the license, and having given full consideration to the entire subject," the official statement read, "we have decided that the license of the theater should not be revoked or suspended."

The board consists of Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court, Mayor Curley and Police Commissioner O'Meara. Petitions bearing 6000 names were presented the board against the play. Ex-Assistant United States District Attorney William H. Lewis, J. Mott Hallowell and Butler R. Wilson waged the fight in behalf of Negro objectors.

WALTHAM (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 3, 1915

CENSORS FAIL TO KILL PLAY

"The Birth of a Nation," the photoplay around which has waged a bitter controversy for months, with the negro organizations conspicuous in protests, was last evening officially sanctioned by the newly established Censorship Commission, comprising Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court and Police Commissioner O'Meara.

Each of the three members of the new commission which was established after an exhaustive legislative wrangle to secure a change in the former laws, had individually visited the Tremont Theatre during the week preceding yesterday's sitting and had witnessed the film play.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS.

The meeting yesterday was behind closed doors, Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan being present to give his legal opinion of the interpretation of the legislative act which established the commission, Licensing Clerk John Casey being present as unpaid clerk, the licensees being represented by Attorney John F. Cusick and the protesters by J. Mott Hallowell, William H. Lewis and Butler Wilson.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 3, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OFFICIALLY APPROVED

"The Birth of a Nation," the photo-play at Boston, around which has waged a bitter controversy for months, with the negro organizations conspicuous in protests, was last evening officially sanctioned by the newly established censorship commission, comprising Mayor Curley, Chief Justice of the Municipal court and Police Commissioner O'Meara.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
JUNE 3, 1915

It is seemingly about time the hysterical opposition to that photo-play now on exhibition in Boston ceased. It has been censored and censored. Changes have been made to meet the requirements of those who were in authority and finally the newly created board of censors, the court of final censorial resort, has determined that there is no reason for its suppression in whole or in part or for the demolition the theatre where it is held. It is more than probable that those who have declaimed and are declaiming the loudest against it never have seen it and know nothing about it more than they have been told by others who, in their turn, never have seen it. There is altogether too much of this "we are being oppressed," or "we are being caricatured" frenzy on just now. It is not confined to one race or one nationality, but much of it is supremely silly and its tendency is to make all public performances flat, stale and unprofitable.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
JUNE 5, 1915

about Boston

"Birth of a Nation" Bill

Massachusetts Legislature Passes Censor Bill—Gives to Two People, Majority of Board Made Up of Mayor, Chief of Police and Chief Judge of Municipal Court, All of Boston, Absolute Censorship Power—Danger in Measure.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE socalled "Birth of a Nation" bill became a law in Massachusetts, last Friday, when it was signed by Governor David I. Walsh, as soon as it had been enacted by the Senate.

The bill provides for a censorship board of three members, who, on a majority vote, will have full power to stop any film, which, in their opinion, is obscene, immoral, or degrading to public taste. The members of the board are to be the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court.

The bill, when presented originally in the House of Representatives, provided that a film could not be stopped except by a unanimous vote of the board. Attempts to pass amendments failed in the house, but the Senate, after seven roll calls, secured an engrossment of the bill, with an amendment and this modification was accepted by the House.

The amendment was submitted by Senator Bean of Cambridge, who is elected from a district where negro votes count. At first, it was believed that the amendment would tend to kill the bill, because it was thought that the House would never agree to the modification.

The Boston Transcript, a strong Republican journal, advised the defeat of the petition, calling the amended bill a cowardly attempt to "sacrifice public rights for party votes." This editorial said in part, "Before the censorship bill as amended is placed upon its final passage it behooves the legislature, and particularly the Republican members, to consider and reconsider the cause and effect of this legislation. The cause is to be found in a motion picture play (meaning "The Birth of a Nation") now nearing the end of its run to which some of the colored citizens of Boston object.... The expurgation ordered by the courts failed to satisfy the objectors."

The editorial rehearsed the various stages of the agitation up to the amendment of the bill reported by the house Judiciary Committee and continues. "To pass the censorship bill in its present amended form is to place the Legislature on record as surrendering the rights of the whole people of the Commonwealth to the whim of a small minority who threaten retribution at the polls unless their unreasonable demands are granted."

However, the bill was enacted, after a long debate, during which subdued expressions of bad feeling were shown. Mutterings of treachery and double crossing were made and agitations were whispered that one member of the Senate was trying to "Jimmy Valentine" the bill.

A motion of Senator Hays of Brighton, a leader in the fight against the passage of the bill, for reconsideration of the enactment was defeated.

Before the Senate opened the session at which the bill was enacted, there were rumors of shifts on the bill which would bring about its defeat. Opponents of the bill were rushing about the Senate corridors and reading rooms, buttonholing their fellow members and trying in every possible way to persuade them to vote against enactment.

It was evident all through that many of the Republican leaders made a political issue of the fight.

The supporters of the bill were equally active. They watched every move made by their opponents. When the bill came over from the House where the amendment was enacted, the supporters claim to have discovered a plot to hold action on the matter.

Their suspicions were aroused to the limit, when Senator Green, a member of the committee on engrossed rules, whose duty it is to read all measures before they are put on their final passage, took the bill and petition from the clerk of the Senate and passed out of the chamber into the Senate reading room. His absence from the chamber for a time longer than the supporters of the bill believed necessary forced the latter into a state of mind bordering on hysteria.

Immediately it was said that Green's absence was part of a plot to defer action for a day in order that the opponents might have more time in which to persuade the Senate to kill the measure.

Then it was learned that Green was not in the Senate reading room, where he was supposed to have gone to read the bill. This caused considerable uneasiness among the advocates of the bill and they were not assured until the Senator returned to the Chamber with the other members of the committee on engrossed bills and with the measure duly reported.

Finally the bill came up for passage. Senator McLane moved for postponement of a day. Senator Bean opposed this and sought immediate passage. The latter motion passed. The bill was then passed by one vote and sent to the governor and signed. The quill with which it was signed was presented to William Reed, the governor's colored messenger.

The ink on the bill had hardly dried when the leaders of the colored race rushed from the State House to take steps immediately to protest the further production of the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont theater to the new board of censorship created by the act. When the governor signed the act, he is reported as saying, "Any show that cannot get the approval of two of the three members of the board, ought not to be permitted to continue."

It is interesting to note the use which colored citizens make of the law in their attempt to drive this production from the city. They feel confident that they can override Mayor Curley's alleged indifference by inducing, under a new complaint, the police commissioner and the chief justice to take a majority vote for summary suppression of this film, which they claim holds their race to ridicule. They do not have to give any reasons for suppressing the production. Their power is arbitrary and they are accountable to nobody.

Without questioning the motives of the police commissioner and the chief justice, it is well to note, that both are appointive offices. The former is for a term of six years and the latter for life. The mayor is the only member of the board who is elected by the people and accountable to them.

As long as any small part of a community wish to suppress any film or dramatic production, this will is always sure to be an eyesore and a menace.

BOSTON TRAVELER
JUNE 3, 1915

It is understood that the vote of the new censorship board to permit the Birth of a Nation to continue was unanimous. Also it is remembered that the mayor, early in the controversy over this film play, was quoted as saying, "The play is an outrage upon the colored people of the country. If I had the power I would stop it."

RUTLAND (Vt.) HERALD
JUNE 2, 1915

about Boston

According to the new Massachusetts law, the chief justice of the Boston Municipal court, the police commissioner and mayor are empowered to act as censors of moving pictures and other theatrical entertainments. They are now attending "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's great production, and will meet presently and see what should be done about it. Answer: Nothing.

Boston Record. (Mass)
June 4, 1915

Miss Cooper at Work

Miriam Cooper, who was Margaret Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," recently joined the Reliance-Majestic players. This dainty actress immediately began work in the featured role of the two part Majestic photoplay "The Burned Hand."

In "The Burned Hand" Miss Cooper is the daughter of parents who have domestic difficulties. She is kidnapped by her father but has a colored boy sweetheart who struggles for her. Eventually, the father is unable to part the lovers, since he depended on the identification of the youth on a burned hand. Three of the hero's friends burn their hands to baffle the father.

Director Tod Browning is in charge. William Hinckley is Miss Cooper's principal support.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 3, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS

New Board of Censors Refuses to Revoke Theatre License for Photo Play

The newly formed Board of Censors for theatres and photo-plays refused a petition of more than 6000 people, last night, to suppress "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre.

A brief statement, issued by Mayor Curley, chairman of the board, announced the defeat of the protesters after a lengthy hearing had been held in City Hall. Although the corridors of City Hall had been thronged throughout the afternoon, few people were left when the decision came, and there was no demonstration.

It proved a severe blow to the colored people, who have conducted a six weeks' agitation against the photoplay. On their request the Legislature had created the Board of Censors, which has now found against them.

But the leaders of the agitation against "The Birth of a Nation" are still confident of suppressing the pictures which they allege libel the entire negro race. Attorney Butler R. Wilson, who has championed the cause of the colored people, declared last night that the action of the censors has caused widespread disappointment, but has not discouraged his people from the belief that there is another way.

FIGHT WILL CONTINUE

None of the leaders could state positively what their next step would be. All insisted that the fight would continue, but in what form they could not state until after conferences which they will hold today. Equally confident are the producers of the photo-play in the belief that the pictures are not immoral and cannot be suppressed.

John B. Schoeffel, manager of the Tremont Theatre, said last night:

"I am sincerely glad that 'The Birth of a Nation' has been passed and application to revoke the license refused, because the judgment of the directors in booking the play has been thereby justified. Whatever inequality may have been felt in regard to the historical treatment of the negro in some parts of the film has been removed by the incorporation of the Hampton Institute film, which shows the marvellous progress of the colored race since reconstruction.

"We believe 'The Birth of a Nation' to be not only legally permissible, but also as now given a thoroughly impartial story holding the scales of justice even. We therefore invite the support of all the people of New England, and we beg to say that no malice is felt toward anyone whomsoever that has opposed the production in this city. To the more than hundred thousand patrons, who have seen it and to the 15,000 people who in the last 10 days have signed petitions protesting against any interference, we extend our hearty thanks."

A Long Agitation

The agitation against "The Birth of a Nation" began with a riot outside of the theatre during the first week of its production. Many arrests were made at that time and strong police guards were necessary to quench other disturbances that were threatened.

The film was modified and one scene, depicting a negro pursuing a young white girl, was eliminated. Mass meetings were held by colored people throughout Greater Boston. Aid was sought from the Legislature and after one bill had been amended to the approval of the protesters, a board of three was created to censor all theatricals.

This board includes Mayor Curley, as chairman, Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster of the Municipal Court and Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara. After a preliminary meeting at which the board organized and planned its future action, the members viewed the photoplay at the Tremont Theatre and yesterday afternoon granted a hearing to both sides in the controversy, at the Mayor's office.

Aside from the members of the board, these were admitted to the hearing chamber: Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan, legal adviser of the board; J. Mott Hallowell, former Assistant United States Attorney-General William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson, representing the protestants, and Attorney John P. Cusick, representing the theatre interests.

Hearing Was Secret

It was agreed that whatever occurred in the hearing chamber should not be made public, except for a statement to be given by Mayor Curley. Reporters were denied admission, as well as a stenographer for the protestants.

The scope of the authority of the board and whether it could revoke the license of the Tremont Theatre under its police power was discussed pro and con.

Those representing the colored people declared that the play was immoral, was stirring race prejudice and was a menace to the community. They argued that the board had power to suppress the play and revoke the license held by the theatre. The other side was argued by Attorney Cusick.

In the meantime the outer offices of the Mayor's suite were filled with colored men and women while the crowd was augmented by many white persons. It was planned by the board to give each side half an hour to put in their case. An hour was used up by each side, however.

At 6:30 p. m. the board took the matter under advisement, conferring further with Corporation Counsel Sullivan as to matters of law. Shortly after 7 o'clock the board adjourned, Mayor Curley being authorized to act as spokesman.

Mayor's Statement

He gave the following short statement: "The officials designated by chapter 348 of the acts of the year 1915 having received a petition from certain citizens requesting that the performance of the photo-play known as 'The Birth of a Nation' at the Tremont Theatre be stopped by them under the authority given them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protesters and the licensee and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended."

After this short statement was given out, the Mayor responded to all questions that the board had agreed to make no further remark. He would not say as to whether the vote was unanimous or otherwise.

COLORED RACE ANGRY

Indignation and Cries of "Dynamite" When Editor Trotter Announces at Meeting in Church That the Censors Have Voted Against Them

Cries of "Dynamite," "There's a way!" greeted W. Munroe Trotter, editor of the Guardian, in St. Mark's Church, Tremont street, last night, when he announced to 300 colored people assembled there the verdict of the censor board refusing to stop the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation."

Indignation ran rife, and with set, determined faces they heard the decision setting all their work of eight weeks at naught—their mass meetings and bitter denunciations of the film now running at the Tremont Theatre. Further action, however, was deferred until some later date.

"The case now rests in the hands of the public, in your hands," said Trotter, in concluding his long address to the assembly, "and I advise you to be very, very careful what you do."

It was long after 9 o'clock when Trotter reached the church, but throughout the long wait from the time the meeting opened—8 o'clock—no announcement of the censor board's decision was made and none in the audience knew of it.

The first intimation came when Trotter arose and remarked grimly:

"This is a serious meeting. We have come to a marking place in the fight against 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

Tells of Rioting

Then, and still not informing his auditors of the decision, he told of the long struggle to stop the photo-play. Step by step he recounted the many actions which had been taken, the mass meetings of protest, the bills presented to the Legislature and the contests waged before the legislative committee on judiciary.

He recalled the night of the riot at the Tremont Theatre and of the occasion when a white man assaulted a negro in the playhouse during a production of the show.

"What happened?" he shouted. "People in the audience arose and cried, 'Hit the nigger!' 'Strike the nigger!' 'Look out for razors!'"

All this, declared Trotter, and the refusal on the part of the management of the theatre to sell colored persons seats on the night of the riot proved conclusively that the play was "malicious and brutal" and one which drew a distinction between the white and the colored races.

Trotter spoke of the meeting of the censor board in City Hall, of the board's refusal to permit him to be present or to permit any lawyer to attend as a representative of the Equal Rights League.

GLOUCESTER (Mass.) TIMES
JUNE 3, 1915

New Board of Censors Refuses to Suppress Photo-Play.

The newly formed Board of Censors for the theatres and photo-plays refused a petition of more than 6000 people last night, to suppress "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston.

LYNN (Mass.) ITEM
JUNE 3, 1915

Censors Pass "Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" will continue to be reproduced at the Tremont theatre, Boston, according to an official decision rendered after a three-hour session of the [illegible] legislative commission [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 4, 1915

THE CENSORSHIP BOARD

The newly formed censorship board of the city of Boston decides, after due deliberation and a view of the protested show, that it does not feel called upon to forbid the performances of "The Birth of a Nation" under the conditions of its presentation. There are those who will agree with this verdict and there are others who will not, but all will admit that the board has acted within its powers as constituted by recent statute.

This being the case, what becomes of the mournful plaints from some of the Boston papers to the effect that the law, if enacted, would be a calamitous blow to the liberty of free expression in the playhouse and would enable any set of men who felt aggrieved to stop any performance they desired? It doesn't seem to work that way.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
JUNE 4, 1915

LONG RUN FOR PHOTO PLAY

"Birth of a Nation" in Third Month

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and West. At the Tremont Theatre, Boston, the attendance is still enormous despite or because of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of its run is consequently in progress. Short runs falling off into almost nothing at the close have been the invariable rule with motion pictures hitherto.

This is because "The Birth of a Nation" is not a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history which are particularly interesting to Americans now on account of the threatened complications with a foreign power. Super-added to the history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, whilst the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. Many of those who attended the play early in the run are coming back to see it again. Unlike the average comedy or emotional drama, it does not suffer from a second or a third seeing. On the contrary, the events stand out more grandly and the emotional power is, if anything, more intense. The great spectacle is being given twice daily at the Tremont Theatre [illegible] Sundays.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 4, 1915

GUARD "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Police Detail at Theatre—Negro Agitator Is Heckled on the Common

As a precautionary measure a detail of police was sent to the Tremont Theatre last evening and its appearance drew a large crowd. Only a few negroes were present, however, and some of them paraded silently back and forth in front of the theatre. Allen W. Whaley, a negro, who styles himself "a professor of human rights and education," made several brief speeches and finally led the way to the Common, where a crowd of nearly 2000 gathered. Whaley made a speech in which he attempted to assail Mayor Curley, but the crowd cheered so loudly as to drown his utterance. He then mentioned President Wilson and this led to further cheering. Finally four mounted officers drove the crowd back to the street. When the audience left the theatre there was no demonstration.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 4, 1915

THE "BIRTH OF A Nation" is approved by the censorship board which came into being on the crest of the wave of protest from those who disapproved this moving picture entertainment. The objectors to the exhibition have fought a strenuous battle. They won their point of imposing censorship. They lost their point of objection to the exhibition itself. The chapter is ended.

[illegible]ERVILLE (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 4, 1915

The new censorship law was enacted expressly to stop the production of "The Birth of a Nation," and now the new Boston board of censors has decided that the production of "The Birth of a Nation" may go on!

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 4, 1915

CALL FILM DISGRACE UPON CITY

Denouncing the "Birth of a Nation" as a municipal disgrace, and berating Thomas Dixon, upon whose books the photo-play is founded, as a "human monster" and a "breeder of hate," the 64th New England Conference of the A. M. E. Church yesterday unanimously adopted resolutions voicing the disapproval of the colored people of Boston against what was termed an "outrage against decency."

VOTE UNANIMOUS

The Rev. Montrose William Thornton, pastor of the Charles Street A. M. E. Church, where the conference is being held, introduced the resolution. The vast congregation of colored people listened with bated breath while Mr. Thornton read his carefully prepared paper, and then voted it into the records of the conference with vigorous demonstrations of their deep sympathy with its declarations.

"For several weeks the City of Boston," read the pastor, "has permitted to operate in one of its theatres a photo play called 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"The same has come as a great offense and insult to the 20,000 Negroes of Greater Boston. For weeks these well deserving citizens have been made to suffer this outrage; and with much that has been done to impress upon the authorities their misery, this nefarious shame and municipal disgrace still continues.

Assails Author of Books

"The so-called 'Birth of a Nation' is the product of the degenerate brain and sinful heart of Thomas Dixon, the would-be playright and villainous author, the satanic composer of 'The Leopard's Spots' and 'The Clansman.'

"This human monster has preceded his entrance to this city with the confession that the purpose of his photo play was the education of the white man, rather than the coming white citizen, such as would revise his feelings, his opinion of the negro.

"With the indorsement of his kindred imps, like Parkhurst of New York, another scab of the cloth, alas this breeder of hate, this libel of truth, the 'Birth of a Nation,' fastens its talons around the sacred precincts of old historic Boston, its pedigree of decency and patriotism, and with its poisonous beak nightly picks the life blood of a people unable to the present to rise up in their might and with whatever weapons necessary to drive from their midst an enemy so malignant and vicious.

URGES OPPOSITION TO REFRAIN FROM FORCE

J. Mott Hallowell yesterday addressed the following open letter to the colored citizens of Greater Boston:

"It has been threatened to resort to violence in order to stop the further production in Boston of 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"When you fight, fight hard; but never begin a fight until you have cooled off and thought the matter out, and are sure you are right in starting the fight. Then if you do go in, go in as hard as you can.

"The greatest generals are those who can turn defeat into victory. 'For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled.'

"You have now in this local contest two paths before you. One is to use violence against a superior force, in which course you will alienate many who are now your friends, and will turn your local and temporary defeat into a general rout. The other is to rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers. Choose this bigger and wiser course. It may seem hard at first, but it is wiser in the end.

"The real struggle for you is not the struggle against this film; the latter is merely an episode in a race epoch. The real struggle is that of a race seeking its way out of bondage. The way is hard and your path is beset with difficulties, but ultimately you will win. And the measure of your success, in the long run, will be the kind of citizens that you show yourselves to be. 'And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock.'"

BEVERLY (Mass.) TIMES
JUNE 5, 1915

Birth Of Nation O.K. Say Censors

Performances of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Temple, Boston, will not be stopped. This was the unanimous decision reached by the new board of censorship last evening at the end of a three-hour session in the mayor's office.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 3, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS

Board of Censors Refuses to Stop Photoplay at the Tremont Theatre, but Declines to Give Reasons

After a three-hour session at City Hall, announcement was made last night that the Board of Censors which had considered the protests against "The Birth of a Nation" being given at the Tremont Theatre, had voted in favor of allowing the photoplay to continue. No reasons were given. The conclusion of the board was given in the following language:

The officials designated by Chapter 348, Acts of 1915, having received a petition from certain citizens requesting that performances of "The Birth of a Nation" be stopped by them under the authority given to them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protesters and the licensee and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended.

Mayor Curley, chairman of the censorship board, after the other two members, Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court and Police Commissioner O'Meara, had retired, declined to add to the official announcement. The chief justice and Commissioner O'Meara also declined to comment. Soon after the board assembled Mayor Curley opened a door to the outer corridor and told the large gathering of negro remonstrants who had been collecting for two hours that the board would admit a lawyer representing the remonstrants and one representing the Tremont Theatre.

J. Mott Hallowell, William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson said they represented the remonstrants, and were admitted, as was John F. Cusick, for the theatre. John A. Sullivan, corporation counsel, was also present.

W. Munroe Trotter arrived late and vainly sought the room with the censors. The 100 remonstrants remained about until five, when under the City Hall rules, the mayor's office was closed officially. They then retired to the corridors.

The mayor, in summing up the hearing, said that the board had agreed to allow each side a half-hour to argue, but each side took an hour. The censors, after counsel had retired, went over the petitions and all other papers in the case, taking 40 minutes to arrive at the conclusion. The leaders of the remonstrants said petitions had been handed to the board containing 6181 names.

John B. Schoeffel, manager of the Tremont Theatre, said:

"I am sincerely glad that 'The Birth of a Nation' has been passed, and application to revoke the license refused, because the judgment of the directors in booking the play has been thereby justified. Whatever inequality may have been felt in regard to the historical treatment of the negro, in some parts of the film, has been removed by the incorporation of the Hampden Institute film, which shows the marvelous progress of the colored race since reconstruction. We believe 'The Birth of a Nation' to be not only legally permissable, but also, as now given, a thoroughly impartial story, holding the scales of justice even. We therefore invite the support of all the people of New England, and we beg to say, that no malice is felt toward anyone whomsoever, that has opposed the production in this city. To the more than 100,000 patrons who have seen it, and to the 15,000 persons, who in the last ten days have signed petitions protesting against any interference, we extend our hearty thanks."

When William Monroe Trotter announced to a gathering of negroes at St. Mark's Congregational Church, 1042A Tremont street, last night, that the board of theatrical censors had refused to suppress the photoplay, groans and hisses spread through the audience.

Governor Walsh was lauded by Mr. Trotter and the audience, but the mayor was branded as a "traitor," and his name hissed.

"He broke his word to us," said Trotter, referring to the mayor. "This decision by the board was rendered behind closed doors, and our people who were there to attend the meeting were forced into the mayor's outer office, and finally into the street."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 4, 1915

"RISE SUPERIOR TO DEFEAT."

J. Mott Hallowell Advises Colored People Not to Consider Violence Because of Film Decision.

Advice to colored people not to hold meetings of an incendiary nature because of the decision of the Board of Censors not to interfere with the production of "The Birth of a Nation" is given by J. Mott Hallowell, who has been one of the counsel for the colored people in their protest against this filmplay.

Mr Hallowell has addressed a letter to the colored citizens of Greater Boston in which he says:

"It has been threatened to resort to violence in order to stop the further production in Boston of 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"When you fight, fight hard; but never begin a fight until you have cooled off and thought the matter out and are sure you are right in starting the fight. Then if you do go in, go in as hard as you can.

"The greatest generals are those who can turn defeat into victory. You have now in this contest two paths before you. One is to use violence against a superior force, in which course you will alienate many who are now your friends and will turn your local and temporary defeat into a general rout. The other is to rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers. Choose this bigger and wiser course. It may seem hard at first but it is wiser in the end.

"The real struggle for you is not the struggle against this film; the latter is merely an episode in a race epoch. The real struggle is that of a race seeking its way out of bondage. The way is hard and your path is beset with difficulties. But ultimately you will win. And the measure of your success, in the long run, will be the kind of citizens you show yourselves to be."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 4, 1915

URGES NEGROES TO COOL DOWN

Hallowell Tells Race That Violence Against Film Play Would Alienate Friends.

In an open letter issued last night to the Negro citizens of Boston, J. Mott Hallowell urges them not to resort to violence to stop the further production of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been sanctioned by the new board of censors appointed as a result of the legislative agitation against the film. "Rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers," he advises.

Following is the letter in full:

"To the Colored Citizens of Greater Boston: It has been threatened to resort to violence in order to stop the further production in Boston of 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"When you fight, fight hard; but never begin a fight until you have cooled off and thought the matter out and are sure you are right in starting the fight. Then if you do go in, go in as hard as you can.

"The greatest generals are those who can turn defeat into victory. 'For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled.' You have now in this local contest two paths before you. One is to use violence against a superior force, in which course you will alienate many who are now your friends and will turn your local and temporary defeat into a general rout. The other is to rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers. Choose this bigger and wiser course. It may seem hard at first, but it is wiser in the end.

"The real struggle for you is not the struggle against this film; the latter is merely an episode in a race epoch. The real struggle is that of a race seeking its way out of bondage. The way is hard and your path is beset with difficulties. But ultimately you will win. And the measure of your success, in the long run, will be the kind of citizens that you show yourselves to be. 'And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.'

"J. MOTT HALLOWELL."

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JUNE 4, 1915

It should be recorded that Boston's new board of censorship, composed of Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court and Police Commissioner O'Meara, have unanimously voted not to revoke or suspend the license of the theatre which is carrying the production known as "The Birth of a Nation." This is the official way of stating that the play has been sanctioned, although not necessarily indorsed. It appears from the statement of the manager of the theater that some parts of the film have been removed, and a Hampton institute film incorporated, which "shows the marvelous progress of the colored race since 'reconstruction.'" It would thus appear that all has been done which could be done to remove the gross offense given by the original film, which aroused the intense opposition of the colored people of Boston and their friends. The three censors, as individuals, witnessed the revised version, and subsequently listened to arguments for and against.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JUNE 4, 1915

CANNOT SHOW FILM HERE.

Mayor Will Not Allow "The Birth of a Nation" To Be Exhibited in Local Theaters.

"The Birth of the Nation" will not be shown in Springfield motion picture houses. This was the statement of Mayor Stacy yesterday afternoon, in furtherance of his policy to allow no films to be shown in this city that are likely to offend any class of citizens. Goldstein Bros' amusement company had announced that if the mayor's permission could be secured, the picture would be shown in the Broadway theater through arrangements that had been made with the Epoch motion picture company, the producers.

The picture is based on "The Clansman," the dramatic story by Rev Thomas Dixon, dealing with the reconstruction period in the South. Trouble has resulted in Providence and Boston motion picture houses where the picture was shown, but a board of censors appointed by the Massachusetts Legislature decided Wednesday night that it can continue at the Tremont theater in Boston.

WORCESTER (Mass.) POST
JUNE [illegible], 1915

There is much speculation in filmland as to what will be the subject of the next feature photoplay to be produced by David Wark Griffith, who produced "The Birth of the Nation". It is said that he has under consideration plans for the production of "The Quest of the Holy Grail," suggested by the famous frescoes of Edwin Austin Abbey, that adorn the walls of the Public Library in Boston.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 4, 1915

CALL POLICE TO TREMONT AS RIOT SCARE

Excitement Caused by Picketing at Photo-Play

Crowds of excited persons thronged Tremont street last night, following the appearance at the Tremont Theatre of details of police as the result of a demonstration made by colored objectors to "The Birth of a Nation" photoplay.

No arrests were made, the demonstrators contenting themselves with doing picket duty in front of the theatre and denouncing the act of the Board of Censors in permitting the play to continue.

HATS OFF TO WILSON

Professor Allen W. Whaley, who claims to have founded the so-called human brotherhood movement, attempted to denounce Mayor Curley, but was forced to desist by the crowd gathered about him on the Common, who cheered repeatedly for the Mayor.

The mention of President Wilson's name by Whaley also brought forth a burst of continuous applause, all the men in the crowd removing their hats and waving them enthusiastically. Their antagonism to the speaker became so pronounced that he was eventually forced to take refuge in the subway, together with a white man who defended him.

Fearing that there might be trouble, the management of the theatre asked for police protection last night, and several details of officers were at once ordered out, under the command of Superintendent Crowley.

Parade Past Theatre

About 40 patrolmen were stationed inside the playhouse, together with a number of plain clothes men and inspectors, and others were on duty on the sidewalk. At this time a number of colored people, led by Professor Whaley, and including several women, were parading solemnly and silently up and down past the theatre. Shortly before the conclusion of the performance, attempts were made to address the crowd that had gathered in the street, and the police were ordered to disperse them.

Assisted by four mounted officers, the police drove the crowd in the Common, where Whaley started a denunciation of the play and of the Board of Censors. Warming to his work, he began to condemn Mayor Curley, but was interrupted by a volley of cheers, which forced him to desist.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 4, 1915

DEMONSTRATION BY ABOUT 20 NEGROES

Parade Past Theatre to Repeat "We Protest."

Mounted Police Break Crowd Attracted by "Birth of Nation."

Dissatisfied with the decision of the Board of Censors not to stop the showing of the play, "The Birth of a Nation," about 20 colored people, including a number of women, and led apparently by Allen W. Whaley, walked up and down Tremont street past the Tremont Theatre many times last evening, continually repeating "We protest."

Supt Crowley of the Police Department had anticipated some demonstration and had 40 policemen in and about the theatre and 8 more waiting in the Legrange-st station.

Mr Whaley, who describes himself as a "professor of human rights and education," stopped here and there and made addresses. When the police offered with his last address there were about 200 persons on the Tremont street sidewalk and about 500 persons on the Boylston street side of the Common surging about the entrance of the theatre.

Some in the crowd cheered Mr Whaley, and finally Supt Crowley ordered a squad of four mounted officers to disperse the crowd. They were obliged under the personal direction of the superintendent to ride into the mob and force back Whaley and his followers and his backers. The mounted squad moved the crowd back to Boylston and West sts. No arrests were made.

When the audience left the theatre at 10:5 there was no demonstration.

ELD (Mass.) MORN. UNION
JUNE 5, 1915

...h of a Nation" began ...d here today. ...developments of ... made by ... ...ues necessary ... secure the play. ... to ... Faulkner re... ...ceived a num...

...N (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 5, 1915

...TH OF A NATION" BEGINS THIRD MONTH

...rd month of D. W. Griffith's ...inary picture-play, "The Birth ...tion," begins with the matinee ...ce today. The runs of the ...ir to break all records in the ...ities where they are in pro... Los Angeles has had eleven ...f the play, New York has had ...action for no less than fifteen ...and the Boston run is now in ...h week.

...pectacle combines historical-ro... pictures and lively synchronized ... Almost every visitor from out ... seems to include "The Birth of ..." in the "seeing Boston" plans. ...ries of conventions that will be ...re are writing for special reser...

...magnitude of the production is ... as magnetic as its artistic ex... The battle scenes are extra... ...ly vivid, and historic figures like ... Grant and Lee move through ...enes with a lifelikeness that ... and astonishes the spectator.

...TON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 5, 1915

...EGRO LEADER ...S ARRESTED ON ... THE COMMON

...harged by Police With Speaking Without a License.

...uring a disturbance last night in ...t of the Tremont Theatre, where ... photoplay, "The Birth of a Na... ...is shown, Allen W. Whaley, ...egro, was arrested by Sergt. Martin ...g of the Lagrange street station, ...rged with speaking without a per... on Boston Common. There was a ...at deal of excitement among the ...wd of 2000 which had gathered when ...aley was arrested, but there was no ...istance to the police. ...olice Commissioner O'Meara was on ...d last night, and watched the bit... ...ail of reserves from the different ...tions handle the crowd. Whaley ...h about 20 other negroes, men and ...men, arrived at the theatre shortly ...ore 9 o'clock. They paraded up and ...wn in front for some time, saying, ... protest the 'Birth of a Nation,'" as ...y passed by the door.

...he number of negroes increased un... when the first act of the film was ...r there were about 30 of them on ... Common, in front of the theatre. ...aley then began to talk, assailing ... mayor, police commissioner, and ...ief Justice Bolster, who compose the ...nsorship board, and who refused to ...p the photoplay.

...Capt. Canney immediately detailed a ...men plain clothes officers to mingle ...th the crowd about Whaley. Th... ...nce coming from the theatre ... ...er on the Common, when they h... ...d Whaley shouting, and soon a crowd, ...imated by the police as 2000, gathered. ...Sergt. King and Patrolman Thomas ... Igoe of the Joy street station, West ...nd, seized Whaley, and started with ...m for the Lagrange street station. At ...e station house, while Patrolman Igoe ...as searching him, Sergt. King said, ...Why did you not stop speaking when ...told you to?" "Well, I guess I will ...ll that to the court," answered ...haley. He was later bailed.

...He was warned by Lieut. Dobbyns to ...ep away from the theatre as he was ...aving the station, but a few minutes ...ter he was in front of the place. ...Commissioner O'Meara was there, ...lking to several newspaper men, and ...Whaley again set up his talking. He ...as driven off by the officers.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
June 5, 1915

ASK PUBLIC HEARING

"Birth of Nation" Opponents Petition ... Censors

The new board of theatrical censorship in Boston, which consists of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner, the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, were yesterday petitioned for a public hearing in the "Birth of a Nation" case.

This board, the creation of which came after a long legislative fight growing out of opposition to the Birth of a Nation," Wednesday gave its indorsement to the "Birth of a ...ation" and said that the play should ...ontinue in Boston.

...GFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JUNE 5, 1915

...e of two Pittsfield playhouses ...e efforts to have the film "The ... of a Nation" ... says he felt that it was against ...ublic welfare and the attempts were ...tioned. The mayor has received pe... against the film.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 5, 1915

AFTER THE DECISION

WE assume that those who are warning the colored leaders and their followers in this city not to go outside of the law and outside of good citizenship in their opposition to "The Birth of a Nation" are doing something superfluous. We assume that 99 per cent. of the colored citizens of Boston have respect for the law and would not vent their disappointment by illegal and disorderly proceedings. Moreover, if they should do so, they would forfeit immediately the good will of many who have appreciated their sentiments in this matter without being able fully to share them.

The decision concerning a continuance of the play which has offended a large number of the colored citizens of Boston has been made by a commission that never would have been substituted for the recent municipal censorship had it not been for the remarkable demonstration against Mr. Griffith's photoplay. A commission of three was created, it was created according to the desires of those who demanded a change, and the stipulation that a decision should be reached by a majority vote was inserted against the wishes of the amusement-promoting interests. The commission has unanimously decided that "The Birth of a Nation" should not be prohibited in Boston.

To attempt to override that decision by resort to methods which the colored race, with the memory of what it has undergone in this country, should be the last to adopt, would not only be futile, but it would be worse than that, for it would furnish welcome ammunition to those who even now refuse to accord to a colored man the fair treatment due to any human being.

BOSTON (Mass.) HERALD
JUNE 5, 1915

NEGRO ORATOR ARRESTED OPPOSITE THEATRE

Allen W. Whaley, a Negro, who has been prominent in the agitation against the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," was arrested last night on a charge of speaking on the Common without a permit.

He appeared about 9 o'clock, attended by a small crowd, some of them women, and while walking up and down opposite the Tremont Theatre, delivered an impromptu talk about the performance and Charles Sumner.

People began to gather, and although the police kept everybody moving, there was soon a line of persons fringing the curb in front of the theatre watching the orator.

Sergt. Martin King of station 4 and Officer Igoe of station 3 asked Whaley if he had a permit, and when he said he had not they took him into custody. He declared that he had the right of free speech guaranteed him by the constitution, and so long as he kept moving the police had no authority to interfere. He made no resistance.

At police station 4 he gave his name, age as 42, birthplace South Carolina and residence 80 Windsor street.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
JUNE 5, 1915

The Birth of a Nation

To the Editor of The Advertiser:—

I wonder how everyone feels about the decision of the Board of Censorship with relation to the Birth of a Nation. The issue was a hot one for a while and it looked as though there might be dangerous results or race riots in our otherwise complacent city. After quibbling about the matter for some time it was decided that a Board of Censorship should be formed to pass on all such moving pictures. And now to the disappointment of all those who were instrumental in bringing about the change, the Board has decided that the film is O. K.

What a waste of public money! In any play or picture there has to be a conflict of some kind or other. This fact generally makes it necessary to have a villain. If the villain be an American, an Englishman, Mexican or an Italian is alright, but as soon as a colored villain is introduced there immediately follows trouble. It is a strange thing that such supersensitiveness should exist. It has caused us a lot of trouble and money to settle this dispute. Let us hope that the matter will now be left alone and that the decision of the Censors will not be attacked. L. P. Waters.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
JUNE 4, 1915

RIOT DETAIL FOR BIRTH OF NATION

Orders were given by Superintendent Crowley to riot details of police in the downtown police station to prevent disturbances by opponents to the decision of the new censors' board, at the performance of the "Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre tonight, on account of the demonstration last night.

Crowds of excited people filled Tremont street, marching silently up and down past the theatre. The presence of a big police detail under the superintendent himself, prevented even an attempt at disorderliness. Only when the demonstrators tried to address a crowd in front of the theatre toward the close of the performance, was it necessary for the police to interfere, and then only to move the crowd out of the street to the Common.

To the crowd in the Common, Professor Allen W. Whaley started a denunciation of Mayor Curley, but was silenced by repeated cheers for the Mayor.

J. Mott Hallowell today addresses an open letter to the colored citizens of Greater Boston urging them to refrain from force on the ground that resort to any violence would be a justification of the very thing they protest against.

BOSTON TRAVELER
JUNE 4, 1915

NEW FOE TAKES UP CUDGELS AGAINST 'BIRTH OF NATION'

In an effort to have the new censorship board reopen the hearing relative to the suppression of "The Birth of a Nation," a committee hepresenting the Massachusetts branch of the National Independent Equal Rights League has filed a petition with the censors. Sensational developments are promised by the league if the hearing is reopened. The petition is signed by the Rev. M. W. Thornton, J. A. Crawford, E. T. Morris and W. M. Trotter. The communication follows:

"BOSTON, Mass., June 3, 1915.

"Hon. James M. Curley, Hon. Stephen O'Meara, Hon. Wilfred N. Bolster, Board of Censors of the City of Boston—Sirs:

"In behalf of the Massachusetts branch of the National Independent Equal Rights League, we, the undersigned hereyb ask a reopening of the question of the removal of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," and the granting of a public hearing thereon in compliance with the spirit of the law creating your commission.

Is Public Demand.

"As a public commission we call upon you to grant this right at once. We as citizens maintain that such an important public issue as the removal of this photo-play, which has been the subject of extraordinary public protest covering a period of eight weeks, cannot be properly decided by your honorable body at any private, star-chamber session, especially the one held from which our league's representatives were excluded after being notified to appear.

"We hold that, inasmuch as a legislative enactment has been passed specifically to suppress this play, growing out of a public declaration against the play by His Excellency, Gov. David I. Walsh, the petitioners against it are entitled to a full, fair public hearing, which is the Massachusetts way.

"We are aggrieved and denied our just rights by a decision without a hearing. On this right we insist because of the serious injury already inflicted upon us, evidence of which we desire and have a right to present when you grant such public hearing.

"We feel certain that the Governor of the commonwealth, prominent members of the Legislature and others of business and professional standing will appear to repeat their reasons why this prejudice-breeding play should be stopped."

To Combat Influence.

To discuss methods of combating the influence of "The Birth of a Nation" the executive committee of the Boston branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will meet at the home of Atty. Butler R. Wilson, 13 Rutland square, Tuesday night. Ministers and others interested in the situation will be invited to attend and take part in the meeting. The committee met yesterday afternoon at Wilson's office, 34 School street, to consider the situation, and adjourned until Tuesday. Those present at yesterday's meeting were Joseph P. Loud, Mr. Wilson, George G. Bradford, Adalene Moffat, the Rev. Samuel A. Brown, Mrs. Mary H. Loud and Dr. Horace Bumstead.

Atty. William H. Lewis, a colored lawyer who took a prominent part in opposing the photo-play, said to a Traveler reporter today:

"The public wouldn't stand for this production in any other city or town in the state.

"I understand the officials at Springfield yesterday refused to permit the film being shown there. I do not think the decision of the Boston censorship board represents public opinion. The fact that the Legislature passed the bill creating the new board shows what public opinion in this state is.

"The film will be opposed wherever it shows its head in this country."

Police Called to Quell Disturbance Over Film

The police of the Lagrange street station were called last night and another squad of officers were sent to the Tremont Theatre when a crowd collected in front of the entrance because of the speech making and other activities of a number of colored men and women protesting against the photo play "The Birth of a Nation." The management asked for police protection and patrolmen and plain clothes men were stationed in the theatre and on the street.

Prof. Allen W. Whaley attacked in his speech the new board of censors for not stopping the play. He also attempted to assail Mayor Curley and President Wilson, but at the mention of either of these officials the crowd waved their hats and cheered so persistently that the speaker was obliged to stop.

The antagonism to the speaker finally became so strong, especially when he referred to the President, that he was forced to seek refuge in one of the subway stations, accompanied by a white man, who was defending him.

No arrests were made.

In an open letter issued last night to the Negro citizens of Boston, J. Mott Hallowell urges them not to resort to violence to stop the further production of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been sanctioned by the new board of censors appointed as a result of the legislative agitation against the film. "Rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers," he advises.

Following is the letter in full:

"To the Colored Citizens of Greater Boston: It has been threatened to resort to violence in order to stop the further production in Boston of 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"When you fight, fight hard; but never begin a fight until you have cooled off and thought the matter out and are sure you are right in starting the fight. Then if you do go in, go in as hard as you can.

"The greatest generals are those who can turn defeat into victory. 'For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled.' You have now in this local contest two paths before you. One is to use violence against a superior force, in which course you will alienate many who are now your friends and will turn your local and temporary defeat into a general rout. The other is to rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers. Choose this bigger and wiser course. It may seem hard at first, but it is wiser in the end.

"The real struggle for you is not the struggle against this film; the latter is merely an episode in a race epoch. The real struggle is that of a race seeking its way out of bondage. The way is hard and your path is beset with difficulties. But ultimately you will win. And the measure of your success, in the long run, will be the kind of citizens that you show yourselves to be. 'And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.'

"J. MOTT HALLOWELL."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 4, 1915

POLICE TAKE PRECAUTION AT TREMONT THEATRE

The decision of the censors in favor of the play, "The Birth of a Nation," caused extra police precautions to be taken in the neighborhood of the Tremont Theatre last night, but save for denunciatory speeches by negro orators on the Common and considerable gazing on the part of the crowd that assembled nothing happened.

The attendance in the theatre was the largest of the week and there were an extra nnmber of plain clothes men detailed to guard against any disturbance, but nothing of that sort happened. There were more than a score of colored people in the gallery.

A conference of protestants against "The Birth of a Nation" has been called for Tuesday evening at the house of Butler R. Wilson, 13 Rutland square. It is intended to discuss ways and means for placing a ban upon the play, and it is expected that the leaders in the past agitation against the production will be present.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MORN. UNION
JUNE 4, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" BARRED FROM CITY

Mayor Positively Will Not Permit Film to Be Shown Here.

Efforts of the Goldstein Bros.' Amusement Company, as agent of the producers of the motion picture film, "The Birth of a Nation," to have the picture shown here, will not be successful. Mayor Stacy yesterday morning declared that in no circumstances would he allow the picture to be shown in Springfield as long as he is Mayor, and as his power in the granting of licenses for amusement enterprises is absolute, the promoters have no alternative but to accept his verdict.

Encouraged by the favorable criticism of Rev. A. P. Record of the Church of the Unity, the Epoch Motion Picture Company, which owns the picture, made overtures to the Goldstein Bros.' Amusement Company to have the picture shown in the Broadway Theater and, provided a license could be obtained, the plan would have been carried out. Nathan Goldstein said yesterday morning that he believed the majority of the residents of Springfield would like to see the film, particularly because of its historical value and that the theater would willingly make sacrifices to accommodate its clientele.

"It has always been my policy to prohibit the showing of pictures which would humiliate or in any way embarrass people of any race or creed," declared the Mayor. "Since my inauguration I have barred 10 moving picture films which I considered objectionable and I will continue this policy as long as I am Mayor. I will not grant a license for "The Birth of a Nation" under any circumstances.

"You cannot express my opposition to the picture too strongly," declared Rev. William N. DeBerry, pastor of St. John's Church. "I have seen the picture and I am sure the majority of pastors in the city would support me in my stand. It glorifies brute passion and a band of criminals. It is unfair to the Negro and I would fight it to the last ditch, and I know of at least two Negro organizations which would spend their last dollar to prevent its being shown here."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 4, 1915

MR. HALLOWELL'S ADVICE

It is excellent advice which Mr. J. Mott Hallowell, one of the leaders in the protest against the "Birth of a Nation," gives to colored people of this community when he tells them to abandon all thought of trouble-making in connection with the play—the continuance of which is now decreed—and to apply themselves to demonstrating their own character and capacity. This is the right note. The colored people have it within their power to discredit the usual southern view of them, which finds expression in "The Clansman," and is, with only slight modifications, transferred to the films in this production. We grant that it is a hard task and an uphill road, but so much will be their greater glory in the accomplishment.

Colored people ought also to rejoice with everybody else in an essentially free atmosphere for the stage, as for the other instrumentalities of public information and enlightenment. The Negroes should remember that the whole North is involved in this, quite as much as they, and that Boston shows itself essentially liberal in welcoming a presentation of the southern view of the struggle of 50 years ago. We hope Richmond and Atlanta and New Orleans will be equally tolerant of any presentation in novel, or play, or song, of what is our historic position. In such ways the two sections may know each other's theory of what has happened. Through the "Birth of a Nation," we are becoming cognizant here, as never before, of the southern view of the issues that preceded as well as of those that followed the great struggle at arms of half a century ago.

It is peculiarly fortunate that this decision was made by unanimous vote, in order that no individual and no party can henceforth secure political capital by claiming status as an overridden minority. The three censors in all such cases should agree by standing together to give their decisions the full weight to which such an adjudication may be entitled.

NORTHAMPTON (Mass.) GAZETTE
JUNE 4, 1915

URGES NEGROES TO COOL DOWN

Boston, June 4.—In an open letter issued last night to the Negro citizens of Boston, J. Mott Hallowell urges them not to resort to violence to stop the further production of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been sanctioned by the new board of censors appointed as a result of the legislative agitation against the film. "Rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers," he advises.

Following is the letter in full:

"To the Colored Citizens of Greater Boston: It has been threatened to resort to violence in order to stop the further production in Boston of 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"When you fight, fight hard; but never begin a fight until you have cooled off and thought the matter out and are sure you are right in starting the fight. Then if you do go in, go in as hard as you can.

"The greatest generals are those who can turn defeat into victory. 'For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfiled.' You have now in this local contest two paths before you. One is to use violence against a superior force, in which course you will alienate many who are now your friends and will turn your local and temporary defeat into a general rout. The other is to rise superior to your defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers. Choose this bigger and wiser course. It may seem hard at first, but it is wiser in the end.

"The great struggle for you is not the struggle against this film; the latter is merely an episode in a race epoch. The real struggle is that of a race seeking its way out of bondage. The way is hard and your path is beset with difficulties. But ultimately you will win. And the measure of your success, in the long run, will be the kind of citizens that you show yourselves to be. 'And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.'"

CLINTON (Mass.) ITEM
JUNE 4, 1915

CAUSE RIOT SCARE

Negro Objectors to Photo Play Create Excitement by Picketing

Boston, June 4.—Crowds of excited persons thronged Tremont street last night, following the appearance at the Tremont theatre of details of police as the result of a demonstration made by negro objectors to the "Birth of a Nation" photo play.

No arrests were made, the demonstrators contenting themselves with doing picket duty in front of the theatre and denouncing the act of the board of censors in permitting the play to continue.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 4, 1915

A VICIOUS PROPAGANDA.

The New England Association of Teachers of English publishes a monthly pamphlet entitled "The English Leaflet." The June number is given up to a verbatim report of a special meeting held at Huntington Hall to protest against the exhibit of the photoplay entitled "The Birth of a Nation." The New England history teachers included in the call of the meeting and shared in its proceedings and in the unanimous vote that the play should be prohibited. The confessed purpose of the play is to stir up hatred of the Negro race, which it shamefully maligns under the claim that it is teaching history. It glorifies the Ku Klux Klan and totally misrepresents the attitude of the North in endeavoring to secure the legitimate fruits of the Civil war. The author of the play would settle the race problem by sending the ten million colored American-born men, women and children to Africa, a perfectly crazy notion.

The meeting reported was addressed by Rev. S. M. Crothers, Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, Miss Adelene Moffatt, a Cambridge teacher, Southern born and bred, and Rolfe Cobleigh, associate editor of the Congregationalist. To each of these speakers the Dixon propaganda seemed vicious in the extreme, un-American, and revolutionary. Any success of this propaganda can only be at the cost of the blood-bought principles of freedom and equal right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, regardless of color, creed or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. Cobleigh said that one of the baneful effects of this enterprise in Boston has been the control of the newspapers, which has been secured through the advertising departments. He says, "the editors of some of the leading papers privately admit that this has been one of the most flagrant cases of suppressing facts and real editorial convictions that has ever developed in this city." He adds: "The garbled, distorted reports of some of the papers of protest meetings, at which distinguished citizens have spoken against this photo-play, are a disgrace to Boston journalism."

He quotes a well known reporter and a city editor in substantiation of his charge. He says: "Only two daily newspapers in this city have had the courage and the independence to denounce 'The Birth of a Na[tion]' and to demand its suppression. A [re]porter man told Mr. Cobleigh that [the] leading witnesses for the pl[ay] that he received $500 for hi[s] speech before the judicia[ry] committee against the suppressi[on] of the play.

These are some of the [me]thods by which this "false, immor[al] and dangerous propaganda" has [been] forced upon Boston, the city of [Wil]der, Andrew, Phillips and Robe[rts] and Shaw. If the true voice of Boston [can] be suppressed so that it can [not] be effectively heeded on Beacon Hill it would be well to remove from Boston Common the monument to Crispus Attucks, the negro who shed the first blood of the American Revolution, on State street, in the Boston massacre, and the monument to Robert G. Shaw, which faces the Bullfinch front of the State House. "Bury him with his niggers" was the Southern mandate when this chivalrous son of Massachusetts fell at Fort Wagner, leading his colored regiment. The Dixon propaganda is 50 years too late.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
about Boston
JUN 4 1915

MOVING PICTURE UPHELD

Boston Censors Indorse "The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith, who was on a New York for several weeks, making [final] arrangements for the town of his spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," left yesterday for Chicago, en route to California, where he begins work on another mammoth picture at the end of the month.

Just before leaving, Mr. Griffith received a full report on the favorable action taken by the newly created Board of Censors in Boston, which is sure to put an end to the agitation against the big picture spectacle in all parts of the country.

"The Birth of a Nation" has now passed over every legal barrier placed in its way by the negro intermingo societies opposed to its presentation in New York, Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and has been sustained in every instance, including the action of the National Board of Censors.

The situation in Boston was unique and threatened the freedom of the stage. Governor Walsh of Massachusetts had a bill rushed through the Legislature about two days ago, creating a Board of Censors, to pass upon the big picture now being presented for a run in the Tremont Theatre, Boston. This law empowered the board to suspend or revoke any theatre license at their pleasure. The board consists of Mayor Curley, Commissioner of Police O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster, of the Municipal Court. The two last-named officers are appointed by the Governor.

After viewing the picture in an official capacity, the board met Wednesday night, and by a unanimous vote decided that the picture was in no way contrary to good morals, and should not be suppressed.

Attorney John F. Cusick, representing Mr. Griffith, filed with the board petitions signed by 8,000 citizens of Boston, who had seen the play within the ten days following the enactment of the new censor law and who favored its continuance.

As a result of the agitation caused by this extreme case, it is said the moving picture people of New England are expected which will repeal this special legislation and set up a safe standard by which all pictures and works of art can be judged.

SOMERVILLE
JUNE 4

Tremont Theatre.—Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation," in the East and the West. Los Angeles has enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than fifteen weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, the attendance is still enormous despite or because of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run is consequently in progress. The great spectacle is being given twice daily at the Tremont Theatre except on Sundays. The patronage for June will include a great many out-of-town visitors, notably people who visit Boston for the college commencements and delegates to the various conventions that are to be held here this summer.

MILFORD (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 4, 1915

CAUSE RIOT SCARE

Negro Objectors to Photo Play Create Excitement by Picketing

Boston, June 4.—Crowds of excited persons thronged Tremont street last night, following the appearance at the Tremont theatre of details of police as the result of a demonstration made by negro objectors to the "Birth of a Nation" photo play.

No arrests were made, the demonstrators contenting themselves with doing picket duty in front of the theatre and denouncing the act of the board of censors in permitting the play to continue.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 4, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and the West. Los Angeles has enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than fifteen weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, the attendance is still enormous despite or because of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run consequently in progress. Short runs falling off to almost nothing at the close have been the invariable rule with motion pictures hitherto. The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," however, with the wonderful added attraction of symphonic music and of clever mechanical effects, defies all precedent and promises to set longevity records for play runs of any sort in the various cities where it has been booked. This is because "The Birth of a Nation" is a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history which are particularly interesting to Americans now on account of the threatened complications with a foreign power. Super-added to the history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, while the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. Indeed there are said to be no less than 10,000 details in the picture.

The great spectacle is being given twice daily at the Tremont Theatre except on Sundays. The patronage for June will include a great many out of town visitors, notably people who visit Boston for the college commencements and delegates to the various conventions that are to be held here this summer.

"The Birth of a Nation" may go

NORTHAMPTON (Mass.) GAZETTE
JUNE 4, 1915

PHOTO-PLAY PICKETS CAUSE EXCITEMENT

Police Are Called to Tremont Theater, Boston, for Fear of Riot

BOSTON, June 4.—Crowds of excited persons thronged Tremont street last night, following the appearance at the Tremont theater of details of police as the result of a demonstration made by colored objectors to "The Birth of a Nation" photo-play.

No arrests were made, the demonstrators contenting themselves with doing picket duty in front of the theater and denouncing the act of the board of censors in permitting the play to contine.

Prof. Allen W. Whaley, who claims to have founded the so-called Human Brotherhood movement, attempted to denounce Mayor Curley, but was forced to desist by the crowd gathered about him on the Common, who cheered repeatedly for the Mayor.

The mention of President Wilson's name by Whaley also brought forth a burst of continuous applause, all the men in the crowd removing their hats and waving them enthusiastically.

Their antagonism to the speaker became so pronounced that he was eventually forced to take refuge in the subway, together with a white man who defended him.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD
JUNE 4, 1915

After all the fuss and furor over "The Birth of a Nation," the board of censorship which resulted from the agitation carried on by those who opposed the picture has decided that it may be exhibited.

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 4, 1915

After all this fuss and fury the status of the "Birth of a Nation" remains as it did before. It is too bad that the entertainments furnished at our playhouses cannot be so constructed that no offence be given any race or religion.

LAWRENCE (Mass.)
JUNE 4, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION NOT TO BE SEEN IN SPRINGFIELD

Springfield, Mass., June 3.—"The Birth of a Nation" will not be shown in Springfield," said Mayor Stacy this afternoon when informed that Goldstein Brothers were negotiating with the owners of the picture for an engagement at the Broadway theatre. The Mayor said that no theatrical offering likely to offend any class of people will be permitted to show in this city while he is Mayor.

BIDDEFORD (Me.) RECORD
JUNE 4, 1915

A WISE DECISION.

The newly formed censorship board of Boston did exactly right in refusing to ban the photo play "The Birth of a Nation." There would be no end to confusion and trouble in regard to the presentation of moving pictures and plays if the principle urged by the colored residents of Boston and their sponsors had been adopted. If their protest had been successful every national group would have equal rights to demand the rejection of a moving picture or a play if they considered that it in any way reflected upon their ideas as to the excellency of character of their own people.

The attitude of the colored people of Boston since the decision was announced shows not only the wisdom of the decision but indicates that in previous yielding to the demands for change in the original photo-play the protestors were given a distorted sense of the importance of their protest and an exaggerated idea as to the fancied wrong done to them by Dixon's book and play.

The intemperance of speech manifested at the New England African Methodist conference in regard to the decision of the censorship board and the fact that already some of the cooler heads among the colored people have been obliged to issue manifestoes urging the colored population of Greater Boston to refrain from violence in regard to the matter indicates that the negro race has not moved even in New England very far from the animalism which Dixon condemns in his book and which is brought out in the photo-play the banning of which was asked.

In the mind of the Rev. Montrose William Thornton, a negro preacher of Boston, the brilliant author of the book upon which the photo-play is a man of "degenerate brain and sinful heart," "villainous" and "satanic." The eminent New York divine, Dr. Parkhurst, becomes in the choice language of the Rev. Thornton, a "kindred imp" and "scab of the cloth."

The same spirit is shown by the negroes in Boston that was manifested by the sponsors of the colored race who, in a recent interview with the President sought to insult the chief magistrate of the nation. If there was any other proof wanting of the wisdom of the decision of the Boston board of censorship in refusing to ban the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," it is afforded in the incendiary speech of the Rev. Thornton at the New England conference of the African Methodist Episcopal church.

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
JUNE 4, 1915

TURNS DOWN 2 REQUESTS FOR "BIRTH OF NATION"

Efforts were made by the managers of two Pittsfield theatres to present in their playhouses "The Birth of a Nation," but Mayor Faulkner said that he felt it was against the public welfare to display the films here and the attempt was abandoned. The conferences were held a week or so ago. Mayor Faulkner had received a number of protests from people who expressed the belief that there is enough unobjectionable entertainment available without staging that which gives offense to people of any race or color. While opinions might differ as to "The Birth of a Nation" and while the preponderance of opinion might favor its presentation, the mayor felt that in a case where controversy existed it was better to give an adverse decision and he did so. There was positively no objection while there was nothing to indicate a popular demand. The picture is based on "The Clansman" by Thomas Dixon and [illegible] months.

WALDEN (Mass.) MIRROR
JUNE 4, 1915

[illegible] may witness both entertainments without leaving their tables.

TREMONT THEATRE

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the east and the west. Los Angeles has enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than fifteen weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, the attendance is still enormous despite or because of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run is consequently in progress. Short runs falling off to almost nothing at the close have been the invariable rule with motion pictures hitherto. The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," however, with the wonderful added attraction of symphonic music and of clever mechanical effects, defies all precedent and promises to set longevity records for play runs of any sort in the various cities where it has been booked.

JUNE 12, 1915
MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)

State Censor Law Is Warded Off in Massachusetts

Carstens Bill Is Referred by Bay State Solons to Their Successors, Despite the Rushing Through of an Emergency Measure Providing Special Censors for the City of Boston—Film Men Will Wage Campaign of Education in the Press—Capital Censors Organize for Action

1877

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Boston, June 2.

MASSACHUSETTS motion picture interests have won their fight against a state-wide censorship law. The Carstens bill, urged by the State Federation of Women's Clubs and by all others who favor state supervision of what the public shall pay its money to see, has been referred to the next legislature.

When the Boston censor triumvirate law was passed last week, attention was immediately turned to the Carstens measure, which aimed to place supervision of films under the State Board of Labor and Industries. The opening skirmish came in the committee. Here was given a sign of ultimate victory for the film men, since it was voted to report "next general court" on the bill. That night the motion picture interests spent hours in gathering Senate support for their anti-censorship cause.

Next day this work bore good fruit, for the Senate first refused to postpone action on the measure, and then, by a vote of 20 to 10, adopted the committee report, ending censorship controversy in the legislature for this year at least.

Both Sides Prepare for Fight

"The Birth of a Nation," of course, was the foundation of nearly all the censorship disturbance in the Bay State this year. When the fight is resumed next year, the film men expect to make use of an aroused public sentiment, since they see the advantage of carrying on a campaign of education in the press. Further than this, they will have had the benefit of this year's skirmishing, and they will have learned with whom they have to deal on the other side of the question.

On the other hand, the State Federation of Women's clubs is not expected to sit back idle during the year. Another such report as its special committee made early this year may be expected again during the next year.

But meanwhile motion pictures in Massachusetts, outside of Boston, answer only to the National Board of Censorship when the question is asked: "Are you moral?" or "Will you offend the colored vote?"

Boston Mayor Will Clean All Shows

Boston's motion picture censor triumvirate has held its first meeting. The Pompey, Caesar and Crassus of the Hub's film world assembled last week in Mayor Curley's office, where, by unanimous vote of Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara and Chief Justice of the Municipal Court Wilfred Bolster, the mayor was made chairman of the board. The first business was consideration of the request for a hearing on "The Birth of a Nation," filed by leaders of the forces which pushed the censor bill through the legislature.

It was decided that each member of the board should witness the Griffith play before next Wednesday, when another meeting will be held and more definite announcement of the board's attitude toward the picture made. The censors will not see the picture in each other's company; they will view it one at a time.

Mayor Has No Mandatory Power

Another feature of Boston's attempt to clean up the whole amusement horizon was a meeting in the mayor's office today, attended by managers of all the amusement places in the city and representatives of several New York booking agencies. The mayor conducted the meeting not as a censor, but as mayor. In the issuing of amusement licenses by Chief Clerk John M. Casey, the approval of the Mayor is required.

Under the law he cannot order anything cut from a performance; he can only request. That's what he did today; and the big point in the list of requests he made for cleaning up shows in Boston is the fact that all classes of theatres are affected by those requests.

So-called legitimate houses, burlesque attractions and vaudeville bills, as well as motion pictures, were represented at the meeting, and managers of all the theatres promised to keep their shows as clean as possible. Until today the Bostonian could have heard stuff put across at the Old Howard and other burlesque houses whose equivalent on the picture screen would have stopped the film show. Now the burlesque and every show must be as clean as the motion picture play.

LESLIE H. ALLEN.

BOSTON CHRIS. SCIENCE MONITOR
JUNE 5, 1915

FILM PROTESTER ARRESTED

Allan W. Whaley, who has been conspicuous among the persons who have lingered about the Tremont theater since the censors dismissed the complaint against "The Birth of a Nation," was placed under arrest last evening while making an address without a permit.

BOSTON TRAVELER
JUNE 5, 1915

"Birth of Nation"—Tremont

The third month of D. W. Griffith's spectacular entertainment, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, began with the matinee performance today. The combination of historical-romantic pictures and lively synchronized music is extremely pleasing without being unduly taxing to the mind. The enormous magnitude of the production is perhaps as great a magnet as its wonderful artistic excellence. Mr. Griffith has succeeded in reproducing the high peaks of history and romance in a manner hitherto deemed impossible.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 5, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and the West. Los Angeles has enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than fifteen weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre, Boston the attendance is still enormous despite or because of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run is consequently in progress. Show runs falling off to almost nothing at the close have been the invariable rule with motion pictures hitherto. The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," however, with the wonderful added attraction of symphonic music and of clever mechanical effects, defies all precedent and promises to set longevity records for play runs of any sort in the various cities where it has been booked. This is because "The Birth of a Nation" is not a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history which are particularly interesting to Americans now on account of the threatened complications with a foreign power. Superadded to the history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, while the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. Indeed there are said to be no less than 200,000 details in the picture.

The great spectacle is being given twice daily at the Tremont Theatre except on Sundays. The patronage for June will include a great many out-of-town visitors, notably people who visit Boston for the college commencements and delegates to the various conventions that are to be held here this summer.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
JUNE 5, 1915

The Censorship Law May Not Be a Good Law, But IT IS THE LAW

THE colored people of Boston ought to pay great heed to Mr. Trotter's advice to be "VERY, VERY CAREFUL WHAT THEY DO." "The Birth of a Nation" is permitted to continue its exhibition by the authorities whom the law has constituted the ARBITRARY judges of moving picture shows in Boston.

The AMERICAN does not believe that it is a good law. No men ought to have ARBITRARY power over an important institution like the moving picture shows. Millions of dollars are invested in this business, and it almost seems that the arbitrary power given to these three men might be a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. In the case of "The Birth of a Nation," for example, it is alleged that half a million dollars was spent in preparing for its production. To suppress it arbitrarily upon the whim or caprice of two out of three men almost seems like confiscating property without just compensation or due process of law.

Our courts have not arbitrary power, neither has our Legislature. Arbitrary power is contrary to the genius of our country and our political institutions and our history. The Legislature itself is confined within constitutional limits. The courts are confined within their constitutional and statutory limits. The Governor and the administrative officers are confined within their constitutional and statutory limits. There is no branch of the government or officer of the government whose powers are not defined with as much particularity as is possible. All arbitrary power is capable of abuse. That is why we hate it. This particular arbitrary power over moving picture shows is almost sure, sooner or later, to be abused for partisan or corrupt purposes.

We can see the danger in the very first act of the new board. They have decided to permit the CONTINUANCE of "The Birth of a Nation" without giving the grounds upon which they base their decision. Under such circumstances they can SUPPRESS another exhibition exactly like it and have motives and reasons known only to themselves.

The AMERICAN does not criticise the new board for its action in this respect. They are acting within the law, which was badly drawn and which gives them the power that it is their duty to exercise. Like so many other things enacted by this careless and inefficient Legislature, whose stand-pat leaders have done nothing but play politics throughout the year, this law passed without thought of the future or of its larger consequences.

However, IT IS THE LAW, and the colored people would do well to respect it until they can get a chance to change it, if they are able. They object to some of the features of the exhibition because they allege that it falsely represents the colored people as lawless. Whether they are right or wrong about the play, it is certain that any exhibition of ACTUAL lawlessness now would do them infinitely more harm than a thousand plays like "The Birth of a Nation."

BIRTH OF A NATION.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" with this week's presentation at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, rounds out the final week of its second month in the Hub.

With no sign of abatement in the interest aroused by the daily performances of this big production the indications are that the piece will continue there for a record run as far as spring and summer theatrical offerings go in this section.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic protraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18 000 people visualizing a story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 3,000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is untolded.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the development of America and the final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world

---

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 5, 1915

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

LOWELL (Mass.)

...s the picture-play which angered the colored people of Boston has been satisfactorily revised, the censorial triumvirate will not revoke or suspend the license of the theatre in which it is shown. One or two objectionable features had already been cut out and a new one, showing Hampton Institute and its work, incorporated, and this made the film fit to receive the O. K. of the censors, which it did. Each of the three saw it as an individual and when they got together their favorable judgment was unanimous. This is a mighty good ad. for the picture in question.

LAWRENCE (Mass.) SUNDAY AMERICAN 4[illegible]
JUNE 5, 1915

...finding it difficult to put the "can" on the "Birth of a Nation" photo play. The new board of theatrical censorship in Boston, which consists of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, have been petitioned for a public hearing in the "Birth of a Nation" case. This board, the creation of which came after a long legislative fight growing out of opposition to the "Birth of a Nation," Wednesday gave its indorsement to the "Birth of a Nation," and said that the play should continue in Boston.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) HOMESTEAD
JUNE 5, 1915

A local motion-picture house wanted to exhibit "The Birth of a Nation" here. But Mayor Stacy "couldn't see it." And so we can't see it, either.

PITTSFIELD (Mass.) EAGLE
JUNE 5, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" in its expurgated form encounters much less objection than as it originally was. A Pittsfield man who recently witnessed a performance in Boston says that he considers the exhibition perfectly proper and one to which no intelligent negro ought to object. The state board of censorship has eliminated many of the objectionable features of the films and has added a fine list of pictures showing the progress of the negro race including the work done at Tuskegee institute in Tuskegee, Ala., of which Rev. Booker T. Washington, D. D., is president and at Hampton institute in Hampton, Va., of which Rev. H. B. Frissell, D. D., is president. The play is described as full of human [illegible] and highly instructive character.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 5, 1915

Third Month Of "Birth of A Nation"

Run Bids Fair to Break All Records [illegible]

...bird month of D. W. Griffith's ...dinary spectacular entertain... "The Birth of a Nation," begins ... performance today. The run ... ay bid fair to break all re... the respective cities where ... Angeles ... enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, ... York has had the attraction for ... fifteen weeks, and the ... Boston run is now in its ninth week. ... The spectacle is especially good ... either entertainment; the combination ... of historical-romantic pictures ... and lively synchronized music is extremely pleasing without being unduly taxing to the mind. Almost every visitor from out of town includes "The Birth of a Nation" in his or her amusement plans.

Secretaries of conventions that will be held here will do well to communicate with the management in case their members desire to see the play en masse. Several such representatives of different organizations have already written in to Mr. Schoefel for this purpose. The magnitude of the production is perhaps as great a magnet as its wonderful artistic excellence. Here at the Tremont Theatre ... of soldiers and squadrons of ... scenes, ... participate in the battles, the ... of legislative hall or historic ... in real crowds of spectators. Reconstruction mobs ... so ugly that it is hard ... one is merely looking

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 6, 1915

HEIRLOOM DRESS CAUSES $500 LOSS TO COMPANY

Worn by Miss Gish in One Scene of "The Birth of a Nation"—Whole Force Had to Wait While It Was Recovered from Dressmaker

Miss Lillian Gish.

A dress worn by Miss Lillian Gish, playing the role of Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," caused a loss of $500 to the producers of the film. It was an heirloom in her family, having been worn by her mother, a Springfield (O.) woman, at a ball that was broken up by Morgan's raiders. It was just the costume for the civil war scenes in which Miss Stoneman appears.

Miss Gish, playing the great Commoner's daughter Elsie, wore this dress in the scene where she visits the Little Colonel in the hospital. Making her exit, she caught the garment on a nail of the uprights supporting the scenery. She sent the dress out to be repaired. Four days later the scene of Elsie's visit to President Lincoln was about to be staged, and she had to wear the same dress. The dress did not come back. Messengers found the seamstress had moved, and nobody knew her address. Forty-eight hours elapsed before she was located. In the mean time the entire division of the company that was playing the domestic scenes of the life of Lincoln had to remain idle. Thus the dressmaker's tardiness cost "The Birth of a Nation" company $500.

The incident of the nail-torn dress might have been very much more expensive, however. For example, if it had become lost, all the previous scenes in which Miss Gish had appeared in this gown would have had to be retaken. The anomaly of walking out of the door in one costume and appearing on the other side of the door in another costume would not have been permitted. Remaking of the dress would not have done either, because there would have been some minor different details that would have been noticeable on the screen.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 6, 1915

People who have become interested in Lillian Gish, playing a prominent role in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont, may be told briefly that she was born in Springfield, O., and went on the stage at the tender age of 6. She was introduced to Mr. Griffith by Mary Pickford, but has really performed very little theatrical work. This is as far as the official biographer goes in his description of the attractive young woman who plays the piquant and volatile Elsie Stoneman. Unofficially one learns that Miss Gish recently refused an offer of more than $25,000 a year to leave Mr. Griffith's employ and become the star of a rival movie company.

One might think that these happy young players, rich, prosperous and dowered with all good gifts, would find their blessed isles or ultima thule right in Los Angeles, where the work and play of film-making go on. But such is not the case. Having created the art, they all want to go where the art is exhibited. With the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East, a general exodus from Los Angeles to New York and Boston started. Each player wants to be in "the push" of those looking at his or her particular style of beauty. Lillian Gish saw herself during the first night in New York and likewise during the first night at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. Her arrival and departure were not heralded by any flare of trumpets, attendance of a brass band or presence of a corps of able-bodied press agents. To star the player is not the policy of the Griffith Corporation. Among the others who were on the Eastern job of looking at themselves were Miriam Cooper, who plays Margaret Cameron, the Southern heroine, and Joseph Henabery, who plays the role of President Lincoln.

What a happy idea for a vacation! Just to do nothing at all but "traipse" around the country and look at yourself on a different screen in each big town and watch others looking at you, too. Nobody but a movie player can have this joy. Until the arrival of the motion picture it was impossible to divide our thousand personalities into as many parts and see one of the aforesaid valued personalities in each city. The wish of Robert Burns that some kindly gift would permit us to see ourselves as others see us has at last been realized.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 6, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"
Pictures at the Tremont

The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," with the wonderful added attraction of symphonic music and of clever mechanical effects, defies all precedent and promises to set a longevity record for play runs at the Tremont Theatre. "The Birth of a Nation" is not a photo play in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history.

Superadded to the history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, while the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. Indeed there are said to be no less than 200,000 details in the picture. Unlike the average comedy or emotional drama, it does not suffer from a second or a third seeing. On the contrary, the events stand out more grandly and the emotional power is, if anything, more intense. The great spectacle is being given twice daily, except on Sundays.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE 1915

Miss Florence L. MacCormack, a cousin of Helen Hale of "Woodland" fame, has been appointed press representative of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, succeeding Henry MacMahon, who has gone to open up the play in other cities. Miss MacCormack understudied Miss Hale (who later married William T. Hodge) in a principal role of "The Man from Now" at the Tremont Theatre in 1906. After her cousin's retirement from the stage she devoted herself to a business career. Miss MacCormack was formerly a pupil of Claire Munger and attained considerable success as a lyric soprano.

BEVERLY (Mass.) CITIZEN
JUNE 5, 1915

BOSTON THEATRE WEEK OF JUNE 7th.

The best obtainable in the world of films will be offered at the Boston Theatre the week of June 7th. Caroline B. Nichols and her Boston Fadettes, will offer a concert program before the regular performance. The great attraction will be the multiple reel production, "On the Night Stage" with W. S. Hart in the star role. Weber and Fields in a new comedy and Billy Reeves in a comedy success.

There will be a Mary Pickford romance and a Charlie Chaplin comedy, as well as the fifth installment of "The Goddess." There are 3,200 seats, and prices are 15 and 25 cents. Nothing higher. Continuous from 10 a. m. to 10:30 p. m., and up to noon all seats are only 15 cents.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 7, 1915

By E. F. Harkins

Not counting the two private exhibitions, one given for the municipal and newspaper critics and the other for the legislative standardizers of art and morals, the 100th presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, will take place tonight. The achievements of this prodigious production also include receipts exceeding $80,000, or an average of about $10,000 a week.

The hero of the photoplay, Henry B. Walthall, has been [illegible] Griffith productions for several years, but the latest news from Los Angeles is that he has left the Mutual Company to become leading man in Essanay productions.

Film Hero at the Tremont

Walthall, like Griffith, is a Southerner by birth. He made his stage debut with the Murray Hill Stock Company, in New York, shortly after the Spanish War. He responded to the first call for volunteers in that war, but got no farther than a camp at Jacksonville, where he was struck down by fever. After learning his dramatic A, B, C's in stock, he joined Henry Miller's company, and he continued on the so-called legitimate stage until seven years ago, when Griffith induced him to cast his lot with the movies. Griffith was then one of the Biograph directors. He followed Griffith over to the Mutual camp. "The best screen actor in America" was the compliment paid him the other day by one of Griffith's representatives.

Walthall's most recent impersonation under Griffith's direction, so far as the records show, was that of Oswald Alving, in Ibsen's "Ghosts," which seems to be the first of the Ibsen dramas to be filmed. Cyril Maude, as was noted in this column last week, is soon to appear [illegible] Ibsen play, "Peer Gynt."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 6, 1915

Acts Best with Hurt Feelings

Miriam Cooper, the dark-eyed girl who plays the part of Margaret Cameron in D. W. Griffith's photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, suddenly found that she could be an emotional actress only when her feelings were hurt and she began to cry. Miss Cooper was the exact type that the director needed to portray the role of a fiery Southern girl, but during the staging of the film it seemed almost impossible for Director Griffith to get her to display any facial emotion.

For several hours he scolded and pleaded with the young woman in the effort to get the expression of fear and horror into her face that was simply imperative for the characterization of the part. Finally Mr. Griffith was disgusted and said sharply to her: "Miss Cooper, I fear there is no use of your trying any more. You seem to be unable to register the right emotion and I don't believe that you will ever make a successful emotional motion picture actress." At this reprimand Miss Cooper began crying bitterly, as she had set her ambitions upon becoming a successful film star. While the young woman was crying Director Griffith gave a signal to the camera man, who began turning the crank on his machine and caught the entire action on the film. This was Miss Cooper's start in pictures, as previous to the production of "The Birth of a Nation" she had simply acted as extra at the studio. Since the incident Miss Cooper has had no trouble whatever in registering any emotional feeling that was [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 6, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" WINS.

Court Enjoins City of Chicago From Interfering With Production for Which Mayor Refused Permit.

CHICAGO, June 5—Producers of "The Birth of a Nation" today won their long fight for the right to have the pictures exhibited in Chicago theatres when Judge Cooper issued an injunction enjoining the city from interfering with the production. The court's order overruled the action of Mayor Thompson in refusing a permit.

Leading Chicago negroes severely condemn not only the photoplay but also the novel, "The Clansman," on which it is founded.

BOSTON (Mass.) [illegible]
JUNE 6, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and the West. Los Angeles has enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than fifteen weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre here the attendance is still enormous, despite or perhaps of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run is consequently in progress. Short runs falling off to almost nothing at the close have been the invariable rule with motion picture features hitherto. The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," however, with the wonderful added attractions of symphonic music and of clever mechanical effects, defies all precedent and promises to get longevity records [illegible] of any sort in [illegible] here it has been [illegible] of the picture [illegible] an engagement at the Broadway theatre. The Mayor said that no theatrical offering likely to offend [illegible] class of people will be permitted [illegible] in this city while he is Mayor.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 6, 1915

continuous from 10 A. M. to 11:30 P. M. Popular prices prevail.

Tremont Theatre

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and the West. Los Angeles has enjoyed 11 weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than 15 weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre here the attendance is still large, despite the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run. It is a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of vital points of American history. Added to the history is a delightful romance of the North and South. The patronage for June will include many out of town visitors.

CLIPPING FROM
BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUN 6 1915

David W. Grimth, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," rode 200 miles last week to [illegible] an hour's talk with a motion picture magnate. The journey was from Chicago to New York and back again, and the magnate was H. E. Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Company. The object of the conversation was to arrange definitely for the production of Mr Grimth's next great picture, which will deal with a sacred subject.

AN INTERESTING OUTCOME.

To say that the long fight over the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation" now being exhibited in Boston, has had an interesting issue is to put the case very mildly. The anti-climax is so pronounced that one is almost stunned by it.

If ever there was a piece of special legislation it was that which passed the legislature providing for a new board of censorship to have charge, in the city of Boston, of just such matters as this. The colored people of Boston agitated and agitated; the matter was taken up by the Legislature and dealt with partially according to common sense and partly as political advantage seemed to dictate. Various kinds of organizations passed resolutions on the matter which were duly forwarded to interested people. The result was a law which it was confidently expected by those who backed it would result in the stopping of this particular play.

But the board of censors meets, hears discussion on both sides, then goes into executive session, and unanimously decides that the play shall not be stopped. The men on the board, three of them, manifestly exercised their own judgment in the matter, and gave a decision which they believe to be in accord with the facts, whether it happens to be pleasing to portions of the people of Boston or not.

The net result is what? Why, a law which is manifestly useless for the purpose for which it was intended, and which was not at all necessary to stop any show which is indecent or likely in any way to injure the public morals. The new legislation imposed on Boston by the State legislature was apparently not needed, and is merely another instance of that bungling to which we have become thoroughly accustomed this last winter. The play itself has been well advertised and had a phenomenal run; people who have never thought of the character of the negro as that appeared during the reconstruction period have been looking into the matter, and have possibly found things which have created new prejudices in their minds. Abnormal sensitiveness on the part of the negro and meddlesomeness on the part of the legislature have merely made matters worse than before.

GLOUCESTER (Mass.) [illegible]
JUNE 5, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and the West. Los Angeles has enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than fifteen weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre, the attendance is still enormous despite or because of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run is consequently in progress. "The Birth of a Nation" is not a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history which are particularly interesting to Americans now on account of the threatened complications with a foreign power. Superadded to the history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, whilst the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail.

CHARLESTON (Mass.) [illegible]
JUNE 5, 1915

A Remarkable Presentation

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," is beginning the third month of its presentation at the Tremont theatre.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievment in dramatic portraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine eighteen thousand people visualizing a story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add three thousand horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is unfolded.

FIELD (Mass.) MORN. UNION
JUNE 7, 1915

IRTH OF A NATION."

he Mayor to Let This Film Be Shown in Springfield.

Editor of The Union.

It was with considerable interest read the Mayor's views on "The f a Nation" as given in your d paper. If His Honor follows policy as announced, I am sure be deprived of the movies altoas there is hardly a picture today that does not in some reflect or some profession, creed any attention paid to the protest liquor interests over the picture Barleycorn?" No! Do senators protest because, in the movie at least, they are depicted in nfavorable light? No! Did the ican Medical Society protest t "The Drug Terror" because it ted on certain members of the al profession? Again no. Yet ese things have been pictured be- the sensitive eyes of cultured gfield audiences, and if we have race riots or bloodshed or agita- of any kind they have not reachthe columns of the newspapers.

is unlike the Mayor to pass judg- on any protest on hearsay. Mayacy has not seen the picture which condemns wholeheartedly, and k that is the reason why he has rom Springfield. The writer has the picture twice, and would like have his family see it in Springfield s a wonderful production, historiy correct, and tells more of history ring the reconstruction period than be learned from a book in two ks. I am sure that the only effect picture had on me was to inspire with patriotism. I was conscious no desire to massacre or in any y show hatred toward the Negro e.

Granted that the picture depicts the icked Negro carpet bagger, it does t leave out his white confederate his is not a perfect world and the hat the reconstruction period can- be truthfully pictured in a rosy e of glory is impossible. "The Birth a Nation" is vividly true and if it rts, the cause can be laid directly the door of truth.

Mayor Curley of Boston has always ppealed to me as possessed of a discriminating judicial temperament, and e fact that he has before censored bjectionable films and at the same me has promulgated rigid rules for e purifying of amusement enterprises, akes his approval of "The Birth of a ation," together with two other prominent public officials, a criterion to be ecognized. I say let "The Birth of a ation" come to Springfield and we ill be better for it.

MOVIE FAN.

Springfield, June 6, 1915.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER
June 5, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

oston bids fair to equal or exceed extremely long runs of "The Birth a Nation" in the East and the Los Angeles has enjoyed ven weeks of the play, New York had the attraction for no less than een weeks, while at the Tremont eatre, the attendance is still enorus despite or because of the fact at the play has turned into its third nth and the ninth week of the run consequently in progress. "The rth of a Nation" is not a feature in ordinary sense, but a mighty panma and pictorial exposition of the et vital points of American history hich are particularly interesting to mericans now on account of the reatened complications with a reign power. Super-added to the tory is a delightful love romance of e North and South, whilst the whole lit up and made fascinating by Mr iffith's remarkable gift of quiet mor and keen eye for the slightest gnificant detail.

BROOKLINE
JUNE 5, 1915

week, beginning Monday June 7.

TREMONT THEATRE.

The filmed spectacle of "The Birth a Nation," with the wonderful addattraction of symphonic music and clever mechanical effects, defies all recedent and promises to set longerv records for play runs of any sort the various cities, where it has en booked. This is because, "The rth of a Nation" is not a feature in e ordinary sense, but a mighty norama and pictorial exposition of e most vital points of American story which are particularly interting to Americans now on account the threatened complications with foreign pow

LYNN (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 5, 1915

AN INTERESTING OUTCOME.

To say that the long fight over the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation" now being exhibited in Boston, has had an interesting issue is to put the case very mildly. The anti-climax is so pronounced that one is almost stunned by it.

If ever there was a piece of special legislation it was that which passed the Legislature providing for a new board of censorship to have charge, in the city of Boston, of just such matters as this. The colored people of Boston agitated and agitated; the matter was taken up by the Legislature and dealt with partially according to common sense and party as political advantage seemed to dictate. Various kinds of organizations passed resolutions on the matter which were duly forwarded to interested people. The result was a law which it was confidently expected by those who backed it would result in the stopping of this particular play.

But the board of censors meets, hears discussion on both sides, then goes into executive session, and unanimously decides that the play shall not be stopped. The men on the board, three of them, manifestly exercised their own judgment in the matter, and gave a decision which they believe to be in accord with the facts, whether it happens to be pleasing to portions of the people of Boston or not.

The net result is what?

Why, a law which is manifestly useless for the purpose for which it was intended, and which was not at all necessary to stop any show which is indecent or likely in any way to injure the public morals.

The new legislation imposed on Boston by the State Legislature was apparently not needed, and is merely another instance of that bungling to which we have become thoroughly accustomed this last winter. The play itself has been well advertised and had a phenomenal run; people who have never thought of the character of the negro as that appeared during the reconstruction period have been looking into the matter, and have possibly found things which have created new prejudices in their minds. Abnormal sensitiveness on the part of the negro and meddlesomeness on the part of the Legislature have merely made matters worse, than before.

BROOKL

coolness and audacity.

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation," which contains nothing that deserves to be censored, will begin the ninth week of its Boston run on Monday. The pictures continue to crowd the theatre through the attraction of their historical interest and scenic beauty. The realistic war scenes, the ante bellum Southern color, the incidents of Reconstruction, and the great displays of men and of horses in the rides of the Ku Klux clansmen of that period produce a spectacular and truly beautiful effect. Charming and artistically appropriate incidental music accompanies the admirable production.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 6, 1915

as shown.

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues its extraordinary run at the Tremont Theatre. The favorable decision of the new Censor Board last Wednesday again brought the play forcibly to the public attention. The story takes up the theme of national growth from the introduction of slavery, 300 years ago, to the struggle between the North and the South and the troubles of reconstruction, and its final course shows the wonderful advances made by the ex-slaves in their 40 years' progress since reconstruction times.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
June 8, 1915

ARREST PROTESTANTS OF "BIRTH OF NATION"

Three Women and Five Men Are Charged With Loitering

Three negro women and five men were arrested last night by the police of the Lagrange st. station charged with sauntering and loitering about the Tremont Theatre, where the "Birth of the Nation" is playing, and a detail of 60 patrolmen, five sergeants and four mounted officers were on hand to prevent trouble from a crowd of more than 100 men, women and children who walked up and down in front of the theatre during the performance.

The first notification that the police received that trouble was imminent was when the manager of the Tremont Theatre called police headquarters and asked for an assignment of patrolmen. Capt. Garland of police headquarters immediately ordered men from all the in-town stations to duty outside the theatre.

When the police arrived a gathering was parading quietly up and down the street.

Arrests were made of those who are said to have made themselves obnoxious by marching up in front of the theatre door, turning about on the sidewalk and crowding pedestrians into the street.

At the station house they were bailed out, each being held on $100 bond to appear before the municipal court this morning.

Those arrested gave the names of Evelyn B. Washington, 7 Sterling st., Roxbury; Raven M. Jones, 34, 38 Cunard st., Roxbury; Mrs. Estelle E. Hill, 36, 309 Columbus ave.; James H. Kingsley, 47, 8 Trumbull st.; Carl T. Pinn, 22, 80 Gayhead st., Jamaica Plain; Jack Johnson, 33, 42 Hammond st., Roxbury; Augustus Granville, 45, 10 Hammond st.; Jane Posey, 35, 65 Ruggles st., Roxbury.

BOSTON (Mass.) GLOBE
JUNE 6, 1915

presenting an attractive stage picture.

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues its prosperous run at the Tremont Theatre.

The favorable decision of the new Censor Board last Wednesday again brought the play forcibly to the public attention. Hundreds of letters have come in to the management from local and out of town patrons congratulating them on the verdict for "The Birth of a Nation."

The story takes up the theme of National growth, from the introduction of slavery 300 years ago to the awful struggle between the North and the South and the troubles of reconstruction, and its final course shows the wonderful advances made by the ex-slaves in their 40 years' progress since reconstruction times.

BOSTON (Mass.)

Verdict on "Birth of a Nation"

Popular One as Shown by Attendance and Letters

Having outlived all other dramatic entertainments in the city, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues its extraordinary run at the Tremont Theatre. The favorable decision of the new Censor Board last Wednesday again brought the play forcibly to the public attention.

The overwhelming majority of Bostonians, and indeed of New Englanders generally, acquiesced in the decision. This was well illustrated when an opponent of the play started to harangue on the Common the other night, and his attempted reflections on the Censor Board were drowned out by a volley of cheers for Mayor Curley, the chairman of that board.

Hundreds of letters have come in to the management from local and out-of-town patrons congratulating them on the verdict for "The Birth of a Nation." The story takes up the theme of national growth from the introduction of slavery 300 years ago to the [illegible] struggle between the [illegible]th, and the troubles of reconstruction, and its final course shows the wonderful advances made by the ex-slaves in their [illegible] years' progress since reconstruction times.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.)
JUNE 8

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to get a new hold here and there. A judge of the superior court at Chicago has now granted a temporary injunction restraining the mayor and chief of police from interfering with the notorious picture play. It should be some antidote to have the fact generally known that Dixon, who wrote the play and the book from which it was made, is not representative of the fair-minded southerners in his attitude toward the Negro. His habitual unfairness should be as notorious as his play.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 8, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" VERDICT IS APPLAUDED

Having outlived all other dramatic entertainments in the city, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues its extraordinary run at the Tremont Theatre. The favorable decision of the new censor board has again brought the play forcibly to the public attention. The management has received many letters congratulating it on the verdict.

The story takes up the theme of national growth from the introduction of slavery 300 years ago to the struggle between the North and the South and the troubles of Reconstruction, and in its final course shows the progress made by the negroes since Reconstruction times.

The big historical scenes, the love romance, the comedy and the fascinating musical accompaniment constitute a remarkable all-around attraction.

BOSTON (Mass.)

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of the Nation" continues at the Tremont Theatre, where large audiences are still the rule. This massive picture drama of the Civil War and reconstruction days is doubtless the biggest motion picture production ever made.

BOSTON (Mass.)
JUNE 8, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its ninth week at the Tremont Theatre. The audiences continue large and enthusiastic. Besides the spectacular merits of the photo-play, a charming romance of the North and South holds the attention of the audience.

BOSTON (Mass.)

The "Birth of a Nation"

To the Editor of The Record:

The decision of the Commission on the "Movies" in regard to the "Birth of a Nation" picture show was I think just, but as it seems to be final, I hope the colored population will use no force to make their protest more emphatic.

It appears to me the Commission is not justified in perpetuating this race prejudice.

If the Jews as a race should protest against the Jewish slang used in vaudeville performances I think they should be heard and the performance stopped; but as they do not protest there is no need of any interference.

If the Irish as a people should protest against the comic portrayal of a typical Irishman in vaudeville, I think it should be stopped; but they make no protest, hence no need of interference. But the colored population do protest against a performance or a picture show prejudicial to their race, and as an excitant and growing factor in the race problem it should not be continued, but stopped before it gets beyond control.

The "Merchant of Venice," I think the most interesting and the most skilful in its make-up of all of Shakespeare's plays. I admire its performance under skilful performers, but it is decidedly prejudicial as a take-off of the Jew, although I don't think it is a just representation of the Jews as a class. They are, in my opinion, as honorable a people as any we have among us, but if they protested against it as prejudicial to their race, eliminate it by all means.

Let us have no race prejudice endangering the harmony and peace of our Republic.

I don't think Mayor Curley is wise in deciding in any way keeping up this race prejudice when it could be so easily eliminated.

The better way for the colored population to operate is to combine together in their voting precincts and vote only for such candidates as will use their efforts in purging from our midst any and all race prejudice threatening the peace here and everywhere in our land.

L. S. Richards.

Marshfield Hills, June 7.

BOSTON GLOBE

FILM PROTESTORS ARRESTED

Five men and three women, all negroes, were arrested Monday evening in front of the Tremont theater on the charge of obstructing the sidewalk. They were protesting against continued performance of the photo drama, "The Birth of a Nation," by walking up and down in front of the lobby of the theater.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 8, 1915

EIGHT ARRESTED AT THEATRE

Negroes Make Another Demonstration Outside the Tremont

Half a hundred negroes, marching in pairs, passed back and forth in front of the Tremont Theatre last evening in a new form of protest against "The Birth of a Nation." They caused some excitement and attracted a crowd but lost much of their enthusiasm when eight of their number, five men and three women, were arrested for sauntering, loitering or obstructing the sidewalk. All were bailed within a quarter of an hour of their arrest, by Dr. John B. Hall, a negro, who lives at 60 Windsor street, Roxbury.

About eighty policemen, including four mounted officers, were on duty in or near the theatre. Superintendent Crowley was on hand and on hearing that negroes were gathering in Park square he hurried over there in time to hear Adan W. Whaley, who is awaiting trial for creating a disturbance on the Common last Friday evening, urging some negroes to "be on hand tomorrow night." The superintendent gave Whaley some advice and warned him not to have any additional charges brought against him. The police are of the opinion that the leaders in last night's demonstration remained in Park square and issued their orders. Half a dozen orderly negroes were included in the audience in the theatre.

Those arrested were Evaland B. Washington, aged twenty-six, of 77 Sterling street, Roxbury; James H. Kingsley, forty-seven, of 8 Trumbull street, South End; Carl T. Prinn, twenty-two, of Gay Head street, Roxbury; Jacob Johnson, thirty-three, of 42 Hammond street, Roxbury; Augustus Granville, forty-five, of 53 Hammond street, Roxbury; Mrs. Estelle E. Hill, thirty-six, of 309 Columbus avenue; Mrs. Raven W. Jones, thirty-four, of 38 Cunard street, Roxbury, and Mrs. Jane W Posey, thirty-five, of 65 Ruggles street, Roxbury

All the defendants were arraigned before Judge Duff in the Municipal Court this morning. They entered pleas of not guilty and the cases were continued until Thursday.

BOSTON

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 8, 1915

EST NEGROES AR FILM PLAY

Take Eight on Loitering arges During "Prom- enade" Protest.

omenade" protest against the ay, "The Birth of a Nation," in e Tremont Theatre last sulted in eight Negroes being on charges of sauntering, lit- and obstructing the sidewalk. In d fours, more than 100 of them d back and forth along Tremont between Avery and Boylston Several hundred other persons d across the street.

rious did the situation appear at ief Supt. Crowley of the police ment excused himself from a t and hurried down town. With coat over his evening clothes he harge and under his direction 50 men and four mounted policemen ted gatherings in front of the ducted, the police say, by leaders made their headquarters in Park e, and kept away from the blue- the Negroes filed slowly in front theatre entrance as patrons passed e corridors. They talked among elves, but utterly ignored the po- en, who watched them every min- The protest party appeared to be nformed on the breadth of the new ering law," for after staying in icinity of the theatre for six min- or thereabouts, they crossed to the non and returned again after a time.

Three Women Arrested

land B. Washington, 26, of 77 g street lingered more than the minutes of grace the new ord- e allows, according to the police. was arrested and taken to the La- ge street station. Soon after t. Anderson arrested James H. aley of 8 Trumbull street on a rge of obstructing the sidewalk. He lleged to have stopped longer than others in making a turn and several estrians are said to have had to go und him.

t short intervals afterwards, others the protest parade were arrested on ntering and loitering charges. They e their names and addresses as: ob Johnson, 47 Hammond street; ustus Granville, 53 Hammond street; Pinn, 50 Gayhead street, Jamaica in; Miss Raven W. Jones, 238 Ken- d street, Roxbury; Mrs. Estelle E. ll, 309 Columbus avenue and Mrs. ne W. Posey, an elderly widow of 65 ggies street.

Bail Commissioner Joseph A. Craw- rd, a Negro attorney, arrived at the agrage street station after the first ests were made. Dr. John B. Hall 60 Windsor street, Roxbury, a Negro ysician went bondsman. The prison- s were released in bail of $100 each quickly as they were booked.

Hearing that W. Monroe Trotter, edit- of the Guardian, and Allen F. Whal- , another leader in the protest against e photo-play, were in Park square di- ting the "promenade protest," Supt. rowley walked over there. When he ached Park square and Boylston reet, Editor Trotter is said to have en saying good-night to several Ne- roes and urging them to be "on hand" night.

Crowley Warns Whaley.

Supt. Crowley found Mr. Whaley anding near the monument in Park quare. "You and Mr. Trotter are re- ponsible for those eight persons being rrested tonight," said the police super- ntendent. "You have been sending hem over there to walk up and down nd get arrested."

Mr. Whaley denied that he had dvised any persons to march in front of the theatre, but admitted that he ad talked with several who "went right over there." He was told by the superintendent that he had not better get mixed up in the affair. "You know you are in court Thurs- day on this affair already," said Supt. Crowley, "you wouldn't want to have to face additional charges."

Just before the theatre closed, Mayor Curley, Mrs. Curley and friends passed in front of the theatre in a limousine. The mayor reached his arm out of a window of the machine and waved to Supt. Crowley, who bowed in return. As the crowd poured out of the theatre, two of the mounted policemen rode their horses upon the Tremont street mall, forcing those who had gathered, hoping for excitement, to fall back to the Com- mon. There was no disturbance, how- ever.

There were half a dozen Negroes in the audience at the photo-play, but they were orderly. Twenty or more plain clothes men were seated in the balcony and floor. Two patrolmen were left on guard about the theatre all night.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 8, 1915

ARREST EIGHT OF OBJECTORS

Protest Against "The Birth of a Nation."

Large Number Take Part in the Demonstration Near Theatre.

Three Women Among Those Taken Into Custody.

Five men and three women were arrested last night near the Tremont Theatre on charges of sauntering and loitering. They were taken at different times from the march of the "objectors," which lasted from shortly before 9 o'clock until the spectators were leaving the theatre.

Those arrested were Eveland B. Washington, aged 26, of 77 Sterling st, Roxbury; James H. Kingsley, 47, of 8 Trumbull st, South End; Carl T. Prinn, 22, of Gay Head st, Roxbury; Jacob Johnson, 22, of 42 Hammond st, Roxbury; Augustus Granville, 45, of 53 Hammond st, Roxbury; Mrs Estelle E. Hill, 26 of 309 Columbus av; Mrs Raven W. Jones, 24, of 23 Cunard st, Roxbury, and Mrs Jane W. Posey, 35, of 65 Ruggles st, Roxbury.

Washington and Kingsley were arrested by Sergt Anderson of the Lagrange-st Station shortly after 9, and about 20 minutes later the three other men were taken into custody. The women were warned and finally arrested about 10 o'clock. Dr John B. Hall of 60 Windsor st, Roxbury, furnished bail for the prisoners and they were released.

The excitement began about 8:45 when 60 negroes, a majority of them women, formed in pairs and paraded up and down Tremont st in front of the theatre. This was continued more than an hour, the arrests, it seemed, curbing the boldness of the marchers to some extent. Later the marching was confined to the Common.

Sergts King and Anderson of Division 4 and Sergt Ivers of Division 2 were on the easterly side of Tremont st and Sergt Clarke of Division 2 and O'Dea of Division 4 on the Common. More than 50 policemen were on duty and they kept the negroes moving.

In making the turns the police alleged that the marchers were technically violating the law in that they were temporarily obstructing the passage of pedestrians. As the arrests were being made there was a great deal of excitement and some of the negroes stopped parading and followed those taken into custody to the Lagrange-st Station. There were 200 hundred persons outside the station and a crowd collected at Tremont and Boylston sts.

About 10:30 four mounted patrolmen from the Back Bay Station rode their horses on the Mall of the Common, driving everybody away from the subway entrances. Inside the theatre were many plain clothes men, who kept the colored patrons under close surveillance.

Supt Crowley, who was told that W. Monroe Trotter and Allan W. Whaley, two negro leaders, were in Park sq, hurried over and claims that he found Whaley recruiting negroes to join the marching forces on Tremont st. The superintendent said that as he stepped up behind Whaley he heard him urging an elderly negro to go over to Tremont st and join the others.

Supt Crowley reminded Whaley that he was awaiting trial Thursday on a charge of addressing a meeting on the Common without a permit and told him that he was partly to blame for the arrest of the eight people. He told Whaley he would better be careful and he replied that he had done nothing wrong. He had no conversation with Trotter, who told a reporter afterward that he did not know what was going on.

A negro whose name could not be obtained did not recognize Supt Crowley and in his presence remarked that a few sticks of dynamite would terminate the photoplay quicker than any demonstration. He heard something from Supt Crowley, too.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 8, 1915

PHOTO PLAY OPPONENTS ARRESTED

5 Men and 3 Women Taken on Street in Front of Tremont

Five men and three women were arrested in front of the Tremont Theatre last evening. Many colored people had gathered near the theatre to protest the "Birth of a Nation" film by walking up and down in front of the theatre. Those arrested were charged with sauntering and loitering and obstructing the sidewalk.

There was but little excitement when the police made the arrests, but a large detail of policemen, including mounted officers, was called to disperse the crowd that congested the sidewalk and street in the vicinity. All of those arrested were colored.

HURRIES TO THEATRE

They were Eveland B. Washington of 77 Sterling street, Roxbury; James H. Kingsly of 8 Trumbull street; Carl T. Pinn of Gay Head street, Jamaica Plain; J. K. Johnson of 42 Hammond street; Augustus Granville of 53 Hammond street; Miss Raven W. Jones of 23 Cunard street, Roxbury; Mrs. Estelle E. Hill of 309 Columbus avenue and Mrs. Jane W. Posey of 65 Ruggles street. All were bailed out by Dr. John B. Wall.

Police Commissioner Crowley, who was attending the Ancients' dinner, hastened to the theatre in the Mayor's automobile and talked with Professor Whaley, one of the colored leaders. W. Monroe Trotter and Professor Whaley were not near the theatre when the arrests were made. They said that they thought it lawful for people to walk up and down the street to lodge a legal and lawful protest against the film play.

Early in the evening scores of colored people were noticed walking up and down Tremont street in front of the theatre. There was a police detail on hand and finally the officers placed eight under arrest and took them to the Lagrange street station. Everything was quiet, but the officers kept the crowd moving and prevented any loitering.

When the theatre emptied out the mounted officers pushed the crowd back to allow those coming from the theatre to have plenty of room on the sidewalks.

W. Munroe Trotter said he did not know anything about the demonstration, but believed that it did not constitute a violation of the city ordinances to walk up and down the street. The eight who were arrested will appear in the City Police Court this morning.

Enterprise Mailbag Press
June 9, 1915

Boston bids fair to equal or excel the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and the West, short runs falling off to almost nothing at the close have been the invariable rule with motion pictures hitherto. The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," however, with the wonderful added attraction of symphonic music and of clever mechanical effects, defies all precedent and promises to set longevity records for play runs of any sort in the various cities where it has been booked. This is because "The Birth of a Nation" is not a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history which are particularly interesting to Americans now on account of the threatened complications with a foreign power. Super-added to the history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, whilst the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. Indeed there are said to be no less than 200,000 details in the picture. Many of those who attended the play early in the run are coming back to see it again. Unlike the average comedy or emotional drama, it does not suffer from a second or a third seeing. On the contrary, the events stand out more grandly and the emotional power is, if anything, more intense. The great spectacle is being given twice daily at the Tremont theatre except on Sundays. The patronage for June will include a great many out-of-town visitors, notably people who visit Boston for the college comencements and delegates to the various conventions that are to be held there this summer.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 9, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Boston bids fair to equal or exceed the extremely long runs of "The Birth of a Nation" in the East and the West. Los Angeles has enjoyed eleven weeks of the play, New York has had the attraction for no less than fifteen weeks, while at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, the attendance is still enormous despite or because of the fact that the play has turned into its third month and the ninth week of the run is consequently in progress. Short runs falling off to almost nothing at the close have been the invariable rule with motion pictures hitherto. The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," however, with the wonderful added attraction of symphonic music and of clever mechanical effects, defies all precedent and promises to set longevity records for play runs of any sort in the various cities where it has been booked. This is because "The Birth of a Nation" is not a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history which are particularly interesting to Americans now on account of the threatened complications with a foreign power. Super-added to the history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, whilst the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. Indeed there are said to be no less than 200,000 details in the picture.

The great spectacle is being given twice daily at the Tremont Theatre except on Sundays. The patronage for June will include a great many out of town visitors, notably people who visit Boston for the college commencements and delegates to the various conventions that are to be held here this summer.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST

PROTESTS AGAINST ACCEPTING DEFEAT

William D. Brigham, secretary of the Wendell Phillips Memorial Association, has sent the following letter to the Post:

OPPOSING PLAY

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—I want to express my dissent from the advice given by my friend and fellow-worker, J. Mott Hallowell, in an open letter to the colored citizens of Greater Boston and published in last week's Post. The advice to "rise superior to defeat and by your daily lives and example of good citizenship give the lie to your traducers" is all very well, but it does not stop the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," now being given twice a day at the theatre. What is the matter with leading a good life and opposing the play at the same time?

He also says: "Never begin a fight until you have cooled off." This would not seem to apply here, as the fight was not begun by the colored people, who were engaged in their usual occupations, until this play was brought to Boston. The 200 police reserves and 60 plain clothes men who were present a few weeks ago were summoned by the theatre people; not by the colored people. The opposition to the play has been continued for eight or nine weeks, during which time there has been ample opportunity to warm up and cool off several times.

Struggle for Nine Weeks

Mr. Hallowell also says: "The real struggle for you is not the struggle against this film. The latter is merely an episode in a race epoch. The real struggle is that of a race seking its way out of bondage.' I do not agree with him. The only struggle we have known about, many of us, the last nine weeks, has been the endeavor to have this film supressed. The returning of Anthony Burns, the fugitive slave, was only an episode in a race epoch, and yet it brought out considerable opposition. I think the race came out of bondage 50 years ago, through the efforts of such men as Mr. Hallowell's uncle, who commanded the Fifty-fifth Colored Regiment, and his father, who recruited the colored troops. I know some of the questions now involved are upon a far larger arena than the small stage of the theatre. Many of us feel sure that the management desires the indorsement of abolition in Boston that it may be quoted in other cities.

The colored race has already amassed $700,000,000 worth of property in this country, and representatives of it are in every branch of life. The colored race is suffering at the present time from prejudice, and not from bondage. It does not seem to me, to advise the colored American citizens to accept defeat and lead good daily lives, is the only way or always the best way to fight evil. Dr. Arnold of Rugby used to say that he not only wanted more boys that loved God, but he wanted also those that hated the devil. If a person is unjustly accused and he has no means at hand to clear himself, it may be best for him to live down by a good life the wrong done him. It is always easiest to work along the lines of least resistance.

I do not think we can expect to have a play like this, created by two Southern men, neither of whom is a citizen of Boston, brought to this city without making some trouble. Sin is always a trouble maker, both with nations and individuals, and when a wrong is done a race and they are vilified as they are in this play, it is not always possible to have everything perfectly calm.

I call attention to the fact that the Mayor's censor passed this play in its original form. One would think from his indorsement of it that it was as sweet and pure as a drop of morning dew on the petals of a June rose, and a particularly fine thing for school children to see, but against this we have the opinion of Judge Dowd that if the rape scene of Gus, the renegade negro, were not eliminated within 24 hours, he would issue a warrant for the arrest of the theatre manager.

At a two-hour meeting a week or so ago in the Mayor's office, when all the theatre managers of the city were present, one of the ministers present handed the Mayor several sheets of typewritten vulgar jokes, which had been gathered during the preceding week from the theatres of this city, and the Mayor handed the paper back, saying: "They are too filthy for me to read. Read it yourself." This shows how little the censorship of plays amounts to by the city's official censor.

I am not unmindful of the Scriptural quotations of Mr. Hallowell. I recall the title given the Prince of Peace, and the benediction of the angels over the starlit plains of Bethlehem at his birth, when they sang, "On Earth Peace," but I remember that he also said, "I came on earth not to send peace but a sword."

After nine weeks of agitation against this play, with many hearings before the Mayor, the Governor, both branches of the Legislature, the judiciary committee, in Faneuil Hall and in most of the colored churches, many of us are not willing quietly to accept defeat and to drop the matter. It seems to me that 25,000 colored citizens of Boston can live good daily lives and be good citizens and still continue the agitation against it. If this is not done, I am afraid when the play goes to other cities Boston will be quoted as having indorsed it without the faintest breath of opposition.

I call attention to the fact that I have used no stronger word and suggested nothing stronger than agitation.

It is true the play has been vindi-

[illegible] by three people and condemned least [illegible] ...ld the colored people will get their ...hts and privileges when they de- ...ve them. They have been strug- ...g manfully for 50 years. Isn't it ...out time to pay some regard to ...m? Some people seem to think that only persons having rights in this ...e are the proprietors of the thea- ... It has been said that freedom of ...ech would be curtailed if the play ...e suppressed. How can there be ... freedom of speech when not a ...d is spoken during the entire photo- ...y. WILLIAM D. BRIGHAM. Dorchester, June 9.

MARKET BAROMETER

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 10, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" reached its 20th performance in New York yesterday. In Chicago this much discussed photoplay is being shown under the protection of an order from court secured by the producers after their controversy with Mayor Thompson.

Mr. Griffith "built a Southern city for the Piedmont, S. C., scenes in 'The Birth of a Nation,'" according to one of the notices sent out from the Tremont Theatre. "This showed the old-fashioned Southern house with brick sidewalks, hitching-posts, lamp-posts and big street drinking pumps that were in use during the Civil War period. At the beginning of the war the city was bright and cheerful. It was necessary later to show this city at the close of the war. Blades of grass were transplanted and placed between the bricks in the sidewalk. The fences were partly blackened with charcoal. Sections of the town were burned. No opportunity was overlooked to give the place a desolate appearance. Comparing the antebellum scenes of Piedmont with those of 1865, the spectator of Mr. Griffith's film realizes the ravages of war as vividly as if he were looking at pictures of the Belgium campaign."

BOSTON

Fined $5 in "Birth of a Nation" Case

Allen W. Whalley of Winslow street, who was arrested during a disturbance outside Tremont Theatre over the "Birth of a Nation," appeared in court today charged with delivering a speech on Boston Common without a permit. Mr. Whalley admitted being on the Common opposite the theatre, but said his "speech" consisted of answering some questions which somebody asked him. Judge Carpenter fined him $5, which he paid.

MILFORD (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 10, 1915

"TOO PROUD TO FIGHT."

Recently there was presented in Milford a moving picture that should have stirred as much of a rumpus among a certain set of people as "The Birth of a Nation" has kicked up among the colored population. To give a clue as to the offensive calibre of the film in question it is only necessary to indicate that the chief lesson it inculcated comes under a phrase that has been conspicuous of late: "Too proud to fight." During the early acts of the photo play two lovesick swains figure as suitors for the hand of a lovely maiden. As the story runs, one of the lovers is exceedingly bellicose and "leaves no stone unturned" to arouse the fighting instinct of his rival. The latter, however, disregards all the hostile advances and so falls into disfavor in the eyes of the inamorata, and is repulsed by her as a coward.

Ever since President Wilson made his ringing address in Philadelphia on the eve of sending his epoch-making note on the Lusitania horror to the Kaiser, one of its phrases, "too proud to fight," has rolled on scornful tongues with great gusto. How many have leered at the unique idiom cannot be estimated, but the jollying in this town has not been confined to Exchange street workmen. In view of the shower of derision that has deluged the "too-proud-to-fight" address, it is passing strange that the film disseminating that doctrine should have been permitted to have smooth sailing.

But especially irritating is the moral pointed by the picture. In the closing scenes it develops that the too-proud-to-fight suitor sprouts the wings of a hero and rescues the maiden, at the risk of his life, from the jaws of the fire fiend, while the cantankerous fellow turns coward and flees in disgrace from the burning structure. What could be more exasperating to scoffers at the President's banmot than to have the silent drama idealize the too-proud-to-fight idea in human form, and then to immortalize him as the highest type of a hero!

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT

NEGRO PROTESTER FINED

Allen W. Whaley, a Leader in "The Birth of a Nation" Agitation, Pays $5

Allen W. Whaley, who says he is a professor and who has been one of the prime movers in the negro protest against "The Birth of a Nation," appeared in the Municipal Court today, on a continued case, and paid a fine of $5 for speaking on the Common without a permit on June 4. He pleaded not guilty.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD
JUNE 9, 1915

COMMITTEE'S PROTEST.

READ BY E. B. JOURDAIN ON PICTURE, "THE NIGGER."

Tells Why Presentation of the Picture Based on the Story Was Opposed—Mayor's Attitude Commended.

At a meeting of the committee of citizens that opposed the presentation of the photo-play "The Nigger," in this city, E. B. Jourdain read the following paper last evening:

OUR PROTEST.

In common with all fair minded citizens of New Bedford we are gratified at the fair but decisive manner in which Mayor Hathaway upheld the dignity of his office and served notice that a public license does not bestow the right to defame or insult any class of citizens and that a decree of the chief magistrate must be respected.

Numerous comments and inquiries make it apparent that some citizens do not comprehend the reason for our protesting the picture film, and as the justness of our objection has been impugned we owe it to all concerned to make public our position. There is also a misstatement affecting me personally which I wish to correct: viz—Both an evening paper and the morning paper have quoted Manager Lefebvre as referring to me as his lawyer. I am not and never have been Mr. Lefebvre's lawyer. The only connection I ever had with him was that I started the opposition to this picture: Secured the support of certain eminent citizens: And went with a delegation of colored business men to the mayor and asked that the film be barred because of certain defamatory scenes. At the mayor's suggestion we communicated with Mr. Lefebvre and as a result suspended action until the picture could be shown privately. May 30th the film was exhibited to the mayor and the committee, and it was agreed that, if certain scenes were eliminated and the name changed, the objection would be withdrawn. Mayor Hathaway unequivocally declared the name must be changed, and also that an agreement must be reached between the management and committee concerning the portions to be eliminated. An amicable agreement was reached, and then Mr. Lefebvre stated that his press notice would not go out until Thursday and he needed a little time to select a new name and arrange his advertising, and that he would inform us Tuesday, June 1, what name he had chosen. He said that in some places where the name was changed to the "New Governor" the former name also was given. We told him that would be just as offensive as the original form.

Mr. Lefebvre admitted that he knew when he booked the play, the name had been objected to in many places, and that he anticipated it might be here, which was the reason for the early announcement. The discussion was courteous on both sides and we parted amicably. We have not received any communication from Mr. Lefebvre since. But every person who saw the posters, of all sizes and shapes, flaunting the opprobrious epithet from the bill boards of the city, and those who read the advertized announcement detailing the change (?) of name, know how farcial, how insultingly ridiculous, was the pretence of keeping faith with the mayor and committee. A more barefaced intent to coin race prejudice into advertising capital, a more contemptuous disregard of the order of the chief executive, has not been perpetrated in this city. Mr. Lefebvre not only posted show bills with the interdicted title after the mayor's order of elimination, but he made the offence more glaring by advertising the mayor as a party to the method he employed in changing (?) the name. The mayor was out of the city and the offending signs held sway for several days, but on Friday with Rev. Ramsdell, Rev. MacIntire, I. C. Dade, and J. R. Barreau, we went to Mayor Hathaway, exhibited the newspaper advertisements, reported the posters, all of which was in flagrant disregard of the mayor's orders and the agreement made with our committee, and the mayor, in view of the evidence, applied the only remedy effective under the circumstances, he forbade the production of the picture. To do otherwise would have given the management the advantage of the advertising gained through bad faith. Mr. Lefebvre has only his own breach of faith to blame.

This episode emphasizes the need of efficient censorship of motion pictures at the source of production. A manager who only considers the box office receipts, will put on anything which he considers will attract attention. He ignores the fact, that he operates only by public permission and is bound to act with due regard for the rights of others.

A government report states that 88,000 miles of film was manufactured during the first eleven months of 1914. That bare statement shows the absurdity of the claim made by picture people that the national board of 18h censors is an efficient board. Were it 1035 in number it would have its hands full inspecting an average of over 200 miles of film every day in the year including Sunday. With 135 members inspection is impossible.

Personally, I am something of a moving picture fan, and would be the last to advocate any machinery to unduly obstruct its proper development. I believe its possibilities for good or evil are scarcely conceived. Its power of expressing an idea or portraying an event is unequaled. It speaks to people of all languages and races at the same time and place. The idea is transmitted instantly and effectively. Something of its possibilities is voiced in the stanza:

"One man with a dream at pleasure.
Shall go forth and conquer a crown:
And three with a new songs measure
Can trample a kingdom down."

A local paper has stigmatized as hysterical, the protest against defamatory films voiced by such eminent citizens as Hon. Moorfield Storey; ex-Attorney General Albert E. Pillsbury, Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard college; Governor David I. Walsh, Rev. Dr. Crothers, Mr. Rolfe Cobleigh; and a host of other men whose character and mental qualifications assure respect for their opinions in all intelligent circles. We might ask that paper, in the interest of consistency, to review its own files and read the columns of verbose protestation it issued editorially against the production of the Johnson-Jeffries fight film. But we refrain, for of course that was righteous objection to an immoral, though truthful, exhibition of brutality on the part of two highly trained brutes, meeting on equal terms, in fair fight. And it is unthinkable, that the mere incident that the black brute was the victor, in any wise inspired the indignant and vehement protest of that paper against the production of that film.

So we pass that incident and simply invite attention to the general inconsistency of those who criticize our protest, viz: These critics are all protestants themselves, and the only ground for their protests is the fact that we have protested. They evidently do not appreciate the humor of their situation. But we cannot help wondering, if they are so easily roused to protest, what a howl they would raise if they were in our position.

Why do we protest? What is it we protest? People continually ask me those questions. They say there is little race prejudice in New Bedford. And we answer that is the very reason we protest these prejudice-producing scenes or plays. The relations between the races here are better than in any community in this country, and we want to keep them so. New Bedford for over one hundred and fifty years has had her respectable citizens of color; noted for their thrift and intelligence. They were here when there were few race varieties in the community, and they have seen the town grow into a city, and the city become a thriving hive of industry with the most cosmopolitan population of any city of its size. Therefore any production which imputes moral turpitude, or depravity to any particular race in this city, or holds it up to undue public ridicule, contempt, or hate, is a pernicious defamation, an offence against the public welfare, and should be prohibited. Experience proves that injustice to one class begets injustice to other classes. As the noble John Boyle O'Reilly so aptly phrased it—"the health of the nation is perilled if one man be oppressed."

The colored American does not object to the truth being told concerning himself or the history of his race in this country. He does strenuously object to untruths, and to half-truths which are often nothing short of vicious and malicious defamation. If the white-American can afford to face the truth concerning the history of the races assuredly the colored American has no cause to shrink. It would be far better for white and black, if, by common consent, the nation's baleful, shameful past was buried in mutual forgetfulness, and forgiveness, and in the spirit of our martyred Lincoln, "with malice toward none, and charity for all," we could move forward and upward, practicing the doctrine of "all men up" rather than some men down, striving for the good of humanity and the true spirit of Americanism.

It is not the colored man—as many suppose—who raises the race question. It was raised in this country at Jamestown nearly three centuries ago, and the class of negro-phobists typified by the Tillmans, the Vardamans, the John Temple Graves, and that arch type—"Tom" Dixon—never let it rest a moment. They are obsessed with race hate. Other men think and talk business, politics, and religion from a broadly humanitarian view-point, but they see all things through the distorting lens of race hate. They are aggressive. They seek to instil their poison among all classes south and north. With them the end justifies the means, and they stop at nothing to accomplish their aim. Fraud, corruption, bribery, perjury, arson, and murder have been unhesitatingly employed by the school that produced these men, and by the class they lead today. And when the voice of public opinion is roused to condemnation they plead in defence that the negro is a vicious criminal and must be terrified into subjection.

Reconstruction! That term is the synonym to the south for "the sum of all villainies." We are familiar with the southern exposition of reconstruction, we do not accept it. But if we did we should have no apologies to assert that apologies are due to the black American, not from him, for the doings of that period as well as those which preceded.

For the sake of arguing the question let us assume that, the claim that reconstruction was a crime against the white south, is true. For answer we file a demurrer, and say what then?

On the one hand let us pile up every crime, and every alleged crime by the freedmen against the white south either during reconstruction or since.

On the other hand pile up all the crimes of the white south against the black man during the two hundred and fifty years of heathenish bondage and the fifty years of Ku Klux Klan murders, political frauds, bribery, perjury and basefaced robbery of suffrage rights: Peonage. Mob violence at any and every pretext: Unconstitutional legislation which strips them of ordinary civil privileges accorded the veriest alien. And last and worst of all the absolute failure of southern laws to protect the colored women of the south from the white man's lust today.

In whose favor does the balance stand in the sight of a just God? Who has the right to cast stones? If the negro stole money he only robbed those who had robbed him. But the claim that the reconstruction negro was a lustful brute is the most damnable libel of them all. Even the most bitter negro haters of the south had not conceived that idea at that time. Even as late as 1889 Henry Grady, the most persuasive orator of the south, stood in Boston, and praised the fidelity of the negro to southern womanhood.

What standing then have these special pleaders, in the great court of public opinions, who seek public sanction for their unlawful and inhuman acts by the plea of Negro degradation and vice.

One of the cardinal principles of equity is that—"He who comes into equity must come with clean hands." Another is that—"He who seeks equity must do equity."

The Negrophobist north and south is stopped to plead the Negro's failings in justification for a denial to him of civil and political rights, because their own great crime against the Negro was responsible for the worst traits and condition of the Negro. No man is entitled to take advantage of his own wrong against a fellow man.

One plea is that they want to redeem the south from domination of ignorance. A most worthy motive, but is it true?

Every revised constitution in the south is drawn with the openly avowed purpose to shut out every black voter possible, educated or ignorant, and at the same time permit every white man, no matter how ignorant, to have the right to vote. And Senator Tillman, declared in the South Carolina legislature, that there were at least ten thousand white men of voting age in South Carolina who were so ignorant that they would not understand the constitution when read to them, and yet he would not take the vote from one of them while he would deprive every Negro of the right to vote.

Do those constitutions seek the elimination of ignorance?

Not at all! They put a premium on ignorance under a white skin.

We believe that at heart the great majority of the American people are for justice: But a passive majority is never effective against an aggressive minority. Wendell Phillips said: "Republics exist only upon tenure of being agitated: Agitation is essential to right public opinion which should be omnipotent and resolute."

Massachusetts born and bred, we were taught in childhood that this nation was founded upon a protest against the denial of personal rights. Our childhood heroes of the Revolution were Sam' Adams, Warren, Hancock, and the Negro patriot Attucks. We grew up with the unwavering faith that the Massachusetts bill of rights, was a living declaration of fundamental law; we are too old now to revise our opinion, and do not intend to try.

We do not believe that civilization can be perpetually turned backward! We do not believe that Christianity can be continually made a mockery!

And we have faith in the courage, constancy, and capacity of the colored American. The race that in the blackness of slavery's night, coined its sorrows into song;—and singing through the darkness, singing through the night, fixed its gaze on the north star, which led on to war's red manger wherein the freedom of the race was born.

We are not anarchists! We are not aliens! We are Americans! By birth, breeding, and association. Our labor has helped clear its forests and enrich its soil. We have proved the quality of our devotion by the world old test of trial by combat, and upon war's red touchstone our love of country was not found wanting. To the land which had given us only bondage and degradation, we magnanimously gave our utmost devotion, even life itself! And from that land today, we have earned the right to demand at least—fair play.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 11, 1915

JUDGE FINES 9 NEGROES IN FILM PROTEST CASE

Public Speaking Without Permit and Loitering the Charges.

Nine Negroes arrested in front of the Tremont Theatre during the recent protests against "The Birth of a Nation" were found guilty of minor offences in the municipal court yesterday, and were fined $5 each. All paid.

Allen W. Whaley, a lecturer, who uses the title "Professor," was arraigned on a charge of speaking on the Common without a permit. As he explained it to Judge Parmenter, he went on Common mall, opposite the theatre, to air his opinions, and while there took care to see that he did not remain longer than seven minutes in any one spot. The court, however, refused to consider his precaution in the light of an excuse and adjudged him guilty.

Everland Washington, who appeared to answer a complaint of sauntering and loitering, said he had heard there was to be a demonstration and went to see it. As he was waiting for it to start an officer took him into custody. He was declared guilty. The others found guilty of sauntering and loitering were Miss Pevin W. Jones, Mrs. Jane Posey, Mrs. Estelle E. Hill, Jacob K. Johnson, Augustus Granville, Carl T. Pim and James Kingsley.

BOSTON CHRIS. SCIENCE MONITOR
JUNE 11, 1915

FILM PROTESTERS FINED

Nine negroes arrested in front of Tremont theatre recently for obstructing the sidewalk in expressing their disapproval of the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," were fined $5 each in the Municipal court, Friday.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 11, 1915

Negro Protesters Pay $5 Fines

The eight negroes who were arrested in front of the Tremont Theatre recently while taking part in a "promenade" protest against "The Birth of a Nation," were each fined $5 in the Municipal Court yesterday, and all paid. They were accused of sauntering and loitering. Those fined were Everland Washington, Miss Pevin W. Jones, Mrs. Jane Posey, Mrs. Estelle E. Hill, Jacob K. Johnson, Augustus Granville, Carl T. Pim and James Kingsley.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 11, 1915

NEGROES FINED $5 IN POLICE COURT

Eight Were Found Guilty of Loitering Near Tremont Theatre.

The Municipal Court was crowded with negroes yesterday when eight negroes, three women and five men, were placed on trial on the charge of sauntering and loitering in front of the Tremont Theatre on the night of June 7, where "The Birth of a Nation" is being produced.

According to the testimony of the arresting policemen 34 couples, headed by the three women, paraded up and down Tremont street in front of the Tremont Theatre, crowding pedestrians into the street or preventing them from passing. During the trial Clement G. Morgan, a negro, counsel for the defendants said:

"These people went there to register a silent protest—to show that we mean absolutely what we say, that we want that objectionable play taken away from Boston."

All of the defendants were found guilty and each fined $5 by Judge Parmenter. All appealed and each was held in $100 bonds for the July session of the Superior Court. The names are: Miss Reven W. Jones, Mrs. Jane Posey, Mrs. Estelle E. Hill, Jacob K. Johnson, Augustus Johnson, Evland B. Washington, Carl T. Pinn and James H. Kingsley.

In the morning session of the Municipal Court, Allen W. Whaley, a negro, who gave his occupation as a lecturer and teacher, was found guilty by Judge Parmenter of making a speech on the Common Friday night without a permit. He paid a fine of $5. Whaley made a speech, according to the police, protesting against the production, "The Birth of a Nation."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 11, 1915

"AIRY, FAIRY LILLIAN" OF THE FILMS

One of the noted Gish sisters, favorite actresses in the big Griffith productions, who appears as the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont.

BREESE TO STAR WITH THE LONERGAN PLAYERS

Popular Actor to Appear at Majestic Week After Next in "The Spendthrift"—"Boz" to Be Manager of the Park Theatre.

By E. F. Harkins

Edmund Breese will appear with the Lonergan Players at the Majestic Theatre the week after next in "The Spendthrift," one of Porter Emerson Browne's modern morality plays. Mr. Breese starred in the same play several years ago, since which time, by the way, he has traveled far and wide as the featured player in various film productions. But last spring he came to Boston as visiting star with the stock company then engaged at the Majestic and his appearances in "The Lion and the Mouse" and in "The Master Mind" were prodigiously successful.—a striking tribute certainly to Mr. Breese's popularity.

W. Fred Bossner, who is known all over the film world as "Boz," will take charge of the Park Theatre after this week. Mr. Bossner is one of the Paramount exhibition specialists; that is to say, his expertness concerns chiefly the proper presentation of the film plays dispensed to picture houses through the medium of the Paramount organization, which handles the productions of the Famous Players, Lasky and Morosco-Bosworth companies. Good films may be hurt by poor production. "Boz" is bent upon excluding poor presentations from the Paramount program. Only in this way, he says, can the theatre do justice both to the manufacturers and to the film followers.

Mr. Bossner is a typical film expert, young, observant, energetic, intensely eager to provide ideal conditions for the pleasure of the public, equally intense in his enthusiasm over the accomplishments and the prospects of the movies. He is a native of Pennsylvania, who took Greeley's advice literally and trekked West after some experience as telegraph operator and train despatcher on the New Haven. For a while he worked on the Salt Lake Herald. It was in Boise, Idaho, that he hitched his wagon to the movies boom, nine years ago, and he has been climbing the ladder steadily ever since.

"Boz" finds that, for the time being, at any rate, the long film play has many friends in Boston, and, therefore, for next week he has secured "The Arab," a five-act film, with Edgar Selwyn, Lois Meredith and Theodore Roberts in the principal roles, and "Brother Officers," a four-reel play, in which Henry Ainley takes the leading part.

"Through the heroic efforts of a few managers, aided by the Lambs and other theatrical clubs," says Rennold Wolf in the Morning Telegraph, "the Actors' Fund has come solvent through the most trying fiscal year of its history. From numerous benefit performances alone there was added to the fund's treasury $58,000.

"Of the foregoing amount, about $38,000 was gained from the three performance of the Lambs Club at the Century Theatre. Daniel Frohman, the president of the fund, raised $30,000 by his benefit performances in New York, Chicago, Boston and other cities. Sums raised in various other ways make the total haul of the year $76,000. This sum represents a trifle more than the cost of the maintenance of the fund and the fund's home during the year.

"Since the fund has no endowment, the same strenuous efforts must be repeated next season, for there is little reason to believe that the hardships among playerfolk will be less, while present conditions prevail. However, Mr. Frohman and his associates are to be congratulated in having met and survived a crisis."

The most noted sisters appearing in photoplays are Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who are officially described as "the two favorite actresses of the big Majestic-Reliance studios, out in Los Angeles, where D. W. Griffith, director of 'The Birth of a Nation' and other Mutual lesser films does most of h's work." In the Birth of a Nation, Lillian Gish impersonates Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the congressman who sows trouble for Reconstructionists. The airy, fairy Lillian found it no easy task, for Mr. Griffith is a stern generalissimo and the staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes occupied eight full months.

The orchestra that plays the music accompanying "The Birth of a Nation" is not only one of the largest, but also one of the most select ever assembled for a theatrical entertainment. Most of the other big houses being closed for the vacation season, their best men have been engaged to augment the regular Tremont band. "In fact," runs one of the announcements, "there are no less than four regular theatre leaders in 'The Birth of a Nation' music pit nowadays, and the beautiful violin obligato of the love strain in the second part is always played by one of these specially skilled artists. That pretty bit of music, by the way, has been scored for pianoforte and voice and published under the title of

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 11, 1915

FINED $5 FOR THEIR PROTEST

Nine Colored Men and Women in Court

The nine colored men and women arrested since a week ago Friday night for violations of the city ordinance during their "silent" protest against the production of the "Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, were all found guilty by Judge Parmenter in the police court yesterday and were fined $5 each. All appealed, but Allan W. Whaley of 30 Windsor street, who describes himself as a lecturer and teacher. He paid the fine. The others furnished $100 bonds each for trial in the Superior Court.

SOMERVILLE (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 11, 1915

Tremont Theatre.—The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield and other New England cities are absolute fakes according to Henry MacMahon, manager of the play now at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement: "As a matter of fact, 'The Birth of a Nation' will not be played in any motion picture house in New England, but sometime after the Boston run it will be presented with regular traveling companies in the so-called 'two dollar' theatre of each important city. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come."

Boston Record (Mass.)
June 11, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Wins

A decision of great interest to the theatrical world and the playgoing public was rendered by Judge W. F. Cooper of the Chicago Superior Court in the case of J. J. McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation" company, versus the City of Chicago. The decision, copies of which have reached Boston, permitted the run of the Griffith film spectacle at the Illinois Theatre in that city.

It seems that Mayor Carter Harrison had granted a license to the film, which the present mayor, William Hale Thompson, subsequently revoked. Mr. Thompson contended that the play would engender anti-negro animosity. In granting to McCarthy an injunction restraining the mayor and police chief from interfering with the presentation of the film, the court said:

"This last ground, that it will engender race animosity, is based purely on assumption. To find that this is a good objection to the allowing of the injunction, this Court will have to assume that our white citizens will not know or appreciate the fact that the days represented in the play were nearly in the first years of the last half century. This Court will have to assume that they who will witness the play will be so stupid that they will be unable to comprehend that the people represented on the canvas were of two or three generations ago, and that they do not and will not appreciate the fact that in the succeeding time the negro race has advanced almost immeasurably. . . . This Court is satisfied from the evidence that in this photoplay the black man and the bad white man are equally prominent figures. . . . No one race or nationality has greater right under the law than any other has. Any race or nationality so offended can best give the lie to the bad characters as presented by continuing to conduct themselves as law-abiding citizens, who do not expect greater rights from the law than it allows all other men or nationalities."

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK WORLD
Date JUN 12 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STAYS IN BOSTON.

NEW CENSOR BOARD FINDS PICTURE NON-OBJECTIONABLE.

A notable victory was won in Boston, Mass., on Wednesday, June 2, by "The Birth of a Nation" management that has been presenting the photo-play at the Tremont Theatre, in that city. The opponents of the Griffith picture jammed through the Legislature the previous week the so-called "Three Men" Censor Bill, which provided that any play could be stopped without any reason being assigned and simply at the pleasure of two out of the three following officials: The Mayor, the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court and the Police Commissioner. The bill was promptly signed by Governor Walsh, and the opponents joyfully looked forward to the end they had aimed at, namely, the driving of the Griffith spectacle out of Boston.

Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster, and Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara, decided to see for themselves the object of the attacks. They visited "The Birth of a Nation" at different times, individually. Then on Wednesday they gave a hearing to the counsel for the picture's opponents and the counsel for the theatre. John F. Cusick, the sole theatrical counsel, was faced by former U. S. Assistant Attorney General William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson. J. Mott Hallowell, represented the white protestants. The hearing lasted two hours, after which the board of censors went into executive session.

After a short session Mayor Curley, in behalf of the board, issued a statement, "Having witnessed the performance, heard counsel, and having given full consideration to the entire subject, we have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended."

Probably no more astonished body of people could be found anywhere in the world than the makers of this censorship measure thus finding themselves confounded by their own devices.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
June 12, 1915

MIRIAM COOPER - TREMONT

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 12, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into ah this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 12, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

According to Henry MacMahon, manager of "The Birth of a Nation," there is no truth in the stories that this wonderful production will be seen at other cities in New England besides Boston.

With such a positive denial, all would do well to take advantage of the Boston engagement.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JUNE 12, 1915

The actual propositions of the [illegible] are seen to be reasonable. We are the last [illegible] the world that can refuse argument and arbitration. And war, if it must come, should be delayed as long as possible. The [illegible] fault-finders say we are [illegible] prepared. If so, why hurry [illegible] war? If Germany actually wishes to be at war with us, we cannot well avoid that calamity, but meanwhile let us use ordinary prudence,—avoid crossing the ocean in belligerent ships, or ships that carry munitions of war. We have a right to sell them, but need not sit on them when they explode. What was reason last year is reason yet.

There is some disappointment at the failure of the new censorship board to revoke the license of the Griffith and Dixon photo-play, which public opinion and the clear intent of the General Court in passing the much-needed law, expected to be the result. But this disappointment is tempered by the reflection that the fangs of this copperhead snake, crawling out of his Kuklux hole, so many years after the Kuklux had been smothered, have been extracted, and the virtues of the Negro race are now recognized where originally nothing but hatred was manifested. True it is that the laudation of the midnight maranding by the Kuklux is still a part of the play, which falsifies history in this, as in most other respects. The truth about this instrumentality of darkness has been lately told by Mr Dubois, from the authentic records of the period. "The knights of the White Camelia killed 167 Negroes in one uprising near New Orleans. In six counties of Arkansas the KuKlux killed 50 and flogged 500," in the whole state more than 700 were killed. The klan was organized to disfranchise Negro voters; they are now generally disfranchised, and the KuKlux have ceased their outrages. Had they been needed to protect white women, disfranchisement would have made no difference."

Mistakes were made, of course, in the difficult and hazardous work of reconstruction; but they were made more by the southern whites than by the blacks or their northern friends. Dr Dubois well says that it would be hard to find in history an experiment in governing a conquered country more successful than our reconstruction of the discordant slave states after emancipation. The condition of Scotland for 30 years after the Jacobite rising of 1715 may well be contrasted with the 30 years from 1865 to 1895 in the seceding states. This is the period that Dixon constantly misrepresents. The Journal, which upheld Dixon from first to last, misstates the fact when it says the new censorship "has unanimously decided that the 'Birth of a Nation' should not be prohibited in Boston." It has merely refused just now to revoke the license of the money-getters, and profuse money-spenders of the Tremont theater. Probably it will never be renewed; but Boston, like Springfield and Chicago, will be free from this attempted insult to a loyal and indispensable race of free citizens."

The story of John Brown in Kansas and Virginia has been made the subject of numerous novels, one of which was published years ago by the late Elbert Hubbard, and, like most of his writings, gave a very [illegible] though eulogistic view of that hero. The best of them was perhaps that which the London Times printed in its columns when it was engaged in promoting the raid of Jameson and Cecil Rhodes on the Boer republic, which had so bad a result and practically brought on the costly Boer war. Its author called himself Arthur Patterson; it was a very good picture of affairs in Kansas in 1856-58, and a recognition of the generous traits of Brown, well known to all who had dealings with him. The story has now been wrought into a three-act play by Prof Gilmer of Tufts college, which will be acted at Somerville this week, by a semiprofessional company, on the 10th, 11th and 12th of June. It follows the historic sequence of events fairly well, but places at the Adirondack home of the Brown family (now part of a state park of New York) the final decision of Brown's Virginia plans, which was really made elsewhere. With good acting, which may be expected, it seems likely to be a successful drama, and may readily be turned into the modern fashion of a photo-play as a contrast to the Dixon perversion of history. It would probably be forbidden a license in Richmond, Charleston and New Orleans; but might have the run that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has had for 60 years in other American cities, and some of the European towns. When Brown in 1858 was taken in Boston to see one of the early performances of Mrs Stowe's drama he was disposed to regard it as a real pursuit of a fugitive slave and rose up in his seat to stop it. The characters in [illegible] new play are mostly real persons, but [illegible] acts are romantically treated. Forbes, nephew of English Garibaldiag, is the villain of [illegible] piece.

[illegible] a Nation" may go

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 12, 1915

No Bookings Outside Boston.

The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield and other New England cities are absolute fakes according to Henry MacMahon, manager of the play now at the Tremont theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement:

"We have positively not arranged for any showing whatsoever of D. W. Griffith's great film spectacle in New England outside of Boston. Every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get 'The Birth of a Nation' is absolutely untrue. Such reports seem to have been circulated by moving picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns. They have returned from Boston or New York and gravely told the managers that they were soon to have 'The Birth of a Nation.' In several cases these false statements have been followed by protests against the 'bookings,' and once or twice the mayors have proceeded to 'suppress' the purely hypothetical and imaginary presentation. Moving picture house managers who have adopted this misleading form of advertising have simply succeeded in making everybody connected with these hypothetical movements ridiculous. As a matter of fact, 'The Birth of a Nation' will not be played in any motion picture house in New England, but sometime after the Boston run it will be presented with regular traveling companies in the so-called 'two dollar' theatre of each important city. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont theatre there. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 12, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STILL DRAWS CROWDS

"The Birth of a Nation" is now flourishing in its tenth week at the Tremont theatre, and there is no immediate prospect of its leaving that comfortable playhouse, where indoor dramatic entertainments may be enjoyed on the warmest days. The run so far is really equivalent to a four months' run of the average drama, for twelve performances a week, including daily matinees, are given. Long ago the gross attendance reached 100,000, and it is probable that the larger proportion of Boston's theatregoing population have seen the play. In the crowds now are many people from all over New England.

The characters in "The Birth of a Nation" story are unusually interesting to the spectators. Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Thaddeus Stevens and other dominating personalities of the Civil War period are shown. Then there are the warrior heroes on both sides of the struggle, the beautiful women, the wildly adventurous Ku-Klux and the carpet bagger mobs of the Reconstruction regime. The filmed narrative is accompanied by orchestral music that brings out fully its emotional possibi-

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
JUNE 12, 1915

The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield, and other New England cities are untrue, according to Henry MacMahon, manager of the play now at the Tremont Theatre, who says that every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get "The Birth of a Nation" is absolutely false, such reports having apparently been circulated by motion-picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns. In several cases these false statements have been followed by protests against the alleged bookings, and once or twice the Mayors have proceeded to "suppress" the purely hypothetical and imaginary production.

"The Birth of a Nation" will not be played in any motion-picture house in New England, but some time after the Boston run it will be presented with regular traveling companies in the so-called two-dollar theatre of each important city. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont Theatre. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 12, 1915

~~Lillian Gish Expects to Be~~ Playing "Birth of a Nation" About Fifty Years Longer

By Esther Hoffman

Lillian Gish's shadow self was found comfortably perched in a corner of the Tremont Theatre picture booth when I came to inquire how much longer she expected to be connected with "The Birth of a Nation."

"Oh, about 50 years," replied the astral Lillian carelessly.

"Impossible!" said I. "You will be an old woman!"

"That might make some difference on the old-fashioned stage," she said. "It might even permit me to do a Rose Coghlan stunt and celebrate my golden jubilee after due lapse of time. But in the movies we shadow-actresses—like Rider Haggard's heroine 'She'—are immortal, eternally young, eternally beautiful. Time cannot carve wrinkles in our faces, nor dull our eyes, nor whiten our hair, nor coarsen our fairy forms. It can only make unfashionable our gowns, and in this case that is no hardship, because my dresses in this picture are all of the vintage of 1861-'70!"

"But where will you be enacting 'The Birth of a Nation' in A. D. 1965?"

"In the Arctic Amusement Company's air-dome at the Pole or possibly at Monrovia, Liberia. Probably though, 'The Birth of a Nation' will be a textbook by that time, and we shall be playing the Antipodean high school route, with occasional half week stands in the grammar schools."

"Won't the film wear out?"

"Yes, this particular positive in which you see me may wear out, but the negative's practically immortal and my shadow will simply fly to the next set of positives and nest there."

"Is it tiring to have so many shadow selves?"

"Not at all. Elsie Stoneman in 'The Birth of a Nation' never gets confused with Annie Lee of 'Enoch Arden' or the motherf in 'Judith o Bethulia' or the daughter in 'The Battle of the Sexes' or any of my other characters. I drop them all when getting into a new part. My shadow selves return to me only as pleasant recollections during leisure times or as messengers of triumph from far distant cities. It is ever so much better than being a legitimate actress of the old sort, for here in this new art one can scatter one's personality lavishly and pleasureably."

LILLIAN GISH.
Who expects to be playing in "Birth of a Nation" 50 years from now.

DORCHESTER (Mass.) BEACON
JUNE 12, 1915

Mass.

TREMONT THEATRE.

The stories of "The Birth of Nation" having been booked in Prov dence, Springfield, Pittsfield and oth New England cities are absolute fak according to Henry McMahon, ma ager of the play now at the Tremo Theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement:

"We have positively not arranged for any showing whatsoever of D. W. Griffith's great filmed spectacle in New England outside of Boston. Every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get 'The Birth of a Nation' is absolutely untrue. Such reports seem to have been circulated by moving picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont Theatre there. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston fo three

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
June 10, 1915
Patrol Boston

NO "BIRTH OF A NATION" DECISION.

A decision as to whether "The Birth of a Nation" will be permitted to continue to run in Boston may be handed down by the new newly created censor board in the near future. Each of the members will see the film in order that they might better judge its character.

The board held its first meeting last week and organized with Mayor Curley as chairman and License Clerk John M. Casey as secretary. In the meantime, the management of the Tremont theater, where the film is showing, is circulating a petition which will be presented to the board. None of the members of the board will comment on the film until they meet in executive session.

It is claimed by politicians of authority that this bill would have never become a law had the lobbyist engaged by the management of "The Birth of a Nation" known what he was doing. Politicians of state wide fame claim that this lobbyist fell into his own trap.

This lobbyist, in endeavoring to draw up a bill that would protect that film's interests and appease the colored protestants, suggested the idea for the present bill which gives arbitrary power to the board composed of the Mayor of Boston, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 12, 1915

("The Birth of A Nation.")

The New Republic admits to its pages an article exulting in the success of certain attempts to exclude "The Birth of a Nation" from production in St. Louis. It does not appear that the writer of the article had seen this motion-picture spectacle actually performed. Much of the prejudice against this perfectly legitimate photoplay would be dissipated if those who indulge in bitter abuse had firsthand impressions of their own on which to base their opposition instead of relying on superficial and mistaken impressions gained from unreliable sources. As a play which aims patriotically and even fervently to bridge the gulf between Southern and Northern prejudices and to utter a much needed warning of the horrors of war, there is much to be said in its favor, and its production would surely be not less welcome in a city like St. Louis, where its Southern flavor would revive sweet or saddening old-time memories and traditions, than here in our northern cities.

The Billboard
Cincinnati, Ohio

1915 BIRTH OF A NATION

Will Not Be Barred in Massachusetts

Boston, June 3.—The management of the photoplay, Birth of a Nation, which had been shown at the Tremont Theater in spite of the determined opposition of a group of white and colored agitators, won a notable victory yesterday, when the "Three Men" Censor Board ruled that the picture would not be barred in the State.

The opponents of the play jammed through the Legislature last week the so-called "Three Men" Censor Bill, which provided that any play could be stopped without any reason being assigned and simply at the pleasure of two out of the three following officials: The Mayor, the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, and the Police Commissioner. The bill was promptly signed by Governor Walsh.

After giving a two-hour hearing to the counsel for the opponents and the theater, the Board of Censors went into executive session, shortly after which the following statement was issued:

"Having witnessed the performance, heard counsel and having given full consideration to the entire subject, we have decided that the license of the theater should not be revoked or suspended."

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 13, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" is now flourishing in its 10th week at the Tremont Theatre, and there is no prospect of its leaving that cool and well ventilated playhouse where indoor dramatic entertainment may be enjoyed on the warmest days. The run, so far, is really equivalent to a four months' run of the average drama, for 12 performances a week, including daily matinees, are played. Long since the gross attendance reached six figures, and it is possible that the larger proportion of Boston's theatregoing population have seen the play. In the crowds now are throngs from the rest of the State, and from other parts of New England. The filmed narrative is accompanied by orchestral music that brings out fully its emotional possibilities. The photography, it is believed, has never been equalled, and the entertainment as a whole marks a new era in stage annals by reason of grouping anew the various factors into one synthetic and artistic whole.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 13, 1915

1708

Of the 20 important "Birth of a Nation" principals whose names appear in the programme of the play at the Tremont Theatre, 18 owed their start to "stock," and only two, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, jumped directly from private life to the camera stage. I've been interested to learn that several began their theatrical careers in New England, notably Henry B. Walthall, whose early seasons were spent in a Providence stock company, and Walter Long, who was born in Milford, N. H., was educated at Nashua, and joined a local stock company in 1903. Miss Marsh and Miss Cooper were convent girls, and the thought of either going on the stage was the remotest thing in the world from the mind of the parents. Robert Harron, one of the young soldier lads in the film, worked his way from a Biograph errand boy's job to the very forefront of the pictures. D. W. Griffith noticed the $3-a-week accession to the office force and encouraged the lad to improve himself. In a few years Harron was promoted from the office stool to the range of the "camera eye." He did so well that when Griffith was appointed director-in-chief he took Harron to California with him for steady employment in his biggest feature productions.

Spottiswoode Aiken is a Scotchman, and Josephine Bonaparte Crowell is a Canadian, while in the film they are Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, a South Carolina couple. Griffith, Walthall, Miss Cooper and Miss Marsh are native Southerners. The only principal of German origin is George Seigmann, who was born in Bavaria, but was brought to this country by his parents when very young. Lillian Gish was formerly a child dancer in Sarah Bernhardt's company. Joseph Henabery and Ralph Lewis were already famous character actors before they went into the movies, and Griffith selected one to play President Lincoln and the other to enact General Stoneman (Thaddeus Stevens). Mary Alden, playing the Creole mulatto (Lydia Brown) in the film, is a white Creole from New Orleans, and an emotional actress of distinction. In brief, Mr. Griffith selected prominent players from all parts of the country for the principal roles, and the result shows in the marvellous all-round excellence of the work.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER

JUN 1 2 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield and other New England cities are absolute fakes according to Henry McMahon, manager of the play now at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement:

"We have positively not arranged for any showing whatsoever of D. W. Griffith's great filmed spectacle in New England outside of Boston. Every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get 'The Birth of a Nation' is absolutely untrue. Such reports seem to have been circulated by moving picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont Theatre there. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come."

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) DISPATCH
JUNE 13, 1915

along the line.

BOSTON has its own board of censors. When the sensational film, "The Birth of a Nation," first went there, riots followed, and a bill was jammed through the Legislature creating a board of censorship to consist of the Mayor, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court. The law gives this board the power to stop any play or motion or other picture being shown in Boston, and that without having to report any reason. The intention, primarily, was to drive the Griffith film out of Boston, but after several hearings of the matters under dispute, the new censor board refused to revoke the license granted "The Birth of a Nation." Mayor Curley had already secured a concession from the film people, they having cut out the scene of a Negro chasing a white girl until she jumps from a cliff and is killed. Of course Boston still has its Watch and Ward Society, which aims to keep the Boston stage at least semi-respectable, but this society's edict is so often futile. The new board is legal, and its orders will be obeyed. This brings up the thought that it may not be long until every city in the land will have a small board of censorship, with peremptory powers, and with the [illegible] of graft, show managers will be at their mercy. It is not a pleasant outlook, but theatrical producers cannot lay the blame upon anyone but themselves. They brought the condition which will fall heaviest on their own heads.

[illegible]-tocz!

CLIPPING FROM Globe
Boston Mass
6-13-15

"The Birth of a Nation" Continues at the Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" is in its 10th week at the Tremont Theatre, where the run so far is really equivalent to a four months' season of the average drama, for 12 performances a week are played. Long since the gross attendance reached six figures.

The daily matinees enable suburban patrons to combine theatregoing with a daylight shopping excursion, and the summer schedule of trains makes their return home easy at night.

The great characters in "The Birth of a Nation" story are unusually interesting to the spectators, for Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Thaddeus Stevens and other dominating personalities of the Civil War period are shown. Then there are the warrior heroes on both sides of the struggle, the beautiful women, the wildly adventurous Ku Klux and carpetbagger episodes of the reconstruction regime.

Mr Griffith's filmed narrative is accompanied by orchestral music that brings out fully its emotional possibilities.

Traveler June 15, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"—Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its 10th week at the Tremont Theatre. The characters in the story are interesting. Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Thaddeus Stevens and other dominating personalities of the civil war period are shown. Then there are the warrior heroes on both sides of the struggle, the beautiful women, the adventurous Ku Klux and the carpet-bagger mobs of the reconstruction regime. There will be no advance in prices for the afternoon performance on Bunker Hill day.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 15, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its 10th week at the Tremont Theatre. The characters in the story are interesting. Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Thaddeus Stevens and other dominating personalities of the civil war period are shown. Then there are the warrior heroes on both sides of the struggle, the beautiful women, the adventurous Ku Klux and the carpet-bagger mobs of the reconstruction regime. There will be no advance in prices for the afternoon performance on Bunker Hill day.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
6-15

Tremont Theatre

Patriotic enthusiasms of Flag Day found plenty of scope in the two "Birth of Nation" performances at the Tremont Theatre yesterday. The story itself brings out the triumph of the Stars and Stripes over the Stars and Bars after four years of internecine warfare. In connection with it there appear vividly the immortal figures of aDniel Webster, the percursor, and Abraham Lincoln, the creator of the New Unionism. Bunker Hill Day will give further occasions of working up enthusiasm to intensest pitch.

As Griffith's great film unrolls the mighty scenes when North and South were at death grapple—the call for troops, the baptism of Bull Run, the guerilla warfare, Sehrman's march, the last momentous struggle at Petersburg, Grant and Lee signing peace at Appomattox—the applause is often practically continuous.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 15, 1915

Ahearn's troupe of cycling comedians with a weird and wonderful collection of freak bicycles [illegible] and Bruce [illegible] in a black face act; the Misses Campbell, two Southern girls with a piano, singing [illegible] Kluting's Japanese [illegible] Samoy[illegible] Japanese specialist.

Tremont Theatre

Patriotic enthusiasm of Flag Day found plenty of scope in the two "Birth of a Nation" performances at the Tremont Theatre yesterday. The story itself brings out the triumph of the Stars and Stripes over the stars and bars after four years of internecine warfare. In connection with it there appear vividly the immortal figures of Daniel Webster, the precursor, and Abraham Lincoln, the creator of the new unionism. Bunker Hill Day will give further occasions of working up enthusiasm to intensest pitch. As Griffith's great film unrolls the scenes when North and South were at death grapple—the call for troops, the baptism of Bull Run, the guerilla warfare, Sherman's march, the last momentous struggle at Petersburg, Grant and Lee signing peace at Appomattox—the applause is often practically continuous. During the present crisis in the relations of Uncle Sam with a great foreign power, there is no better creative or patriotic entertainment for young folks of all ages to see than "The Birth of a Nation."

American Bo. Mass.
June 15, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

Patriotic enthusiasm of Flag Day found plenty of scope in the two "Birth of a Nation" performances at the Tremont Theatre yesterday. The story itself brings out the triumph of the Stars and Stripes over the Stars and Bars after four years of internecine warfare. In connection with it there appear vividly the immortal figures of Daniel Webster, the precursor, and Abraham Lincoln, the creator of the New Unionism. Bunker Hill Day will give further occasion of working up enthusiasm to intensest pitch.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 15, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

Patriotic enthusiasm of Flag Day found plenty of scope in the two "Birth of a Nation" performances at the Tremont Theatre yesterday. The story itself brings out the triumph of the Stars and Stripes over the Stars and Bars after four years of internecine warfare. In connection with it there appear vividly the immortal figures of Daniel Webster, the precursor, and Abraham Lincoln, the creator of the New Unionism. Bunker Hill Day will give further occasions of working up enthusiasm to intensest pitch. As Griffith's great film unrolls the mighty scenes when North and South were at death grapple—the call for troops, the baptism of Bull Run, the guerilla warfare, Sherman's march, the last momentous struggle at Petersburg, Grant and Lee signing peace at Appomattox—the applause is often practically continuous.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 15, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

No Bookings Outside of Boston Has Not Arranged for Showings Elsewhere.

The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield and other New England cities are absolute fakes according to Henry MacMahon, Manager of the play now at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement:

"We have positively not arranged for any showing whatsoever of D. W. Griffith's great filmed spectacle in New England outside of Boston. Every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get "The Birth of a Nation" is absolutely untrue. Such reports seem to have been circulated by moving picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns.

As a matter of fact, "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played in any motion picture house in New England, bnt sometime after the Boston run it will be presented with regular traveling companies in the so-called "two-dollar" theatre of each important city. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont Theatre there. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 15, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STIRS PATRIOTS' ARDOR

The patriotic enthusiasm of Flag day found plenty of scope in the two "Birth of a Nation" performances at the Tremont Theatre yesterday. The story of the photoplay brings out the triumph of the Stars and Stripes over the Stars and Bars. In connection with it there appear vividly the figures of Daniel Webster, the precursor, and of Abraham Lincoln, the creator, of the New Unionism. Bunker Hill day will give further occasions of working up enthusiasm to intensest pitch.

A feature of the Tremont Theatre holiday performances is that there is no advance in prices, the matinees (Saturday excepted) being always half the price of the nights.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRAVELER
JUNE 15, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) [illegible] GLOBE
JUNE 16, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" is now being shown in Chicago, and what do you think the censors have made 'em cut out? Well, the after-part showing the colored race's advancement. A technicality is responsible—"it wasn't shown when the original film was inspected."

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JUNE 15, 1915

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

THE DAYS OF RECONSTRUCTION

As They Are Estimated by John R. Lynch.

To the Editor of The Republican:—

May I be excused for enclosing a letter clipped from the Chicago Tribune of June 1, by an expert historian. Barring the last paragraph this letter seems to me invaluable as true history, and I wish every leading newspaper might devote a few lines daily, without necessary reference to the photoplay to the "truth of history" concerning that period. I entirely agree with this letter as to the absolute viciousness of the whole thing as history for the rising generation, and pardon if it seems to me that very great correction could be made without suppressing the whole thing.

My own army experience of over three and a half years gave me something of an acquaintance, in Louisiana, Virginia and South Carolina with the colored people.

C. B. FILLEBROWN.

Boston, June 10, 1915.

☞The article sent by Mr Fillebrown was written by John R. Lynch, author of "The Facts of Reconstruction," and its essental part follows:—

Speaking of the photoplay called "The Birth of a [illegible]"

It is in all essential episodes grounded on historical fact, representing the struggles of that terrible time in the South when the whites, back from war, saw their government taken over by the newly enfranchised blacks controled by the northern carpet-baggers.

What happened with the Negro ascendant and how the white re-established his supremacy is shown with obvious natural sympathy for the South, and no doubt with such hightening of effect as dramatic art has a right to employ. It presents what the South says and the North of our day, at least, is inclined to believe to be truth.

Exactly the reverse of this is true, for there never was a time when any one of the state governments of the South was taken over by the newly enfranchised blacks controlled by the northern carpet-baggers.

That some mistakes were made during the progress of reconstruction will not be denied. How could it be otherwise? The war had just come to an end. Sectional animosity was bitter and intense. The republican party was looked upon as the enemy of the South. No white man could identify himself with the republican party at that time in any one of the southern states without running the risk of being socially ostracised and publicly characterized as an enemy to his section, his state, and his race. Notwithstanding these things, not less than 25 per cent of the white men of that section—men who were to the manner born, many of them ex-confederate soldiers, identified themselves with and became leaders of the republican party. These, in the main, were the men that the newly enfranchised blacks selected as their leaders and whose leadership they loyally and faithfully followed.

I do not hesitate to assert that the reconstructed state governments at the South were the best governments those states ever had before or have ever had since. There never was a time when there was actual physical "Negro domination," or even carpet-bag domination, in any one of the reconstructed states.

The play to which you refer, instead of being "grounded on historical facts," is grounded on historical misrepresentation, without having a single actual fact as the basis of its existence. It is fiction pure and simple, painted from a diseased and prejudiced imagination, with a false and deceptive background as a basis upon which to stand.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 16, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION

No Bookings Outside of Boston Has Not Arranged for Showings Elsewhere.

The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield and other New England cities are absolute fakes according to Henry MacMahon, Manager of the play now at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement:

"We have positively not arranged for any showing whatsoever of D. W. Griffith's great filmed spectacle in New England outside of Boston. Every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get "The Birth of a Nation" is absolutely untrue. Such reports seem to have been circulated by moving picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns.

As a matter of fact, "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played in any motion picture house in New England, bnt sometime after the Boston run it will be presented with regular traveling companies in the so-called "two-dollar" theatre of each important city. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont Theatre there. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come."

ENTERPRISE.
MARLBOR. MASS.
Jun 16 1915

Up to date the receipts of "The Birth of a Nation" are said to have passed the $100,000 mark in Gotham. Who will dare assert in the face of this fact that it doesn't pay better to be consistently knocked than ignored

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 18, 1915

ONE OF FILM MASTER'S DISCOVERIES

Dixie girl, Miriam Cooper, whose talent D. W. Griffith is cultivating and who impersonates the Southern colonel's plucky elder sister in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre.

NEW CRAIG THEATRE WORK STARTS JULY 1

Craig Players, However, to Continue Performances at Castle Square Indefinitely—McCarthy Returning Triumphantly to the Tremont.

By [illegible] Harbins

Back to Boston, after a triumphal three months' campaign, comes Joseph Jefferson McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation" production, who has waged and won the hardest fight any theatrical manager has ever had put up to him. New York, Boston, Chicago—one city after the other has witnessed his successful struggle against what appeared to be overwhelming odds. His latest victory was achieved in Chicago, where he succeeded in securing an injunction restraining the authorities from interfering with the presentation of the big Griffith film play.

Mr. McCarthy has fighting blood. Through his maternal grandfather he is descended from a scion of the Bonaparte family. On his father's side he belongs to the race that has produced the Kellys, the Burkes and the Sheas. He can fight with both fists, so to speak.

New Orleans is his native place, and his family has been prominent for a long time in the Crescent City's theatrical life. It was second nature for him to take up theatrical work. Starting as advertising agent, he climbed up rapidly through one managerial position after another until, last winter, he yielded to the urgent solicitation of Mr. Griffith and resigned the management of a Philadelphia theatre. Then he began to exploit "The Birth of a Nation," first of the $2 films, which is well on its way to a 200th presentation at the Tremont Theatre and toward the 200th mark at the Liberty Theatre in New York.

In "The Birth of a Nation" appear several young actresses who have talent Mr. Griffith discovered and which he is developing rapidly in the productions made under his direction out in Los Angeles, where the Mutual enterprises have their headquarters. One of these is a Southern girl, delicately featured and with that languorous air traditionally attached to the belles of Dixie land. Her role is that of Margaret Cameron, elder sister of the heroic "little colonel," the character so cleverly played by Henry Walthall.

Elsie Janis is returning from London to appear as star in a new Dillingham production, a comedy by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard, which has been tentatively named "The Missing Link." In the last act, and not until then, Miss Janis will have an opportunity to sing, and probably to give some of her favorite impersonations.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 18, 1915

Miss Cooper Wept Pearly Tears --At Least She Says She Did

By Esther Hoffman

Miss Miriam Cooper's shadow self was flitting rapidly twixt film and screen in the Tremont Theatre projection room the other evening when the writer asked her how she managed to attain the emotional effects required in the role of Margaret Cameron, the much loved but long suffering Southern heroine of "The Birth of a Nation."

"Why, certainly, I shall be very glad indeed to tell you," responded the dainty astral form, replica of the real Miss Cooper by Director Griffith's marvellous art. "One advantage of the motion pictures is that the player has as many astral or soul-selves as there are copies of the original negative.

"The report that Director Griffith bullied me into expressing feeling is a mean libel," continued Miss Cooper, smiling charmingly. "Self No. 4, the one in the San Francisco copy, reports to me that California papers assert the director frightened me into crying during the Log Cabin scene in the second part of the picture. I was to lose my position for lack of expression or something, whereupon I burst out crying and Griffith told the Camera man to hurry up and register. No, that incident never happened. Mr. Griffith is too much of a gentleman, too good a friend, to employ any such device."

"I do not believe in excess of expression. Persons of classical features should be careful not to distort them in stage work, for often we see beautiful faces hideously marred by attempts to represent grief or horror in the movies. Instead of spoiling natural good looks, it was decided to apply to the property man of the Majestic-Reliance Studio. You remember the scene in the Log Cabin where I am scared almost to death, and but for the strong arm of manly Capt. Phil Stoneman encircling me would quite faint away. In that scene a tear drop courses down each side of my face.

"George Hogan, our Los Angeles Props, is very resourceful. 'Why not weep pearls?' he suggested. A subdirector at once pointed out that real pearls would be too expensive. 'Well,' said George, 'Aballones are so cheap they are sending them East by the gross for stick-pins. A couple of small ones would be just the thing.' So George got some small but perfect blister pearls and gummed them to my features. Very little gum was used so that in the latter part of the scene the 'tears' would slip down. Mr. Griffith and everybody said the emotional effect was overwhelming. I think too, you can state that it was the first time in the history of the dramatic art that Mother-of-Pearl was employed to enhance a dramatic effect. Regular pearls have been much favored by many of my profession, but Mothers-of-Pearl so to speak have been let severely alone."

The voice of the Cooper shadow-existence faded away until it became undistinguishable from the click-click-click of the picture shutter. Doubt and suspicion seized me.

Were the actorines' astral selves like the "sperits" that mediums are fond of evoking for the delectation of hand-holding groups in dimly lit back parlors? Were they up to tricks like the "sperits?" And did they sometimes spring "whoppers" on poor, ghost-ridden humanity?

MIRIAM COOPER.
Who says she shed tears of pearl.

EASTHAMPTON (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 17, 1915

THE HUMAN PROBLEM.

In these days of European warfare, Mexican warfare, agitation over the negro film play, "Birth of a Nation," talk about race prejudice, religious differences, labor agitators, etc., etc., it would appear that the following was written only this week. As a matter of fact, it is from the News of 25 years ago. Have we improved in this respect since 1890, despite all our professed Christianity, our uplift movements, etc., etc.? The article was from the Christian Union, and read as follows:

"There is no negro problem; there is only a human problem. The negro is a man, the sooner we forget all else, cease to talk of him, act toward him as an exceptional man, and treat him only as a man, the sooner our problem will be solved, our Negro problem, our Indian problem, our Immigrant problem, all are one. When we forget that there are white men and black men and red men and yellow men, Frenchmen and Germans and Englishmen and Irishmen, Roman Catholic men and Protestant men and Infidel men, and laboring men and employing men, and remembering only that there men, and children of one God and Father of all, and brethren of one great family, we shall have taken the first and fundamental step toward the solution of our problem, which are all one—the problem of realizing the brotherhood of man."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 19, 1915

SUCCESS ATTENDING "BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's unparalleled photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to attract enthusiastic crowds at the Tremont Theatre, where the 11th week of the engagement begins today. The merit of Mr. Griffith's spectacle lies mostly in the marvellous presentation of battle scenes and the pleasing union of the historical and the romantic. No one else has expressed so vividly the romance of the old South, and the success achieved is due to the new art of historical film spectacle, which, in its combination with symphonic music, offers a new kind of grand opera—pictures and music instead of words and music.

The play is now running in Boston, New York and Chicago, and the aggregate attendance has been greater than that enjoyed by any drama that has been before the public for the short period of three and a half months.

PORTLAND DAILY PRESS, FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 18

TREMONT THEATRE BOSTON

NOW PLAYING

Daily Matinees 2.10 p. m. Evenings 8.10 p. m
(The one best place in Boston to enjoy a really great show!)

David W. Griffith's colossal spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction.

18,000 people America in the making Comedy and Pathos

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 horses Wild rides of the Clans World's eight wonder

See the Civil War-time exhibit of "The Birth of a Nation" Company on parade in Portland today. Mr. Frank A. Johnson, the manager, will explain about tickets and excursion rates.

PRICES TO SUIT ALL PURSES.
Matinees 25 and 50c. A few at $1.00
Evenings 25, 50, 75, $1.00. A few at $2.00

SPECIAL NOTICE.
"The Birth of a Nationn" will play no other New England city than Boston this season.
Now playing to Equally Enormous Business in Boston, New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco.
750,000 people have seen it. Have You?
Special exursion to Boston, July 8th.

A BIT OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" REPRODUCED IN PORTLAND STREETS.

Folks who were out on the street yesterday watching the many doings connected with the Moose gathering were startled by a sight that seemed to re-vivify the Civil war past of fifty years ago. Two young women in crinolines seated opposite a gallant Federal soldier and a bold handsome Confederate cadet were leisurely driving in an old fashioned barouche across the side of which was the emblem "The Birth of a Nation."

"Can it be a motion picture?" was asked eagerly by many who thought the motion picture people were having some scenes snapped during the crowded time.

It was not a motion picture however, but the advertisement of one of the greatest motion picture spectacles in the world, namely "The Birth of a Nation" which is now running in Boston at the Tremont theatre to packed houses twice a day. The party who were dressed as the program girls and cadets are dressed in the Boston play, were here to distribute reading matter and formal invitations. They were captained by Frank A. Johnson, a publicity promoter of wide experience in all parts of the country.

David W. Griffith, who made "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle, believes that the future of dramatic art lies in the screen rather than in the old fashioned stage drama. On April 1st, 1914, he set to work laying the ground plans for this great picture. No form of expression seeking to reveal the truths and beauties of life has ever made such progress within a given time as motion photography. Perhaps this is because motion is the essense of realism and life itself is but a part of the impulse of the universe, motion.

Griffith's poetic imagination stretches across dreamy dales, through swaying trees, back to distant mountains with their snow crested tops blazing in the sunlight. It reaches across the lapping waves of the deep blue sea to what seems to the end of the universe. From one of these far away vistas he brings forth the young girl and shows her progress until she comes so close you see a teardrop quiver on her eyelid before it falls to her cheek. And then in a flash you see great plains and on them nations grappling in their death throes and worlds battling for military supremacy. We say with pride that an American invented the technique required to produce them.

PORTLAND EVENING EXPRESS June 6, 1915

AMUSEMENTS. AMUSEMENTS

TREMONT THEATER BOSTON

NOW PLAYING

Daily Matinees, 2.10 p. m. Evenings, 8.10 p. m.
(The one best place in Boston to enjoy a really great show!)

David W. Griffith's colossal spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction

18,000 people America in the making Comedy and Pathos

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3,000 horses Wild rides of the Clans World's eighth wonder

See the Civil War-time exhibit of "The Birth of a Nation" Company on parade in Portland tomorrow. Mr. Frank A. Johnson, the manager, will explain about tickets and excursion rates.

PRICES TO SUIT ALL PURSES.
Matinees, 25c and 50c. A few at $1.00.
Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. A few at $2.00.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
"The Birth of a Nation" will play no other New England city than Boston this season.
Now playing to Equally Enormous Business in Boston, New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco.
750,000 people have seen it. Have You?
Special Excursion to Boston, July 8th.

6 18 d2t

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 19, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

No Bookings Outside of Boston Has Not Arranged for Showings Elsewhere.

The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield and other New England cities are absolute fakes according to Henry MacMahon, Manager of the play now at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement:

"We have positively not arranged for any showing whatsoever of D. W. Griffith's great filmed spectacle in New England outside of Boston. Every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get "The Birth of a Nation" is absolutely untrue. Such reports seem to have been circulated by moving picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns.

As a matter of fact, "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played in any motion picture house in New England, bnt sometime after the Boston run it will be presented with regular traveling companies in the so-called "two-dollar" theatre of each important city. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont Theatre there. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come."

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Folks who were out on the street yesterday watching the many doings connected with the Moose gathering were startled by a sight that seemed to re-vivify the Civil War past of 50 years ago. Two young women in crinolines seated opposite a gallant Federal soldier and a bold handsome Confederate cadet were leisurely driving in an old fashioned barouche across the side of which was the emblem The Birth of a Nation.

"Can it be a motion picture?" was asked eagerly by many who thought the motion picture people were having some scenes snapped during the crowded time.

It was not a motion picture however, but the advertisement of one of the greatest motion picture spectacles in the world, namely The Birth of a Nation, which is now running in Boston at the Tremont Theater to packed houses twice a day. The party who were dressed as the program girls and cadets are dressed in the Boston play, were here to distribute reading matter and formal invitations. They were captained by Frank A. Johnson, a publicity promoter of wide experience in all parts of the Country.

David W. Griffith, who made The Birth of a Nation spectacle, believes that the future of dramatic art lies in the screen rather than in the old fashioned stage drama. On April 1st, 1914, he set to work laying the ground plans for this great picture. No form of expression seeking to reveal the truths and beauties of life has ever made such progress within a given time as motion photography. Perhaps this is because motion is the essence of realism and life itself is but a part of the impelse of the universe, motion.

Griffith's poetic imagination stretches across dreamy dales, through swaying trees, back to distant mountains with their snow crested tops blazing in the sunlight. It reaches across the lapping waves of the deep blue sea to what seems to be the end of the universe. From one of these far away vistas he brings forth the young girl and shows her progress until she comes so close you see a teardrop quiver on her eyelid before it falls to her cheek. And then in a flash you see great plains and on them nations grappling in their death throes and worlds battling for military supremacy. We say with pride that an American invented the technique required to produce them.—Advertisement.

June 19, 1915

Portland Res. June 19 (about Boston)

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two dollar up" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old-fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters hours' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil war history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performances give[n] with 8.10 p. m. are exactly the same [as] when Nor[mal] at night. Besides affording [an] opportunity to cut-of-town people [to] include a visit to the Tremont theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

Record, Boston Mass. June 19, 1915

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith's romance of a lost cause and paean to the new patriotism, "The Birth of a Nation" continues to attract enthusiastic crowds at the Tremont Theatre where the 11th week of the engagement begins today. The striking parallel of Griffith's success to that of Sir Walter Scott in the Waverly Novels has occasionally been noted. Like Scott, Griffith portrayed the folklore of the defeated people he was too young to remember but of which the older generation had oft told him. Incidentally, too, the parallel extends yet further for Scott's heroes were the Highlanders of Scotland and Griffith's the Highland Clansmen of the Carolinas. The merit of Mr. Griffith's spectacle is in recognising the futility of war and the unity of the new nation built on the doctrine of Federal sovereignty. No one else has achieved so vividly the romance of the old South, and the success achieved is due to the new art of historical film spectacle, which [in] combination with symphonic music offers [a] new kind of grand opera—pictures and music.

BOSTON (Mass.) TIMES

The Boston Board of Censorship was the fifth notable censorial body to approve "The Birth of a Nation." The others were the California, Illinois and Pennsylvania censors and the National Board of Censorship, which makes its headquarters in New York.

BOSTON (Mass.) TIMES

JUN 19 1915

Mary Alden, who plays the comparatively minor part of the mulatto housekeeper, Lydia Brown, in "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Tremont Theatre, is an emotional actress of much fame in the film world. She reached the height of her power in D. W. Griffith's problem photoplay, "The Battle of the Sexes." Previous to that she had been a stock actress with companies in Hartford and Brooklyn.

Photoplay is returning to the world the lost art of pantomime, says Photoplay Magazine. When acting began it was on the vast outdoor stages of the medieval friars, and in the pine-knot hell and rolling rock thunder of human voice had not much play. Those who squatted, stood or lolled right up next to the exercises were entertained—perhaps—with a monastic jargon of morality verse. But more often the dramatic legend was in bad Latin, which nobody understood save the monks, and they but intermittently. So pantomime grew, and in the univereal art of facial expression and gesture were reproduced most of the human emotions. As the miracle plays gave place to real plays, pantomime refined itself accordingly. It reached its highest effectiveness in the Latin countries, but in the last century, with the introduction of the drawing-room drama of England and France, pantomime has fallen away—especially under the influence of England—until only the photoplay has availed to save it from utter destruction and loss.

STONE[HAM] (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 19, 1915

JOHN [illegible], Editor.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

No Bookings Outside of Boston Has Not Arranged for Showings Elsewhere.

The stories of "The Birth of a Nation" having been booked in Providence, Springfield, Pittsfield and other New England cities are absolute fakes according to Henry MacMahon, Manager of the play now at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, who gives out the following statement:

"We have positively not arranged for any showing whatsoever of D. W. Griffith's great filmed spectacle in New England outside of Boston. Every statement printed in smaller cities to the effect that certain theatres or certain managers were to get "The Birth of a Nation" is absolutely untrue. Such reports seem to have been circulated by moving picture house managers for the purpose of getting a little cheap publicity in their home towns.

As a matter of fact, "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played in any motion picture house in New England, but sometime after the Boston run it will be presented with regular traveling companies in the so-called "two-dollar" theatre of each important city. The smaller cities will not be touched at all. The play is now in its ninth week in Boston at the Tremont Theatre there. It passed the century milestone last Saturday evening, and it may run in Boston for three months to come."

Herald, Northampton Mass. June 19, 1915

MILLIONS IN PROJECT FOR FILM PRODUCING

Big Men in the Business to Get Together For $2 Show Pictures

NEW YORK, June 19—Financial and theatrical circles are startled by reports of a powerful Wall street group which is effecting a combination of motion picture productions to be placed in competition with the principal theaters of the country.

It develops that a company will be incorporated here in a day or two to control the output of the foremost motion picture directors of the world.

H. E. Aitken, president of the company, which financed the motion picture sensation "The Birth of a Nation" is credited with bring[illegible] the deal. He has amalgimated the services of D. W. Griffith, creator of this picture; Thomas H. Ince, whose work in producing western scenes, as well known, and Mack Zennett, creator of the famous Keystone comedies.

These directors will turn out pictures to be included in weekly programs in a chain of theaters where the $2 scale of price will prevail.

A $4,000,000 company has been formed with Mr. Aitken as its head, and associated with him will be financiers who are making their entry into the motion picture business.

Mr. Aitken yesterday admitted that a combination is forming in which Messrs Griffith, Ince, Zennett, Belmont, Kessell Wall street interests, and the Western Import Company of London will be the leading figures.

From a reliable source it is learned that the plan is to make the new organization the largest thing yet conceived to develop the motion picture business.

The hearquarters will be in New York with branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome Barcelona and South America.

The new combination has acquired control of a chain of theaters throughout the world with a central house on Broadway where the attractions will be first shown.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) HORN. UNION
JUNE 19, 1915

$2 THEATER CHAIN OF MOVIE FEATURES

Company Formed to Spend $5,000,000 a Year on 50 Pictures.

NEW YORK, June 18—A chain of theaters beginning in New York and stretching across the country and devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures at a charge of $2 for the best seats—this is the program announced yesterday from the office of H. E. Aitken, president of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation," and so gave to a somewhat surprised public the first of the $2 movies. To make this ambitious program feasible its sponsors have gone to Wall Street for their money and to D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Bennett for their pictures. A company with a capital of $4,000,000 will be incorporated today or tomorrow.

At Mr. Aitken's office yesterday afternoon it was said that some $3,000,000 had been pledged to the support of the undertaking and that this would make possible an expenditure of $5,000,000 a year in the production of 50 pictures. This would give an average of $100,000 investment for each film and would allow the producers to do big things on a big scale—particularly in the photographing of great spectacles too large for any stage on Broadway. It has been said that "The Birth of a Nation," the film now on exhibition at the Liberty, represented an outlay of $300,000, of which, roughly, one third went into the cost of promotion.

The three movie directors named in the announcements of the new enterprise are now on the Pacific Coast, each at work on a new film, and Mr. Aitken is here entering into negotiations for theaters. The plan calls for the taking over of between 500 and 600 houses, 60 in this country and the rest abroad. The acquiring of these, it was said, had been proving encouragingly easy. For some time past there have been more theaters than the producers could keep busy with popular plays, and such an enterprise as the one now proposed would, if successful, relieve the strain in many places. There is to be a Broadway theater marked as the home of the chain, and Mr. Aitken and his associates are negotiating for one central in location and of quite recent construction. It was built for the spoken drama, and has been so used all the year.

The announcement speaks gaily of headquarters in New York and branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America. It speaks also of eminent stars of the American and European stage already engaged, of motion picture actors retained for the forthcoming productions, of celebrated authors at work on scenarios and of celebrated composers at work on incidental music.

"The once lowly movie," so runs the statement, "has grown in 10 years from a few scattered nickelodeons into a combination that ranks fourth or fifth among the great business enterprises of this country. The annual earnings of the film interests are not far short of a billion dollars at present. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above that high water mark. A detail of its scope is shown in the expert estimates for an advertising campaign of approximately $400,000 a week."

Besides those already mentioned, the associates in the enterprise include W. O. Baumann, Adam Kessel and the Western Import Company of London, which has handled the European market for the films these men have prepared. From this personnel it would seem that the new corporation, established to finance the $2 movie, is an outgrowth of the Mutual Film, of which Mr. Aitken is president. It was said yesterday that he would leave the Mutual to take up the engrossing work of the new enterprise.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 19, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spec-

Boston Traveler June 19, 1915

"Birth of Nation"—Tremont

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" continues to attract enthusiastic crowds at the Tremont Theatre, where the 11th week of the engagement began today. The merit of Mr. Griffith's spectacle is in recognising the futility of war and the unity of the new nation built on the doctrine of federal sovereignty. No one else has expressed so vividly the romance of the old South, and the success achieved is due to the new art of historical film spectacle, which in its combination with symphonic music offers a new kind of grand opera—pictures and music instead of [illegible] a Nation

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)
JUN 19 1915

New Laws And Court Decisions

This department is designed to keep the industry informed of all news concerning new or projected laws, Federal, State, County or Municipal, that may affect the business, and all events involving any branch of the trade with the authorities in all sections of the country

18FF

"Birth of Nation" Can Now Be Shown In Boston

AMONG the colored brethren in Boston joy reigneth not. Nor can they be blamed for sadness. For eight long weeks they fought tooth and nail against "The Birth of a Nation." Peaceable mass meetings were followed by protests to the mayor and governor; these by riots and arrests at the theatre; and the whole movement culminated in the passage of a law creating a censorship triumvirate, which the negroes felt certain would chase from the screen in Boston, at least, the film which has aroused their ire, and which has been banned from Chicago.

The censors have slipped a cog. The three members have announced that they will not ban the play from that city.

This torpedo from the clear blue channel was fired this week Wednesday, after a two-hours' conference in Mayor Curley's office. Representatives of each side were given an hour to present their arguments.

The negroes showed a protest signed by 6,000 names; the attorney for the theatre, John F. Custisk, said he had the support of 15,000 people who has seen the play. The mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court, who comprise the censor board, had all seen the show since their first meeting of the week before.

The conference was secret, and at its conclusion the hundreds of negroes and others in the mayor's outer office were crestfallen when they heard the unfavorable announcement read.

That night a mass meeting of the protestants was held. The negroes realized that the censors of their own making had failed them, but the speakers intimated that there would be some other course to follow. The opposition has been aroused to a keen pitch by the board's decision, but W. Munroe Trotter, their chief spokesman, warned them that, whatever they did, they should be "very, very careful."

It will be remembered that one of the last changes made in the censor bill was to allow a decision to be reached finally by a majority vote of the three members of the board. But since the meeting in the mayor's office was secret, it is not known how the different members voted upon the question.

Meanwhile, the manager of the Tremont has issued a statement declaring his pleasure at the verdict, and his belief in the justice of it, and the film continues to draw big houses.

Claiming that they were not allowed to be represented at the secret hearing, the Massachusetts branch of the National Independent Equal Rights League has filed a petition with the censors asking for a reopening of the question.

To discuss methods for combating what they believe is the harmful influence of the film the Boston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people will hold a conference next Tuesday night. J. Mott Hallowell, a leader in the opposition to the film, in an open letter has counselled the negroes to take their defeat quietly.

Two score special police were at the theatre the night after the decision. Negroes were picketed in procession outside the door. There were fiery speeches and mounted police dispersed the crowds, but no arrests were made.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N.Y. City)
June 19/1915

12FF

Will Not Bar Picture

Boston's New Three-Man Censor Board Will Not Suppress "The Birth of a Nation"—Refuse Petition with 6,000 Names—Hard Blow to Negroes—Trouble Was Expected at Theatre, but There Were No Riots.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE newly formed board of censors for photoplays in the city of Boston has refused a petition of 6,000 persons to suppress "The Birth of a Nation" and the Griffith spectacle will be allowed to continue its run in Boston. This board, which is composed of Mayor James M. Curley, Chief Justice Winfred Bolster and Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara, was created by a recent law which was enacted by the Massachusetts legislature to deal with this famed production on account of the many protests of the colored residents of the State.

The decision, which the board announced, reads as follows: "The officials designated by Chapter 348, Acts of 1915, having received a petition from certain citizens requesting that performances of 'The Birth of a Nation' be stopped by them under the authority given to them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protestants and the licensee and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the license of the theater should not be revoked or suspended."

This decision comes as a severe blow to the colored continent who have been endeavoring to stop the photoplay since it opened its Boston engagement at the Tremont theater two months ago. However the leaders in the agitation against the film are still confident of suppressing the picture, which they allege libels the entire colored race. They refuse to state what their next step will be. All insist that the fight will continue, but in what form they will not state. On two nights following the decision of the censors, large groups of colored protestants marched up and down on Tremont street in front of the theater. They made no unlawful demonstration, but kept repeating to themselves, the words "We protest."

The hearing of the board was private. Aside from the members of the board, only these five persons were admitted to the hearing chamber, Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan, legal adviser of the board; J. Mott Hallowell, former Assistant United States District Attorney General, William H. Lewis (colored) and Butler R. Wilson (colored) representing the protestants and Attorney John F. Cusick, representing the picture interests.

It was previously agreed that whatever occurred in the hearing chamber should not be made public, except for the statement to be given by Mayor Curley. Representatives of the press were denied admission as well as a stenographer for the protestants. The protestants contended that the photoplay was immoral, was stirring race prejudice and was a menace to the community. They claimed that the board had the power to suppress the production by revoking the license which was held by the theater.

While the board was in executive session, the Mayor's outer suite was filled with colored men and women. It was originally intended that each side should have half an hour in which to present their case, but a full hour was used up by each side.

When W. Munroe Trotter, one of the leading agitators against the production, announced the decision of the board to 300 colored persons assembled in St. Mark's Church on Tremont street, he was greeted with cries of "Dynamite" and "There's a Way."

In concluding his address to these persons, Trotter said, "The case now rests in the hands of the public, in your hands and I advise you to be very, very, very careful what you do."

Several police reserves were rushed to the Tremont on the night following the decision of the censors on account of several groups of colored persons who were picketing in front of the theater.

All the leading agitators, both white and black, against the production have asked their followers not to resort to any violence in their attempt to stop the picture.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
JUN 19 1915

12FF

Will Stay in Boston

"The Birth of a Nation" Approved by "Three-Men" Censor Board.

A NOTABLE victory was won in Boston, Mass., on Wednesday, June 2, by "The Birth of a Nation" management that has been presenting the play at the Tremont Theater in spite of the determined opposition of a group of white and colored agitators. The opponents of the play jammed through the Legislature the previous week the so-called "Three-Men" Censor Bill, which provided that any play could be stopped without any reason being assigned and simply at the pleasure of two out of the three following officials: The Mayor, the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court and the Police Commissioner. The bill was promptly signed by Governor Walsh, and the opponents joyfully looked forward to the end they had aimed at, namely, the driving of the Griffith spectacle out of Boston.

Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster and Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara decided to see for themselves the object of the attacks. They visited "The Birth of a Nation" at different times individually. Then on Wednesday they gave a hearing to the counsel for the negroes and the counsel for the theater. John F. Cusick, the sole theatrical counsel, was faced by former U. S. Assistant Attorney-General William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson, colored lawyers, and J. Mott Hallowell, representing the white protestants. The hearing lasted two hours, after which the Board of Censors went into executive session.

After a short session Mayor Curley, in behalf of the Board, issued a statement. "Having witnessed the performance, heard counsel and having given full consideration to the entire subject, we have decided that the license of the theater should not be revoked or suspended."

Probably no more astonished body of people could be found anywhere in the world than the makers of this censorship measure, thus finding themselves confounded by their own devices. News of the decision will go all over the country, and it will be perceived that a large and almost unlimited grant of censorial power is insufficient to suppress Mr. Griffith's great historical drama where men of sanity can sit in judgment.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
July 17, 1915

Spokes from the Hub

Boston's Bluest Blood Finds Joy and Relaxation in the Picture Show.

18 FF

By Marion Howard.

EFFETE society has joined the procession and is "Movie Mad" owing in part to the fact the Back Bay has a theater all its own, in close proximity to the homes of thousands who hitherto have not bothered much with or been sufficiently interested in, the silent drama.

This theater, The Exeter, is run by a woman, a petite little body quiet in manner, always approachable and best of all she welcomes suggestions and criticisms. Mrs. Marcellus Ayer is not only the proprietor but is a self-appointed censor and tries everything out, music and all, so that her public is bound to be pleased. Not so very long ago this theater was a Temple for Spiritualists. It is across the way from the church of the late Edward Everett Hale and the parishioners not only like their neighbors, but are frequent patrons. The interior is rich in coloring, very large with lofty ceiling and spacious stage fitted up with flowering plants and palms. A notable feature is the music rendered by Jarvis Joslyn, one of the Hub's best musicians and extremely popular. Two soloists are especially selected.

Friday and Sunday are the fashionable nights, as the long line of limousines indicates, some coming in from Brookline, the so-called wealthiest city of its size in America. Hundreds walk bareheaded to this theater nightly so that quite a fad has developed.

Perhaps the films which first attracted the attention of society were those of "Julius Caesar," the Kleine production which had a run at the fashionable Opera House; then came "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith gem, here to stay, in spite of hysterical protests on the part of a small portion of our public and some officials who condemned without first seeing the magnificent production. It is running to big houses and thousands of our best and most intelligent citizens endorse it, go again and again to show their approval. All Hub denizens will have seen it before the recently-made law can have any effect. So much for a survival of the fittest!

Governor Walsh frequently goes round the corner from the Hotel Lenox, his temporary home and laughs heartily over such little skits as "The Bachelor's Dream" (he being one of the unattached).

No more enthusiastic fan than Lotta Crabtree exists round here, "I just love the movies for they give me pleasure and are so educational," she declared to me. She does not confine her loyalty to the Park theater (which she owns), but goes the rounds and takes in the best. She is honorary member of the Professional Women's Club, which has so many members in the films, like Lillian Russell, Florence Reed, Elsie Janis and others about to enter. This club makes up parties whenever their members appear, as they do for the speaking drama.

Mrs. Jack Gardner, the most discussed society woman, is a convert. She finds delight in such films as "The Lion of Venice," a city with which she is familiar and in honor of which she has erected a Venetian Palace in the Fenway and which has no duplicate in this country. All the material, decorations and works of art were imported for it. Mrs. Jack and many in her set make a point to go where the famous players appear and recently turned out in large numbers to greet Stewart Baird in "The Moth and the Flame," he being one of the few here to leave the set of amateurs for the professionals, making his debut under Winthrop Ames in New York.

I caught a very staid Bostonian and his stately wife, a Colonial Dame, at Mrs. Ayer's theater last week laughing and applauding the antics of Charles Abbe (one of the old-time Museum favorites), and "Niobe." The man was Captain William Humphrey and it was a treat to watch his face and see him relax. One man said to him, "Say, but this is great, for you don't have to strain your ears to hear lines, which is one reason why I prefer the movies to the spoken drama."

A very proper Back Bay deacon sat next to me the other night and I furtively glanced at him while the delicious little short film "Her Valentine" was on and he actually shed tears. Turning to me he said "What a human play that is, I had a similar experience when a kid."

Then there is another reason why so many go, as illustrated in the remark made to me last week by a recent widow, who said she had found consolation—at least diversion—from her sorrow. "What is his name," I innocently asked "Oh, my dear, it is not a man. Come with me and I'll show you why I am less despondent than when we last met." She straightway walked me into a picture show where Elsie Janis was doing her stunts in "In Search of a Thrill." She further declared that her physician had sent her to the picture as a sure cure for the blues. Other M. Ds. are giving the same advice. Try it!

Goff said: "While it is claimed by the plaintiff Jesse L. Lasky Feature Film Company, Inc.) that services to be performed by the defendant Suratt e unique and extraordinary, it is interesting to note she herself denies that they are of such character asserts that her value as a star in a moving picture nd everything ready for the opening of the convention. Demands for space in the exhibition hall have been unusually heavy this year, and those on the ground are of the belief that when the exposition opens, the visitor will be greeted by the largest and most varied display of devices and apparatus used in the motion picture industry that has ever been on exhibition. Miniature theaters are equipped with up-to-date apparatus and during the week every one of them will be occupied practically every moment of the day with advance showings of big productions.

Leaders in the motion picture industry in their respective lines will be present to address the convention, and in this respect the 1915 convention will undoubtedly excel all previous gatherings of a similar character, for, in the past, these national gatherings of exhibitors have been devoted more to discussions of censorship matters and the consideration of business conditions in certain parts of the country; than to addresses by the real leaders of the industry.

This year, however, the program announces that such notables as Governor Johnson of California; Mayor Rolfe of San Francisco; National President Marion S. Pearce; W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; D. W. Griffith, one of America's foremost producers; P. A. Powers and Colonel W. N. Selig are to address the gathering, and undoubtedly interest will be correspondingly great in the sessions.

The formal opening of the convention takes place at 10 a. m., Tuesday, July 13, when the formal addresses of welcome will be delivered by California's governor and San Francisco's mayor. Their addresses will be responded to by National President Marion S. Pearce, and following these the appointment of committees will occur. The afternoon and evening of Tuesday will be devoted to the exposition salon, where the exhibits of the various trade accessories will be made and feature films shown.

On Wednesday, July 14, at 10 o'clock in the morning W. W. Hodkinson, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, will deliver his address and the afternoon will be devoted to discussions and consideration of important matters scheduled to come before the convention. At four o'clock a sight seeing trip will start from the exposition building and the evening will be devoted to a special entertainment.

Thursday, July 15, D. W. Griffith will address the convention on "The Rise and Fall of Free Speech and

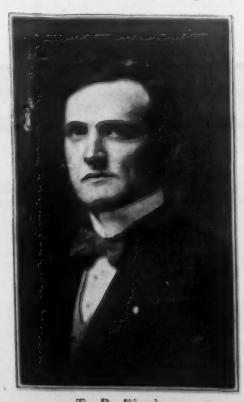
(OVER)

Ready for San Francisco Convention

All thoughts are this week centered on San Francisco, where the fifth national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America opens on Monday, July 12, for what is predicted will be the greatest session of motion picture people ever convened in the United States.

As MOTOGRAPHY goes to press, word is received that all arrangements are completed, exhibits in place,

Marion S. Pearce, National President.



T. P. Finnigan, First Vice President

Mark E. Cory, Second Vice President.

Peter P. Jeup, National Treasurer.

BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, JUNE 20

How Griffith Staged Battles in New Way of History-Making

Great Civil War Scenes Revealed in 'The Birth of a Nation'

Photograph at the left shows David W. Griffith (in the foreground) and his camera artist, William Bitzer, catching the Ku-Klux ride from an auto. Picture on the right shows Mr. Griffith giving directions in assembling his army of performers in his marvelous film production.

Miss Lillian Gish, who plays Elsie Stoneham, the northern heroine of "The Birth of a Nation."

By HARLOW HARE.

There is a new way to make history. Spectacles on nose in the public library was the old way. Carlyle tramped the battlefields of Friedrich; Macaulay explored Sedgemoor, Steenwinden and Steenkirk. Motley dug into State archives. McMaster delved into the life of the common people. Nicolay and Hay relied largely on letters and journals, and Miss Ida Tarbell successfully sought first-hand interviews and statements from living participants in great events. Now has come David Wark Griffith, a motion picture producer, and has begun where the others quit.

Young Mr. Griffith's plan of history-making is to set up again in reality the scenes and actions of the past. Griffith had been an actor, a dramatist, a scenario-writer, ultimately winning premier place as the most artistic director of films. As an actor he had seen bits (or, perhaps, better, characters) of history staged—an Irving as Richelieu, or Louis XI, a Salvini as Caesar, a Bernhardt as the Eaglet or Joan of Arc. He had now at his command not only the stage and the pageant but the immensely larger resources of out-door photography. Why should not the new art of the motion camera be capable of telling a consecutive historical story?

Fired with the idea, Griffith determined to apply it to the greatest historical epochs of our history. The tale of American Civil War and of Reconstruction was close to him, for had not his father, Jacob Wark Griffith commanded a Confederate brigade and all his kinspeople been in the suffering and welter of the terrible post-bellum time.

Staging such a story involved vast expense and many months of labor. Mr. Griffith silently planned ahead for years until at last as director-in-chief of the great Mutual Film organization he got a free hand, put his own fortune and much cash from friends in the enterprise, and started to "make a picture."

PASSION FOR ACCURACY.

In the first place, to understand Griffith, you must realize his passion for accuracy of detail. He has the industry as well as the imagination of the great historian. Nicolay and Hay, Tarbell, Herndon, Fleming, Dixon, many others, were the raw material of his work. Union and Confederate veterans aided him with counsel on the spot. West Point graduates helped him with the strategy. Four research men were kept busy digging up little known, minute facts. National guardsmen, with their officers and complete camp equipment, enlisted by companies, regiments and brigades as his soldiers. The director's aim was not merely to do a yardage of picture, but to do it supremely and unmistakably right.

Imagine, then, Griffith's army setting forth one fine morning upon Grant's campaign against Lee at Petersburg, Va. It is no hillside picnic, this expedition. The thousands of fighters are costumed, accoutred and armed in replica of the Civil War combatants. There is a long artillery train, with the old-fashioned cannon and mortars of 1864; there are signal corps, ambulance corps, horse, foot, bridge-builders, sappers and pioneers; in the rear rolls the slow-moving baggage train, loaded with quartermaster's supplies of food, cooking utensils and shelters. At night tents are pitched, wells dug, messes prepared. In three days' march the army reaches the wide valley selected as the battleground.

Here the novice is startled to find that the salient features of the Petersburg field in 1864 are reproduced. Griffith's "location men," already on the ground, have had long lines of trenches built, which stretch away for miles, as far as the eye can see. Here hummocky ground has been smoothed to the plain o'er which the cavalry charged; there, a ravine is excavated or a hill is raised, from behind which the masked batteries are to fire.

BUGLE CALLS TO FRAY.

The army rests after its weary march, but at 8 o'clock next morning the bugle bids each man in his appointed place for the fray. The word of command proceeds as follows: I. Griffith. II. Fifteen sub-directors in various parts of the field. III. The National Guard captains ordering the men of their respective companies. Just outside the "picture" are the members of the Signal Corps, ready with flags for wigwagging. Near the cannon, the danger point of the proceedings, yet just outside camera range, wait the surgeon, four assistant surgeons and orderlies of the Ambulance Corps. Finally, as a staff counselling the Commander-in-Chief, Mr. Griffith, who rules all from a high observation tower surveying the scene, stand the old "vets" and the West Point experts previously referred to.

It is surprising—somewhat of a shock at first—that each of the fifteen sub-directors scattered over the field appears dressed as a private in company ranks. It could not be otherwise, however. For each sub-director must rehearse and also supervise the action in his part of the field, yet he cannot be "out of the picture." It is easiest and simplest, therefore, to present him as a minor fighter in the ranks.

Long days are spent in practice, the evenings in poring over maps and ground plans and perfecting the plan of evolution. Ever the "high private" sub-director is at his militia Captain's elbow, explaining, suggesting and urging. The Captain gradually learns the new kriegspiel—battle a la camera—and he transmits the orders to his men.

"Camera!"

It is this magic word of Filmdom that starts the Petersburg battle after twenty to twenty-five rehearsals have made all perfect. In ordinary outdoor pictures that word of command would be megaphoned by the Chief Director from his tower. But not in this one, for the field is vast and even the megaphoned voice would not carry. Instead Director Griffith lays aside his fieldglass and steps to the portable telephone switchboard which he, like Joffre or Von Kluck, has had installed in his "conning tower." Field wires, laid in conduits to avoid the anachronism of Civil War phones, run out to the subordinate directors on the battle ground. "Camera!" says Griffith in a quiet tone thirty seconds before William Bitzer begins grinding the picture-taking machine.

THE ARMY IN ACTION.

The word is instantly picked up by the field directors listenings at the other ends of the wires. The "high private" pressed his Captain's arm, the latter shouts "Fire!" or "Charge!" to his men, and the whole body of the army is in action. They know they must work quick. There are no laggards and no flatterers. Often a bugler or cornetist is in the ranks playing old war-tunes, or there is the rat-tat-tat of the drum. Shells from the old-fashioned cannon burst around, the musketry reports sound like sharp hail, and amid a din that rapidly grows to an inferno, the Confederate Grays or Federal Blues advance with shouts and cheers.

Occasionally in the red line of danger there are comic incidents to make the sternest-faced person laugh. Soldiers in a motion picture battle fear the cavalry charges even more than they do the cannon. To lie "dead" whilst a rush of troopers' horses with thunderous hoof beats is galloping past you, possibly by some slip upon you, would quail the stoutest nerve. One day Director Griffith, having found it practically impossible for his "dead" or "wounded" in the face of a cavalry rush, bethought him to station a detachment of his "disabled" negro Unionists in a miry swamp. But when the "Confed" cavalry came pounding down the hill towards them, every man Jack of a darkey wriggled, twisted, swam or hurtled his way out of that swamp and then fled incontinently.

Later in the day Griffith found several of the vanished colored men huddled outside a little country store some miles from the scene of operations. "What did you mean by deserting me that way?" he asked. "Really you ought to be court-martialled and shot. Do you expect any pay?" the answer came quick:

LONG AND ARDUOUS WORK.

"We likes dat dollah and a half, Mistah Griffith, but we treasures our lives moah! Jes' take us back to taown in yo' motor truck, an' we'll call de perceedings a draw."

Staging and photographing a veritable picture of war is long and arduous work—far more complex and difficult than it looks. For example, the unit Battle of Petersburg is made up of two or three hundred separate and distinct camera scenes. Rarely does a scene last over 10 to 30 seconds, yet it must be posed and rehearsed many times; then frequently retaken again and again to achieve just the right pictorial effect. The amount of detail, with so many persons engaged, is enormous. Moreover, the executive staff must direct incessant watchfulness to the avoidance of serious casualty.

Even though the shells are not loaded, the person who gets in their way is likely to be badly hurt. Dangers from fire are also to be avoided. In staging the beautiful panoramic scenes involving General Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of Atlanta, a small city of frame houses was built for the sole purpose of being destroyed by the conflagration. In this case, a body of trained firemen as well as the corps of ambulance surgeons was kept in readiness for an emergency.

The mob scenes showing the people fleeing from Atlanta, together with the later pictures of the panicky audience in Ford's Theatre the night of Lincoln's assassination and of the mobs during Reconstruction days, exercised the director's highest ingenuity. But Griffith is the master, par excellence, of handling people in the mass. His method is that of an artist in perspective.

LEAVE LASTING IMPRESSION.

The foreground is bold and the action characteristic, whilst the far vista supplies variety and multitudinous detail. The silk-hatted burgher on a small pony, leading the refugee from Atlanta; the fainting girl in the Ford's Theatre panic; the chap that falls backward out of a second-story window during the attack on a South Carolina home; the Ku-Kluxer almost killed in dismounting as his fellow clansmen rush the negroes at Piedmont; the lean victim's hopelessly upraised hands to Heaven in the so-called "human salad" scene allegorically depicting the horrors of war—bits such as these stamp themselves vividly on the memory and lift the mass picture out of the common-

---

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 20, 1915

The little hero whom "The Birth of a Nation" patrons applaud so vigorously at the Tremont Theatre has some right to the bays and laurel wreaths of fame, for Henry B. Walthall, playing the little Confederate colonel aforesaid, is own cousin of the late United States Senator Walthall of Alabama. Senator Walthall played a prominent part in the reconstruction events which his young relative portrays. "Impossible!" said the I-know-it-alls when D. W. Griffith announced his intention of casting Henry Walthall as Colonel Ben Cameron, the leader of the Ku Klux Klan in "The Birth of a Nation." They thought a six-footer necessary to heroics, whereas Mr. Walthall is small but elegantly formed, about 5 ft. 3 in. in height. But when it came to the actual photography, everybody realized Mr. Griffith was right. Walthall takes a most dashing military picture. His father fought for the South, and the young actor "eats up" the war scenes. Especially when charging the battle intrenchments, flag in hand, or robed as a clansman saving the girl from a ring of carpet-bagger foes.

As told in this column last week Walthall, although a Southerner, got his stage start in a Providence, R. I., stock company. He received his "movie" training at the old Biograph studio in New York under David W. Griffith's direction. When the latter assumed charge of the Mutual film-making, he took Walthall out to California with him. The role of Colonel Cameron, which the young man plays, is the longest one in 'The Birth of a Nation," and indeed the longest so far seen in a motion picture, being fairly comparable to the champion "long-distance" part of Hamlet in the legitimate drama.

[illegible] AMERICAN
JUNE 20 1915

with life-like naturalness.

Tremont Theatre.

The eleventh week of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Tremont Theatre. Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the Flag Day and Bunker Hill Day performances.

Herald, Boston Mass
June 20, 1915

Tremont Theatre

The 11th week of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Tremont Theatre. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the war President and the little men who thwarted his plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of absorbing themes. Matinee and evening performances are given every day except Sundays. Seats for all performances of the Independence day period are now on sale.

BOSTON (Mass.) HOME GLOBE
JUNE [illegible] 1915

Motion picture photography as a practical invention is said to be exclusive to D. W. Griffith, the producer, and G. W. Betzer, the camera man. "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle, as was tried out during the production of the play near Los Angeles about a year ago. The light is obtained by an illuminating rocket as well as by ground illumination. Since it was successful used to reproduce a night battle in the historical film, several other directors have tried to imitate the process with war pictures.

Ralph Lewis, who was selected to play the role of Congressman Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," had the difficult task of competing excellence with Holbrook Blinn, Michael J. Jordan, John B. Cooke and others who had made notable hits in the part in the legitimate stage play, "The Clansman." Holbrook Blinn was the original Austin Stoneman, and it was his splendid characterization of the club-footed old statesman that brought him forward conspicuously as a character actor.

BOSTON (Mass.)

JUN 20 1915

Tremont Temple

The 11th week of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished [illegible] and enthusiasm at the Tremont Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the threat of world-war. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine their corollary; the great, all-loving heart of the war President, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North, and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-'70. Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the Flag Day and Bunker Hill Day performances. It is the one big historical entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity with sledgehammer strokes

Boston American
June 20, 1915

A decision of great interest to the theatrical world and the playgoing public was rendered by Judge W. F. Cooper of the Chicago Superior Court June 5 in the case of J. J. McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation" company, versus the city of Chicago. The decision, copies of which have reached Boston, permitted the run of the Griffith film spectacle at the Illinois Theatre in that city.

It seems that Mayor Carter Harrison had granted a license to the film, which the present Mayor, William Hale Thompson, subsequently revoked. Mr. Thompson contended that the play would engender anti-negro animosity. In granting to McCarthy an injunction restraining the Mayor and police chief from interfering with the presentation of the film, the Court said:

"This last ground, that it will engender race animosity, is based purely on assumption. To find that this is a good objection to the allowing of the injunction, this court will have to assume that our white citizens will not know or appreciate the fact that the days represented in the play were early in the first years of the last half century. This court will have to assume that they who will witness the play will be so stupid that they will be unable to comprehend that the people represented on the canvas were of two or three generations ago, and that they do not and will not appreciate the fact that in the succeeding time the negro race has advanced almost immeasurably. . . . This court is satisfied from the evidence that in this photoplay the good black man and the bad white man are equally prominent figures. . . . No one race or nationality has greater right under the law than any other has. Any race or nationality so offended can best give the lie to the bad characters as presented by continuing to conduct themselves as law-abiding citizens, who do not expect greater rights from the law than it allows all other men or nationalities."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD 1707
JUNE 20, 1915

PHOTO-PLAY PRODUCER A "MASTER OF ARTS"

In Making "The Birth of a Nation" Film, David W. Griffith Was Strategist, Actor and Professor of Dancing and Music

David W. Griffith Directing with a Megaphone a Scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

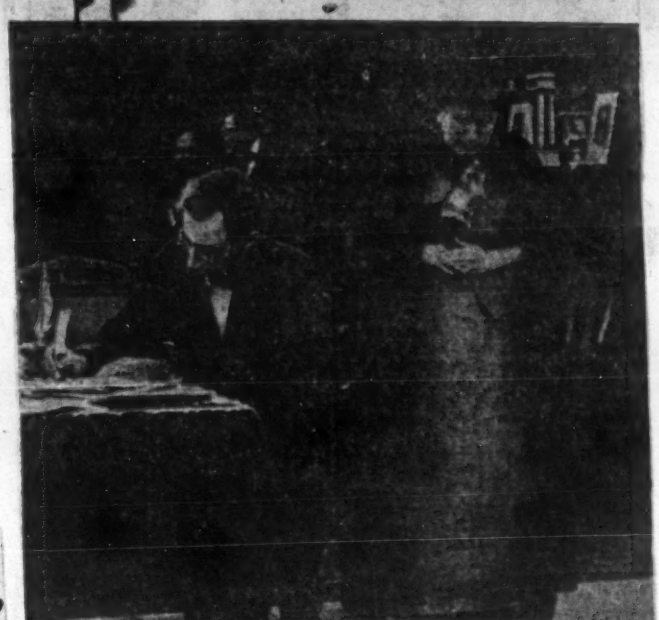
The modern master of the revels—like David W. Griffith in his direction of "The Birth of a Nation" film spectacle at the Tremont Theatre—is required to be a real "master of arts." When this gigantic spectacle was being made Mr. Griffith had four historians on his executive staff. They were grubbing in the libraries for the minute details of civil war battles, Sherman's march, the Appomattox surrender, the Lincoln tragedy in Ford's Theatre, while the director was out on the field turning their raw material into film. In the war drama he had to be strategist, master-actor, judge and jury of costumes, building inspector, musical chief, professor of dancing, inventor of night photography, social director, artist and litterateur.

Next to the battle scenes and the replica of Ford's Theatre on April 14, 1865, the director took the keenest interest in the pictures of southern life and its gayety and dancing. The wizard of the film—himself an expert tangoer and trotter—it is said can costume and stage any sort of dance of which there is printed or pictorial record.

"Dancing is the best of all exercises," said Mr. Griffith the other day, "the earliest of the arts and the latest, not sensual but sensuous. Did you ever stop to think that every conquering people has been a dancing people? If you would win life's battle, why, dance!"

Record, Boston Mass
June 20, 1915

$100,000,000 Film Contract Just Signed by Paramount Co.



SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Globe, Boston Mass
June 20, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"
Pictures at the Tremont

The 11th week of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows continued large attendance and enthusiasm at the Tremont Theatre.

Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the Flag Day and Bunker Hill Day performances. It is the one big historical entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of National solidarity with sledge-hammer strokes. The fascination of the beautiful love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music and the cunning art of the mechanical effects combine to make an entertainment satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatre-goers.

Matinee and evening performances are given at the Tremont

Mass.) POST
JUNE 21, 1915

CORES "BIRTH OF A NATION"

utherner Sees Plot to Disfranchise

The Birth of a Nation" was yester- denounced in Tremont Temple as of a great propaganda to discredit disfranchise the colored man in the th and West of this country. Jo- C. Manning, former Alabama State lator from Birmingham, delivered attack on the film play in the course his address on conditions in the th, as interpreted by him, since the l war.

wo hundred colored persons, where white and colored had been expect- led to the shifting of the meeting m the big church hall into Lorimer ll, in the basement of the building. re were not more than three white ons in the audience to which Man- g lectured, and the speaker was the y white man on the platform, upon ich sat two colored Boston preach- , a colored bail commissioner and Alice W. McKane, also colored, sat.

BOSTON

CORES RULE OF SOUTHERN STATES

C. MANNING FOR HONEST ELECTIONS

ddresses Tremont Temple Au- dien in an Effort to Bring About Election Reforms has never been a Republi- form of government in any ther State even to this hour," s the declaration of Joseph C. nning, who spoke in Lorimer Hall sterday afternoon. Mr. Manning s leader of the Republican-Popu- fusion movement in Alabama in 1, was a member of the State Leg- ature there and organized the uthern Ballot Rights League. hrough this organization 41 Demo- ats returned as elected to Congress ere unseated because of frauds in e election.

According to him the so-called dis- anchisement laws were devised to eet the political situation which was rought about as the result of the xposure of frauds in the black belt, hich resulted in the loss of con- ressional seats. The old system, he ays, was one of dominating by open raud while the present one, he as- erts, is based on manipulation hrough subterfuge of so-called dis- anchisement laws.

Mr. Manning said that he was in he North to make an appeal to pub- ic sentiment in the firm conviction hat once the facts are understood he American people will move to end he present condition.

He went on to tell of the organi- ation of the Ballot Rights League which put up candidates for Con- gress in a number of Southern States. That year, he said, a majority of 1000 was returned in Montgomery County, Alabama, although the polls were not open to all. "Enough evidence of the frauds was secured," said he, "so that we put out 41 Democrats whose seats were contested. Senator Un- derwood was one of them.

"This is not a Southern question because a member of Congress is a representative of the whole American people. The life of the Republican party depends on getting back to those human liberty principles upon which it was founded. The business interests of the North are beginning to realize that if they do not interest themselves in human rights that they are likely to be hurt through the legislation which will be passed.

"You have in this town a picture called 'The Birth of a Nation' which carries some very false ideas. The re- construction policy which was de- vised at Washington was a most beneficial one. The Klu Klux Clan had nothing to do with the negro. It was organized by the Bourbon South to intimidate the native white Southerners who wanted to keep faith with the national government. There was no such thing as domina- tion by the colored people at the time of reconstruction.

"I am here to make an appeal to public conscience in behalf of the same form of representative govern- ment in Alabama as you have in Massachusetts. I want to destroy the southern oligarchy and take it out of power in the nation. I want a great national party that will not be afraid to meet conditions face to face."

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JUNE 21, 1915

Westfield

The management of the Westfield opera house has had a conference with the selectmen relative to the presentation in Westfield of the famous film production, "The Birth of a Nation." From present indications the film will be given in Westfield in the near future, and it will no doubt draw capacity houses.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE 863
AUG. 6, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceed d all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everybody is familiar with the wonderful production it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic links history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's developements and these are contrasted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appommatox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's Theatre, Washington. The South both before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when this marvel ous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade. As but a few performances remain before the end of the run those who have delayed viewing the great production will keep the Tremont Theatre crowded from now until the end of the engagement.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 6, 1915

ASK MAYOR TO BAN "BIRTH OF NATION"

An effort will be made by the negro residents of the city to have Mayor Hathaway forbid the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" which is scheduled to be played in moving pictures at the Orpheum theatre and Thevien theatre, August 25.

Several prominent colored citizens stated this morning that the picture is one to excite racial feeling, and in view of the incidents which took place in Boston pressure will be brought to bear not to have the picture shown in this city.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 7, 1915

GRIFFITH FILM TO GO IN TWO WEEKS

"The Birth of a Nation" will end the last week but two of its stay in Boston at the Tremont Theatre this evening. These motion pictures of war-time days continue the talk of the town and no matter what the weather may be, the Tremont Theatre is sure to be crowded to the doors twice a day.

The interest in this prodigious picture of Civil War and Reconstruction days is just as great as ever, and one has to secure seats at the Tremont Theatre far in advance to get choice places to witness the spectacle. Notwithstanding this interest there can be no extension of the Boston engagement, so it is said. On account of the elaborate nature of the musical effects and the incidental features, which add so much to the charm and the historical effectiveness of the offering, the Tremont production cannot be given in any other city in New England.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 7, 1915

Regarding the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," which is scheduled to come here August 25, Fred R. Munroe a leader in the negro set, yesterday said: "I believe that this play, like others of its sort, does no good for our people. Our progress is already beset with enough barriers and difficulties. The mayor did right in forbidding "The Nigger," and I hope his action in "The Birth of a Nation" which created riots in Boston and other places will be along the same line."

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 7, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everybody is familiar with the wonderful production it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic links history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's developements and these are contrasted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appommatox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's Theatre, Washington. The South both before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when this marvel ous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade. As but a few performances remain before the end of the run those who have delayed viewing the great production will keep the Tremont Theatre crowded from now until the end of the engagement.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) HOMESTEAD
AUG. 7, 1915

One of D. W. Griffith's thrilling war-time productions, made by him before he evolved "The Birth of a Nation," is shown as an extra feature. In addition there are comedy and news pictures and the Strand concert, with Miss Autumn Hall as violin soloist.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
AUG. 7, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

Before half the people who have been eager to see D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity, the run of this production will have terminated, as only two weeks remain. During its stay "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic links history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's developments and these are contrasted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appommatox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's Theatre, Washington. The South, both before and after the war, is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when this marvellous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade. As but a few more performances remain before the end of the run those who have delayed viewing the great production will keep the Tremont Theatre crowded from now unt the end of the engagement.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUNE 22, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

The 125th Boston performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. Bunker Hill day and Saturday crowds were among the largest seen at this cool and well ventilated playhouse. A large advance sale is in hand for the next few weeks, including the double holiday over the Fourth of July.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
JUNE 22, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The 125th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. The splendid attendance continues at both matinee and night representations. The Bunker Hill Day and Saturday crowds were among the largest ever seen at this cool and well ventilated playhouse. A large advance sale is in hand for the next few weeks, including the double holiday over the Fourth of July. Mr. Griffith's historical spectacle is the only regular theatrical attraction booked in Boston for the Summer season.

BOSTON TRAVELER
JUNE 22, 1915

Tremont Theatre—Birth of a Nation

The 125th Boston performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. A large advance sale is in hand for the next few weeks, including the double holiday over the Fourth of July. Mr. Griffith's historical spectacle is the only regular theatrical attraction booked in Boston for the summer season. It is planned to keep it open most of the summer. The play combines spectacle, comedy, tragedy, romance and historical material in one of the most thrilling entertainments ever put before the public. It is particularly timely now because the civil war episodes in "The Birth of a Nation" reflect the national patriotism at its finest.

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
JUNE 22, 1915

99

"BIRTH OF A NATION" PRESENTED 125 TIMES

The 125th Boston performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. The attendance continues strong at both matinee and night representations. A large advance sale is in hand for the next few weeks, including the double holiday over the Fourth of July. It is planned to keep the show running most of the summer, and out-of-town visitors will find the Tremont an interesting place to visit any afternoon or evening except Sunday. The play combines spectacle, comedy, tragedy, romance and historical material in one of the most thrilling entertainments ever put before the public.

BOSTON (Mass.) HERALD
JUNE 22, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

The 125th Boston performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon.

A large advance sale is in hand for the next few weeks, including the double holiday over the Fourth of July. It is planned to keep Mr Griffith's historical spectacle in Boston for most of the Summer, and out-of-town visitors will find the Tremont an interesting place of visit any afternoon or evening except Sunday. The play combines spectacle, comedy, tragedy, romance and historical material in one of the most thrilling picture entertainments ever presented.

Record. Chelsea, Mass. June 22

"The Birth of a Nation" has been heralded from one end of the country to the other as the master picture of the age and dramatic critics wonder at the magnitude of its popularity. But old picture men are not at all surprised at it. It's simply another case of a showman, the right man with the right goods. It's producer has done hundreds of single and two-reel pictures that in proportion are just as artistic, just as big in every way.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 22, 1915

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 22, 1915

Birth of a Nation Reaches 125th Performance in Boston

By Esther Hoffman

The 125th Boston performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. The splendid attendance continues at both matinee and night representations. The Bunker Hill day and Saturday crowds were among the largest ever seen at this cool and well ventilated playhouse. A large advance sale is in hand for the next few weeks, including the double holiday over the Fourth of July. Mr. Griffith's historical spectacle is the only regular theatrical attraction booked in Boston for the summer season.

It is planned to keep it open most of the summer, and out of town visitors will find the Tremont by far the most interesting place in town to visit any afternoon or evening except Sunday. The play combines spectacle, comedy, tragedy, romance and historical material in one of the most thrilling entertainments ever put before the public.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 22, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recogaized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The ques of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

CLIPPING FROM JUN 23 1915

NEW YORK DRAMATIC MIRROR

1871 BOSTON

ops the Glory of the Hub—Some Legitimate, But "Movie" Is the Thing

Boston, June 22 (Special).—Theatricals here are very quiet, and every week sees fewer places of amusement open. The Castle Square continues its policy of giving its patrons as great a variety as possible. Last week it was plays, as All the Comforts of Home, a Gillette's farce. All the Craig patrons, that interested Mr. Craig's patrons. The fact that delightful comedy, in which Mary Ann Dentler and Ellis Shannon appeared. A melodrama follows, and next week comes a mystery play, The Yellow Ticket. No week of Russell Hill. The Craig Players have good opportunity to show that the Craig Players in all styles of acting. Under the management Mr. Craig is investing with to perfect themselves in all styles of acting. At the Majestic Edmund Breese is covering with success in Porter Emerson Browne's play of The Spendthrift. Last year he came to the Majestic in The Lion and the Mouse, and other plays in which he had made a name for himself, and was warmly received. Next week at the Majestic there will be no visiting company, for the management has decided to try the play for the summer. The Woman acted by the Lenox Players. Both the Castle Square and the Majestic are doing so well that at present there seems little chance of their closing. There are plenty of legitimate drama, and for whom pictures and vaudeville have no attractions.

Another theater that is likely to remain open, probably all Summer, is the Tremont, where The Birth of a Nation is doing a remarkable business. Probably no attraction ever seen in a Boston playhouse has met with so much opposition as this, but now it has settled down for a run, and people crowd the theater to see why there should have been any complaint. New films showing the manner in which the negro has risen since the war, including pictures of Hampton Institute, add to the interest of the film. Symphony Hall, one of our Boston institutions, the Pops, held every Summer in symphony Hall, had its season shortened this year. The musicians at these concerts, seventy in number, come from the Boston Symphony orchestra, and on account of the trip which the orchestra took to the San Francisco Exposition the season is to last but five weeks. Then in this short time we have three concerts, one after the other, so that patrons of the concerts will get a good idea of the qualities of leadership in several of the symphony players. There have been many special nights than there have been, for these nights have grown in popularity, and now in addition to the nights for the colleges, the women's clubs and the preparatory schools are getting their share. Some of the larger colleges make a great feature of the occasions when they are represented, the clubs and the singers practice so as to show their friends how well they can entertain them. Amherst and Williams have always had good singing, and this year Dartmouth is making a special effort to have its singing excel any of the others.

Moving pictures occupy such a large place in the minds of amusement seekers here that it is only when something special is brought to the notice of the public that one realizes the great number of the "film houses." Just now Huntington Avenue is much talk because the Park, which has always given one of the best entertainments in town with good pictures, an organ and an orchestra, is raising its prices. The Park is crowded every night. One regular patron tells me that in six or eight weeks he has never succeeded in getting a seat outside the gallery, but only after a wait. Not far from the Park is the huge Boston Theater, capable of seating over three thousand people, and it is a sight to delight the heart of any manager to see the steady flow of people coming from their evening's pleasure at the latter coming from their evening's pleasure at the latter. There are numerous houses on both sides of Washington street, several of them not far from the two theaters mentioned, and all of them seemingly are enjoying great prosperity.

The new playhouse of Mr. Craig's is now getting under way, and before long it will be possible to give some particulars in regard to it, but if that manager continues to do as good business as he has since the first of the year he need be in no hurry to open another theater.

J. B. CLAPP.

WALT[illegible] (Mass.) FREE PRESS
JUNE 23 1915

FILM PLAY DRAWS MANY

"Birth of a Nation" Has Large Audiences

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily, except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvelous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

MILFORD (Mass.) NEWS
JUNE 23, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Is the Mecca of Crowds From All Over New England.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil war and reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily, except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvelous depiction of the colored man's progress since reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton institute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors, created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill, pass the play, but the courts of Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February, when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 23, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiam are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvelous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

Chronicle
Brookline Mass
6-26-15

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be presented to full houses at the Tremont Theatre, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The provincial and unreasonable opposition to the play has practically disappeared. It is recognized that the showing up of the carpet-bagger and of the negro excesses during Reconstruction is counter-balanced by the presentation of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill passed the play, the courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running there as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 24, 1915

...the report published in the ... several weeks ago—that D. W. Griffith, ... "Birth of a Nation" fame, is working ... new picture-film to be entitled "The Mother and the Law." It is said to be a moving presentation of a phase of the woman's rights question. The film play is now being staged out in California. Among the players are Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who took prominent part in "The Birth of a Nation" production, which will soon celebrate its 150th Boston performance at the Tremont.

On July 8 a special excursion train from Portland will bring hundreds of down East folks to see "The Birth of a Nation."

Speaking of the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination, which The Journal reported yesterday as having already made plans to present De Wolf Hopper and Douglas Fairbanks in 2 photoplays, one of Mr. Griffith's representatives said that it "probably marks a cleavage between '10-cent' film directorship on the one hand and the big feature directorship on the other. This cleavage has long been foreseen. There is no more reason for the close association of cheap and high-class film making than there would be for the putting forth of Bowery melodramas and highbrow artistic productions under the aegis of the same theatrical firm. It is evident that the production of the $1 and $2 movie, like everything else, is to be specialized."

The whole trend of the movies, except possibly in the comedy film, is toward artistic ideals, irrespective of price. The standard for the $1 film has been set by "The Birth of a Nation," and it will be no easy standard to maintain.

"The only way we could handle them was by military discipline," said Mr. Griffith the other day, speaking of the thousands of players employed in the production of "The Birth of a Nation." There were 18,000 employed from time to time during the six months it took to make the film. In all 4500 negroes were engaged. They were the easiest to handle," is Mr. Griffith's compliment to them. The negro is a natural actor, and I do not mind saying that among the 4500 of them we took out of the fields, the shops, and wherever else we could get the right ones, we found some with remarkable talent. A producer some day may put forth the drama of the negro on the screen—and he will find competent men and women of that race to portray his characters."

Discipline required the division of the army of players into sections, each section being commanded by a captain and staff, and in the big battle scenes the different sections were kept working in orderly fashion by means of an improvised telephone system. Some of the scenes which come along in orderly rotation on the screen at the Tremont were staged months apart. That made the work more difficult, for care had to be taken to see that the hero had not meantime changed the curl of his mustache or the heroine the style of her dress; but Mr. Griffith says that the film simply had to be made in that catch-as-catch-can way or not at all.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
6-24-15

Barouche of Ante-Bellum Days Makes a Hit in Country

By Esther Hoffman

A bit of "The Birth of a Nation" has startled the quiet villagers and townsfolk of various New England communities the last two weeks. It will be remembered that the Piedmont, S. C., scene in the Tremont Theatre spectacle shows the young folks of the North and the South in the old fashioned barouche in which people went riding in ante bellum days.

Seated in the barouche were the pair of sweethearts—Col. Ben Cameron, the southern hero, and Miss Elsie Stoneman, the northern lassie; Capt. Phil Stopeman, the young Federal officer, and Miss Margaret Cameron, his southern flame.

This is the scene that has been reproduced through the efforts of Frank A. Johnson, the outdoor publicity expert of "The Birth of a Nation" Company, and A. L. Grey, the assistant manager. Mr. Grey arranged for the costumes of the young ladies which are in the very period of 1861. They are heavy, stiff crinolines, and the faces of the girl wearers are set off by charming pink and blue bonnets. The young women hand out beautifully engraved invitations which at first seem to be wedding invitations. The young officers distribute matter illustrative of the play.

To the elderly people, particularly in the smaller cities, the appearance of "The Birth of a Nation" barouche, with the quaint sweethearts in the body of it, has come almost like a shock—the strange, vivid renewal of by-gone times. Occasionally old ladies have come out of stately colonial homes and affectionately embraced the young girls in the barouche. Last week the exhibit was the hit of the festivities in connection with the Maine State Fair at Portland.

WORCESTER (Mass.) POST
JUNE 24 1915

Royal Theater

Mae Marsh the star of the "Birth of a Nation" says that she has never so thoroughly enjoyed appearing in a photoplay as she did in "Her Shattered Idol" a Griffith Master-Picture just finished and appearing at the Royal Theater today for its final exhibition. The story of a girl's mistaken impression that muscle and brawn makes the "man." Impressed with the great strength of a blacksmith the girl discards her "gentleman" lover. How the latter rescues the girl and her "smithy" friend from death by the use of his brains when the brawn of the blacksmith fail, forms a splendid lesson. Tomorrow Dorothy Gish will be featured in a two-reel special feature "Out of Bondage" and Charlie Chaplin in a comedy.

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 24, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Is the Mecca of Crowds From All Over New England

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil war and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvelous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

WORCESTER (Mass.) GAZETTE
JUNE

...ots Wednesday ... Governor.

"SHATTERED IDOL" AT ROYAL THEATRE

Mae Marsh, the star of "The Birth of a Nation," is very charming in the Griffith Master-Picture shown today and tomorrow at the Royal theatre, called "Her Shattered Idol." "The Artist's Model," a two reel special featuring Violet MacMillan, is good, and other picture plays are fully up to the standard set by the Royal.

...NCY (Mass.) LEDGER
JUNE 25, 1915

...to Boston

TREMONT THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the Summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counterbalanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the Courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

SOMERVILLE (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 25, 1915

new conductor, whose term of service ends Saturday evening, has become a favorite and show that he is decidedly well-fitted for the place. Mr. Lenom, who succeeds him, has ended the Pop season for the past two years and has made many friends.

Tremont Theatre.—"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and reconstruction times, continues to be the great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpet bagger and negro excesses during the reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored ...'s progress since reconstruction.

NATICK (Mass.) BULLETIN
JUNE 25, 1915

...Boylston Street, Boston.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation," David Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont theatre, Boston, twice daily, except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasmare as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good an bad characters of both white and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the courts in Thicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

WATERTOWN (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 25, 1915

THEATRES

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Is the Mecca of Crowds From All Over New England.

"The Birth of a Nation", David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the Summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has most disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvelous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularlyg by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Ilstitute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the courts in Chicago ave autorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) GLOBE
JUNE 25, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Scene From Famous Play Produced in Fall River Streets Yesterday.

A remarkable piece of advertising was seen yesterday in the streets of this city in a reproduction of a scene from D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now being produced at the Liberty theatre, New York and the Tremont theatre, Boston.

Elsie Stoneman and Margaret Cameron are seen in an oldfashioned barouche just as they walked out of the Cameron House in Piedmont, S. C. 45 years ago and took a drive over the Southern city. Opposite them are Col. Ben Cameron, the Confederate soldier in gray, and Captain Phil Stoneman, the Federal soldier in blue. This "Birth of a Nation" b rouche, reviving with its oldfashion'd air the costumes and atmosphere of nearly half a century ago, has been all over New England and has elicited golden comments. It was seen at the Maine State Fair in Portland last week and pleased Governor Curtis. While it was passing through the streets of Portland some of the most prominent residents, elderly women, came out and threw their arms around the necks of the girls, saying that it brought back romantic memories of the past. The stunt is in the charge of Frank A. Johnson, a veteran advertising man, who has staged some of the biggest outdoor publicity enterprises in this country.

David W. Griffith's play is said to be the most remarkable revelation of Civil war and reconstruction times ever offered to the public. It has been witnessed by packed houses for months and months in Boston and New York. Anyone visiting those cities should not neglect to include "The Birth of a Nation," in his or her plans, as it is described as the eighth wonder of the world, the biggest amusement feature that has ever been presented in this or any other country.

...PORT BEACH OPENING

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 25, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiam are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 26, 1915

"Birth of a Nat
Its 150th Bosto

By Esther Hoffman

It seems impossible to realize that the 150th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre is approaching, yet such is the fact and the century and a half of performances will be rounded out during the Independence Day holidays. The great picture and its wonderful accessories remain as striking as ever. On patriotic holidays, especially, the applause for the Civil War scenes and the Clan rides is almost deafening. Every scene is followed with intensest interest, showing that Griffith wrought with a master hand.

It is probable that "The Birth of a Nation" will attain a record breaking run in this city, surpassing the achievements of any of the so-called "Legitimate" plays. Mr. Griffith's spectacle remains the only great Summer dramatic and spectacular entertainment in New England. Visitors have flocked from far and near to see it in the past week, and during Fourth of July week the crowds should be still greater. A special excursion on the Boston & Maine from Portland and intervening towns will bring in many patrons on July 8th.

Tremont. The Birth of a Nation.

A filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spec-

CHARLESTOWN (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 26, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation," Davis W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and reconstruction times continues to be presented to enormous houses at the Tremont theatre daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpet-bagger and negro excesses during the reconstruction period is counterbalanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored man's progress since reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. It is calculated that since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

REVERE (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 26, 1915 765

JUNE 26, 1915.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the reconstruction period is counter-balanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored man's progress since reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great western city, as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 26, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" MAKING RECORD RUN

The 150th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre is approaching. The remarkable picture remains as striking as ever. Every scene is followed with intensest interest, showing that D. W. Griffith wrought with a master hand. It is probable that "The Birth of a Nation" will attain a record-breaking run in this city.

Visitors have flocked from far and near to see this big Civil War film during the past week. A special excursion on the Boston and Maine from Portland and intervening towns will bring in many patrons on July 8.

DORCHESTER (Mass.) BEACON
JUNE 26, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counterbalanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute.

BRAINTREE (Mass.) OBSERVER 13
JUNE 26, 1915

Henry B. Vinton"

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Now that the Birth of A Nation has somewhat subsided and a calmer and more unprejudiced view can be taken of the situation, the net result of the whole excessive and excited protest seems to be valuable and almost unlimited advertising for the production, and a consequent swelling of the purses of the producers. And besides, after many competent judges and unprejudiced spectators have seen the films, the evidence seems to indicate that the protestants have protested too much and unwisely. Many of the films are commonplace and certainly not worth the price of the tickets, which price thousands of patrons have paid entirely because of the free and prolific advertising the crusade against the production has given it. Many zealous reformers and highminded citizens appear not yet to have learned that ignoring an undesirable thing before the public is a more effective way of killing it than advertising it by indiscriminate and intemperate protestations.—Jamaica Plain News.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 26, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD

t 99-15

TREMONT THEATRE

The 137th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. There is no diminution of public interest in this wonderful spectacle. David W. Griffith drew on material of almost every kind of drama in the unfolding of the story. Exciting scenes follow each other in such rapid succession that the spectator is held spellbound. Civil war battles and momentous reconstruction events are shown. The remarkable reproduction of President Lincoln's assassination is a feature.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 29, 1915

No Falling Off In Interest In "Birth of a Nation"

By Esther Hoffman

The 137th performance of "The Birth of a Nation," took place at Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. There seems to be no diminution in the tremendous interest of the New England public in this wonderful spectacle. As the pioneer example of the new camera art, "The Birth of a Nation" has proved the big sensation of the theatrical year. The producer, David W. Griffith, drew on the material of almost every kind of drama in the unfoldment of the story.

Exciting scenes follow each other in such rapid succession that the spectator is held spell-bound. Civil War battles and momentous Reconstruction events are shown in "locations" of rare natural beauty, and are peopled with immense throngs of fighters or clansmen, armies that seem to stretch into the infinite distance.

These are relieved by domestic phases of life, charming with their love scenes and full of romantic flavor. The remarkable reproduction of President Lincoln's assassination, and the fac simile appearances of other great national characters like Grant and Lee, Sumner and Stevens, appeal to even the most jaded interest.

women's orchestra of Boston, include Charlie Chaplin in a new comedy pic- ture play and Mary Pickford in a delightful romance with the famous million-dollar cast.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUN 29 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

The 137th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon.

There seems to be no diminution in the tremendous interest of the New England public in this wonderful spectacle. As the pioneer example of the new camera art, "The Birth of a Nation" has proved the big sensation of the theatrical year. The producer, David W. Griffith, drew on the material of almost every kind of drama in the unfoldment of the story. Exciting scenes follow each other in such rapid succession that the spectator is held spellbound. Civil War battles and momentous Reconstruction events are shown in "locations" of rare natural beauty, and are peopled with immense throng of fighters or clansmen, armies that seem to stretch into the infinite distance.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT

t 99-6

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the [illegible] spectacle.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 9, 1915

COMING TO BROCKTON

Birth of a Nation Will Be Seen at Hathaway Theater.

"The Birth of a Nation," the greatest conception ever produced as a photoplay, will be presented at Hathaway theater the week of Aug. 23. The production, after several months during which time every seat has been taken for every performance at the Tremont theater, Boston, will close there Aug. 21 and will come direct to this city.

Manager J. Joseph Cahill has been in conference with D. W. Griffith's representative for several days since the closing of the show in Boston was announced, and the question that might prejudice Griffith's manager from appearing here are the prices which the Hathaway management would feel satisfied to ask. The prices in Boston are from 25 cents to $2.

Brockton has never been a $2 show town and managers here do not expect patrons would pay that price, so that some compromise on that score will have to be effected. Mr. Cahill has a conference arranged in Boston tomorrow and it is believed satisfactory arrangements will be made.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 29, 1915

Tremont Theatre

The 137th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. There seems to be no diminution in the interest of the New England public in this wonderful spectacle. As the pioneer example of the new camera art, "The Birth of a Nation" has proved the big sensation of the theatrical year. The producer, David W. Griffith, drew on the material of almost every kind of drama in the unfoldment of the story. Exciting scenes follow each other in such rapid succession that the spectator is spellbound. The remarkable reproduction of President Lincoln's assassination, and the fac-simile appearances of other great national characters like Grant and Lee, Sumner and Stevens, appeal to even the

CUTTE (Mont.) POST
JUNE 29, 1915

14

WALTHALL IN EPOCH MAKING MASTER PICTURE

The reputation built upon his appealing work in the wonderful Griffith picture, "The Birth of a Nation," is as nothing to that which will come home to rest upon the shoulders of Henry B. Walthall as soon as the general public has seen his masterly, soul-tearing performance as Oswald in "The Ghosts," the five-part masterpiece founded on Ibsen's play and declared by a prominent clergyman to be the greatest exhortation ever delivered against vice. The fact that this picture is said to mark an epoch in the motion art and to have registered the accomplishment of the impossible is, in part, a tribute to the illuminating power of Mr. Walthall's acting. Today is your last opportunity to witness this wonderful drama upon the screen at the Orpheum theater.

Coming tomorrow, Thursday and Friday, the famous Butte actress, Kathlyn Williams, in the great five-part oriental sensation, "The Carpet from Bagdad."

"Birth of a Nation" Has Only Three Weeks More

These are the last nights of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, where this remarkable photo-play has held the stage since the opening of the summer. Bostonians have seemed to be of the opinion that "The Birth of a Nation" would be a permanent feature on the local stage, or at the very least would remain here for months to come. That is positively out of the question, however. The interest in "The Birth of a Nation" is just as great as ever and one has to buy seats far in advance, or else wait for a long time in an extended line in front of the box office window. Managers in other cities are insistent in their calls for "The Birth of a Nation" with its vivid presentation of the battle scenes of the Civil War, the assassination of President Lincoln, the mob rule of the Reconstruction period and the romantic chivalry of the Ku Klux Klan.

most commanding figure on the American stage. His work in the spoken version of Sir Gilbert's great novel stamped him as an actor of the greatest powers and skill, but it is in the film production that Mr. Faversham easily stands head and shoulders above all other actors of his time.

Caroline B. Nichols and Fadettes continue their popular daily concerts, and other features include Charlie Chaplin in a merry comedy, and Mary Pickford in another captivating romance.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 29, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

The 137th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. There seems to be no diminution in the lively interest New Englanders are taking in this wonderful photo-spectacle. The producer, David W. Griffith, has started a boom for the $2 picture play. Exciting scenes follow one another in rapid succession. Civil War battles and Reconstruction episodes predominate, but the love story of young folks representing North and South is cleverly interwoven. There are two performances daily.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 29, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) EVE. UNIO
JUNE 30, 1915

Ernesto Today, Albert Meecham, John Shock, John Mitkin, Charles Dudge, Harold Loepo, Robert "Mansfield" [illegible] Martin and [illegible] Jones.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" EXHIBIT.

A remarkable piece of advertising is being seen today in the streets of Springfield in a reproduction of a scene from D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented at the Liberty Theater, New York, and the Tremont Theater, Boston.

Elsie Stoneman and Margaret Cameron are seen in an old-fashioned barouche just as they walked out of the Cameron House in Piedmont, S. C., 45 years ago and took a drive over the Southern city. Opposite them are Col. Ben Cameron, the Confederate soldier in gray, and Capt. Phil Stoneman, the Federal soldier in blue. This "Birth of a Nation" barouche, reviving with its old-fashioned air the costumes and atmosphere of nearly half a century ago, has been all over New England. It was seen at the Maine State fair in Portland and pleased Gov. Curtis. While it was passing through the streets of Portland some of the most prominent residents, elderly women, came out and threw their arms around the necks of the girls, saying that it brought back romantic memories of the past. The stunt is in charge of Frank A. Johnson, a veteran advertising man, who has staged some of the biggest outdoor publicity enterprises in this city.

David W. Griffith's play is said to be the most remarkable revelation of civil war and reconstruction times ever offered to the public. It has been witnessed by packed houses for months and months in Boston [illegible] New York.

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 30, 1915

[illegible] living of the great master.

D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has decided upon his next multiple reel feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title is to be "The Mother and the Law." He is now at the Griffith headquarters, the Reliance-Majestic studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, California. He is in the midst of preparations for the filming of "The Mother and the Law."

The plot and the theme other than as indicated in the title have not been announced but will be made known at the proper time. Mr. Griffith has, however, selected his cast. Prominent among the Griffith players who are to appear before the camera in "The Mother and the Law" are Mae Marsh, the Griffith actress who will be remembered as Florence Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation"; Robert Harron, who has appeared in the Griffith features, "The Battle of the Sexes," "Judith of Bethula," "The Escape," "The Avenging Conscience" and "Home, Sweet Home"; Mirian Cooper, who has a prominent role in "The Birth of a Nation"; Mary Alden, remembered for the performance of the mulatto in "The Birth of a Nation" and as the mother in "The Battle of the Sexes"; Ralph Lewis, the "Stoneman" in "The Birth of a Nation," and Walter Long, the "Gus" in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Griffith is determined that "The Mother and the Law" shall maintain the high standing of "The Birth of a Nation" which is playing to two dollar prices in some of the principal cities of the country.

Charles West, one of the most recent acquisitions of the Reliance and Majestic, is studying Italian life in America.

A two reel Majestic scenario is being written with scenes laid in this country, but with an Italian lead. West is to play it.

On one occasion, West played an Italian role in a picture produced by D. W. Griffith several years ago. He played it so well that when Manager of Production Frank E. Woods started to think of the cast for the forthcoming feature, his first thought was Charles West for the lead.

The title has not been selected for this forthcoming Majestic. It is very probable that Tod Browning will be assigned to the producing of the photoplay.

CLIPPING FROM News
SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) UNION
7-1-15

D. W. Grimth has decided upon his next multiple reel feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title is to be "[illegible] and the Law." He is now at the Grifith headquarters, the Reliance-Majestic studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, Cal. He is in the midst of preparations for the filming of "The Mother and the Law." The plot and the theme other than as indicated in the title have not been announced but will be made known at the proper time. Mr. Griffith has, however, selected his cast. Prominent among the Griffith players who are to appear before the camera in "The Mother and the Law" are Mae Marsh, the Griffith actress who will be remembered as Florence Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation"; Robert Harron, who has appeared in the Griffith features, "The Battle of the Sexes," "Judith of Bethulia," "The Escape," "The Avenging Conscience" and "Home, Sweet Home"; Miriam Cooper, who has a prominent role in "The Birth of a Nation"; Mary Alden, remembered for the performance of the mulatto in "The Birth of a Nation" and as the mother in "The Battle of the Sexes"; Ralph Lewis, the "Stoneman" in "The Birth of a Nation," and Walter Long, the "Gus" in "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Griffith is determined that "The Mother and the Law" shall maintain the high standing of "The Birth of a Nation."

"The Island of Surprise"

NEWTON (Mass.) GRAPHIC
JULY 2, 1915

[illegible] street attended the annual recital of the Makechnie Violin School, held Monday evening at Riverbank Court, Cambridge.

TREMONT THEATRE — Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love-play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect. Spectators applaud more than they do at dramas showing flesh-and-blood actors, just as the screen play is so much larger and more impressive than the old style stage drama. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sundays.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JUNE 30, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April [illegible]th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiam are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
JUNE 30, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The 137th performance of "The Birth of a Nation" took place at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon. There seems to be no diminution in the tremendous interest of the New England public in this wonderful spectacle. As the pioneer example of the new camera art, "The Birth of a Nation" has proved the big sensation of the theatrical year. The producer, David W. Griffith, drew on the material of almost every kind of drama in the unfoldment of the story.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 2, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays. Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiam are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races.

the wa[illegible]

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 2, 1915

Holidays at the Tremont.

"The Birth of a Nation" attracts Visitors from all over New England.

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common. Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as Art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect.

For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusetts. This opposition has died away. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in Reconstruction times are freely exhibited these are more than counterbalanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sunday. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8th. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont Theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JULY 1, 1915

De Wolf Hopper's Reasons For Going Into the Movies

By Esther Hoffman

DeWolf Hopper has been telling a New York pressman why he has accepted a flattering offer from D. W. Griffith [illegible] Birth of a Nation" fame, to go into posing for motion pictures. A remarkable thing about Mr. Hopper's advent into the new game is that he is not merely taking a flyer as most actors do, but has booked himself for an entire season with the possibility of even double that term of service. The plans for Hopper are first to put him in a film dramatization with music of the grand opera "Don Quixote," and then to present in spectacular form others of the operas, the elongated comedian to furnish the funny stuff and the orchestra the operatic music. Here are Hopper's reasons for trying the game:

"After five seasons in Gilbert & Sullivan we had largely exhausted the inviting territory and it would have had to lie fallow for a while anyway. This is reason number one. Second, I have been tremendously impressed by the work that Mr. Griffith has done in motion pictures. He is a genius—make no mistake about that. It so happens that the offer came to me two days after I had first seen 'The Birth of a Nation.' Frankly, before I saw that, I had not cared a rap for the movies. I went there under protest at the persuasion of Mrs. Hopper and Digby Bell. I saw an audience spellbound as I have rarely seen an audience held in the theatre. I saw their excitement, saw their tears. The picture itself, with its many infinitely dramatic touches—strokes of genius—struck me as something big, something new; something important. I came out dazed.

"The third and final reason was the offer Mr. Griffith made me which was like a fact in a fairy tale. It would have been criminal for me to refuse. William A. Brady kindly released me at once on my promise to come back to him when I come back to the stage. He said I would be a fool not to take this."

"Tis said that the sum which tempted the comic Hopper was $125,000. This amounts to the modest little stipend of something over $2400 per week.

[illegible] ENTERPRISE
JULY [illegible], 1915

THEATRES

HOLIDAYS AT THE TREMONT.

'The Birth of a Nation" Attracts Visitors from All Over New England.

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love-play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect. Spectators applaud more than they do at dramas showing flesh-and-blood actors, just as the screen play is so much larger and more impressive than the old style stage drama. For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusetts. This opposition has died away. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in Reconstruction times are freely exhibited these are more than counter balanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sundays. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8th. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont Theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

SOMERVILLE (Mass.) JOURNAL
JULY 2, 1915

Tremont Theatre. Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common. Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as Art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses.

CTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD 170
JULY 3, 1915

BOSTON & MAINE PAYS LAWLER FEE OF $11,000

John F. Cusick Receives $3000 from Film Play Company.

A fee of $11,000 was paid to George L. Mayberry, attorney for the trustees representing the interest of the New Haven railroad in Boston & Maine stock, according to a statement filed with the secretary of state yesterday by former Judge Knowlton, chairman of the trustees. Judge Knowlton states that Mr. Mayberry was retained by the trustees to examine the statutes of Massachusetts and four other states, as well as conditions in the several states preparatory to filing a bill for the reorganization of the Boston & Maine system.

At the conclusion of his work the trustees were of the opinion that it had been performed for the benefit of the railroad corporation, and that the Boston & Maine should pay the bill, which it did. The return further states that in the opinion of the trustees $2500 is the amount which should be apportioned for Mr. Mayberry's services in Massachusetts, the balance of the $11,000 being apportioned for work in the other states.

John F. Cusick, lawyer, received $3000 from the Epoch Film Company as payment for [illegible] in opposing legislation hostile to "The Birth of a Nation," photo-play.

The Master Bakers' Association paid McDonald and Graham $200 for legislative work and paid Edwin A. Bayley, legislative counsel, $400.

Arthur Joslin paid Davis B. Keniston, Jr., $150 for work in connection with the Boston building laws.

D. Whiting & Sons paid John F. Cusick $500 for work in connection with legislation affecting dairy products.

Fleischman Company paid John F. Cusick $250 for work in connection with legislation affecting its interests.

The C. Brigham Company paid John F. Cusick $500 for services on "dairy" legislation.

The Massachusetts Tax Association paid Atty. John A. Curtin $2000.

The Springfield Gas Light Company paid Burdett, Wardwell and Ives $650.

The Malden Electric Company paid Burdett, Wardwell and Ives $750.

The Malden & Melrose Gas Light Company paid Burdett, Wardwell and Ives $700.

The Fitchburg Gas and Electric Company paid Burdett, Wardwell and Ives $150.

The Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children paid [illegible] A. Lowell $[illegible].

Record
Boston American
7-3-15

Tremont Theatre FF

The most extraordinary run in the history of Boston theatricals is now in its fourth month at the Tremont Theatre. David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has now been shown there nearly 150 times—equivalent to half a year's run of the old-fashioned kind. The play is on view twice daily instead of only eight times a week, and it is estimated that nearly a quarter of a million New Englanders have seen it; a considerable percentage of the 1,500,000 patrons that have enthusiastically endorsed the presentations in Boston, New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Today and likewise on Monday "The Birth of a Nation" will be the mecca of the Fourth of July crowds. No Sunday performances are given. The play has a vital appeal to all who value Independence Day, as well as the appeal of tremendous dramatic force and delightful romantic charm to the theatregoer of every clime and nation. It shows America re-born in the crucible fires of 1861-70, emerging an united nation ready to face the whole world in arms, if need be.

[illegible] 17[illegible]

[illegible] week's bill.

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation FF

A filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

[illegible] JOURNAL 17[illegible]
[illegible]

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN ITS FOURTH MONTH

The most extraordinary photoplay in the history of Boston theatricals is now in its fourth month at the Tremont Theatre. David W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has now been shown there nearly 150 times—equivalent to half a year's run of the old-fashioned kind. The play is on view twice daily, and it is estimated that nearly a quarter of a million New Englanders have seen it—a considerable percentage of the 1,500,000 patrons that have enthusiastically indorsed the presentations in Boston, New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The play is historical and romantic, picturing Civil War battle scenes in marvelous fashion and touching tenderly on love stories involving young folks on both sides of the Mason and [illegible]

WORCESTER [illegible] GAZETTE

May 3 1915

BIG SPECTACLE FF

"The Birth of a Nation" is now running at the Tremont Theater, Boston, and in New York at the Liberty Theater to big houses twice a day. David W. Griffith, who made "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle, believes that the future of dramatic art lies in the screen. On April 1, 1914, he set to work laying the ground plans for this picture. Griffith's poetic imagination stretches across dreamy dales, through swaying trees, back to distant mountains with their snow-covered tops blazing in the sunlight. It reaches across the lapping waves of the deep blue sea. And then in a flash you see great plains and on them nations grappling in their death throes and worlds battling for military supremacy.

Boston—Tremont

fifth's marvelous spectacle of the American era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Tremont Theatre. Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the Flag Day and Bunker Hill Day performances.

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE 528
JULY 3, 1915

THEATRICAL NOTES AND ALL THE LATE NEWS OF THE MOVIES

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the midsummer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. On Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common. Within the cool Tremont theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil war and reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality.

Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love-play tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect. Spectators applaud more than they do at dramas showing flesh and blood actors, just as the screen play is so much larger and more impressive than the old style stage drama. For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusets. This opposition has died away. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in Reconstruction times are freely exhibited, these are more than counterbalanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sundays. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

WALTHAM [illegible] FREE PRESS 5[illegible]
JULY [illegible]

TWO

PICTURE DRAWS LARGE CROWDS

"Birth of a Nation" Mecca of Many Visitors

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston.

Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common. Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as Art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love-play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect. Spectators applaud more than they do at dramas showing flesh and blood actors, just as the screen play is so much larger and more impressive than the old-style stage drama. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and evening except Sundays. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8th. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont Theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

MILFORD (Mass.) NEWS
JULY 3, 1915

Saturday, July 3.

INDENPENDENCE DAY LESSON.

Besides being a stench in the nostrils of the colored people and their sympathizers, the moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation," is also condemned as a deceiver on historical lines, and an inexcusable anachronism because it applies a misleading title to scenes that occurred in the Civil war period. In no possible sense is it within the proprieties to construe the anti slavery agitation and its fruits as a link in the chain of our nation's anniversary. A similar mistake, but not so glaring a sin against historical accuracy, is the public custom of hailing July 4 as the "natal day" of the American nation. It is an out and out misnomer, and should be dropped as prejudicial of the truth. It is purely and solely Independence day, marking the anniversary of freedom from foreign rule, of a departure from colonial ot self government, and of the first formal step in the erection of a temple of liberty.

Whoever heard of a new-born baby executing a declaration of independence? And yet there is a striking analogy between a human being and a civic corporation. The former attains his majority at a specified legal age, and is thereafter entitled to exert the right of self control, subject only to temporal authority. In a somewhat similar manner a nation must arrive at a certain stage of development before it can enter upon an autonomous role. As a matter of fact the American nation had its natal day at the time of the settlement of this continent, as soon as its inhabitants formed into social and other bonds of union. Then there was a steady evolution into the mold of colonial government, with representatives of the British crown in supreme charge. At length when things were ripe a national consciousness grew strong and deep in the American colonists until, at last, it flowered into the Declaration of Independence.

We are on the eve of the anniversary of one of the world's most momentous undertakings—the assumption of self government by the American people. The long and arduous period of subjugating this wild continent, and of throwing off the shackles of the British oppressor at length eventuated in the laying of the corner stone of the Republic of the United States, as the chief exponent of popular rule, symbolizing the proud ideal of "liberty enlightening the world."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 27, 1915

CAREER OF DAVID W. GRIFFITH.

No One Has Done More Than the Producer of "The Birth of a Nation" to Bring About the Triumph Art Has Won Over Commercialism in the Motion Picture Industry.

The rise of the motion picture industry strikingly illustrates the conventional struggle between commercialism and art. Even today certain manufacturers judge their stage directors according to the percentage of usuable film turned out, and the head director is the chap who never experiments but turns 100 percent of his picture-taking into "salable footage."

"Under that standard David W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," could never qualify. Mr Griffith has always experimented, has always learned more from failure than many have from success, and he has advanced the humble "movie" to the level of the "two-dollar" production by fighting for an art-result that timid capital was afraid of.

The significance of the change was seen the other day in a Mutual Film Company advertisement declaring that its three greatest directors—David W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett—were "underpaid at $100,000 a year each." It was also evident in the organization in New York last week of a Wall Street syndicate with a capital of $4,000,000 to exploit these three directing stars and to provide them with a chain of 400 first-class theatres in America and 200 in Europe in which their newest works might be satisfactorily shown.

Man of New Ideas.

This is the story of a youth, a modern David, who sprang full-armed into this Philistia and conquered the commercial Goliath that bestrode it. He had no money and little fame, but his sling was Audacity and the stone in it was the irresistible power of new ideas. David W. Griffith was the boy's name, for he was little more than a boy when in 1906 he obtained a connection with the Biograph Studio.

Mr Griffith is of Scotch-Irish and English extraction, not Welch, as has been sometimes stated. His ancestors had been settled in Virginia and Kentucky for a hundred years. His father, who died when the lad was quite young, was a Kentucky colonel breveted brigadier-general. After D. W. Griffith passed the seventh grade in a Louisville public school he went to work in a dry goods store.

He held two or three office boy jobs one after the other, the final one in the Baptist Book Concern. He was happy there for two reasons: He could devote his whole spare time to the reading of literature. And he met in the bookstore the actors and singers playing Macauley's Theatre and the Masonic Temple, who would often drop in for the latest novel, magazine or printed drama.

About this time people began to remark on the fine quality of his voice. Visions of a great operatic career uprose before the boy. He took a course of vocal lessons under Mr and Mrs Bousted, and John Griffith, a namesake but no relative, promised him the first vacancy that should occur for a good live baritone in an itinerant company that was presenting "Faust."

Griffith was eager to get into "show business." He decided not to wait for "Faust," but accepted a chance to play "stock" with the Cummings boys, Ralph and Robert, who had started a season at the Masonic Temple Theatre. The first play was "Men and Women." Griffith's duty was to utter the words, "My lord, the carriage waits"—or something like that. He appeared for exactly one performance. As he was making an exit, some one handed him a telegram from John Griffith reading: "Baritone part open. Join 'Faust' at Battle Creek. Have telegraphed fare." The high spirits of youth rose 60 percent above the normal, he rapidly obtained the Cummings boys' smiling consent to the quick shift, and that night saw him on his way from Louisville to Battle Creek.

How He Got Into the Show Business.

It would not do to have two Griffiths in the one company, so "D. W." appeared under the old family name of a Scotch-Irish ancestor, Lawrence Brayington. The new baritone was all that the boss could ask for. He sang in the quartet and also doubled a small part. But the Farmer Corntossels of Southern Michigan were not enthusiastic over "Faust" that season, and lack of funds played the devil regardless of the fact that John Griffith himself was the only authorized Mephisto in the company.

"Lawrence Brayington" baritoned as far as Grand Rapids, when "Faust" gave up the ghost and died. "D. W." prefers not to remember the details of the return from Grand Rapids to Louisville. It was a painful experience.

Back in the Blue Grass Country the future great director fared a little better. Oscar Eagle hired him for the Eagle-Meffert Stock Company at the Masonic Temple Theatre, and this time he finished out an entire season, playing a great number of parts. Under his tuition young Griffith—everybody called him "Larry" Griffith in those days—acquired the rudiments of sound acting.

During the ensuing seven years Mr Griffith's experience as actor, stage manager and dramatic author were very interesting. The stage management often consisted of little more than furniture shifting, yet it taught him the proper positions of objects, props and the entrances and exits of characters.

When things looked most black for him, when his dramas and playlets had failed or had been returned to him, when suitable acting jobs did not seem to present themselves, he was right at the threshold of victory. A Sunday editor who had accepted a couple of Mr Griffith's fiction stories remarked on the bizarre and fantastic elements of their invention and advised him to submit scenarios to moving picture firms.

It was in this way that young "Larry" Griffith got in touch with the Biograph. They bought a scenario or two and said: "Why don't you act a little yourself? We need a juvenile understudy right now." So Griffith went to work as a Biograph actor at the munificent salary of $5 a week, but it was always borne in mind that he was a writer and those who sensed his abilities were waiting for an opening so that he could make good.

Directs His First Picture.

After a few months of writing a scenario now and again and jobbing in various roles before the screen, Griffith obtained the much-coveted opportunity, through the illness of one of the directors. He went to the boss and said:

"Let me work out some new ideas of mine on a new picture. What's the use of showing the complete figures of all the actors? Why not show them close up so that audiences can see the features in detail? Why follow the set indoor action of the stage? Why not rather show two parallel streams of action, or switch back from one action to an earlier one? Why not get rid of the abrupt change from one theme to another, and have the scenes fade out and fade into each other?"

Much as the boss liked Griffith, he was flabbergasted by the cool audacity of this revolutionist. He consented, however, to let the young man go ahead and try his ideas on a split reel, reflecting that little would be lost should he fail.

The result of Mr Griffith's new direction, though it might appear conventional today, was the freak product of the then Biograph Studio. As it was run off, everybody grinned and snickered. "Why," said one bright critic, "all those characters are without legs and arms. Most of them appear to be floating without bodily support. Patrons will never stand for that kind of stuff."

Sure enough at the first nickelodeon where the new picture was publicly exhibited, the patrons stamped loudly on the floor with their shoes, to indicate their disapproval of "legless" close-up figures. But strange to say, the new picture won its way and everybody was talking presently of how well lighted Griffith's photography was, of how he avoided the old dark scenes and large numbers of figures, of how vividly emotion was portrayed in his close-ups, and of how he cut to the quick the complicated scenes of legitimate drama and flashed a much speedier action which ranged from incident to incident without confusing the spectator.

In brief, the Griffith technique became accepted within a comparatively short time of its introduction. He was put in complete charge of the Biograph Studio, the sales from which increased enormously.

Divorces Art From Commerce.

The commercial curse of the business had been the use of cheap actors and of cheap repertory plots as the easiest, quickest and least expensive ways of turning out the product. Griffith, however, had an innate love of literature. He early forsook the repertory plots and sought themes in the masterpieces of the English and foreign languages and of antiquity. At the same time he devoted himself to training a school of motion picture actors. He preferred in most cases persons with little or no previous experience, for he figured that the mannerisms acquired by the older legitimate actors made them unsuited for film work.

During his five years at the biograph Griffith developed a large proportion of the great names in the acting end of filmland today. Name some all-around favorite whose face and expressions are equally well known in near or remote parts of the earth, and the chances are at least three to five that Griffith "made" the actor or actress in question.

Perhaps his greatest achievement of the last few years has been his development and working out of the fact that the motion picture offers spectacular and historical possibilities far beyond the range of the indoor drama. Mr Griffith worked on this idea largely in "Judith of Bethulia," which was his biograph production.

Undoubtedly he went from the biograph to the directorship-in-chief of the Mutual because he was to receive an absolutely free hand there in staging the great spectacular side of the art. No longer was commercialism to throttle growth. The new employers gave him an enormous salary and carte blanche and no limitations on percentage of output that was useable. Under these extraordinarily favorable circumstances he staged last year "The Birth of a Nation," the great historical spectacle built on events of the American Civil War and the Reconstruction Era. The film has been so thoroughly described in the Globe that it is unnecessary to recount its wonders or its merits here. Everybody admits that Griffith has lifted the motion picture to the dignity of an entirely new art, far surpassing the old theatricalism.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 27, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"

Spectacle at the Tremont

David W. Griffith's superb spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to attract and interest not only residents of Boston and vicinity but visitors from points 100 and 150 miles away. The story takes one from the time the seeds of disunion were planted in this country through the awful Civil War struggle and down into Reconstruction days, when the North and South again locked horns over the temporary supremacy of the carpetbagger regime.

Then it shows how Aryan supremacy was finally won, the North and the South were reconciled, and under the new arrangement the negro, who had been the object of these struggles, made wonderful advances in progress and prosperity. Interwoven with the political story are the threads of a beautiful double romance dealing with a Confederate officer and a Northern girl and a Federal officer and a Southern lassie.

The whole is irradiated with Mr Griffith's refined comedy, his love of nature and of animals, and his broad touch of poetic fitness. The acting is probably the finest that Bostonians have ever been privileged to witness in a screen play, while the music and other accessories are likewise delightfully entertaining.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 27, 1915

Tremont Theatre

David W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be the strongest theatrical magnet in town, drawing not only residents of Boston and vicinity, but visitors from point 100 and 150 miles away. People recognize that it is the only great summer entertainment in New England. The story takes one from the time the seeds of dis-union were planted in this country, through the awful Civil war struggle and down into reconstruction days when the North and South locked horns over the temporary supremacy of the carpet-bagger regime. Interwoven with the political story are the threads of a beautiful double romance dealing with a Confederate officer and a Northern girl, and a Federal officer and a Southern lassie. The acting is probably the finest that Bostonians have ever been privileged to witness in a screen play, while the music and other accessories are likewise delightfully entertaining. The management announces there will be no advance in prices over the Fourth of July holiday.

CLIPPING FROM
BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN

Tremont Theatre.

David W. Griffith's superb spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be the strongest theatrical magnet in town, pulling not only residents of Boston and vicinity but visitors from points 100 and 150 miles away. It has out-lasted all the smaller plays and with the enormous strength of its drawing power together with the multitudinous nature of its attractions, amply deserves the epithet of "one hundred

---

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JUNE 27, 1915

Wark MacMahon, who has been manager of "The Birth of a Nation" Company at the Tremont Theatre, has departed for Chicago to take charge of the Western publicity of the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett organization, wherein "The Birth of a Nation," now playing the Illinois Theatre in the Windy City, is the nucleus. George Reveles, who has been in Chicago, will probably take charge of the Boston company.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
JUNE 27, 1915

Big changes are impending or are already in progress in the film world. As they appear to hinge around "The Birth of a Nation" productions now at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, the Liberty Theatre, New York, and the Illinois Theatre, Chicago, some explanation of them may be timely. The Griffith films dispelled forever the idea that theatregoers would pay only cheap price for screen drama. To be sure, no other $2 movie has yet arisen, but it is argued that hereafter the screen plays, if of sufficient excellence, will be in the same financial class as "legitimate" plays and will command the same prices.

With this idea in mind, H. E. Aitken has brought together three of the most important producers—David W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett—with a view to making exclusively high-class and original feature productions. It is probable that other promoters in the picture game will quickly follow Mr. Aitken's example, and we shall see several groups of really artistic directors, each group under its own incorporation, making screen productions very much as the legitimate managers formerly provided plays.

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) GAZETTE
AUG. 1, 1915

Scene in Piedmont, S. C., in "The Birth of a Nation," Now Playing Today

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

JUL 10 1915

cess.

GOING STRONG IN BOSTON.

The Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of A Nation," has entered upon its thirteenth week at the Tremont theater, Boston. film has made a greater hit than any legitimate or photoplay production that has ever been presented in the city. According to the outlook at the present time, the photoplay is good for the remainder of the summer.

General Manager Joseph J. McCarthy has received several offers from the proprietors of pavilions, music hall and seaside theaters from the north coast all the way down to the Mason and Dixon line for the production. As the weather has been very poor for the beach resorts the persons interested in these enterprises are desirous of obtaining some good attraction to bring the people.

Correspondent of Motion Picture World.

A traveling scene reproduced from the film is being used as an outdoor advertising stunt and has attracted a great deal of comment during the past fortnight in several of the smaller New England cities. An old fashioned barouche of Civil War times shows Elsie Stoneman and Margaret Cameron in the rear seats, faced by Colonel Ben Cameron and Captain Phil Stoneman. The persons impersonating these parts are Bostonians. They are costumed accurately to the era they represent. The display is in charge of Frank A. Johnson, a widely known and efficient outdoor publicity man. The display attracted considerable favorable comment from the large crowds at the Harvard and Yale boat race when it visited New London on the day of that event.

BOSTON RECORD
JULY 8, 1915

TON EVENING RECO

Plantation Times Prominent In "Birth of a Nation"

Plantation tunes of the South have their innings in several scenes of David W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is in the full tide of a long run at the Tremont Theatre. The tunes make the spectators' feet dance a bit even while they are in their seats, for there is all the lilt in them of the old African rhythms, not the ragtime of modern minstrelsy, but the "joy-of-life" refrains of "befoh de war."

Mr. Griffith got the most unusual of them from his old Kentucky home near Louisville. As he staged the Southern scenes he hummed or whistled the old airs and his musical director jotted them down and elaborated them.

Besides the plantation melodies and the old Civil War songs, "The Birth of a Nation" is remarkable for two wonderful motifs—the so-called Love Strain and the Ku Klux Klan Call. The Love Strain is original with the composer of this music; the Klan Call is an adaptation, but none the less effective.

Mr. Griffith, the director, undoubtedly owes a large part of his success to his intimate acquaintance with music and the dance. He has said that the musical features constitute 40 p.c. of the effectiveness of his play.

MIRIAM COOPER.
In "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 6, 1915

Holiday at the Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" attracts Visitors from all over New England

Visitors from all ovar New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Bosston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common. Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as Art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect.

For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusetts. This opposition has died away. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in Reconstruction times are freely exhibited these are more than counterbalanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sunday. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8th. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont Theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

Ford Death Recalls Lincoln Martyrdom

Old-time theatregoers recently read of the death of H. Clay Ford, one of the best-known managers in the United States half a century ago. He was the manager of Ford's Opera House in Washington at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln, which makes the most picturesque episode in "The Birth of a Nation," the remarkable photo-play now in its last nights at the Tremont Theatre.

The attraction at that time was "Our American Cousin," in which Laura Keene was the star. One of the few members of the cast still surviving on the stage is W. J. Ferguson, who played at the Tremont Theatre last season with Fanny Ward in "Madam President."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JULY 7, 1915

Tomorrow there will be an invasion of Maine movie fans to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont—to see, among others, Henry Walthall as the Little Colonel and Mae Marsh as little Flora Cameron. These two players are virtually the stars of the epoch-opening photoplay.

Walthall and Miss Marsh are both professional proteges of Griffith, the wizard of the movies. Both went into the movies with him when he was beginning his career as director with the Biograph Company. Walthall's first well-known success in a multiple reel feature was made as the Assyrian captain in "Judith of Bethulia." His most famous efforts up to the present time have been the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation" and the role he took in "The Avenging Conscience," at least, this is the opinion of film experts. These, they say, are "classics."

Miss Marsh, a native of New Mexico, was brought up in California and there, in Los Angeles, she met Griffith, who always seems to have an eye to spare for possible photo-stars. Miss Marsh followed her elder sister, who is known as Marguerite Loveridge, into the movies. In fact, she went to see sister Marguerite act one day and was caught then and there. Both sisters rank as stars in moviedom. Miss Loveridge starred in "Runaway June."

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE TREMONT

Tremont Theatre.

Now that the announcement of the last nights of "The Birth of a Nation" has been made at the Tremont Theatre, the rush to see this remarkable photo-play has been greater than ever and capacity throngs have been the rule at both afternoon and evening performances. It is very manifest that the same conditions will continue for the coming three weeks, which are positively all that "The Birth of a Nation" can have in Boston.

"Stoneman" Is a Big Featur

A striking figure in D. W. Griffith's wonderful photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," is Austin Stoneman, the leader of the house, the rabid abolitionist, who may or may not be entirely sincere in his views, and who, for the purposes of the play, is made its villain.

He first comes into prominence and his true character is indicated in an interview with Lincoln, the martyred president, when, as leader of the house, he objects to the President's policy of pacification of the rebel states, and threatens to throw his influence against such a policy.

We next see him receiving the news of the assassination of Lincoln, and his face expresses the sorrow that he, in common with the nation, feels at the tragedy, an expression that quickly changes to one of elation at the thought of the advance in political prestige the death of the President means to him.

Our next view of him shows him in the height of his power, in charge of reconstruction measures and having succeeded in making a mulatto lieutenant-governor of South Carolina. But the natural result of his policy comes to him in a way that makes it appear forcible. The mulatto has fallen in love with Stoneman's daughter, she repulses him and he goes to her father.

Is not sauce for the goose sauce for the gander? He has been preaching the equality of the races, but when the test comes, when his own daughter's happiness is involved, the matter is brought home to him, and he sees things in different light. The mulatto's true character is revealed to him through the violence to which he is subjected and at the end we see him as a broken man whose ideals have disappeared in stern realities.

GREETING FROM Journal
Boston Mass

MOVIE STAR DISCOVERED OUT WEST

ne Marsh, who takes one of the leading parts in "The Birth of a Nation," the famous film play at the Tremont, went to see her sister act one day and was caught by the movies man and sent soaring toward stardom.

BOSTON SUNDAY POST, JULY 4, 1915

STARRY EYED MOVIE STARS

THAT'S LATEST DEMAND FILM PRODUCERS FILL SEEKING ALSO DAMSELS WHOSE NECKS EMBODY IDEAL SWAN-LIKE CURVES

Miriam Cooper, a beautiful member of "The Birth of a Nation" company, noted for her soulful brown eyes.

The requirements of the "movies" have sent directors scurrying over the country in search of beautiful eyes and beautiful necks.

The "movie" has changed a good many things related to dramatic art, but in no other respects is the change more striking than this of making them hunt for certain kinds of facial beauty and certain adorable, rarely-to-be-found curves.

It came with the close-up which David W. Griffith of "The Birth of a Nation" invented, and as that play of his is now rounding out a prosperous career at the Tremont Theatre it seems as well to take the illustrations of what is meant from his latest and greatest work.

The old school actress could defy the convntions of beauty by putty, rouge, lines and belladonna. Not so the movie favorite—she can neither add to nor take off the smallest fraction of an inch from the length of her nose; she can neither accentuate nor make shallow the long curve of the neck. The eyes are spoiled instead of helped by artificial treatment when posed for the ly expressive beauty of the perfect eye. The poets have been stabbing awkwardly at this idea for the last few thousands of years, but the picture directors have done more towards really expressing it than all the rhymes and tunes of the past.

Mae Marsh, movie actress of "The Birth of a Nation" company, whose eyes possess a chameleon-like quality.

Eyes of blue and eyes of brown; sea-eyes and gazelle eyes; liquid eyes and eyes of clear dry light; eyes that bore into one's secrets, and modest eyes of narrow pupil and shy iris; orbs of glory whose splendid glance causes mere man's heart to take a cliff-like drop and twinkling mischievous eyes that suggest more forms of devilry than you could possibly enumerate.

What a job the motion picture director has picking all these different sorts of eyes and figuring closely whether he will require the mischievous or the witheringly resplendent or the calmly clear, cold and intellectual for the leading feminine character in his next production. Large, perfect eyes are, however, the camera's chief insistent demand—the larger the better, so the directors say.

Contrasting Types Marked

Contrast the eyes of Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, the girl principals in "The Birth of a Nation." The beautiful blue eyes of Miss Gish are as perfect as the velvety brown ones of Miss Cooper, but the [illegible] light that comes to the surface and plays deliciously when the owner's sense of humor is roused.

Those who have seen Miss Marsh's

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE JULY 4, 1915

Arrangements are being made to show D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" in London next month. T. Daniel Davies, an English film magnate, is now [illegible]

BOSTON [illegible] JULY 4, 1915

Tremont Theatre

People who are spending their vacation holidays in Boston [illegible] audience at the Tremont Theatre. David W. Griffith's superb historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be a great attraction. No Sunday performances are given, but the holiday celebration tomorrow will be marked by a matinee at 2:30 and an evening show at 8. The story travels with the main characters of American history following the [illegible] of July 4, 1776. This is the background framework in which the love affair of Col. Cameron, Capt. Bloneman, Capt. Ben Cameron and Miss Margaret Cameron are cleverly combined with historic events and figures, culminating in the appeal of the Colonists to France, represented by a magnificent [illegible] with a real "punch." The musical accompaniment is increased by a special score. Shows are given twice every week day.

Henry Waithall, who plays the young hero of "The Birth of a Nation," is the nearest approach to a hero that this particular story has. It is a true story, and concerns [illegible]-years-old daughter of a New York [illegible] who is quite, quite mad about the movies, says the New York Times. She can name the films in which each actor of note has ever played, and the last bet to the tune of [illegible] on the outcome of the last count. The "little colonel" led the actor papa to photographer to buy his picture, and after her purchase, adorned here, there and everywhere, it could be cred fondly [illegible] table, where it could be seen by all comers. Her family hours [illegible] silence, but there was a good deal of laughing up the sleeves when the little girl had discovered that the treasured picture was not one of Henry Waithall at all. That mean photographer had palmed off on her a picture of someone else. For days she had been gazing rapturously at a stage likeness of Charlie Chaplin.

light that comes to the surface and plays delicously when the owner's sense of humor is roused.

Those who have seen Miss Marsh's pictures in off-stage poses are aware she is merry or mischievous most of the time, and generally her eyes express that predominating mood of frolicsome youth.

Lines that become haggard on the one hand or obese on the other, eyes that dull with age or become hardened by cynicism, have no place in the picture director's bright lexicon of melting young heroines and sprightly will-o-the-wisp. The movie has done much to restore the reign of ideal beauty to the stage, since youth hits such a tremendous advantage before the camera

Birth of a Nation" company in a photographic study that brings out the compelling beauty of her wonderful blue eyes.

"Youth, Youth," is Griffith's cry in the studio as in the street. He seeks the gentle, almost straight-line curves of adolescence rather than the plump and rounded effects of maturity. The swan or cygnet neck is one of

Lillian Gish of "The Birth

But the big leaders in the motion picture art, like Mr. Griffith, have not bothered with actresses of fame, but have sought the ideal heroine in novice girls who united youth, beauty and talent.

How rare the movie picture maiden is to pretension of beauty! How fatal to beauty that has outlived itself and become ugliness! Poor Bernhardt can no doubt continue to act with one wooden member, but she could not withstand the deadly 6-continuous sun of the motion picture camera that blasted the legend of aforetime good looks.

Notice the middle-aged actresses posing for plays they made famous a decade or two ago—how artfully the director puts them in the half-light, how he favors interiors, and never really lets the public get a good square sunny view of them at all.

pears to float rather than walk through some of the scenes.

Perfect Eye Much Sought

It has likewise remained for the picture director to discover the wonderful

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JULY 4, 1915

David W. Griffith, whose "The Birth of a Nation" is still drawing immense crowds to the Tremont Theatre and seems likely to keep up the present rate of business throughout the summer, is in Los Angeles preparing another motion picture spectacle. Somewhere I have heard that Mr. Griffith has been rather put to it to find adequate subjects for the screen, as he is ambitious and desires only topics which are on a magnificent scale. Why does he not look to biblical history for material? Some of the most dramatic incidents can there be found, and I am afraid they would be novel to most people.

Take, for instance, the story of Gideon, who was called upon to free the Hebrews from the persecutions of the Midianites. Gideon was quite a lad, and what he went through would make highly sensational pictures. It will be recalled that he had a most mysterious experience with a piece of sheep's wool when he sought a sign from heaven that he was the chosen general of the army. His routing of the hosts of Midian, when his only weapons were crockery, water pitchers, oil lamps, and also some trumpets, would be effective on the screen. The many wars through which he went and his deeds of valor on the field of battle would also make a good showing. The only fault with the subject which occurs to me is that Gideon was not famed for being very affectionate, and consequently there could be no romance to the story. But he certainly was some warrior.

\+ \+ \+ \+ \+ \+

It is well known that outdoor advertising is of different effectiveness in different parts of the country. The Pacific coast has always been noted for spectacular feats in this branch of promotion. An instance, however, where Western methods have been successfully applied to advertising in this section of the country is afforded by a current publicity stunt of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." The exhibit was first tried at Los Angeles. It consisted of a bit of a scene from "The Birth of a Nation," showing Ben, Elsie, Phil and Margaret as they ride away in an old-fashioned barouche from the Cameron homestead at Piedmont, S. C. The girls are clad in the crinolines and bonnets of 1860, very much like the programme girls in the lobby of the Tremont Theatre. The two boys impersonate respectively a young federal officer and a Confederate cadet, being appropriately costumed for the same. As the old-fashioned barouche passes slowly through the city streets, the young ladies of 1860 give out souvenir invitations to the play, and the young officers distribute heralds.

The trick which proved exceedingly successful in Los Angeles was transported to this city a few weeks ago and has brought the Civil war play to the attention of many thousands of New Englanders. It was put on at the Portland State fair and the New London boat races, and has also been exhibited in Springfield, Worcester, Haverhill and other near-by cities. It is supplementary to the liberal newspaper advertising, and the combination has certainly kept "The Birth of a Nation" before New England people more prominently than any other amusement enterprise of the season.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD
JULY 4, 1915

"Filming" a Play.

D. W. Griffith, who wrote and staged "The Birth of a Nation," tells something of [illegible] of work and especially as to how he achieves results in "filming" a play. He says in the Boston Transcript:

My method of composition has been to invent, originate and reshape for myself after I have grasped the outline of a plot. I do not know today which scene I shall stage tomorrow. I may tear out bodily what the author considers his biggest scenes and substitute something of my own which I consider more suitable for filming. The only logic to be observed is that as many scenes as possible are to be staged first in studio.

All film work is divided into studio taking and location taking. The studio taking naturally comes first, for both organization and equipment are right at hand. It was not always the case, however, with "The Birth of a Nation." In reproducing the scene of the shoting of President Lincoln by the assassin, Wilkes Booth, April 14, 1865, an entire Ford's Theatre replica had to be built and added to our equipment. The assembly hall of the legislature of South Carolina in 1871 was another specially constructed building, and in staging the scenes in Piedmont, S. C., an entire village of old-fashioned colonial houses had to be set up. But ours is a roomy enclosure, a great yard or compound surrounding the main studio at Los Angeles, and we had no trouble in building more and more as our indoor and smaller out door scenes grew to completion. It may not even surprise you to know that on one side of the studio lot, a rather hilly place, there was constructed a runway down which the shorter runs (the so-called "flashes") of the Ku Klux were enacted.

But the work of the historical drama which goes in for depiction of battlefields must be done far from cities and the usual haunts of men. On holidays and Sundays, when my studio staff had their times off, I would look up locations. Though locations in the technical language of the craft, they were really sites for military camps and historic battlegrounds that I was seeking. I found one such wonderful site in Bear Valley. Down the length of it I could see, in fancy, Sherman's legions marching to the sea; across its upper width were as plainly discernible to the practised eye the larger natural features of the Siege of Petersburg. Thither I sent my sappers and miners, ditch diggers, camp makers, engineers and landscape reconstructors. A small army of people were soon getting the great location into shape. Then I communicated with the chief officers of the California National Guard, who willingly assented to my plan. This was in brief to hire whole regiments of the Guard, under their own commanders, and take them for a month's marching and mimic fighting down into Bear Valley. Each soldier was to receive $5 a day for his camera work. This, with the commissary and other fixed expenses, made the cost seem almost staggering; but on the other hand, I was to get regular war, waged by actual soldiers and under conditions that perfectly reproduced the Civil war operations of fifty years ago.

The plan worked like a charm. I owe the artistically happy (though actually gruesome) result to the splendid enthusiastic service of those California guardsmen, to the co-operation of war veterans and West Point experts who aided me, and to the painstaking use of all the devices of the latest science such as the field-telephone, etc. It was hard, gruelling work, directing these operations from a high tower by field wires, wigwaggery and megaphone, virtually running both sides of the battle, typifying General Grant to one set of combatants and General Lee to the other.

Another important part of outdoor work was the getting of the longer Ku Klux rides. The Ku Klux Klansmen were the midnight cossacks of the south. Many a story as thrilling as Mazeppa's is told of them. The nature of the picture demanded that their wild rides be graphically exhibited. But thousands of horsemen on the public roads would be a menace. On private property only a very few could be shown in minutely brief runs. So I went out and borrowed one sound and perfectly good American county for one day for my Ku Klux. I put the idea up to the county supervisors, who quickly grasped the idea that the picture makers spell prosperity to an entire countryside. They agreeing to lend me the roads of an area ten miles square, I had the macadam road surfaces covered by my workmen with ten inches of soft earth dressing, the public was warned off, and my horsemen raced over this wonderful Olympia from sunup to sundown of one gorgeous California day—my camera man keeping just a few jumps ahead of them all day on the motor car, on the platform of which our motion picture machine was mounted with backward gazing eye.

For nearly a year we worked with tireless energy in all departments, thousands of seamstresses making up costumes for the female principals and for the Ku Klux; sub-directors alternately drilling armies and mobs; carpenters and property men ceaselessly constructing and reconstructing, building the city of Atlanta, for example, only to have it fired by Sherman's "bummers"; the principals working like beavers on their tremendously long and important parts. When the work was done, several expert picture men expressed opinion that I could never make anything co-herent of the multitudinous mass of takings in the reel cans. I knew differently, however. I had not forgotten a single day's toil of those strenuous eight months. The bits of story were picked out of the cans and matched in the order suggested by my conversational scenario. There were 140,000 feet of this original "Birth of a Nation" film. Careful pruning cut it down first to 28,000 feet and finally to 12,000 feet, which is about its length today. In other words, eleven twelfths of our labor was chaff, and only the remaining one twelfth was worth saving.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER

JUL 3 · 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common. Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patrioti achievement will be linked, as Art throws a glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love-play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect. Spectators applaud more than they do at dramas showing flesh-and-blood actors, just as the screen play is so much larger and more impressive than the old style stage drama.

BROOKLINE [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation."

At the Tremont Theatre there is shown no lessening of the public interest in wonderful film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." Exciting scenes follow each other in quick succession: Civil War battles, the assassination of President Lincoln, and reconstruction events. In the unfolding of the story, the author has drawn on material of almost every kind, and a thread of romance is interwoven with the historic narrative. The whole is on a scale hitherto unequalled, and for scenic beauty the pictures cannot be surpassed.

BOSTON (Mass.) TIMES
July 3, 15

Henry MacMahon, who has been manager of "The Birth of a Nation" Company at the Tremont Theatre, has departed for Chicago to take charge of the Western publicity of the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett organization, whereof "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Illinois Theatre in the Windy City, is the nucleus. George Bowles, who has been in Chicago, will probably take charge of the Boston company.

CHARLESTOWN [illegible]
JULY 3

Birth of a Nation

"The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love-play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effects. Spectators applaud more than they do at dramas showing flesh-and-blood actors, just as the screen play is so much larger and more impressive than the old style stage drama. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view every afternoon and every evening except Sundays. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont theatre is fifteen degrees cooler than the street makes attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

American
Boston Mass
7 4 15

Tremont Theatre.

Folks who are spending the Independence holidays in Boston are privileged to enjoy a splendid treat at the Tremont Theatre. David W. Griffith's superb historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be the great Summer theatrical attraction in New England. No Sunday performances, it should be noted, are given, but the holiday celebration tomorrow will be marked by a matinee at 2:10, and an evening show at 8:10 p. m.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JULY 4, 1915

DeWolf Hopper says he was converted to the motion picture idea by seeing "The Birth of a Nation." The view of its possibilities convinced him that the new field was fully as important as the old, and he decided to work for D. W. Griffith's famous camera for An entire season. Mr Hopper says: "I saw a wonderful thing. I saw an audience held spellbound as I have rarely seen an audience held in the theatre. I saw their excitement, saw their tears. The picture itself, with its many infinitely dramatic touches—strokes of genius—struck me as something big, something new, something important. I came out dazed!"

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
JULY 4, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"
Pictures at the Tremont

David W. Griffith's superb historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be the potent attraction at the Tremont Theatre. No Sunday performances are given, but there will be a holiday matinee at 2:10 tomorrow. The story travels with the main currents of American history following the immortal Declaration of July 4, 1776; shows, as by succession of lightning flashes, the titanic conflicts that rent North and South in twain; exhibits the comedy, pathos annd romance of the old South reconstruction, and, after an eloquent indictment of the horrors of war and a happy picture of the recent progress of the negroes, shows America reborn, a new Nation out of that awful nine years' struggle of 1861-70.

This is the historical framework in which the loves of Col Cameron, U. S. A., and Elsie Stoneman, and Capt Stoneman, U. S. A., and Margaret Cameron, are charmingly and tenderly traced. Mr Griffith has the knack of combining history, romance and drama with a real "punch" into a truly satisfying film spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JULY 4, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

Those who are spending the Independence holidays in Boston are privileged to enjoy a splendid treat at the Tremont Theatre. David W. Griffith's superb historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be one of the great summer theatrical attractions in New England. No Sunday performances, it should be noted, are given, but the holiday celebrated tomorrow will be marked by a matinee at 2:10, and an evening show at 8:10 p. m. No more delightful way of winding up a three-day visit to the Hub can be imagined than is found in "taking in" one of these two gala performances. The story travels with the main currents of American history, following the immortal Declaration of July 4, 1776; shows, as by succession of lightning flashes, the titanic conflicts that rent North and South in twain; exhibits the comedy, pathos and romance of the old South of Reconstruction; and then, after an eloquent indictment of the horrors of war and a happy picture of the recent progress of the negros, shows America reborn, a new nation out of that awful nine years' struggle of 1861-70.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JULY 1, 1915

...the Pavlova followers will have to pay $2 to see the show.

Anti-hyphen item—"Maurice and Walton have originated a new dance which they call 'The Americanisation Dance.'"

"The Birth of a Nation" is to be shown in London. It was this prodigious picture play, now running at the Tremont, that made a film enthusiast out of De Wolf Hopper and influenced him to give up the light opera stage for a year or two and work under the direction of D. W. Griffith. But the distinguished comedian was also moved by the fact that the Gilbert & Sullivan revivals have about reached the end of their popularity for the present and that the salary dangled before his heroic nose by the film magnate was irresistible. "It would have been criminal for me to refuse," says the prince of lyric jesters. The Griffith office reports that the stipend is $125,000 a year.

The Meistersingers will begin their ... Keith's next Monday ... the Flag Station."

CLIPPING FROM ... Boston Mass. 7-6-15

MAE MARSH
As Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation"

JULY 6, 1915
TRAVERSE CITY (Mich.) RECORD-EAGLE

BIG MOVIE COMBINE

REGULAR CIRCUITS WILL BE ESTABLISHED SOON.

Large Sums of Money Will Be Expended in Carrying Out the Plan.

(By United Press.)

New York, July 6.—A new movement in the movie world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry is about completed and the plans of the organizers entertain an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. E. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of A Nation," Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, the producer of the famous funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other one man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions in a regular chain of theatres throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably will also be raised but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theatre has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination's plays will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitken the new departure will overshadow anything of the kind ever before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films released will be near $5,000,000. Wall street is behind the movement in a financial way and large sums of money will be expended on branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, South America and all big American cities, which will also act as producing centers.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JUNE 6, 1915

COMING TO SEE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Now that the holidays are over for a while, the expectation is that "The Birth of a Nation" will attract large crowds of excursionists and business visitors to this city from many nearby or distant towns. On Thursday there will be a large excursion on the Western division of the Boston and Maine, which will bring visitors from Portland and beyond to see the noted photoplay. The great spectacle is now at its best as regards film, music, mechanical effects and the playhouse in which it is given. The Tremont is always cool in summer.

The big holiday crowds yesterday found Griffith's masterpiece delightful, and applause was practically continuous during the greater part of the performance. Some of the best acting ever presented on the screen is seen in this attraction, notably the work of Henry Walthall and Mae Marsh.

CLIPPING FROM ... Transcript Boston Mass 7-6-15

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole.

BOSTON (Mass.) HERALD
JUNE 6, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to attract ... to the Tremont Theatre. The great spectacle is now at its best in respect of the film, the music, the mechanical effects and the playhouse in which it is given. It presents two hours and three-quarters of absorbing, fascinating entertainment. The big holiday audiences yesterday found it delightful and applause was continuous during the greater part of the performance, especially the many scenes representing the Ku Klux Klan rides. Some of the best acting ever presented on the screen is seen in this attraction notably the work of Henry Walthall as the brave young clansman, and Miss Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron.

BOSTON (Mass.) POST
JUNE 6, 1915

Tremont Theatre

Now that the Independence holidays are over, "The Birth of a Nation" will attract large crowds of excursionists and business visitors to this city from many nearby or distant towns. Thursday there will be a large excursion on the Western division of the Boston & Maine which will bring "Birth of a Nation" patrons from Portland and beyond.

CLIPPING FROM ... Globe Boston Mass 7-6-15

"The Birth of a Nation"

At the Tremont Theatre the film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues its successful engagement.

Thursday there will be a large excursion on the Western division of the Boston & Maine, which will bring "Birth of a Nation" patrons from Portland and beyond. The great spectacle is now at its best both in respects of the film, the music, the mechanical effects and the playhouse in which it is given.

Without tiring the senses, it presents two hours and three-quarters of interesting entertainment redolent of history and romance, and among cool and pleasant surroundings.

The holiday crowds yesterday found the scenes thrilling and applause was frequent during the greater part of the performance, especially for the many views representing the wild Ku Klux Klan rides.

Through the kind invitation of the management, many uniformed veterans, soldiers and cadets taking part in the Boston Common patriotic exercises attended the matinee performance yesterday.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
JUNE 6, 1915

Excursionists Coming to See "The Birth of a Nation"

Now that the Independence holidays are over "The Birth of a Nation" will attract large crowds of excursionists and business visitors to this city from many nearby or distant towns. On Thursday there will be a large excursion on the Western Division of the Boston & Maine which will bring "Birth of a Nation" patrons from Portland and beyond. The great spectacle is now at its best, both in respects of the film, the music, the mechanical effects and the playhouse in which it is given. Without tiring the senses, it presents two hours and three-quarters of absorbing, fascinating entertainment redolent of history and romance and among cool and pleasant surroundings unlike the average outdoor show. The big holiday crowds yesterday found it delightful and applause was practically continuous during the greater part of the performance, especially the many scenes representing the wild Ku Klux Klan rides. Some of the best acting ever presented on the screen is seen in this attraction, notably the work of Henry Walthall as the brave young clansman, and Miss Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron.

American Boston, Mass July 6,

Tremont Theatre.

Now that the Independence holiday is over, "The Birth of a Nation" will attract large crowds of excursionists and business visitors to this city from nearby or distant towns. On Thursday there will be a large excursion on the Western Division of the Boston & Maine, which will bring "Birth of a Nation" patrons from Portland and beyond.

BOSTON TRAVELER
JUNE 6, 1915

...the Modern ... theatre ... an interesting bill.

"Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to attract crowds to the Tremont Theatre. The great spectacle is now at its best in respect of the film, the music, the mechanical effects and the playhouse in which it is given. It presents two hours and three-quarters of absorbing, fascinating entertainment. The big holiday audiences yesterday found it delightful and applause was continuous during the greater part of the performance, especially the many scenes representing the Ku Klux Klan rides. Some of the best acting ever presented on the screen is seen in this attraction notably the work of Henry Walthall as the brave young clansman, and Miss ...

JULY 6, 1915
ATHENS (Ohio) MESSENGER

MILLIONS IN NEW "MOVIE" COMBINATION

New York, July 3.—A new movement in the movie world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry is about completed and the plans of the organizers entertain an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. E. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, the producer of the famous funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other one man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions in a regular chain of theatres throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably will also be raised but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theatre has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination plays will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitken the new departure will overshadow anything of the kind ever before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films released will be near $5,000,000. Wall Street is behind the movement in a financial way and large sums of money will be expended on branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, South America and all big American cities, which will also act as producing centers.

NIAGARA FALLS (N. Y.) GAZETTE
JULY 7, 1915

NEW $4,000,000 MOVIE CONCERN ORGANIZED

(United Press Special Wire.)

New York, July 7.—A new movement in the movie world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry, is about completed and the plans of the organizers entertain an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. E. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, the producer of the famous funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions in a regular chain of theaters throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably will also be raised, but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theatre has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination's plays will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitken the new departure will overshadow anything of the kind ever before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films released will be near $5,000,000. Wall Street is behind the movement in a financial way and large sums of money will be expended on branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, South America and all big American cities, which will also act as producing centers.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 8, 1915 86

Holidays at the Tremont.

"The Birth of a Nation" attracts Visitors from all over New England.

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as Art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect.

For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusetts. This opposition has died away. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in Reconstruction times are freely exhibited these are more than counterbalanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sunday. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8th. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont Theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
Date JUL 8-15

Interested by reason of the fact that the production is a pictorial history of the stirring events in which they were such important factors, and in which many of them suffered wounds, members of the G. A. R. Posts in Brooklyn, Queens and Long Island have made arrangements to attend D. W. Griffith's $500,000 film, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

Four Grand Army Posts have already made reservations for theatre parties, and inquiries have been made for others regarding accommodations. There are several hundred veterans in this city and Long Island who served at Appomattox, where Lee surrendered to Grant, a scene which is pictured with wonderful realism in "The Birth of a Nation." The veterans are particularly interested in Sherman's march to the Sea, in which many of them participated, and the other battle scenes which are shown. While the film is not a war spectacle, but rather a pictorial history of Civil War times, a number of war scenes are shown.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 9, 1915

Holidays of the Tremont.

"The Birth of a Nation" attracts Visitors from all over New England.

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as Art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect.

For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusetts. This opposition has died away. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in Reconstruction times are freely exhibited these are more than counterbalanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sunday. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8th. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont Theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

BOSTON RECORD
JULY 10, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Has Big Hold on the Public

The hold of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" on the New England public is indicated by the fact of its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre and a popularity that seems to withstand the hottest summer weather. Theatrical wiseacres say that the Boston run will equal or exceed in numbers of performances and aggregate attendance the wonderful runs of the play in New York and Chicago. The spectacle is now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York. In Chicago it is a fixture at the Illinois Theatre and playing to practically capacity in the Western city.

Excursion crowds from out of town marked several of the local performances the past week The scale of prices is so arranged as to suit all purses, the matinee prices being half those charged at night. Persons who have never seen "The Birth of a Nation" have no adequate idea of its marvelous scope, power and thrill.

Printed words cannot convey the tremendous "punch" of the play with its combination of drama spectacle, grand operatic score, delightful comedy, love romance and auxiliary effects. Until the end of the engagement it is expected to have performances twice daily, but no Sunday shows are given.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 10, 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation

A filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 8, 1915

Holidays at the Tremont.

"The Birth of a Nation" attracts Visitors from all over New England.

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont Theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday there will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston Common Within the cool Tremont Theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment of the rarest quality. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as Art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most sensational achievement that the world has ever known. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is positively stupendous in its effect.

For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusetts. This opposition has died away. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in Reconstruction times are freely exhibited these are more than counterbalanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sunday. Besides the 5th of July crowds there are expected large numbers of visitors on the B. & M. excursion of July 8th. The prices of the attraction range to suit all purses, and the fact that the Tremont Theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street make attendance on the play an unalloyed pleasure, no matter how torrid the day.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN FOURTEENTH WEEK

The hold of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" on the New England public is indicated by the advent of its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre and a popularity that seems capable of withstanding the hottest weather. Theatrical wiseacres say that the Boston run will equal or exceed in number of performances and aggregate attendance the runs of the play in New York and Chicago. The spectacle is now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York. In Chicago it is a fixture at the Illinois Theatre and playing to practical capacity in the Western city.

Excursion crowds from out of town marked several of the local performances the past week. The scale of prices is so arranged as to suit all purses, the matinee prices being half those charged at night. Drama, spectacle, grand opera music, domestic comedy, love romance, historical scenes, are all contained in this big photoplay. Until the end of the engagement it is expected to have performances twice daily, but no Sunday shows are given.

Myrtle
Manchester Mass
7-2-15

CHARLESTOWN (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 10, 1915

Crowds Attend Spectacle

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle The Birth of a Nation is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont theatre. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to attend this play which is being performed in one the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1.00 are one half those charged at night.

Tremont Theatre, Boston

Visitors from all over New England are finding the great "Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Tremont theatre one of the most enjoyable features of the mid-summer trip to Boston. Especially appropriate is this play in connection with Independence Day excursions to the Hub. Next Monday will be all kinds of interesting public exercises on Boston common. Within the cool Tremont theatre David W. Griffith's great spectacle of civil war and reconstruction times will afford artistic entertainment. Present patriotism and patriotic achievement will be linked, as art throws the glamor of romance over the nation's yesterdays. "The Birth of a Nation" is a sensational achievement. It combines spectacle, historical drama, grand opera, love-play, tragedy and comedy into an ensemble that is stupendous in its effect. For a time there was great opposition to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Massachusetts. This opposition has abated. It is realized that while the excesses of the negroes and carpet-baggers in reconstruction times are freely exhibited, these are more than counterbalanced by the record of the negroes' peace, progress and prosperity in the years following. Mr. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle is on view in Boston every afternoon and every evening except Sunday.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE 8
JULY 10, 1915

Crowds Attend Spectacle

"Birth of a Nation" is Strong Magnet to New England theatregoers.

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons wishing charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The price range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1.00 are one half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the opportunities presented by the Boston run.

BOSTON POST
JULY 13, 1915

Tremont Theatre

The highest tribute to a stage producer's art is for his work to become the vogue and dictate the styles of dress and manners. Judged by this test, David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, has brought back a wave of interest in everything relating to Civil war times. Even the voluminous frocks and dainty furbelows of those days are being imitated, and "Birth of a Nation" styles are to be seen at almost every dress counter.

BOSTON HERALD
JULY 13, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, has brought back a wave of interest in everything relating to civil war times. Even the voluminous frocks and dainty furbelows of those days are being imitated. The spectacle forms an extraordinarily vivid and accurate realization of the era of civil strife. Large audiences are the rule at both matinee and night.

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 11, 1915

Much curiosity is expressed by showmen of Boston and New York as to whether "The Birth of a Nation" will exert nearly as much drawing power in foreign lands as it is exerting in this country. A few say it will not, but the majority of experts think that the dramatic "punch" so far predominates over the spectacular and national elements that the play will prove an equal sensation in England and the British colonies, and, after the war, throughout Europe generally.

Plays concerned with racial traits have met varying fortunes when exported from America. "The Squaw Man" was extremely popular in England under the title of "The White Man." "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is another English winner and a standby of provincial tours. The American Jewish plays, on the other hand, have not been particularly popular in London if we may except "Potash & Perlmutter," which ran there a good while.

The fate of plays racy of one particular land or visionage is often determined by temporary considerations, namely, the attitude of the local patriots in the foreign country to which the play comes. Just now an American-made play would not be received with shouts of enthusiastic acclaim in Berlin or Vienna. During the Borden-Laurier campaign caused by Champ Clark's "desire" to annex Canada, such a play as "The Birth of a Nation" would probably have been jeered off the boards of our northern neighbor's theatres. Just at present a rapprochement seems to be in progress, and one is not surprised to be told accordingly that arrangements are under way for presenting Mr. Griffith's great American spectacle at Ottawa for two weeks next Fall in connection with some festival celebration.

Boston American
Date 7-11-15

...the veteran German comedian, Weber and Fields next week, with Weber and Marx, will top the bill.

Tremont Theatre

All-compelling, thrilling, whirlwind action is what distinguishes D. W. Griffith's great American historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," from most of the current offerings of the theatre. The spectataor is almost lifted out of his seat by the passion and intensity of some of the scenes, notably the terrific Civil War battle pictures.

QUINCY (Mass.) LEDGER
JULY 10, 1915

CROWDS ATTEND SPECTACLE

"Birth Of A Nation" Strong Magnet To Theatregoers

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse.

Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices are one-half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

CLIPPING FROM
Boston Post
Date 7-11-15

"DAVID W." is the acknowledged peer of them all. He it was who first put the "cut-back" and the "close-up" to good use; but that alone is not the cause of his fame. He is a man of imagination. Griffith astonished America with two-dollar moving picture shows, made a success of them, and earned ten thousand dollars a week for his company with "The Birth of a Nation." No theater manager would take the chance; Griffith leased one of the largest houses and took the risk himself.

BOSTON HERALD
JULY 1915

Tremont Theatre

Thrilling action distinguishes D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," from current attractions in the theatre. Although the spectacle lasts two hours and three-quarters, continuity of interest is maintained to the very end. Mr. Griffith's eye for dramatic effect and skill in grouping elements of emotional power are chiefly responsible for the success of this play. To them is due a nearly four-months' run at the Tremont Theatre, where it is shown twice daily except on Sundays.

BOSTON POST
JULY 11, 1915

...party connected with the Tremont Theatre whose business took him about town last week was surprised to learn that a considerable number of those he called on had witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" more than once. This would not be especially remarkable as to a musical comedy offering. It is said that musical comedy or vaudeville fans get into the habit of desiring to hear a popular number or seeing a favorite star perform at a certain hour nightly, and there's no keeping 'em away. Once is quite enough of the legitimate drama, however, and once would seem to be enough of a filmed spectacle. Why, then, "The Birth of a Nation" fans?

The man talked with several of the fans, thought it all out carefully, and furnishes these conclusions:

"They went again because they found it just as new the second time as the first. It's the difference—right there—between the film art and the old-fashioned book or play: the film action moves so much more quickly and comprehends so much more within a given space of time. Instead of half a dozen scenes, one views thousands; instead of little groups of people, one looks literally at hosts; instead of a few hundred bits of stage business, there are a couple of hundred thousand! The gamut runs from comedy to tragedy, thence to Nature and vast spectacle, back to intimate domestic drama, to romance, to historic drama, to frank farce, to sheer melodrama, to informative material; in fact, throughout the entire range of the possible indoor or outdoor stage arts, only sans words.

"It stands to reason that the first view overpowers and indeed almost overwhelms spectators. They want to go back and trace the component parts of the big thing that caused such huge emotional effects. It is necessarily 'history by lightning' that they see, and the 'flashes' must be repeated times and times again for them until they realize more and more of the inner meanings of the picture and their vivid curiosity is satiated.

"But fully as powerful as the above motives," concluded the man, "is the lure of the music. Motifs like the so-called 'love strain' and the 'Ku Klux Klan call' act on the senses of a good many folks like wine. Although these strains are not vocally sung, but are orchestrated symphonically, they kindle the romance desire and the glory desire which brings the hearer straight back to the theatre."

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
JULY 10, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The management of the "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, entertained many of the veterans, soldiers, and cadets taking part in the Boston Common patriotic exercises on the Fourth. No tickets were required, the uniforms being recognized at the door. Another feature of the week was the excursion on Thursday on the Western division of the Boston & Maine, which brought people from Portland and beyond. The interest in this impressive and artistically produced spectacle continues, and the Tremont is still crowded with intent audiences. The pictures, which portray typical events before the Civil War, during, and after Reconstruction, throw much light on the history of the country, and their educational value is very considerable. They are remarkable for the scale on which they are shown, as well for their scenic beauty, and the incidental music is one of the artistic features of an entertainment every detail of which was carefully and intelligently studied, with hardly a thought for...

CLIPPING FROM
Boston Post
Date 7-11-15

BOSTON POST
JULY 11, 1915

Tremont Theatre

All-compelling, thrilling whirlwind action is what distinguishes D. W. Griffith's American historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," from most of the current offerings of the theatre. The spectator is almost lifted out of his seat by the passion and intensity of some of the scenes, notably the terrific Civil war battle pictures, the Lincoln assassination, the separation of the lovers by political events and the wild rides of the Ku Klux to save the protagonists of the story from the fury of mobs.

Equally absorbing, if not so tense, are the scenes of domestic comedy in the old plantation home, in the hospital and offices at Washington, and later in reconstruction times down South.

Although the spectacle lasts 2 3-4 hours, this wonderful continuity of interest is maintained to the very end, and there is no walking in or out of the Tremont Theatre of casual patrons during the performance as is too often to be seen in most picture houses.

Mr. Griffith's eye for dramatic effect, now to grouping the elements and emo... It is power of delivering the same are good and chiefly responsible for the ex... success of the new art ex... the white ... may. To these factors ... four months' run of ... ont Theatre, where ... ily except on...

The bill tonight starts at 7 o'clock.

"The Birth of a Nation"
Pictures at the Tremont

Thrilling, whirlwind action distinguishes D. W. Grimth's great American historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The spectator is almost lifted out of his seat by the passion and intensity of some of the scenes, notably the terrific Civil War battle pictures, the Lincoln assassination, the separation of the lovers by political events, and the wild rides of the Ku Klux to save the protagonists of the story from the fury of carpetbagger-negro mobs. Scarcely less absorbing, if not so tense, are the scenes of domestic comedy in the old plantation home, in the hospital and offices at Washington, and later in reconstruction times down South. Although the spectacle lasts two hours and three quarters, this wonderful continuity of interest is maintained to the very end, and there is no walking in or out of the Tremont Theatre of casual patrons during the performance as is too often to be seen in most picture houses.

Mr Griffith's eye for dramatic effect, skill in grouping the elements and emotional power of delivering the same, are the things chiefly responsible for the extraordinary success of this picture play.

CLIPPING FROM Boston Morn. Globe
Date 7-11-15

Townsman
Brookline Mass.
July 10, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city.

BOSTON JOURNAL

BOSTON HERALD
JULY 11, 1915

FF

ICAL REVIEW ✠ ✠ BY PHILIP HALE

Scenes from "The Birth of a Nation"

HENRY WALTHALL AS THE LITTLE COLONEL IN THE DESPERATE CHARGE AT PETERSBURG

MIRIAM COOPER

HENRY WALTHALL AS COL. CAMERON IN THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG

LILLIAN GISH

MAE MARSH

Henry B. Walthall, the knightly little hero of "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Tremont Theatre, is one of the favorite matinee idols of the movie world. This is all the more remarkable since Mr. Walthall is not only unheroic as to inches but also has rugged rather than handsome features. Not for a moment could he withstand an Adonis competition with Francis X. Bushman, Warren Kurrigan, Carlyle Blackwell, House Peters, Earle Williams or Owen Moore.

It stands to reason that in the mimic as in the real world persons who do big things have little need of the Paris gift of beauty. God-like heroes are all right in their way, but modern leaders of forlorn hopes and strong men in crises must above all show indomitable character. Judged by the latter standard, Henry Walthall qualifies. His raven black, slightly curly hair, lithe, well-knit form, his gleaming eye, high forehead, straight Roman nose, thin lips, strongly lined cheeks and determined, pointed jaw convey irresistibly the impression of courage, clear thinking, sincerity, nobility and dicisiveness. Thus David W. Griffith wisely chose him for the leading role of Col. Ben Cameron, the young Southerner who fights for the confederacy to the last ounce of his strength and who later, during reconstruction takes up the perilous chieftainship of the Ku Klux Klan even at the possible cost of the love of his northern fiancee, Elsie Stoneman.

Native of Alabama.

Mr. Walthall is a native of Alabama, where his uncle, United States Senator Walthall, was a prominent figure of the actual reconstruction crisis in that state. He was trained in acting in two well-known northern stock companies, the American Theatre Stock in New York, and the Providence Opera House Stock in Providence, R. I. David W. Griffith recruited him several years ago for the movies. He became a favorite leading man with the biograph studio, of which Griffith was then director. Later Griffith took Walthall with him to California for work in conection with the Mutual.

When "The Birth of a Nation" was being started on its spectacular way, there was some question as to whether Mr. Walthall would really be finally chosen for the role of the "Little Colonel." Thereupon, it is related, the fair Lillian Gish, who had been selected for the opposite part of Elsie Stoneman, put her foot down and said that with no other confederate colonel or clansman save Walthall would she appear. The story may be apocryphal, like many another legend of the Los Angeles studios. At the least it symbolizes the perfect working together of the two players, Walthall the Alabamian and Miss Gish the Mississippian.

Lillian Gish was originally trained as a dancer. Her first appearance on the stage was at the age of 6, when she took a child part in a comedy called "The Little Red Schoolhouse." Later she became one of the fairy dancers in a company supporting Sarah Bernhardt on one of the latter's American tours. Her entry into the movie world was almost accidental. The celebrated Mary Pickford, then working in the biograph studio, introduced her to David W. Griffith, and Mr. Griffith at once detected the type and the talent that would make the newcomer famous. The type was of a very light and dainty blonde, with mischievous curves and dimples and large expressive blue eyes. The talent was a certain piquancy of dainty femininity, not the depth nor height of passion, nor the far range of great intellect, but a delightful comedy spirit with due shading of sentiment. Mr. Griffith developed the natural grace, the rare power to convey emotion to the motion picture screen without resorting to gesture or unnatural facial expressions.

Miss Gish is by no means a one part actress. Besides the adorable little Elsie in "The Birth of a Nation," she has had delightfully congenial roles in "The Battle of the Sexes," "Home, Sweet Home" and "Enoch Arden."

Another young woman whom Griffith brought out of obscurity into the searching spotlight of fame that lights up everbody and everything connected with his great civil war filmed spectacle is Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the role of Col. Cameron's sister Margaret. This is one of the most appealing principal roles in the play. It strikes the keynote of estrangement betwixt southern girl and northern lover due to the bitter memories of civil wrongs. It also hits the high note of reunion betwixt southerner and northerner when confronted by a common peril from another race. The highest acting qualities were not required—rather a certain wistful sorrow, the charm of regular southern beauty, and the idealism of purity and love. Miss Coper met these requirements delightfully, as who should not that had been born in Maryland of the tribe of the Carrolls of Carrollton, dowered with a warm loveliness of the semi-tropics, and trained in the old-fashioned southern air and accomplishments in a garden-like Convent of the Sacred Heart.

Miss Cooper was an entire novice to stage art when the director took charge of her artistic education. She was with his company for a sort time in the Biograph, but went West in January, 1914, and then came her period of rapid development. It is said that prior to the role of Margaret Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation" she had never had a really big movie part. Her poses are so beautiful that she is in great demand for other roles. In the next great picture, namely, "The Mother and the Law," Mr. Griffith has given her a part demanding potent acting talent as well as good looks, and it is said that she has succeed triumphantly therein.

Last of the Three Graces.

But speaking of The Three Graces of "The Birth of a Nation" cast, what shall be said of that real genius of the movies, Mae Marsh, with whose praises the world resounds? Director or no director, Mae Marsh would undoubtedly have come to the front in some extraordinary manner whether as a legitimate actress or screen star or vaudeville entertainer. She possesses that rarest gift of the young movie player—temperament. Only a very few—perhaps half a dozen or so—of the almost innumerable picture histrions possess this precious dower, the gift that makes every moment, every second, of camera posing worth while, since the immortal spirit flashes in every gesture, look or pose of those fortunate few. Mary Pickford has it, and therefore Pickford is sought to be seen the world over. Mae Marsh has it, and a picture displaying Mae Marsh therefore acquires an intensity of interest that turns it into the memory. Every moment of Mae Marsh is live, tingles with the vitality of the flaming spirit behind the bodily wrapping.

She was born in Madrid, New Mexico, and educated at a Roman Catholic convent in San Francisco. Mae Marsh's sister, Marguerite Loveridge, was a screen actress. Mae wanted to become a member of the merry merry, but her burlesque ambitions were delayed by unforseen circumstances and in the meantime she was wont to play around the Majestic-Reliance studio where her sister was working for Mr. Griffith. He singled out the seemingly awkward little girl as a diamond in the rough, brought her from the waiting room to the camera range, and posed her in one subject after another. Probably Mr. Griffith thought he had gotten hold of a kind of freak Sis Hopkins. But Mae Marsh proved that tragedy as well as "slavey" comedy was in her line, that she could do society roles as well as awkward maids, and character parts best of all. Griffith made a most happy choice when he selected her for the intensely emotional role of Flora, the younger sister of Ben Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation." Curiously enough, the whirligig of time has brought its strange reverses and the young woman named Marguerite Loveridge who apologetically let little sister follow her to the Griffith studio, in the great white light that now beats upon aforesaid little sister, has changed her named to "Lovey" Marsh!

Other Characters.

As is often been said, youth is the most precious natural endowment for the screen. Therefore these four principals, Mr. Walthall and Misses Gish, Cooper and Marsh, represent the most engaging qualities that cause patrons to love David W. Griffith's masterwork and to find in it a personal charm. A large number of other screen actors of first rate excellence come to the fore in the picture as well. Among them are Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the fine old couple, Dr. and Mrs. Cameron; Ralph Lewis, a really fine actor in the somewhat repulsive role of Congfressman Stoneman; George Seigmann as the Negro Lieut.-Gov. Lynch, and Walter Long as the Negro renegade Gus; Mary Alden, a great emotional actress, as Lydia Browns, Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper; Joseph Henaberry, Donald Crisp, Gaye and Raoul Walsh in the historic roles of President Lincoln, Gens. Grant and Lee and Wilkes Booth.

A high order of acting must go to the makeup of a screen drama like this, which has been witnessed by 1,500,000 persons scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific and of necessarily varied tastes and sympathies. A remarkable thing about Griffith's achievement with the play is that there were so few acting failures in the tremendous cast which, including the auxiliaries in the battle and political scenes, reached the extraordinary number of 18,000 histrions.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JULY 24, 1915

LILLIAN GISH
Tremont

"BIRTH OF A NATION"
TO END RUN AUG. 21

The management of "The Birth of a Nation" has set a limit of 20 weeks to the stay of the spectacle at the Tremont Theatre. There are only five first-class productions of Mr. Griffith's greatest work, namely those at Boston, New York, Brighton Beach, Atlantic City and Chicago. What with the accessories of music, costuming and effects, the production occupies about three months. The theatrical syndicate has declared to Boston, which has had the play since April, must next month turn over its production to the fourth city of the nation.

The Boston run will positively come to a close Saturday evening, Aug. 21, nor will the play be presented elsewhere in New England that season. It is generally agreed that the present Boston production is the most beautiful and sumptuous edition of the Civil War and Reconstruction story that has been presented anywhere.

There are afternoon and evening performances every day except Sunday.

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 13, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The highest tribute to a stage producer's art is for his work to become the vogue and dictate the styles of dress and manners. Judged by this test, David W. Griffith wields a greater influence than any other contemporary playwright or director. "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, has brought back a wave of interest in everything relating to Civil War times.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 13, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" at Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, has brought back a wave of interest in everything relating to Civil War times. Even the voluminous frocks and dainty furbelows of those days are being imitated, and "Birth of a Nation" styles are to be seen at almost every dress counter. Mr. Griffith studied the period of the play with great minuteness, so that his filmed spectacle forms an extraordinarily vivid and accurate realization of the era of civil strife. It is the most absorbing kind of entertainment, yet exceedingly valuable in a historical and educational sense as well. Large crowds are in attendance both matinee and night.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
JULY 12, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT TREMONT THEATRE

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices are one half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JULY 13, 1915

CROWDS ATTRACTED TO "BIRTH OF A NATION"

The highest tribute to a stage producer's art is for his work to become the vogue and dictate the styles of dress and manners. Judged by this test David W. Griffith yields a greater influence than any other contemporary playwright or director. "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, has brought back a wave of interest in everything relating to Civil War times. Even the voluminous frocks and dainty furbelows of those days are being imitated, and "Birth of a Nation" styles are to be seen at almost every dress counter.

Mr. Griffith studied the period of the play with great minuteness, so that his filmed spectacle forms an extraordinarily vivid and accurate realization of the era of civil strife. It is the most absorbing kind of entertainment, yet exceedingly valuable in a historical and educational sense as well. Large crowds are in attendance both matinee and night.

Boston Record
7-13-15

Tremont Theatre

The highest tribute to a stage producer's art is for his work to become the vogue and dictate the styles of dress and manners. Judged by this test, David W. Griffith wields a greater influence than any other contemporary playwright or director. "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, has brought back a wave of interest in everything relating to Civil War times. Even the voluminous frocks and dainty furbelows of those times are being initiated, and "Birth of a Nation" styles are to be seen at almost every dress counter.

Mr. Griffith studied the period of the play with great minuteness, so that his filmed spectacle forms an extraordinary vivid and accurate realization of the era of civil strife. It is the most absorbing kind of entertainment yet, exceedingly valuable in a historical and educational sense as well. The enormous business at Tremont Theatre still keeps up, and large crowds are in attendance both matinee and night.

BOSTON RECORD
JULY 13, 1915

Mae Marsh, the "little sister" of "The Clansman," is an all-round hero... last summer at Long Beach she saved a small boy from drowning. No one knew her identity ...ll long after, and then only by ...nce was it learned.

Mae Marsh

She is also an everyday heroine. There is a big family of little Marshes, and the major part of the popular girl's big salary goes to educate these young folks. Miss Marsh spends her nights putting the touches onto her own education.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 13, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—Birth of a Nation.

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 13, 1915

Birth of a Nation—Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Tremont Theatre, has brought back a wave of interest in everything relating to civil war times. Even the voluminous frocks and dainty furbelows of those days are being imitated. The spectacle forms an extraordinarily vivid and accurate realization of the era of civil strife. Large audiences are the rule at both matinee and night.

CABLE ADDRESS | CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Enterprise
Marlboro Mass
7-13-15

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatre-goers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, manager booking department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1, are one-half those charged at night. It has been definately announced that "The Birth of a Nation will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore, those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) HERALD
JULY 12, 1915

atives Friday.

CROWDS ATTEND SPECTACLE.

"Birth of a Nation" Is Strong Magnet to New England Theatregoers.

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres in the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1.00 are one-half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-1917. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

MALDEN (Mass.) MIRROR
JULY 9, 1915

gave up a vacation last year in order to get the Maplewood library opened in the early fall.

TREMONT THEATRE

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00 are one half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) MERCURY
JULY 9, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont theatre. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse.

REVERE (Mass.) JOURNAL
JULY 10, 1915

Tremont Theatre

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, manager booking department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1.00 are one half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

BOSTON RECORD
JULY 14, 1915

D. W. Griffith Has Capacity to Conceive or Grasp Big Ideas

Whose great hit is in "The Birth of a Nation."

An appreciation of the producer of "The Birth of a Nation" is given in a current "movie" publication by Frank E. Woods, the veteran Majestic-Reliance scenario editor. The appreciation is all the more important because it is an open secret that Mr. Woods prepared the scenarios first of the original "Clansman," and then of "The Birth of a Nation," therefore he is in a position to judge the Griffith work from the viewpoint of an insider:

"David Wark Griffith is approaching the first milestone, and it will be up to him, in the parlance of the day, to go the remainder of the route. Will he do it? Will he make other and greater productions than the one that is now gaining him fame? I have heard enthusiastic admirers say that the thing is impossible. How can he ever produce another 'Birth of a Nation?' Such a question as this reminds me of the old days when he was making one-reel biographs.

"After a Pippa Passes or a Ramola, the critics were wont to declare: 'Griffith will never make another one like that.' And he didn't; he made something entirely different, yet better—a 'Sands o' Dee,' a 'Mothering Heart,' an 'Enoch Arden,' a 'Judith.' And so I believe it will be in the future. His productions will come less frequently, but unless I am greatly mistaken they will mark, at intervals, distinct steps forward, so long as he remains in active life.

"What peculiar qualities of mind have made Griffith great? Or rather, I should say, to be conservative, what is it that is making him great? We concede his greatness in his especial field, but I mean in this instance world-greatness. People look at his pictures and say: 'How wonderful!' They remark the infinite detail, the perfection of technique, the evidences of art, the spirit of poetry, the touches of homely human nature, the vastness of ensemble; and in some of these qualities, or all of them, they see as they think the key to the superiority of his work.

"And yet, they miss the one big element that, with the others, lifts him so far above his imitators that there can be no comparison. I mean the capacity to conceive or grasp big ideas, big purposes, big themes, and to present them in a big way that will command the respect of big minds. This Griffith has done and is doing. He showed early evidence of this capacity in 'A Corner in Wheat' and others of his one-reel Biographs. It was strongly apparent in 'The Escape,' 'Home Sweet Home,' 'The Avenging Conscience,' 'The Battle of the Sexes,' and lastly, 'The Birth of a Nation.' Others may imitate his style and do fairly well in making pictures merely to amuse, but until one or any of them can combine with their artistry a quality of independent thought of sufficiently high purpose to arrest the attention of the thinkers of the world, Griffith will have no rivals in motion pictures.

"Because of D. W. Griffith's natural dignity and reserve, the notion that he stands aloof from his fellow workers, that he lacks the common, human touch in daily intercourse, has been liberally circulated. In speaking of the master director, as he knew him in the old Biograph Studio, one of his early associates laughed at the idea of Griffith's aloofness. 'Why, he is the friend of everybody, from the property boy up. I never knew a more truly democratic man in my life,' said this co-worker of former days."

READING (Mass.) CHRONICLE
JULY 9, 1915

A VETERAN DAY IS SUGGESTED

THE EDITOR OF THE READING CHRONICLE:

Dear Sir,—A small incident last evening furnishes the occasion for this letter. While making a call on a gentleman of this town, who happens to be a veteran of the Civil War, I chanced to mention the great pleasure afforded me in witnessing the film "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. Unconscious of his weakened physical condition, I asked if he had seen it; he replied that he was unable to go anywhere except with difficulty, but was eager to hear all about it. As best I could I told the story, and then invited him to go with me some day over the road in a machine. This he regretfully thought was impossible; (as to that, however, I feel that all could be arranged). On second thought there must be other veterans, stay-at-homes, who would greatly enjoy going, and so instead of making it possible for one to go I make this suggestion that all may go.

Every day the horrors of the great war are presented to us in papers and magazines by narrative and picture. Their rehearsal has become a commonplace and excites but scarcely passing comment. Little do we know just how near this generation is to participation. It is a blight that may come any time. Fifty years ago it did come and the best blood in this country joined arms in a then titanic struggle. There are still among us those who were present in that conflict. Some suffered more than others, but all proved their willingness to offer the supreme sacrifice, that the question so long a menace to this nation might be settled forever. The nation as such, shows its gratitude by pensions and soldier's homes, but we as individuals—how about us? Do we show our appreciation to those who are still among us, our neighbors and "home folks"? Do we of the younger generation appreciate what they did? We do not because we know nothing different; we accept present conditions without realizing the sacrifice that they made. Every Memorial Day the veteran organizations and their affiliated bodies reverently pay tribute to their hero dead. Do we ever consider making things a little brighter for the living? Not to the extent that we might. Bent on the pleasures of this age too often do we neglect and forget those older. Every day lessens our opportunity, for, one by one, they are leaving us for all time. Why not let Reading inaugurate a "Veteran's Day." This could be made possible by a comparative few contributing dollars, or many contributing ten cent pieces.

Let the Selectmen appoint a committee to work out the details, assign the Boy Scouts on a certain day to collect in the funds; rely on owners of automobiles to furnish transportation to take them all in to see the show. They would appreciate it more than we would because they lived it and were actors in the very scenes depicted. Let Reading show a generous spirit of appreciation for her old soldiers. It will afford them a genuine holiday and give them a day for a long time to reminisce and talk over. It means so little for us except the effort and would mean so much to them. I sincerely hope this suggestion will meet with favorable response and early realization.

Sincerely yours,
CLARENCE G. HOWES.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 16, 1915

Crowds Attend Spectacle

"Birth of a Nation" is Strong Magnet to New England theatregoers.

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1.00 are one half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the opportunities presented by the Boston run.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 16, 1915

Crowds Attend Spectacle

"Birth of a Nation" is Strong Magnet to New England theatregoers.

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont Theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out of town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1.00 are one half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the opportunities presented by the Boston run.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JULY 14, 1915

PUTS STAGE SCENES AMONG "HAS-BEENS"

Rupert Hughes Says "Birth of Nation" Makes Them Look Amateurish.

IS OVERWHELMED BY IMMENSITY

Reduces to Childishness the Biggest Things the Theatre Can Do.

The following appreciation of "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith photoplay now running on toward its 200th presentation at the Tremont Theatre, comes from the pen of a distinguished critic and playwright:

By Rupert Hughes

When a great achievement of human genius is put before us, we can become partners in it in a way by applauding it with something of the enthusiasm that went into its making. It is that sort of collaboration that I am impelled to attempt in what follows.

When I saw "The Birth of a Nation" the first time, I was so overwhelmed by the immensity of it that I said:

"It makes the most spectacular production of drama look like the work of village amateurs. It reduces to childishness the biggest things the theatre can do."

For here were hundreds of scenes in place of four or five; thousands of actors in place of a score; armies in landscape instead of squads of supers jostling on a platform among covered screens. Here was the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved. Here were social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies. Here was a whole art gallery of scenery, of humanity, of still life and life in wildest career.

Here were portraits of things, of furniture, of streets, homes, wildernesses; pictures of conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, armies; pictures of family life, of festivals and funerals, ballrooms and battlefields, hospitals and flower gardens, hypocrisy and passion, ecstasy and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny. Here were the Southrons in their wealth, with their luxury at home, their wind-swept cotton fields; here was the ballroom with the seethe of dancers, here were the soldiers riding away to war, and the soldiers trudging home defeated, with poverty ahead of them and new and ghastly difficulties arising on every hand.

Here was the epic of a proud, brave people beaten into the dust and refusing to stay there.

A League of Film Uncoiled

The pictures shifted with unending variety from huge canvases to exquisite minatures. Now it was a little group of refugees cowering in the ruins of a home. A shift of the camera and we were looking past them into a great valley with an army fighting its way through.

One moment we saw Abraham Lincoln brooding over his emancipation proclamation; another, and he was yielding to a mother's tears; later we were in the crowded theatre watching the assassin making his way to and from his awful deed.

The leagues of film uncoiled and poured forth beauty of scene, and face and expression, beauty of fabric and attitude and motion.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a choral symphony of light, light in all its magic; the sun flashing through a bit of brown lace and giving immortal beauty to its pattern; or quivering in a pair of eyes or on a snowdrift of bridal viel, or on a moonlit brook or mountain side. Superb horses were shown plunging and rearing or galloping with a heart-quickening glory of speed down road and lane and through flying waters. Now came the thrill of a charge, of or a plunging steed caught back on its haunches in a sudden arrest. Now followed the terror of a bestial mob, the hurrah of a rescue, streets filled with panic and with carnival. Life is motion and here was the beautiful moving monument of motion.

"What could the stage give to rival all this?" I thought. "What could the novel give? or the epic poem?" The stage can publish the voice and the actual flesh; yet from the film these faces were eloquent enough without speech. And after all when we see people we are merely receiving in our eyes the light that beats back from their surfaces; we are seeing merely photographs and moving pictures.

I had witnessed numberless photoplays unrolled, pictures of every sort and condition of interest and value. I had seen elaborate "feature-films" occupying much time and covering many scenes. But none of them approached the unbroken fascination of "The Birth of a Nation."

The realism of this work is amazing; merely sit at a window and actually rolls by. The grandeur of mass and the minuteness of detail are unequaled in my experience. And so the first impression of my first view of this was that it was something new and wonderful in achievement.

Is of Heroic Proportions

In his novel, "The Clansman," the Rev. Thomas Dixon had made a fervid defense of his people from the harsh judgments and condemnations of unsympathetic historians. With this book as a foundation, David W. Griffith built up a structure of national scope and of heroic proportions.

Of course, size has little to do with art. A perfect statuet like one of the exquisite figurines of Tanagra is as great in a sense as the Cathedral of Rheims. A flawless sonnet of Milton's need not yield place to his "Paradise Lost." A short story of Poe's has nothing to fear from a cycle of Dumas' novels, nor has "The Suwanee River" anything to fear from the Wagnerian tetralogy.

And yet we cannot but feel that a higher power has created the larger work, since the larger work includes the problems of the smaller; and countless others. The larger work compels and tests the tremendous gifts of organization, co-ordination, selection, discipline, climax . . . "The Birth of a Nation" is a peculiarly human presentation of a vast racial tragedy . . .

Spellbound for Three Hours

I saw the play first in a small projecting room with only half a dozen spectators present. We sat mute and spellbound for three hours. When I learned that it had to be materially condensed it seemed a pity to destroy one moment of it. The next time I saw it was in a crowded theatre and it was accompanied by an almost incessant murmur of approval and comment, roars of laughter, gasps of anxiety and outbursts of applause. It was not silent drama so far as the audience was concerned.

The scene changed with the velocity of lightning, of thought. One moment we saw a vast battlefield with the enemies like midgets in the big world, the next we saw some small group filling the whole space with its personal drama; then just one or two faces big with emotion. And always a story was being told with every device of suspense, preparation, relief, development and crisis.

I cannot imagine a human emotion that is not included somewhere in this story from the biggest national psychology to the littlest whim of a petulant girl; from the lowest depths of ruthless villainy to the utmost grandeur of patriotic ideal.

All of the seven wonders of the world were big things. I feel that David W. Griffith has done a big thing and he has a right to the garlands as well as the other emoluments. "The Birth of a Nation" is a work of epochal importance in a large and useful field of social endeavor. In paying it this tribute of profound homage, I feel that I am doing only my duty by American art, merely rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's.

SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA IN MOTION PICTURE

One of the startlingly realistic scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing an army in motion. The spectator looks down upon it from a hilltop and is stirred by the grim tragedy of war.

TREMONT THEATRE—Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. The entertainment is substantially as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skilful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klax Klan scenes. For out of town patrons the matinee performances will be found attractive the same as night and more convenient to attend. The spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2:10 and 8:10 P. M. respectively.

Griffith Producing Another Sensation

D. W. Griffith, screenland's premier producer, whose monster production "The Birth of A Nation," continues the sensation of the country, is now at work in his Los Angeles studio preparing for the filming of "The Mother and The Law," a multiple reel feature to be presented upon a stupendous scale. Several of the same players who worked in "The Birth of A Nation" will appear in this new masterpiece. It is predicted that the new Griffith production will compare with any of the plays conceived and staged by this genius of motion picture production.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 17, 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and the Ku Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 16, 1915

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way.

The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. The entertainment is substantially the same as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skillful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klax Klan scenes. These have been beautifully tinted in the natural hues of early morn and purple dusk, the hours when the mysterious southern horsemen set forth on their secret rides or returned from their strange quests. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War and includes also much elaborate orchestration in a more modern mode. For out of town patrons the matinee performances will be found attractive the same as night and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows are given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2.10 and 8.10 respectively. Many Marlboro people have witnessed this wonderful film and all have been enthusiastic in their praise.

BOSTON POST
JULY 18, 1915

Tremont Theatre

Many persons who witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" earlier in the run at the Tremont Theatre will probably take it in again this week or next on learning that an entirely new print of the famous spectacle has been sent on from the Majestic-Reliance studio and is now on view. The life of a print is six months, sometimes a year. Mr. Griffith, the producer, however, wishes the great cities to see the play at its finest. Therefore, when any signs of wear are evident an entirely new print is prepared and put into use.

The one now to be seen at the Tremont is said to be singularly beautiful in its depiction of the celebrated Ku Klux Klan rides. These films are tinted and disclose the natural colors of early morn or purple dusk, the times when the riders went forth on their quests or returned from their strange secret missions. As a whole, the present film is considerably lighter and more distinct than the one preceding it.

In fact, it is said by the company's managers to be the finest of all those exhibited in the large centres of the play's production, including New York, Chicago and the Pacific Coast cities. An element of nearly equal value to the film itself is the elaborate orchestral music, which is well worth a second hearing. Then there are the grace and the charm of the belles of '61, as represented by the quaintly dressed young women attendants in lobby and foyer, and the skilful "back stage" effects which aid wonderfully in the illusion of the battle pictures and the thunderous Klan rides.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 18, 1915

Before "The Birth of a Nation" was produced, Anna Marble interviewed D. W. Griffith, the producer, with a view to manipulating the publicity campaign and enlightening the dear public concerning the merits, beauties, joys and other desirabilities of the filium.

"Of course, you are a moving-picture 'fan'," said Mr Griffith.

"Well, no, I can't say that I am," replied Miss Marble.

"What! You mean to say you are not crazy about seeing pictures?"

"No, Mr Griffith, as a matter of fact, I can't say that I have seen many of them or that I was especially fascinated with them."

"But," exclaimed Griffith, amazed to learn that people exist to whom the cinema is not as necessary as the breath of life, "how can you even think of doing the press work for a picture when you don't love them?"

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 18, 1915

tunes of [illegible] would be located, [illegible] married and in vaudeville.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

"The Birth of a Nation" is being produced simultaneously in a dozen cities, but it doesn't get everywhere the careful setting that it is given in the Tremont Theatre. A newspaper man who has recently been West tells me of a ludicrous incident which occurred during the performance in one of the coast cities.

You remember that the young Southern colonel, after leading a desperate charge and plunging the stars and bars into the mouth of a Union cannon, is wounded and taken to the hospital in Washington. Thither comes his aged mother to see him and is stopped by the Union sentry at the hospital. She pushes by him, saying "You may shoot me, but you cannot stop me from going to my boy."

At this place the orchestra burst into, "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier," a tune so completely out of harmony with the whole splendid picture that the audience burst out laughing. The manager of the theatre was a better business man than a judge of music and patriotic sentiment which explained the introduction of the song. However, he was quick to learn and did not repeat the offence.

BOSTON HERALD
JULY 18, 1915

Tremont Theatre

Many persons who saw "The Birth of a Nation" earlier in the run at the Tremont Theatre will probably see it again this week or next, on learning that a new print of the famous spectacle has been sent on from the Majestic-Reliance Studio and is now on view. The life of a print is six months, sometimes a year. The new one to be seen is said to be singularly beautiful in its depiction of the celebrated Ku Klux Klan rides. These films are tinted and disclose the natural colors of early morn or purple dusk, the times when the riders went forth or returned from their secret missions. An element of nearly equal value to the film itself is the elaborate orchestral music, which is well worth a second hearing.

[illegible] (Mass.) MIRROR.
JULY 16, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. The entertainment is substantially as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skilful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klax Klan scenes. These have been beautifully tinted in the natural hues of early morn and purple dusk," the hours when the mysterious southern horsemen set forth on their secret rides or returned from their strange quests. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War and includes also much elaborate orchestration in a more modern mode. For out of town patrons the matinee performances will be found attractive the same as night and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows are given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2:10 and 8:10 p. m. respectively.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JULY 17, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS BETTER THAN EVER

A beautiful new print of "The Birth of a Nation" is offered at the Tremont Theatre. While the spectacular Civil War entertainment is substantially the same as before, some artistic improvements have been made, notably through the labors in the Majestic-Reliance tinting room. In particular, the films showing the rides of the Clans are beautifully colored, in the rosy lights of dawn and eve. The Clansmen and their horses are more distinct, in better detail, and the romance of their strange adventure is heightened.

Mr. Griffith's play continues to be one of the great mid-summer attractions. The heat does not apparently affect this splendid show, for the comfort of patrons is greatly enhanced by its cool and well-ventilated home at the Tremont. Spectacle, drama, music and realistic effects unite to produce an artistic ensemble that pleases both eye and ear. The famous film play is on view every afternoon and evening, except Sundays.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 18, 1915

State rights for "The Birth of a Nation" are bringing big sums of money. The rights of 14 States were offered for $75,000 this week. The States are Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana and Nevada. In this territory there are 325 playing points, with 938 theatres and a population of 10,963,103.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 18, 1915

Improve Film at Tremont

A beautiful new print of "The Birth of a Nation" is offered at the Tremont Theatre. While the spectacular civil war entertainment is substantially the same as before, a number of artistic improvements have been added. In particular the films showing the rides of the Clans are beautifully colored in the rosy lights of dawn and eve; the Clansmen and their horses are more distinct, in better detail, yet the romance of their strange adventure is heightened.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 18, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"
Pictures at the Tremont

A new print of the "Birth of a Nation" has been sent on from the Majestic-Reliance Studio and is now on view at the Tremont Theatre. The life of a print is six months, sometimes a year. Mr Griffith, the producer, however, wishes the great cities to see the play at its finest. Therefore, when any signs of wear are evident an entirely new print is prepared and put into use.

The one now to be seen at the Tremont is said to be singularly beautiful in its depiction of the celebrated Ku Klux Klan rides. These films are tinted and disclose the natural colors of early morn or purple dusk, the times when the riders went forth on their quests or returned from their strange secret missions. As a whole the present film is considerably lighter and more distinct than the one preceding it.

An element of nearly equal value to the film itself is the elaborate orchestral music, which is well worth a second hearing. Then there are the grace and the charm of the belles of '61 as represented by the quaintly dressed young women attendants in lobby and foyer, which aid wonderfully in the illusion of the battle pictures and the thunderous Klan rides.

Boston Traveler
Date 7-17-15

[illegible]TOWN (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 16, 1915

[illegible] NATION."

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. This entertainment is substantially as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skillful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klax Klan scenes. These have been beautifully tinted in the natural hues of early morn and purple dusk, the hours when the mysterious southern horsemen set forth on their secret rides or returned from their strange quests. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War and includes also much elaborate orchestration in a more modern mode. For out of town patrons the matinee performances will be found attractive the same as night and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows are given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2.10 and 8.10 P. M., respectively.

[illegible]VENING RECORD, FRIDAY, JULY 16, 1915

If Hoopskirts Are Again the Vogue Boston Will Have to Be Changed

Three of "The Birth of a Nation" girls on their tour of the Tremont st. shopping district. From left to right the girls are the Misses Evelyn Downing, Gertrude McClellan and Florence Dowling.

If architecture should try to conform to women's styles in dress, Boston would have to be rebuilt for the hoopskirt maids of "The Birth of a Nation.

Some there are who owuld assert that hoopskirt dresses will surely "come back" this fall in the trail of the famous Civil War play at the Tremont Theatre, which has already set the stage fashions of Boston, New York and Chicago. But if hoopskirts do come back—

Washington st. will have to be widened.

Boston Common cliced off to double the sidewalk widths of Tremont st.

Subway turnstiles abolished.

Street-car steps lowered, and street-car entrances and exits doubled in size.

Back Bay flats—beg pardon! apartments enlarged.

The roaring Boston east wind tamed to a gentle zephyr.

Modest, demure and tantalizing as the mincing miss in the crinoline was and is, she undeubtedly would bring the city authorities tougher problems than they have ever yet tackled—should she "come back" in any considerable numbers one the already overcrowded thoroughfares. The great minds that designed subways, street-cars and skyscrapers certainly never sat down to figure out how the two-yard diameter of a wired and many-ruffled petticoat would negotiate a turnstile or a revolving door.

Believe us, Evelyn Downing, Gertrude McClellan, Florence Dowling and Margaret Murray of "The Birth of a Natiaon" company have tried it.

Yesterday they curtsied out from behind the scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," carrying their sunshades, stepped daintily out on Tremont street and hailed a taxi.

Evelyn stepped gingerly up on the running board, while the driver hid a grin as big as a yawn behind his hand. She pressed her skirt down with one hand in front while she slipped the other behind her back, sailor fashion, and tried to lift the left foot through the door. But two white-stockinged and black-slippered feet had to seek the sidewalk hurriedly.

Gertrude hastened to the rescue, lifted one end of the hoop up to Evelyn's elbow and pinned the other to her ankles, while Evelyn slipped through the door. Gertrude herself had to be hauled in bodily!

Then the taxicab was full.

By no extreme resource of human ingenuity could any space be squeezed out within for a third girl. Florence and Hargaret were obliged to follow in another vehicle.

They went to one of the largest department stores, dismissed the taxis, and tackled a very large revolving door. It was hopeless. An obliging floorwalker directed them to another entrance which was open and wide enough to wiggle through.

A tango frock of pompadour silk was Evelyn's heart's desire. The salesman saw her coming. He sought support against the rows of boxes back of the counter. She fingered the material and selected a rose-colored taffeta.

"Let me have enough of this for a dress, please!" said Evelyn.

The salesman opened his eyes, leaned over the counter and counted the ruffles, first up and then down. It was too much for him.

"How much?" he asked with a puzzled expression.

"A yard wide? Ten yards, please." The salesman gasped.

"And a yard for the waist, you know," added Evelyn.

[illegible] Be Continued [illegible]

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 18, 1915

'BIRTH OF NATION' MUSIC MARVEL IN EFFECTIVENESS

How the Score of the Great Spectacle Is Made to Identify Itself with Action of the Film.

By HARLOW HARE.

One of the most effective features of the "Birth of a Nation" production is its really brilliant musical setting. During the two hours and a half which the big film requires, the orchestra plays an arrangement which perfectly fits the unfolding story and which includes many of the finest bits of melody extant. The library of the old masters and the collections of songs and ballads of the 60's have alike been rifled to make up the score of "The Birth of a Nation."

When the beaux and belles of '61 danced the small hours away, they did not have the hesitation, the tango or the fox trot, but a waltz or polka tune, a schottische or a lancers, or perhaps the Virginia reel put rhythm in the feet and the tingle in the blood. So David W. Griffith, in his marvelous reproduction of the Piedmont ball in "The Birth of a Nation," has the young people dancing to the strains of "Comin' Thro' the Rye" changed to waltz time.

On this lovely, almost sensuously intoxicating scene is brought the tattered flag that had been through the first Battle of Bull Run when the Confederates drove the Federals headlong before them and baptized the Stars and Bars in glory.

How the Johnny Rebs exult and how the women cheer as the flag is displayed and one hears the strains of the "Bonnie Blue Flag" succeeding the waltz music! But soon comes the news that the young officers at the ball must go to the front. A scene of wild confusion follows upon the joyous, orderly dance, and at daybreak when the ballroom is deserted and everyone is racing about the streets the chaos and alarm of approaching strife are reflected by the strains of Suppe's "Light Cavalry Overture." The little town of Piedmont has its early share of the horrors of war. Weber's "Freischutz Overture" reproduces them to the ear as the pictures on the screen reproduce to the eye.

MUSIC AND SPECTACLE.

A wonderful art, this, the marriage of music and spectacle, and one wonderfully achieved by Mr. Griffith and the man who put together the score, a composite, of great themes suitable to Griffith's great ideas rather than an original work. It is, however, comparable to the way European composers like Liszt, Chopin and Dvorak take the melodies of the common people, the folk music, so to speak, and combine and elaborate them with more erudite themes.

Thus the big moments of the early part of "The Birth of a Nation," laid in the Southland, revert to "Dixie," "My Maryland," "Marching through Georgia," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp! the Boys are Marching," Kingdom Coming," "Girl I left Behind Me," and "Home, Sweet Home." To what other tune should the Southerners bound for war march than to the ever familiar "Dixie"? What more splendidly typifies the rescue of the Piedmonters from the guerilla troops by their own men than the glorious "Maryland, My Maryland."

Of course "Marching thro' Georgia" sets the pace for the extraordinarily vivid depiction of Sherman's March, but it is a "Marching through Georgia" with a sad antiphony—wails of the victims in minor keys answering the marching song of the conqueror. "Taps" for the deep tragedy of war's peace; "The Star Spangled Banner" to mark the grand victory of the North, and the inspiring strains of "America" for reunion of North and South in a greater nation when Grant and Lee clasped hands at Appomattox—such is the appropriate, if somewhat obvious, instrumentation of patriotic scenes.

ELSIE'S MELODY.

When piquant little Elsie Stoneman decides to become a nurse and solace gallant wounded youths back to health, even as Cabinet officers' daughters have done in the present war, her goings and comings are accompanied by a most adorable little air which she is supposed not only to sing but also to pick on the banjo. In the close-ups you can see the dainty lips fashioning the words of the song and in the full figure you can see her working the banjo a little over time, while the handsome sufferer on the pillow manages to turn his head about three-quarters in order to get a look at her. Many persons have asked what this tune is. It is Henry E. Work's "Kingdom Coming," otherwise known as "Massa's Jubilee," one of the most catching ditties that was ever picked out of banjo or guitar.

CRINOLINE GIRLS FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Upper row, left to right—Evelyn Dowling, Gertrude McClellan, Florence Dowling. Seated, Margaret Murray.

To return to the great war scenes. There is a magnitude about Griffith's representation of war and battle that demands the most elaborate effects. The scenes themselves are enormous, panoramic; the action is both marvelously complex and marvelously vivid; the music must reproduce this immensity, complexity and thrill at once. Thus one is not surprised that Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite, "In the Hall of the Mountain King," is used for the terrific pictures of "the torch against the breast of Atlanta"; that Wagnerian operatic crashes accompany the cannonading and infantry charging at Petersburg; and that even when a national army tune like "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" is used, it is elaborated and built up into a great, overwhelming symphonic movement. So, too, in the scene of Lincoln's assassination in Ford's Theatre, Washington, April 14, 1865. The appearance of the emancipator is greeted, as it was greeted on that occasion, by the well-known strains of "Hail to the Chief." But the fatal crisis of that hour can only be rendered by classical music of enormous complexity and power such as Bellini's "Norma Overture," which is the work selected.

TENDER LOVE MOTIF.

Three distinctive strains or motifs run through the second half of the picture, emphasizing by contrast the three elements of which it is composed. For the loves of Ben Cameron, the little Confederate colonel, and Elsie Stoneman, the dainty Northern heroine, we have Briel's "Perfect Song," an original composition for this play and now published in sheet form. It is one of the most beautiful love themes that has ever been invented. It returns and returns with peculiar increasing effectiveness, but perhaps it is sweetest in the outdoor scene when Elsie kisses the dove and Ben repeatedly tries to steal a few for himself while she is doing so.

Then there is the wild, chaotic-seeming tune that marks the entry of the negro carpet-bagger mobs and the racket of the rioters. Perhaps Mr. Griffith got this out of the semi-musical cries of the negro dancers on the old plantation in Kentucky when he was a boy. It is certainly original so far as can be learned. It does not represent the negro of today by any means. For the last negro motif in the play is Hermann's Beautifully liquid, enticing "Cocoanut Dance" to the strains of which the Hampton Institute films are shown.

But above all and everything else, the biggest thing in the second part of "The Birth of a Nation" and indeed of the whole play is the welcome Ku-Klux-Klan Call, the signal that the Fiery Cross of St. Andrew has been borne from South to North Carolina and back again and that the little band of oppressed whites, including the hero and heroine of the story, are to be saved by these Highlanders from the fury of the riotous elements [illegible] upon them. The call makes the [illegible] ring at the opening of [illegible] of the film. It strikes across the moments of agony, horror and suspense like a clarion note of rescue from another world. The call is not original, but an adaptation of the famous call in Wagner's "Die Walkure."

STIRRING KU-KLUX CALL.

Just a flash of the ghostly horsemen, the big Ku-Klux call, and the spectators become almost frenzied in their applause. Often the call has a weird effect, as when the thin-voiced oboe plays it alone. Often it comes stridently powerful against entirely different notes.

The final Piedmont scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" are very strenuous. It seems almost impossible to conceive how Griffith could have got action of such lightening-like speed, involving such enormous numbers of people and carried on with such apparent defiance of the rules of order yet with a strange logic of its own. While these big fights, riots and rescues are going on we have the appropriately big music of Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture" Wagner's "Rienzi Overture," the Zampa Overture," the Fire Music from "Die Walkure' and "The Ride of the Valkyries." It all ends up, as good adventure stories should, with the triumph of the heroic characters and thus naturally with the parade of the returning clansmen for which of course "Dixie" is the cue. Then after the scenes depicting negro progress above referred to, which are enlivened by the "Cocoanut Dance," the double honeymoon by the sea is shown and the strain of "In the Gloaming" are followed by Briel's "Perfect Song."

REMARKABLE FINALE.

The finale of the picture is Griffith's remarkable conception on the one hand of the "human salad" of war with the blonde brute on a horse in the background striking at his helpless victim, and, on the other hand, of an Utopian brotherhood of love and peace, with some of the folks dressed like Koreans and others like early Romans, and the figure of the Saviour blessing the glad assembly.

These fine bits of allegory are accompanied by the "Gloria" from Haydn's Mass in C, and as the last Utopian scene fades out and the immortal words of Daniel Webster on Liberty and Union appear on the screen "The Star Spangled Banner" rings out in all its splendor, and the scenes that have made "The Birth of a Nation" are done.

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGRAM
JUL 18 1915

FOURTEENTH WEEK.

"The Birth of a Nation" Continues to Attract Large Crowds.

David W. Griffith's historical and romantic spectacle, "The birth of a nation," is on in its 14th week at the Tremont theater, Boston. The cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theaters of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous.

Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this attraction. Persons having charge of parties of 50 or more theater-goers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, manager booking department, Tremont theater, and arrangements will be made for their visit.

It has been announced that "The birth of a nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
JULY 16, 1915

FILM PLAY IN 15th WEEK

Many Go to See "Birth of a Nation"

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. Many artistic improvements are evident through the skillful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klux Klan scenes. These have been beautifully tinted in the natural hues of early morn and purple dusk, the hours when the mysterious southern horsemen set forth on their secret rides or returned from their strange quests. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War. For out of town patrons the matinee performances will be found attractive the same as night and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows are given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2.10 and 8.10 p. m. respectively.

CLIPPING FROM 7-17-15
Boston Record
Date

Tremont Theatre

A beautiful new print of "The Birth of a Nation" is offered at the Tremont Theatre. While the spectacular Civil War entertainment is substantially the same as before, a number of artistic improvements have been added, notably through the labors in the Majestic-Reliance tinting room. In particular the films showing the rides of the Clans are beautifully colored. In the rosy lights of dawn and eve the Clansmen and their horses are more distinct, in better detail, yet the romance of their strange adventure is heightened.

Mr. Griffith's play continues to be the great mid-summer attraction of New England. As the heat causes other enterprises to wilt and close, it does not appreciably affect this splendid show. Of course the comfort of patrons is greatly enhanced by its cool and well ventilated home at the Tremont. Spectacle, drama, music and back-stage effects unite to produce an artistic ensemble that pleases both eye and ear. No limit for the duration of the run has been set, but those intending to witness "The Birth of a Nation" should not wait too long or they will be disappointed.

DORCHESTER (Mass.) BEACON
JULY 17, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. This entertainment is substantially as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skilful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klux Klan scenes. These have been beautifully tinted in the natural hues of early morn and purple dusk, the hours when the mysterious southern horsemen set forth on their secret rides or returned from their strange quests. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War and includes also much elaborate orchestration in a more modern mode.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 20, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre is the mecca of many thousands of "Old Home" visitors and excursionists.

Curiosity to see the first filmed spectacle established at regular theatre prices has brought many patrons, the love of sensation undoubtedly attracted many others who had read of the negroes' agitation against the play. But all are captivated by the delightful blend of Civil War history and poetic romance, thrilled by the stirring martial and equestrian pictures, and put completely under the spell of Griffith's directive strategy conjoined with the superb acting of the members of his enormous company.

"If you want to see war as it actually is," remarked Richard Harding Davis, the war correspondent, "witness 'The Birth of a Nation'!" The orchestral music of course enhances all the wonderful effects.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JULY 20, 1915

TREMONT COOLED FOR FILM PLAY PATRONS

Midsummer heat has no effect on the run of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" films, at the cool Tremont Theatre. In addition to the usual number of electric fans provided by the house, the company management at the beginning of the heated term installed a dozen more of even larger size, so that the auditorium is exceptionally cool and Mr. Griffith's spectacle is given under the most favorable conditions.

Even were the playhouse much less comfortable, it would probably be hard to keep the throngs away from the extraordinary attraction. "The Birth of a Nation" is the mecca of thousands of old home visitors, of almost every excursionist and vacationist, and of a very large percentage of the 1,500,000 population of Greater Boston.

Orchestral music enchances all the fine film effects. The piece is on view every afternoon and evening except Sundays.

BOSTON HERALD
JULY 20, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

Midsummer heat has no effect on the run of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" at the cool Tremont Theatre. In addition to the usual number of electric fans provided by the house, the company management has installed a dozen more of even larger size. "The Birth of a Nation" still draws thousands, captivated by the blend of civil war history and poetic romance, thrilled by the martial and equestrian pictures, and pleased by the work of the large company.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER
JUL 17 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. This entertainment is substantially as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skilful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klux Klan scenes. These have been beautifully tinted in the natural hues of early morn and purple dusk, the hours when the mysterious southern horsemen set forth on their secret rides or returned from their strange quests. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War and includes also much elaborate orchestration in a more modern mode.

photo-play, The Confession of [illegible] Rasputoff."

Tremont Theatre

Midsummer heat has no effect on the run of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. In addition to the usual number of electric fans provided by the house, the company management at the beginning of the heated term installed a dozen more of even larger size, the auditorium is by far the coolest in town, and Mr. Griffith's spectacle is given under the most favorable conditions.

"Birth of a Nation"

Midsummer heat has no effect on the run of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" at the cool Tremont Theatre. In addition to the usual number of electric fans provided by the house, the company management has installed a dozen more of even larger size. "The Birth of a Nation" still draws thousands, captivated by the blend of civil war history and poetic romance, thrilled by the martial and equestrian pictures, and pleased by the work of the large company.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 20, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
MAY 29, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

In the last of a series of sermons on "The Birth of a Nation," bringing out "Final Impressions" of the much discussed photo-play, Rev. Lyman V. Rutledge, of the Harvard Street Unitarian church last Sunday, said:

"It remains, and doubtless will remain, a beautiful picture of life. It is not historically accurate. That I pointed out last Sunday. Indeed it teaches a lesson which cannot be vindicated by history, but the film does not pretend to be historically accurate. It throws out a number of impressions: that war is horrible, that love is beautiful, and that the triumph of virtue is glorious. It also gives the impression that it is historically accurate. Men have acted on that impression and have either supported or condemned the film as if it really were intended to teach history. Naturally enough men say it ought to be suppressed if it pretends to be historically accurate. Undoubtedly it ought to be suppressed if it makes that claim. But I have not so far discovered that it does. It merely creates that impression.

That impression ought to be corrected. Everybody ought to be informed that this is an "Historical Drama in Two Acts." That it is based, not on history, but on a novel "The Clansman," which was written by a man who is not capable of reaching a sound logical conclusion on the subject. We should not suppress the film, but merely ask the management to remove that small amount of historical quotation which gives the impression that the whole picture is historically true, and insert a few well chosen words to the effect that this picture play represents a true and beautiful romance and that the management expects to produce in the near future a still more impressive and truer picture which will present the feeling of the north, and its better part in the reconstruction period."

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 22, 1915

MISS DONNA MONTRAN, one of "The Birth of Nation" girls, who will make a flight over the city with Captain Redding.

ACTRESS TO FLY WITH REDDING OVER CITY

One of "The Birth of a Nation" girls, who appear as "Belles of 1861" in the Griffith production at the Tremont Theatre, will make a spectacular flight with Captain J. C. Redding in his aeroplane today.

The young woman, Miss Donna Montran, will not merely be a passenger in the biplane, but will act as a special messenger for "The Birth of a Nation." She will carry a letter from the commandant of the military forces at the Huntington avenue grounds to Manager Zweifel, who is in charge of the great war play at the Tremont Theatre.

A hundred pennants, displaying the insignia of "The Birth of a Nation," will be released by Miss Montran during the aeroplane's flight over that part of Boston Common near the theatre. To twenty-five of them will be attached a free ticket to the play and the captors of these twenty-five will thus be doubly fortunate.

"The Birth of a Nation" aeronaut will be attired exactly like the lobby girls at the play, but in the so-called "soft" costume with wiring and hoop taken out. The ascent will be made from the Saugus aviation grounds shortly before 2 p. m.

Two complete flights to the city and back will be made. On the first of them Captain Redding and Miss James will fly around the State House, returning over the Common and circling around the Tremont. On the second flight the biplane will again appear above the Common and the theatre just about the time the crowds are entering for the matinee performance.

Globe, Boston
July 20,

"The Birth of a Nation" Spectacle at the Tremont

David W. Griffith's superb spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to attract and interest not only residents of Boston and vicinity but visitors from points 100 and 150 miles away. The story takes one from the time the seeds of disunion were planted in this country through the awful Civil War struggle and down into Reconstruction days, when the North and South again locked horns over the temporary supremacy of the carpetbagger regime.

Then it shows how Aryan supremacy was finally won, the North and the South were reconciled, and under the new arrangement the negro, who had been the object of these struggles, made wonderful advances in progress and prosperity. Interwoven with the political story are the threads of a beautiful double romance dealing with a Confederate officer and a Northern girl and a Federal officer and a Southern lassie.

The whole is irradiated with Mr Griffith's refined comedy, his love of nature and of animals, and his broad sense of poetic fitness. The acting is probably the finest that Bostonians have ever been privileged to witness in a screen play, while the music and other accessories are likewise delightfully entertaining.

An outdoor advertising stunt that has attracted a great deal of comment the last fortnight has been the appearance in several of the smaller New England cities of a traveling scene, so to speak, reproduced from "The Birth of a Nation." An old-fashioned barouche of Civil War times shows Elsie Stoneman and Margaret Cameron in the rear seats, faced by Col Ben Cameron and Capt Phil Stoneman. The young people impersonating these parts are Bostonians. They are costumed accurately to the era they represent. The traveling display is in charge of Frank A. Johnson, an old-time outdoor publicity man.

DeWolf Hopper is the first of several famous stage stars who has been engaged by the Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination which is to present M otion pictures in a chain of theatres through the country. It is reported that Mr Hopper's yearly salary will be $125,000, and that the first production in which he will appear is a film version of the Operetta, "Don Quixot."

Boston Record
July 22, 1915

Birth of Nation Girl to Fly In Aeroplane

DONNA MONTRAN,
Who Makes an Aeroplane Flight Today.

One of "The Birth of a Nation" girls who appear as "belles of 1861" in the Griffith production at the Tremont Theatre will make a spectacular flight with Capt. Redding in his aeroplane this afternoon.

The young woman, Miss Donna Montran, will release 100 pennants displaying the insignia of "The Birth of a Nation" during the aeroplane's flight over that part of Boston Common near the theatre. To 25 of them will be attached a free ticket to the play.

"The Birth of a Nation" aeronaut will be attired exactly like the lobby girls at the play, but in the so-called "soft" costume with wiring and hoop taken out. The ascent will be made from the Saugus Aviation grounds shortly before 2 p.m. Two complete flights to the city and back will be made. On the first of them Capt. Redding and Miss James will fly around the State House, returning over the Common and circling around the Tremont. On the second flight the biplane will again appear above the Common and the theatre just about the time the crowds are entering for the matinee performance.

BOSTON RECORD
JULY 22, 1915

DeWolf Hopper Gives Reasons For Going Into the Movies

By F. H. Cushman

DeWolf Hopper, the elongated comedian, after much persuasion, has given his reasons for forsaking the spoken drama to appear in the movies. One reason was that he felt that he had exhausted the inviting territory of the Gilbert and Sullivan field and hated to sing inferior lyrics. His second reason—but let him tell it:—

"Then I have been tremendously impressed by the work that Mr. Griffith has done in motion pictures. He is a genius—make no mistake about that. It so happens that the offer came to me two days after I had first seen 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"Frankly, before I saw that, I had not cared a rap for the movies. I went there under protest, at the persuasion of Mrs. Hopper and Digby Bell. I saw a wonderful thing. I saw an audience held spellbound as I have rarely seen an audience held in the theatre. I saw their excitement, saw their tears.

"The picture itself, with its many infinitely dramatic touches—strokes of genius—struck me as something big, something new, something important. I came out dazed.

"Even so, when the first envoy came to me in my dressing room I laughed. In fact, I said 'Tut! Tut!' and made a face or two. But the offer—and that was the third reason—was like a fact in a fairy tale. Here it was, no Broadway gossip, but figures set down in black and white. It would have been criminal for me to refuse it. Mr. Brady, who has been fine and loyal and helpful with our Gilbert and Sullivan ventures, released me at once. I have promised to come back to him when I come back to the stage. He said I would be a fool not to take this."

The Griffith office has mentioned $125,000 as Mr. Hopper's annual reward. You may take it or leave it. Evidently, he elected to take it.

TO FLY OVER COMMON.

Miss Donna Montran Expects to Drop Pennants and Tickets for Show From Biplane.

Miss Donna Montran, one of the pretty "belles of 1861" in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, is anticipating the time of her life this afternoon, when she expects to make two round trips between Saugus and Boston Common with Capt J. Chauncey Redding in his biplane, incidentally showering "Birth of a Nation" pennants and free tickets for the Tremont Theatre on the heads of the crowd that will witness the flight from the Common.

The two flights over the Common in the vicinity of the Tremont Theatre are scheduled, one for about 1:30, or not long after, the other a short time before the matinee performance is over, probably about 4:30. During the first flight the biplane will circle about above the State House dome.

Miss Montran will be attired similarly to the lobby girls at the Tremont Theatre, though without the hoopskirt. She will drop 100 pennants on the Common, 25 of which will have tickets for the theatre attached to them. The distribution will take place during both flights, and those who capture the tickets will be able to see "The Birth of a Nation" free of cost.

BOSTON HERALD
JULY 22, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ACTRESS FLIES TOMORROW

Miss Donna Montran, one of the "Belles of 1861" in "The Birth of a Nation," playing at the Tremont Theatre, will fly with Capt. Redding in an aeroplane from the Saugus aviation fields to Boston tomorrow afternoon. The couple will make two trips during the day, and Miss Montran will scatter 100 "Birth of a Nation" pennants over the Common. Free tickets to the photoplay will be attached to 25 of the pennants.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 25, 1915

News, Notes and Gossip About Plays and Players

The following realignment of executive staff for the Griffith plays has recently been made: Henry MacMahon, formerly manager of the Boston "Birth of a Nation" company, has become general director of the corporation; Frederick R. Zweifel, manager of the Boston company; John A. Barry, Mr Griffith's private secretary, manager at Brighton Beach; Howard Herrick, a veteran pressman long associated with the Dixon plays, assigned to Atlantic City promotion with the prospective job a month later of transferring the Boston production to St Louis. J. J. McCarthy continues as general manager of the Epoch Producing Company, and it is rumored that he will likewise have much to do with the business inception of the great triangle film syndicate.

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 25, 1915

Film Firm Hires Society Theatre

NEW YORK, July 24.—The Triangle Film Corporation, incorporated with a capital announced as $5,000,000, and headed by Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers of "The Birth of a Nation" has engaged as a motion picture house the Knickerbocker Theatre, which has become known as a "society" theatre because of the pretentiousness of its theatrical productions.

The prices of the movies there will range from $3 down, competing with the regular theatres.

It will be a new step for the motion picture promoters, who have exhibited one long picture at $2 prices, but have never shown a program of short plays at that rate.

Boston Journal
Date 7. 24-15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO END RUN AUG. 21

The management of "The Birth of a Nation" has set a limit of 20 weeks to the stay of the spectacle at the Tremont Theatre. There are only five first-class productions of Mr. Griffith's greatest work, namely those at Boston, New York, Brighton Beach, Atlantic City and Chicago. What with the accessories of music, costuming and effects, the making of a new "Birth of a Nation" production occupies about three months. The theatrical syndicate has declared that St. Louis cannot wait that long, so Boston, which has had the play since April, must next month turn over its production to the fourth city of the nation.

The Boston run will positively come to a close Saturday evening, Aug. 21, nor will the play be presented elsewhere in New England this season. It is generally agreed that the present Boston production is the most beautiful and sumptuous edition of the Civil War and Reconstruction story that has been presented anywhere.

There are afternoon and evening performances every day except Sunday.

BROOKLINE [illegible] TOWNSMAN
JULY 17, 1915

F F 14

TREMONT THEATRE.

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Angeles. The entertainment is substantially as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skillful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klux Klan scenes. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil war and includes also much elaborate orchestration in a more modern mode. For out of town patrons the matinee performances will be found attractive the same as night, and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows are given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2:10 and 8:10 p. m. respectively.

BOSTON POST
JULY 25, 1915

The Ku Klux Klan, whose deeds are so generously celebrated in Mr. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, occupy a peculiar position in history somewhere between the California Vigilantes and the Molly Maguires of odorous Pennsylvania fame. The marvel of it is that to the spectators at the Tremont they are naught but heroes. The tide of enthusiasm begins to rise with the initial appearance of these spectral Southern horsemen on the screen, and as their gallant deeds crowd one upon the other, applause becomes practically continuous and even shouts and hurras mark their final triumph and rescue of the "downtrodden whites" from their enemies. And the scenes of half-frenzied enthusiasm enacted in the local playhouse are not a marker, it is alleged, to those in more demonstrative New York, Chicago or San Francisco. Sometimes the show in those cities is almost broken up, for the nonce at least, by the excitement that like wildfire sweeps the house.

Of course the Ku Klux in Mr. Griffith's play are conventional heroes. No one who sees a lot of white-clad horsemen racing like mad, performing thrilling mounts and dismounts, saving captive maidens, and rescuing beleaguered folks in a cabin from attackers armed with shotguns, can help applauding for all he is worth. Another and more unfavorable side of the Ku Klux is given in Judge Tourgee's novels, "Bricks Without Straw" and "A Fool's Errand." The Klans undoubtedly saved the Southern people from the horrid fear of massacre. But to those Northerners who came to settle in the South after the Civil war, as well as to the luckless victims, many of their clannish acts must have appeared as little else than outrages.

There are always "two sides of the shield" concerning secret force organizations which are outside the pale of the law. History distributes praise or blame according to the justification such secret societies had for their violence and also whether or not they were "able to get away with it." Most people suppose the Sicilian Mafia to be wholly brutal and murderous. But Marion Crawford informs us it was an "unwritten" organization of all the Sicilian masses to fight the grinding tyranny of the Bourbons. Only in later days did it degenerate to blackmail, hold-ups and bomb-throwing. Even the famed Neapolitan Camorra has some striking points of likeness with New York's Tammany of Tweed and Sweeney days. The California Vigilantes were the respectable merchants of San Francisco and Sacramento. They used the rough and ready process of "Lynch law" to quell the crimes against property and person which the regular officers of the law were unable to check. The Molly Maguires took up the cause of striking coal miners in northeastern Pennsylvania. They fought primarily against industrial oppression, but with such barbarous tools of dynamite and secret violence that they rapidly became execrated and were at last caught and punished by the law.

The Klan was a sort of Southern Mafia—a banding of the native sons against all the ills real and imaginary that were brought upon the Southern people through reconstruction. The fact that so many thousands of "good citizens" and even distinguished men belonged to the order, and the further fact that the good women of the South were their most ardent supporters, have lent a tinge of romance and chivalry to their history. Of these facts Producer Griffith took full account in making them the protagonists of "The Birth of a Nation" story. And hence the hero-worship of the Klan.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM
BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE

The Triangle Film Corporation was formed at Hunta, Col., last week as the result of a meeting held over across the Continent of David W. Griffith, Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince from Los Angeles and of Harry E. Aitken, Adam and Charles Kessel and Charles O. Baumann from New York. It is a common incorporation intended to raise the quality of all sorts of films in conformity with the high standard set by D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which is now playing a prosperous engagement at the Tremont Theatre. It is in fact a sequel to "The Birth of a Nation" enterprise and will greatly extend the influence of the three great directors, Griffith, Ince and Sennett, both Nationally and in foreign lands. About twoscore of leading dramatic stars of the American stage have already been engaged to appear under their direction, the latest recruits to the already very long list being Billie Burke, Bruce McRae and Mary Boland.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
JULY 25, 1915

brothers, the Acme ... The Pathe News will show the usual series of news events in motion pictures.

Last Weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" management announces the last four weeks of the notable engagement at the Tremont Theatre. The Boston run will end Saturday evening, Aug 21. The play will not be presented elsewhere in New England this season.

Its popularity here has been attested by approximately 200,000 New Englanders who have seen it, and realizing that Boston has enjoyed one of the longest runs of the picture, it was believed only fair that St Louis, the fourth city of the Nation, should enjoy it in turn, beginning late in August.

"The Birth of a Nation," as staged by Mr Griffith, the master producer, offers the finest and most thrilling story of Civil War and reconstruction days that has ever been presented in a theatre. Not only the adults but the children will be interested in this fascinating historical and romantic entertainment. As usual, it is being presented twice daily except on Sundays.

Boston Herald
July 22, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ACTRESS FLIES TOMORROW

Miss Donna Montran, one of the "Belles of 1861" in "The Birth of a Nation," playing at the Tremont Theatre, will fly with Capt. Redding to an aeroplane from the Saugus aviation fields to Boston tomorrow afternoon. The couple will make two trips during the day, and Miss Montran will scatter 100 "Birth of a Nation" pennants over the Common. Free tickets to the photoplay will be attached to 25 of the pennants.

BOSTON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
JULY 2[illegible] 1915

After a run in Boston of 20 weeks the Griffith film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown for the last time at the Tremont theater Aug. 21. The production which is being seen here will then be taken to St. Louis.

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 25, 1915

LINCOLN IN THE 'BIRTH OF NATION' AT THE TREMONT

Portrayal of Martyred President Made Satisfactory by the Reverence of Actor.

The most prominent figure in Part 1 of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, is that of Abraham Lincoln, the martyr President, who overshadows Stoneman, the rabid abolitionist and plotter. And it is a faithful portrait of the "rail-splitter" that one sees on the screen at the Tremont. The homely but kindly features are there, and the tall, stooping form which pictures have made so familiar.

History has been drawn upon for incident, and in the photo-play Lincoln is shown in characteristic poses and kindly deeds. Here he is signing a pardon for a young Southern soldier condemned as a guerilla spy, and making glad the heart of the aged mother who has not pleaded in vain for the life of her boy; and again he is defending his policy as to the conquered South, a policy too humane for the revengeful Stoneman.

Last of all he is seen stricken to death at the moment of his great triumph, his noble head laid low by the bullet of the assassin. Were "The Birth of a Nation" to end with the slaying of Lincoln, its fame as a wonderful picture would be secure; but it carries forward to the logical end the fateful story of the republic during the dark ages that followed the death of Lincoln and the failure to carry out his policy of reconciliation. And so the great character influences the events of later days; when the folly of secession is realized and when wiser counsels prevail. "The Birth of a Nation" is and must of necessity have been the story of President Lincoln.

Not a little of the successful portrayal of the part of the President by Joseph Henabery is due to the apparent reverence with which the actor approaches his work. Lincoln was a kindly man, but far from being of morose disposition; but that part of his career with which the photo-play deals was saddened by the war and its awful sacrifices. Wonderful as is the actor's makeup which results in a portrait, the counterpart of which still looks down from the walls of many an humble home in New England, more wonderful is the facial expression that indicates so surely what is going on in the mind of the great Liberator. It is a triumph of the actors' art.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Chronicle
Boston Mass
Date 7-17-15

Tremont Theatre. FF

Shows may come and shows may go, feature films be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, continues on its triumphant way. The fifteenth week of the attraction is now in progress. It is marked by the putting on of an entirely new print just received from Los Lngeles. The entertainment is substantially as before, yet many artistic improvements are evident through the skillful tinting that has been done, notably the coloring of the Ku Klux Klan scenes. These have been beautifully tinted in the natural hues of early morn and purple dusk, the hours when the mysterious southern horsemen set forth on their secret rides or returned from their strange quests. Besides the film spectacle itself, "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War and includes also much elaborate orchestration in a more modern mode. For out of town patrons the matinee performances will be found as attractive as those given in the evening and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows are given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2.10 and 8.10 p.m. respectively.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 2[illegible] 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation FF

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON TRAVELER
7-24-15

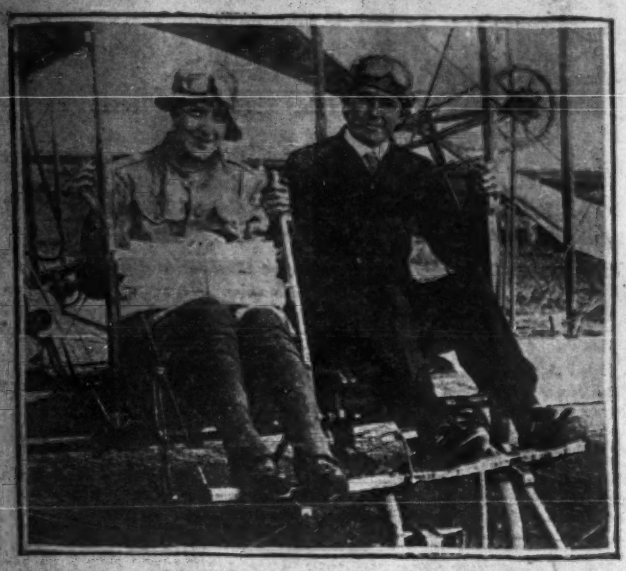
"Birth of a Nation" Going FF

The management of "The Birth of a Nation" has set a limit of 20 weeks to its stay at the Tremont Theatre. What with the accessories of music, costuming and effects, the making of a new "Birth of a Nation" production occupies about three months; the theatrical syndicate has declared that St. Louis cannot wait that long, so Boston, which has had the play April, May, June and July, must next month turn over its production to the fourth city of the nation. The Boston run will positively come to a close Saturday evening, Aug. 21; nor will the play be presented elsewhere in New England this season.

July 22, 1915 THE BOSTON GLOBE

FREE TICKETS FROM THE SKY.

Miss Montran Also Drops "Birth of a Nation" Pennants From Aeroplane Over Revere and Lynn.



MISS DONNA MONTRAN AND CAPT J. CHAUNCEY REDDING STARTING ON FLIGHT FROM SAUGUS TO REVERE BEACH.

Capt Chauncey Redding's aeroplane, bearing Miss Donna Montran, one of the "belles of 1861" in the Griffith production of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, flew over Revere and Lynn shortly after 2:30 yesterday afternoon instead of over Boston Common as had previously been planned.

The change was made at the last minute because the management was denied permission to drop pennants and free tickets on the Common. But they did secure the right to do so along the beach at Revere and Lynn, so at 2:30 Capt Redding and Miss Montran left the Saugus race track aviation field and headed for Revere Beach.

Miss Montran wore an aviator's trim costume and carried 100 handsome pennants, each bearing the words, "The Birth of a Nation." To each of 75 of these 100 flags was attached a pair of tickets and the lucky possessors of the flags she dropped will be entitled to attend the great moving-picture play free.

After flying over the beach at Revere in the Curtis biplane, Capt Redding's plan was to continue on toward Lynn and then return to the aviation field at Saugus.

The dropping of the pennants was a signal for a scramble on the part of persons below to get possession of the tickets. The idea proved novel and attractive to the crowds.

On the descent of the machine Miss Montran expressed herself as delighted with her 50 minutes in the air.

Boston American July 22, 1915

'BELLE OF '61' IN FLIGHT OVER REVERE

Miss Donna Montran, one of the "Belles of '61" of the film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," experienced the thrill of aviating when she made a spectacular flight from the Saugus Aviation Field to Revere Beach, accompanied by Captain J. C. Redding, who piloted the Burgess-Wright biplane.

When at a point over the heads of thousands of people she hurled down about 100 pennants bearing the insignia of "The Birth of a Nation." With these came as many free passes to the production. The throngs admired her nervy exhibition and she was applauded time and again. She is the first woman to fly over the beach.

The start was made shortly after 2 o'clock. A stiff easterly wind was blowing and to some of the spectators it seemed a bit unwise to make the flight under the existing conditions.

Miss Montran was asked by Captain Redding if she cared to take the risk and she promptly replied, "What do you think you got me away down here for? I want my ride, let's be off."

Captain Redding stated after the flight that the attractive little actress was the gamiest passenger he had ever taken up in the machine.

When the machine was over Lynn, Captain Redding took a course which brought him close to a large factory which is busy making ammunition for the Allies. Some of the workmen saw the machine, reported it to headquarters and immediately the grounds of the company were spotted with thousands of employes.

In referring to this, Miss Montran said, "They thought I was going to drop a bomb but I didn't. Instead I dropped a half dozen tickets to the show."

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Chronicle
Date Boston, Mass. 1914

Tremont Theatre.

Large audiences continue to enjoy "The Birth of a Nation" pictures at the Tremont Theatre. The spectacle offers an extraordinarily vivid and accurate realization of the era of civil strife. Scenes from the Civil War and the period of Reconstruction follow each other on a scale of numbers and diversity not hitherto seen here in motion-pictures; the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, the assassination of Lincoln, the work of the Carpet-Baggers and the Ku Klux Klan, together with intimate glimpses of the domestic life of the day. A romance is woven through the historic pictures and special music accompanies the spectacle.

Boston Post Aug. 1, 1915

Leaders of the new art of filmed spectacle, hurrying from the East and the West, met at La Junta, Col., last week, and formed a $5,000,000 corporation, which promises to surpass the high water mark of achievement attained by "The Birth of a Nation." David W. Griffith, the "Birth of a Nation" producer, came half way across the continent from Los Angeles. With him were his fellow-directors in the new company—Thomas H. Ince of "Battle of Gettysburg" fame, and Mack Sennett, the Keystone comedy creator. They were met at the Colorado junction point by the executives from New York, including H. E. Aitken, Adam and Charles Kessel, Charles O. Baumann and others. Mr. Aitken, famous for his achievements at the head of the Mutual Film, brings the celebrated Griffith studios of Reliance-Majestic into the alignment, together with practically unlimited financial resources attracted by the enormous earning power of Griffith's stellar drama. The Kessels and Baumann bring Ince and Sennett the enormous modern plant of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and contracts with about 30 of the most distinguished dramatic stars of America.

The incorporation made at La Junta is thought to be the largest theatrical and film deal ever put over. The Triangle Film Corporation the title of the new syndicate, and the trian[illegible] of the three directors—Griffith, Sennett and [illegible]ce—will be the trademark of the concern. [illegible]mong the big plans already coming into [illegible]uition are: First, the leasing of a chain of [illegible]rst-class theatres covering the large cities of [illegible]e country; second, the engagement of practi[illegible]y all the available dramatic stars for camera [illegible]s; third, revolutionary improvement of [illegible]ter films, as well as of feature pictures; [illegible]th, the complete conquest of foreign lands [illegible]he American-made film.

Tremont Theatre

Boston theatregoers realize with regret that the last nights are at hand for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. Ever since the opening of the summer season the capacity of the playhouse has been tested night after night. A new record has been established in the motion picture world of Boston by the offering of this production, which is shown in the most vivid fashion by the presentation of the episodes before, during and after the Civil war.

Boston has greeted it with the greatest of enthusiasm and the added rush which has followed the announcement of the positive limit of the stay in this city makes it evident that the departure will come at a time when it is in the height of its success. Saturday, Aug. 21, will be positively the conclusion of the engagement at the Tremont Theatre.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE AUG. 3, 1915

LAST FOUR WEEKS.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought re[illegible] summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two play-houses—the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule; and the Nixon, Atlantic City, over-crowded with summer patronage from Southern and Western visitors. Here in Boston Mr. Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees and nights will continue the rule throughout the remainder of the engagement.

Boston. American Aug. 8, 1915

SOUGHT HUSBAND IN 'MOVIE BATTLE'

Widow of Soldier of '61 Appealed to "Birth of Nation" Management.

It is difficult to impress upon some persons that the battle scenes in D. W. Griffith's famous photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its last weeks at the Tremont Theatre, are not representations of actual battles of the Civil War; that is, that the pictures were not taken on the battlefield in 1864, or thereabouts.

It is hard to imagine by what train of thought that mistaken idea is arrived at, and were there only a single instance of it, it might easily and charitably be explained by the age of the person holding it; but there have been too many instances of this obsession for a simple explanation.

After the matinee the other day an old lady inquired for the manager, and when he appeared she said that she had a particular favor to ask of him. She wanted a photograph of the big battle scene. Manager Fred Zweifel tried to explain that the photograph would have to be over 1,000 feet long, and would consist of a multitude of photographs each about the size of a postage stamp. But she was persistent.

"Why do you wish for the picture?" she was asked.

"My husband was in that battle," she said, "and I think if I had the picture I could pick him out, and"—she added tearfully—"the only photograph I had of him was lost when our house was burned."

Tremont Theatre.

The beginning of the end has come for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. Notwithstanding the tremendous success which has prevailed ever since the first presentation of this remarkable photo-play in Boston, [illegible]

[illegible]ited. The interest in the work is just as great as ever, and every afternoon and evening the long lines in front of the box office at the Tremont Theatre give indication of the marvellous demand to see the most miraculous motion pictures ever given upon the Boston stage.

TAUNTON (Mass.) GAZE

TONEHAM (

BOSTON RECORD
AUG. 6, 1915

LILLIAN GISH

Lillian Gish a Beauty

During the long run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont, the face of [redacted] Gish, who appears as Elsie Stoneman, the daughter of the stern and unyielding abolitionist, has become very familiar and in view of her beauty it does not seem strange that she should be giving talks out in California on how to be beautiful. In one of these talks she says:—

"In these days of faddy hair dressing a great many girls lose sight of one of the classic rules of beauty. It is said that in ancient Athens, when beauty was worshipped, a woman whose face was not oval could never expect to be called beautiful. It is easy enough to dress one's hair so that this effect can be obtained.

"If your chin is pointed, wear a full ruff, pull your hair forward in front of your ears and do not dress it over the middle of the forehead. Long earrings will help to make an oval face out of a thin one.

"Unless you have the pert features of a French woman do not pull the hair back from your face in the way that is now so fashionable. If you do, you will achieve the effect that the little boy will describe as that of 'a drowned rat.'

"If you wish to 'ovalize' your face, don't make your chin too white when you powder unless it is well rounded."

As Miss Gish has a beautiful oval face she does not have to practice any of her beauty hints in that direction.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD
AUG. 6, 1915

"BIRTH OF THE NATION."

COLORED PEOPLE WILL PROTEST PRESENTATION HERE.

Mayor Hathaway This Morning Had Not Yet Heard of Plan of Theater Manager and Would Express No Opinion—Play Passed by Censors.

"The Birth of the Nation" will open at the Orpheum and at Thevien theater on Monday, August 16, unless the production of the picture in this city is forbidden by Mayor Hathaway. The mayor this morning had not heard of the coming of the picture and would express no opinion. Leaders among the colored people were strong in their declarations that they would again oppose the showing of the picture in this city.

"I didn't know the play was coming. I haven't seen any posters. I don't know anything about it," said Mayor Hathaway this morning when a reporter from The Standard interviewed him.

Leaders among the colored people in New Bedford were not reticent in their condemnation of the picture. They will undoubtedly bring strong pressure on Mayor Hathaway to induce him to stop the production.

Scenes which approached riots marked the opening of "The Birth of the Nation" in Boston. Action was brought into the legislature to stop the production of the picture.

"I did not know there was any plan to present the 'Birth of a Nation' picture in New Bedford," said Miss Carter. "I read that it had been produced in Boston, and that it would be shown in no other city in New England. There certainly will be a strenuous opposition on the part of many New Bedford people.

Fred R. Monroe, one of the older leaders among the colored people was another who believed the mayor should stop the production of "The Birth of the Nation."

"I believe this play, 'The Birth of the Nation,' and plays like it do no good for our people. Our progress is already beset with enough difficulties and barriers. The mayor did right in forbidding "The Nigger." I have not talked with the men who represented us in protesting that play, but I am sure we will offer strong opposition to the presentation of this one. I believe that "The Birth of the Nation" is a play designed to create the same race prejudice in the north that already exists in the south."

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 7, 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation.

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" will end the last week but two of its stay in Boston at the Tremont this evening. These motion pictures of war time days continue the talk of the town and no matter what the weather may be, the Tremont is sure to be crowded to the doors twice daily. Everybody is fascinated with this work that gives in such vivid fashion the thrilling episodes of war days, and by seeing "The Birth of a Nation" one is able to obtain a better idea of conditions that prevailed before, during and after the Civil war than could possibly be secured in any other fashion.

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 7, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" will end the last week but two of its stay in Boston at the Tremont Theatre this evening. These motion pictures of war-time days continue the talk of the town and no matter what the weather may be, the Tremont Theatre is sure to be crowded to the doors twice a day.

The interest in this prodigious picture of civil war and reconstruction days is just as great as ever, and one has to secure seats at the Tremont Theatre far in advance to get choice places to witness the spectacle. Notwithstanding this interest there can be no extension of the Boston engagement, so it is said. On account of the elaborate nature of the musical effects and the incidental charm and the historical effectiveness of the offering, the Tremont production cannot be given in any other city in New England.

BOSTON POST
AUG. 8, 1915

A notable feature of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre this summer has been the number of mail orders from theatregoers from out of town. It seemed to be universally understood that the effects of "The Birth of a Nation" were so elaborate that the photo-play cannot be given in any of the smaller places, and therefore many people have come to Boston especially to see these pictures. Among the places which have sent patrons during the past week were Ellsworth and Bridgton, Me., Hollis, N. H., Weathersfield, Vt., Shelburne Falls and Palmer, Mass., and Pawtucket, R. I. So far as is known, nobody from Connecticut has come to the Tremont to see "The Birth of a Nation," but the people from that State had an abundant opportunity to see the play in its original engagement at the Liberty Theatre in New York City.

The quaint costumes worn by the girls who serve as ushers at the Tremont Theatre for "The Birth of a Nation" have evidently made their impression in more ways than one, and at a lawn party which was given by a church at the south shore one afternoon last week the girls who presided at the candy table wore the white crinoline skirts.

At nearly all of the regimental reunions of veterans which have taken place at the beach resorts during the summer, the survivors of the war of '61-'65 have arranged to make parties to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont and live over the days of the battles which make so vivid a feature in the first part of the photo-play. More Grand Army men have seen "The Birth of a Nation" than any series of motion pictures given in Boston for a long time.

There is no feature in "The Birth of a Nation" that shows the changes of dresses that have taken place in the past half century more than the manner in which pantalettes are worn by the actresses on the screen. Those were the regulation thing for the fashionable women in the '60s, and thus in "The Birth of a Nation" one does not see such an anachronism as was the case in the gown worn by no less an eminent actress than Mrs. Leslie Carter when she played "The Heart of Maryland." That was a war time play, but it will be remembered that she wore draperies almost of a Grecian nature when she appeared in the production. In "The Birth of a Nation" all the Southern belles wore crinolines and pantalettes, just as their grandmothers used to do.

JOURNAL. BOSTON. MASS. AUG. 8, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The beginning of the end has come for "The Birth of a Nation" at the [redacted]heatre. Notwithstanding the tremendous success which has prevailed ever since the first presentation of this remarkable photo-play in Bos[redacted] has as positively eliminated. The interest in the work is just as great as ever, and every afternoon and evening the long lines in front of the box office at the Tremont Theatre give indication of the marvellous demand to see the most miraculous motion pictures ever given upon the Boston stage.

HERALD. BOSTON MASS AUG. 1

Tremont Theatre

There can be no extension of the stay of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. It will be seen for the last times in Boston on Saturday, Aug. 21. Ever since the first of the summer "The Birth of a Nation" has drawn large houses, and its popularity continues. The motion pictures are remarkable. They show the thrilling battles of the civil war, the assassination of President Lincoln, the troublous times of the reconstruction period and the daring dashes of the riders of the Ku Klux Klan.

The next regular dramatic season of the [redacted]

POST. CHICAGO. BOSTON. BH. AUG. 8, 1915 MASS

Tremont Theatre

On Monday "The Birth of a Nation" will start its farewell fortnight in Boston at the Tremont Theatre. For months this sensational photo-play has been the talk of the town and the throngs who have filled the playhouse to the doors have paid tribute in the strongest manner possible to the unrivalled interest that has been caused by the vivid presentation of the stirring scenes in the most impressive period of United States history. The war of the rebellion and the reconstruction period which followed were the days for romance and thrill, and these are to be found in all their glory in "The Birth of a Nation." By the expenditure of a small fortune, one is enabled to see the actualities of great battles and the fierce encounters of the Civil war make the first half of "The Birth of a Nation" exciting in the extreme, and teach history in a manner that libraries of school books could not bring about.

From a spectacular point of view, the most thrilling thing of all comes with the riders of the Ku Klux Klan, and these equestrian reformers in their madcap rides give to "The Birth of a Nation" a series of thrills long to be remembered. One of the most important features of the entire production is the manner in which the atmosphere of the period has been given to everything connected with the theatre.

GLOBE. BOSTON MASS. AUG. 8, 1915

Last Weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont

Only two weeks more remain for the stay of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. "The Birth of a Nation" has been a revelation to all lovers of motion pictures. It has taken up the most romantic period in American history, for the chief episodes of the drama. The thrilling scenes of the Civil War and those even more thrilling ones dealing with the Reconstruction Period that followed, have served to give "The Birth of a Nation" genuine heart interest.

The tremendous patronage would indicate that the run here might be continued for many weeks to come, as large throngs fill the playhouse both afternoon and evening and the enthusiasm is beyond limit, especially in the scenes where the thrilling battles of the Civil War are shown and where the madcap riders of the Ku Klux Klan dash their horses with furious flight across the screen. Such equestrian spectacles have never before been known in the motion picture world.

GLOBE. BOSTON MASS. AUG 8, 1915

There is no feature in "The Birth of a Nation" that shows the changes of dresses that have taken place in the past half century more than the pantalettes which are worn by the actresses on the screen. Pantalettes were the regulation thing for the fashionable women in the '60's and thus in "The Birth of a Nation" one does not see such an anachronism as was the case in the gown worn by no less an eminent actress than Mrs. Leslie Carter when she played "The Heart of Maryland." That was a war time play, but it will be remembered she wore [redacted] almost of a Grecian nature when she appeared in the production.

D. W. Griffith will have another photo play ready for release in the early Fall. Several months ago Mr Griffith, to "fill in" during the production of "The Birth of a Nation," started an ostensible three-reel picture, "The Mother and the Law." It developed so many ideas in the Griffith mind that the producer has decided to make it a 10 or 12-reel feature. Already some very stirring and startling material has been incorporated in the negative.

GLOBE

A notable feature of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre this Summer has been the number of mail orders from theatregoers from out of town. It seemed to be understood that the effects of "The Birth of a Nation" were so elaborate that the photo-play will not be given in any of the smaller places. Among the places which sent patrons during the past w[redacted] were Ellsworth and Bridgton Me., [redacted] N. H., Weathersfield, [redacted] Shelburne Falls and Palmer, Mass., and Pawtucket, R. I.

TON RECORD
JULY 29, 1915

Sherman's March to the Sea Shown in "Birth of a Nation"

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing [illegible] the sea and theburning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently, between the hills. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, fear and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the South. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the Confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox Court House with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

And yet Sherman's march to the sea is but one of many wonderful pictures in "The Birth of a Nation."

BOSTON POST
JULY 27, 1915

Tremont Theatre

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, ending Aug. 21, has brought realization that midsummer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so soon. Fortunately the dog days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is ideally comfortable. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JULY 27, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GAINS IN POPULARITY

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, reminds the playgoer that even the most successful runs must end. The Tremont is an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The attendance indicates the play's increasing popularity. No other photoplay success compares with it.

Mr. Griffith's play could easily run months longer but for the fact that the impressive Boston production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers. The production unites pictorial spectacle, music and realistic effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis. Daily matinees and evening performances will continue.

BOSTON TRAVELER
JULY 27, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre has brought realization that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so early. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees and nights will continue the rule throughout the remainder of the engagement.

BOSTON RECORD
JULY 27, 1915

Tremont Theatre

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, ending Aug. 21, has brought realization that midsummer is past, and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so underneath the sign of the dog-star. Fortunately the dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches, and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two playhouses—the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule, and the Nixon, Atlantic City, overcrowded with summer patronage from Southern and Western visitors.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 27, 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON AMERICAN
JULY 27, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, ending August 21, has brought realization that midsummer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so underneath the sign of the dog-star. Fortunately the dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment.

HERALD. BOSTON
JULY 27, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre continues to draw large houses. The engagement closes August 21. The battle scenes are thrilling; the Ku Klux "rides" are also exciting, and the catchy tunes of 50 years ago are popular with audiences. Daily matinees and nights will continue to the end of the engagement.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER
JUL 27 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Here in Boston Mr Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St Louis managers. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years ago.

BOSTON TRAVELER
JULY 31, 1915

[illegible] afternoon and evening.

Tremont Theatre.

There can be no extension of the stay of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. The run in Boston is positively limited and the piece will be given for the last time in Boston, and in New England, on Saturday, Aug. 21. All classes have gone to see "The Birth of a Nation" since it first came to the Boston stage, and it has been the universal verdict that this photoplay has shown in the most vivid manner the most thrilling episodes before, during and after the civil war. It has taught American history in a fashion that is positively unequalled. One sees war in all its realism in the pictures, in the early part of the play. The assassination of President Lincoln makes an object lesson in history long to be remembered, and one realizes how the new South was brought about when he sees the daring dashes of the madcap riders of the Ku Klux Klan.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
JULY 31, 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
JULY 30, 1915

"Birth of a Nation."

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont theatre ending August 21 has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two playhouses—the Liberty theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule; and the Nixon, Atlantic City, over-crowded with summer patronage from southern and western visitors. Here in Boston Mr. Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the west under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil war crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love romances of the Blue and the Gray. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years ago. Daily matinees and nights will continue the rule throughout the remainder of the engagement.

[illegible] FROM
BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
JUL 2 - 19

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" has announced the [illegible] weeks of its engagement at the Tremont Theatre. The Boston run will come to a close Saturday evening, Aug. 21. The play will not be presented elsewhere in New England this season. This production is unusually sumptuous and beautiful. About 300,000 New Englanders have seen it. "The Birth of a Nation," as staged by Mr. Griffith, the producer, presents a thrilling story of civil war and reconstruction days. It is given twice daily except on Sundays.

FORD (Mass.) MERCURY
JULY 30, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont theatre, ending August 21, has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately, dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment.

Boston Journal
Date 7-23-15

[illegible] the film world is the Triangle Film Corporation, with a capital of $5,000,000, the leading lights of which are David W. Griffith, of "Birth of a Nation" fame; Thomas H. Ince, who produced one of the first of the big American spectacles, "The Battle of Gettysburg," and Mack Sennett, the comedy specialist. These three noted directors are to be vice presidents in the new organization, which, it seems, will undertake "the leasing of a chain of first-class theatres covering the large cities of the country, the engagement of as many distinguished players as possible, revolutionary improvement of shorter films and the conquest of foreign lands by made-in-America films." Some of the stars already engaged are De Wolf Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks, Billie Burke, H. B. Warner, Sam Bernard, Frank Keenan, Dustin Farnum, Eddie Foy and Weber and Fields.

BOSTON POST
JULY 25, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" management surprised a good many who thought the play was to run indefinitely by announcing the last four weeks of the notable engagement at the Tremont Theatre. The Boston run, they said, would positively come to a close Saturday evening, Aug. 21, nor would the play be presented elsewhere in New England this season. J. J. McCarthy, the general manager had expected to continue the attraction here until the middle of September. But the demands of St. Louis, Baltimore, Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati and other centres for the production have become too imperative. The Klaw & Erlanger syndicate has asked the management to supply some of these cities with the Griffith spectacle. Superficially this seems easy to do, inasmuch as prints of a filmed spectacle can be indefinitely produced. In this case, however, a new "Birth of a Nation" production means vastly more than a reduplicated film. Thanks to D. W. Griffith's novel art, film spectacle, music, mechanical effects, costuming and playhouse accessories are united into an ensemble that requires months to prepare.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
7-25

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" management surprised a good many who thought the play was to run indefinitely by announcing the last four weeks of the notable engagement at the Tremont Theatre. The Boston run, they said, would positively come to a close Saturday evening, August 21, nor would the play be presented elsewhere in New England this season. J. J. McCarthy, the general manager, had expected to continue the attraction here until the middle of September.

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 27, 1915

The management of "The Birth of a Nation" has set a limit of 20 weeks to the stay of the spectacle at the Tremont theatre. There are only five first-class productions of Mr. Griffith's greatest work, namely those at Boston, New York, Brighton Beach, Atlantic City and Chicago. What with accessions of music, costuming and effects, the making of a new "Birth of a Nation" production takes about three months. St. Louis cannot wait that long so Boson must turn over the production to the fourth city of the nation. The Boston run will positively close Aug. 21 and Marlboro people will surely take advantage of this information and go in and see this wonderful motion picture before it leaves.

TAUNTON (Mass.) GAZETTE
JULY 30, 1915

ACROSS THE FOOTLIGHTS

At the Casino.

The Casino management takes pleasure in announcing its offering for Friday and Saturday when Thomas Nelson Page, the present ambassador to Italy, will present his best story, "The Outcast." Mr. Page has written many good books, but everybody admits that "The Outcast" is one of his best, if not the very best. The company that will present "The Outcast" is headed by the wonderful Mae Marsh, of whom D. W. Griffith, in announcing her as his leading lady in "The Birth of a Nation" said: "I consider Mae Marsh without a peer on the screen." Miss Marsh is supported by Robert Harron, another of Mr. Griffith's finds and who also has a prominent part in "The Birth of a Nation."

A girl of the slums, of unknown antecedents, is accused of murder and is brought before a judge known for his relentlessness. At the trial evidence is brought forward to show the irresponsibility of the girl. A locket containing the picture of the girl's mother is introduced by her attorney. The picture is shown to the judge, who recognizes it and faints during the trial. The judge proves to be the father of the girl and resigns from the bench to devote the remainder of his life to the care of his daughter.

There are many great scenes in the picture, but none stand out more strongly than does the famous court room scene. With Mae Marsh on the witness stand, with the jury and the judge watching every expression on her face, the audience is thrilled, and if their best friend were in Miss Marsh's place the interest could not be greater.

On Friday the great picture will be shown four times, at 2:15 and 4 in the afternoon and at 7:15 and 9 in the evening. On Saturday the performance is continuous from 2 to 10.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 31, 1915

LAST FOUR WEEKS.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two play-houses—the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule; and the Nixon, Atlantic City, over-crowded with summer patronage from Southern and Western visitors. Here in Boston Mr. Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees and nights will continue the rule throughout the remainder of the engagement.

WORCESTER (Mass.) GAZETTE
JULY 31, 1915

ORGANIZE ONE MORE BIG FILM CORPORATION

Triangle Company Plans Most Impressive of Any In History of Industry

The latest addition to the ever increasing ranks of film producers is the Triangle Film Corporation, which sprang into being at La Junta, Col., and incorporated the company for $5,000,000, according to the New York Telegraph.

This new concern, which will participate in every branch of the motion picture business, is perhaps the most comprehensive thus far organized. The three leading lights are David W. Griffith, of "The Birth of a Nation" fame; Thomas H. Ince, best known for his "Battle of Gettysburg," and Mack Sennett, the creator of Keystone comedy.

The session at La Junta included the executives from New York, H. E. Aitken, Adam and Charles Kessel and Charles O. Baumann. Mr. Aitken, identified with the Mutual Film Corporation, brings the Griffith studies of the Reliance-Majestic combination into the new organization, together with great financial resources. The Messrs Kessel and Baumann bring Ince and Sennett; the big plant of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and contracts with about 30 distinguished players.

The list of the latter includes Billie Burke, Mary Boland, Julia Dean, Bessie Barriscale, DeWolf Hopper, Raymond Hitchcock, Sam Bernard, Eddie Foy, Weber and Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, H. B. Warner, Dustin Farnum, Frank Keenan, Hale Hamilton, Willard Mack, W. S. Hart, Forrest Winant, Henry Woodruff, Orrin Johnson, Maurice Farkoe, Louise Dresser, House Peters, Jane Grey and William Desmond.

QUINCY (Mass.) LEDGER
JULY 30, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two play-houses—the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule; and the Nixon, Atlantic City, overcrowded with summer patronage from Southern and Western visitors. Here in Boston Mr. Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees and nights will continue the rule throughout the engagement.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) TOWNSMAN
JULY 31, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment.

The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity.

TAUNTON (Mass.) HERALD-NEWS
JULY 30, 1915

AT THE CASINO

The Casino management takes pleasure in announcing their offering for Friday and Saturday when Thomas Nelson Page the present ambassador to Italy, will present his best story, "The Outcast," Mr. Page has written a good many books but everybody admits that "The Outcast" is one of his best if not his very best. The company that will present "The Outcast" is headed by the wonderful Mae Marsh, of whom D. W. Griffith said, in announcing her as his leading lady in "The Birth of a Nation" said, "I consider Mae Marsh without a peer on the screen." Miss Marsh is supported by Robert Harron another of Mr. Griffith's finds and who also has a prominent part in "The Birth of a Nation."

A girl of the slums, of unknown antecedents, is accused of murder and is brought before a judge known for his relentlessness. At the trial, evidence is brought forward to show the irresponsibility of the girl. A locket containing a picture of the girl's mother is introduced by her attorney. The picture is shown to the judge who recognizes it and faints during the trial. The judge proves to be the father of the girl and resigns from the bench to devote the remainder of his life to the care of his daughter.

There are many great scenes in the picture but none stand out more strongly than the famous court room scene.

On Friday the great picture will be shown four times, at 2:15 and 4:00 in the afternoon and at 7:15 and 9:00 in the evening. On Saturday the performance is continuous from two to ten.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
JULY 31, 1915

LAST 4 WEEKS OF FILM PLAY

"Birth of a Nation" Soon to Leave Boston

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two play-houses—the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule; and the Nixon, Atlantic City, overcrowded with summer patronage from Southern and Western visitors. Here in Boston Mr. Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
JULY 30, 1915

LAST FOUR WEEKS.

Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The splendid attendance indicates no abatement of interest, but rather an increasing popularity. This but follows the example of New York, where indeed two play-houses—the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall—are required to accommodate the throngs; the Illinois, Chicago, where "capacity" audiences rule; and the Nixon, Atlantic City, overcrowded with summer patronage from Southern and Western visitors. Here in Boston Mr. Griffith's play could easily run into mid-September were it not that the extremely elaborate and beautiful production has been booked for the West under enormous guarantees from St. Louis managers. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees and nights will continue the rule throughout the remainder of the engagement.

BOSTON RECORD
JULY 31, 1915

These are the last nights of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, where this remarkable photo-play has held the stage since the opening of the summer. Bostonians have seemed to be of the opinion that "The Birth of a Nation" would be a permanent feature on the local stage, or at the very least would remain here for months to come. That is positively out of the question, however. The interest in "The Birth of a Nation" is just as great as ever and one has to buy seats far in advance, or else wait for a long time in an extended line in front of the box office window. Managers in other cities are insistent in their calls for "The Birth of a Nation" with its vivid presentation of the battle scenes of the Civil War, the assassination of President Lincoln, the mob rule of the Reconstruction period and the romantic chivalry of the Ku Klux Klan.

TAUNTON (Mass.) GRAPHIC
JULY 30, 1915

[illegible] are ready to interest the visitor.

TREMONT THEATRE.—Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for an afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The great offering is of universal interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray.

SOMERVILLE (Mass.) JOURNAL
JULY 30, 1915

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

Tremont Theatre—Announcement of the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre ending August 21st has brought realization that summer is past and that those who have not yet seen the play must plan to do so under the sign of the dog star. Fortunately dog-days have no terrors for the patrons of the Tremont. The theatre auditorium is cooler than most of the beaches and an ideally comfortable place for the afternoon's or evening's entertainment. The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by a director; the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees and nights will continue.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JULY 31, 1915

THREE WEEKS MORE OF "BIRTH OF A NATION"

These are the last nights of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, where this remarkable photo-play has held the stage for several months. The interest in "The Birth of a Nation" is just as great as ever, and one has to buy seats far in advance, or else wait for a long time in an extended line in front of the box office window, but managers in other cities are insistent in their calls for the play, and so it must go after another three weeks. The battle scenes of the Civil War, the assassination of Lincoln, the mob rule of the Reconstruction period and the romantic episodes combine to make it a rare production. The pictures show the acme of photoplays. The big orchestra also lends beauty and dignity to the play.

BOSTON POST
AUG. 1, 1915

Leaders of the new art of filmed spectacle, hurrying from the East and the West, met at La Junta, Col., last week, and formed a $5,000,000 corporation, which promises to surpass the high water mark of achievement attained by "The Birth of a Nation." David W. Griffith, the "Birth of a Nation" producer, came half way across the continent from Los Angeles. With him were his fellow-directors in the new company—Thomas H. Ince of "Battle of Gettysburg" fame, and Mack Sennett, the Keystone comedy creator. They were met at the Colorado junction point by the executives from New York, including H. E. Aitken, Adam and Charles Kessel, Charles O. Baumann and others. Mr. Aitken, famous for his achievements at the head of the Mutual Film, brings the celebrated Griffith studios of Reliance-Majestic into the alignment, together with practically unlimited financial resources attracted by the enormous earning power of Griffith's stellar drama. The Kessels and Baumann bring Ince and Sennett the enormous modern plant of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and contracts with about 30 of the most distinguished dramatic stars of America.

The incorporation made at La Junta is thought to be the largest theatrical and film deal ever put over. The Triangle Film Corporation is the title of the new syndicate, and the triangle of the three directors—Griffith, Sennett and Ince—will be the trademark of the concern. Among the big plans already coming into fruition are: First, the leasing of a chain of first-class theatres covering the large cities of the country; second, the engagement of practically all the available dramatic stars for camera plays; third, revolutionary improvement of shorter films, as well as of feature pictures; fourth, the complete conquest of foreign lands by the American-made film.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 2, 1915

TRIANGLE FILM OFFERED.

Corporation Organized by Men Who Have Made a Notable Success of the Film Business—Shares $5 Each.

A stock that is bound to get its share of attention in these days, when moving pictures are so popular, is Triangle Film, which has been listed on the New York Curb. The corporation has behind it a number of well-known men who are identified with successes in the film business. There are 1,000,000 shares of stock, with a par value of $5 each. There are no bonds or preferred stock nor any major or minor securities. The organizers have taken a large proportion of the stock, officers and financial interests associated with them also have taken stock and the remainder is offered to the public.

The officers and organizers of the Triangle Film Corporation are H. E. Aitken, notable for his executive skill in having upbuilt Mutual Film, of which he was formerly president; C. O. Baumann, Adam Kessel and Charles Kessel of the prosperous New York Motion Picture Corporation; David W. Griffith, Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, the three foremost art directors of film manufacture. The great financial success of Mr Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" and even more particularly the permanent market acquired in all lands by Mack Sennett's so-called "Keystone Comedies," are among the reasons why the present enterprise is expected to yield satisfactory financial returns.

Triangle Film promises to take high rank because of its great studio resources, great number of favorable contracts and connections here and abroad, the proved executive skill of its business heads, and above all, the artistic genius of its three directors of production, Messrs Griffith, Sennett and Ince.

BOSTON AMERICAN
AUG. 2, 1915

TRIANGLE FILM STOCK SELLS ON CURB

Interest is felt by the investing public in Triangle Film, trading in which has opened on the New York Curb. A goodly number of investors have already been attracted by the prospects of large earnings in such film-making and the names of the leading directors and prominent executives of the film industry associated with the enterprise give assurance of success.

It is realized, however, that shareholders should have the benefit of an active market for their shares such as the curb affords. There is no use for most persons to embark their funds in a business enterprise unless the securities they acquire are easily negotiable.

This is particularly true in the case of small investors—the kind that is specially invited into this enterprise by reason of the low price of shares, $5 each.

OFFICERS WELL KNOWN.

The officers and organizers of Triangle Film Corporation are H. E. Aitken, notable for his executive skill in having upbuilt Mutual Film, of which he was formerly president; C. O. Bauman, Adam and Charles Kessel of the prosperous New York Motion Picture Corporation; David W. Griffith, Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, the three foremost art directors of film manufacture.

The notable financial success of Griffith's celebrated 12 picture, "The Birth of a Nation," and even more particularly the enormous permanent market acquired in all lands by Mack Sennett's so-called "Keystone Comedies," would seem to indicate that the future products of such directors will continue to yield substantial financial returns.

Mr. Sennett will produce exclusively for Triangle Film his "Keystone Comedies;" Mr. Griffith will personally supervise the production of a five-reel picture each week, and Mr. Ince, noted for his western dramas and his stupendous "The battle of Gettysburg," will likewise present an important five-reel picture drama weekly.

ONE MILLION SHARES.

With the three art directors have been associated about forty of the most prominent stage stars of America, many of whom will make their first stage appearances under the Triangle banner.

Triangle Film has been incorporated with a million shares of stock at par value of $5 each. There are no bonds nor preferred stock, nor major nor minor securities. A large proportion of the stock has been acquired by the organizers and officers and financial interests associated with them. The remainder is offered to the public.

Except in isolated instances, the idea of public flotation of big film companies is comparatively novel to America. In Paris, on the other hand, the stocks of such companies are firmly established as dependable securities. They have brought their owners excellent returns and have been dealt in freely for years, notably the Pathe Freres, which has commanded the high price of 1400 on the Bourse. Surprise is expressed by many foreigners at American backwardness in overlooking investment opportunities in the films.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 3, 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation FF

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 1, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Pictures FF at the Tremont Theatre

The announcement of the closing nights of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre has served to increase the attendance at this wonderful photo play.

These vivid pictures of the most fateful period of American history are really thrilling and have aroused the enthusiasm of all who have seen them. The battles of the Civil War, the assassination of President Lincoln, the dashes of the Ku Klux Klan and all the other features of "The Birth of a Nation" form an object lesson in history which will long be remembered. The musical accompaniments add much to the impressiveness of the war pictures and the ensemble arrangements in the exterior and interior of the theatre add much in giving harmony to the effectiveness of "The Birth of a Nation."

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 1, 1915

Old-time theatregoers read with interest a few days ago the announcement of the death of H. Clay Ford, who was one of the best known managers in the United States half a century ago. He was the manager of Ford's Opera House in Washington at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln, which makes the most picturesque episode in "The Birth of a Nation." The attraction at that time was "Our American Cousin," in which Laura Keene was the star. One of the few members of the cast still surviving on the stage is W. J. Ferguson, who played at the Tremont Theatre last season with Fanny Ward in "Madam President."

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 3, 1915

Tremont Theatre

With only three weeks remaining for the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, that playhouse will be crowded from now on.

"The Birth of a Nation" will establish the record run of the season by the time it has left this city. Tonight will mark its 200th presentation in Boston, and by the end of the week will have exceeded every record for long runs made this year at any of the local playhouses. It is a significant fact that this wonderful picture which has played at the highest scale of prices usually charged in the local theatres should be the record breaker of the season.

Unlike plays which are subject to change of personnel and thereby often suffer by comparisons "The Birth of a Nation" remains the same marvelous attraction that astounded Boston upon its opening presentation at the Tremont. The actors will remain identically the same as long as this story is told in film form.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 3, 1915

LAST THREE WEEKS OF "BIRTH OF A NATION" FF

Only three weeks remain for the run of D. W. Griffith's famous film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" will establish the record run of the season by the time it has left this city. Tonight will mark the 200th presentation in Boston, and by the end of the week the remarkable photoplay will have exceeded every record for long runs made this year at any of the local playhouses. It is significant that this film, which has played at the highest scale of prices usually charged in the local theatres, should be the record-breaker of the season.

There are two performances every day except Sunday.

BOSTON POST
AUG. 1, 1915

Tremont Theatre FF

Boston theatregoers realize with regret that the last nights are at hand for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. Never since the opening of the summer season the capacity of the playhouse has been tested night after night. A new record has been established in the motion picture world of Boston by the offering of this production, which is shown in the most vivid fashion by the presentation of the episodes before, during and after the Civil war.

Boston has greeted it with the greatest of enthusiasm and the added rush which has followed the announcement of the positive limit of the stay in this city makes it evident that the departure will come at a time when it is in the height of its success. Saturday, Aug. 21, will be positively the conclusion of the engagement at the Tremont

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 1, 1915

Tremont Theatre FF

There can be no extension of the stay of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. It will be seen for the last times in Boston on Saturday, Aug. 21. Ever since the first of the summer "The Birth of a Nation" has drawn large houses, and its popularity continues. The motion pictures are remarkable. They show the thrilling battles of the civil war, the assassination of President Lincoln, the troublous times of the reconstruction period and the daring dashes of the riders of the Ku Klux Klan.

The next regular dramatic season of the Tremont Theatre will open on Monday, Sept. 6. Manager John B. Schoeffel has booked "The Song of Songs." It will come to Boston on Labor day with all the orginal cast, headed by Irene Fenwick.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 2, 1915

10 Wis Cent gen 4s... 82 81 81 — 1

TRIANGLE FILM LATEST MOVING PICTURE CONCERN

Trading in Triangle Film has opened on the New York curb. The officers and organizers of Triangle Film Corporation are H. E. Aitken, notable for his executive skill in having upbuilt Mutual Film, of which he was formerly president; C. O. Baumann, Adam and Charles Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Corporation; David W. Griffith, Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, the three foremost art directors of film manufacture. The success of Griffith's 12 picture, "The Birth of a Nation," and even more particularly the permanent market acquired by Mack Sennett's so-called "Keystone Comedies," would seem to indicate that the future products of such directors will continue to yield, as they have yielded in the past, big financial returns. Mr. Sennett will produce exclusively for Triangle Film his "Keystone Comedies"; Mr. Griffith will personally supervise the production of a five-reel picture each week, and Mr. Ince, noted for his western dramas and his stupendous "The Battle of Gettysburg," will likewise present an important five-reel picture-drama weekly.

Lobe-Mass Aug 1-15

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 3, 1915

Tremont Theatre. FF

These are farewell nights at the Tremont Theatre. "The Birth of a Nation" began the last week but two of its stay in this city yesterday and again proved the universality of public interest which has been aroused by this photo-play presenting the scenes of the Civil War to the amusement seekers of Boston.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 3, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

There are only three weeks remaining for the run of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" will establish the record run of the season by the time it has left this city. Tonight will mark the 200th presentation in Boston and by the end of the week will have exceeded every record for long runs made this year at any of the local playhouses. It is a significant fact that this wonderful picture which has played at the highest scale of prices usually charged in the local theatres should be the record-breaker of the season.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 3, 1915

Symphonic of...

TREMONT THEATRE FF

These are farewell nights at the Tremont Theatre. "The Birth of a Nation" began the last week but two of its stay in this city yesterday. In the most dramatic form it reveals events of the civil war and of the reconstruction period, and shows pictorially the horrors of war, the brutalities that followed, the stern necessities of the Southern heroes and the ultimate triumph attained. Thousands of participants make the war a reality, and the thrilling episodes reach a climax when the Ku Klux Klan dashes across the screen. The farewell performance will be on Saturday, August 21, and the photo play will be given in no other city in New England after that date.

BOSTON POST
AUG. 3, 1915

Tremont Theatre FF

At the Tremont Theatre yesterday "The Birth of a Nation" began the last week but two of its engagement in this city. Since "The Birth of a Nation" first came to New England at the opening of the summer, it has been the talk of the town. Spectacular elements predominate. One sees the most thrilling battles of the Civil war carried on with the realism which made them the marvel of the age. The troublous times of the reconstruction period are given with the utmost of vividness, and one obtains the actualities of an object lesson in American history by witnessing "The Birth of a Nation" in a manner better than could be possibly

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER

TREMONT THEATRE. FF

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everybody is familiar with the wonderful production it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

Globe Continued

David Grimth has engaged Melville Ellis to design the costumes to be worn for the feature motion picture with the story of the Holy Grail for its theme. Mr Ellis, who will be seen in the Fall in the comedy in which Elsie Janis will be starred, is spending the Summer in California, where the picture will be taken.

"Birth of a Nation" Pictures at the Tremont Theatre

announcement of the closing of the engagement of "The Birth ...on" at the Tremont Theatre has served to increase the attendance at this wonderful photo play.

...of the most ...are really ...

The battles of the Civil War, the assassination of President Lincoln, the dashes of the Ku Klux Klan and all the other features of "The Birth of a Nation" form an object lesson in history which will long be remembered. The musical accompaniments add much to the impressiveness of the war pictures and the ensemble arrangements in the exterior and interior of the theatre add much in giving harmony to the effectiveness of "The Birth of a Nation."

SOMERVILLE (Mass.) JOURNAL
AUG. 6, 1915

Tremont Theatre.—Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated. Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre. During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out-of-town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals.

MIRROR
MALDEN, BOSTON
AUG. 3, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE FF

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everybody is familiar with the wonderful production it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appomattox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's theatre, Washington. The South both before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. It remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when the marvelous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade.

BOSTON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
AUG. 4, 1915

MOTION PICTURE STOCK LISTED ON NEW YORK CURB

The listing on the New York curb of Triangle Film, a new motion picture stock, directs attention [illegible] public interest in this class of securities. Except [illegible] related cases, public flotation of big film companies is a comparatively new departure for America. In Paris, on the contrary, the stocks of such companies enjoy a wide market, chief among which is Pathe Freres, which has sold as high as 1400 on the bourse.

Triangle Film has 1,000,000 shares of $5 par; no bonds or preferred stock. A large proportion of the stock has been acquired by the organizers and officers and associated financial interests. The remainder is now being offered to the public.

Officers and organizers of the corporation are: H. E. Aitken, formerly president of the Mutual Film; C. O. Baumann, Adam and Charles Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and David W. Griffith, Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, the three foremost art directors of film manufacture. With these three art directors have been associated about 40 of the most prominent stage stars of America.

Plans for marketing the company's product are far-reaching. Pictures are to be first presented in the most fashionable play houses of New York and Chicago, then distributed to the outlying houses and to the smaller centers. Furthermore, a foreign department is being developed, [illegible] Triangle corporations in each of the foreign countries.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
JUNE 5, 1915

"FILMING" A PLAY

GRIFFITH TELLS OF HIS METHODS OF WORK

Staging a Battle—A City Built and Burned—Picture Makers and Prosperity —Soldiers in Marches and Mimic Fights

D. W. GRIFFITH, who wrote and staged "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Tremont Theatre, tells something of his methods of work and especially as to how he achieves results in "filming" a play. He says of his work:

My method of composition has been to invent, originate and reshape for myself after I have grasped the outline of a plot. I do not know today which scene I shall stage tomorrow. I may tear out bodily what the author considers his biggest scenes and substitute something of my own which I consider more suitable for filming. The only logic to be observed is that as many scenes as possible are to be staged first in studio.

All film work is divided into studio-taking and location-taking. The studio-taking naturally comes first, for both organization and equipment are right at hand. It was not always the case, however, with "The Birth of a Nation." In reproducing the scene of the shooting of President Lincoln by the assassin Wilkes Booth April 14, 1865, an entire Ford's Theatre replica had to be built and added to our equipment. The assembly hall of the Legislature of South Carolina in 1871 was another specially constructed building, and in staging the scenes in Piedmont, S. C., an entire village of old-fashioned colonial houses had to be set up. But ours is a roomy enclosure, a great yard or compound surrounding the main studio at Los Angeles, and we had no trouble in building more and more as our indoor and smaller outdoor scenes grew to completion. It may not even surprise you to know that on one side of the studio lot, a rather hilly place, there was constructed a runway down which the shorter runs (the so-called "flashes") of the Ku Klux were enacted.

But the work of the historical drama which goes in for depiction of battlefields must be done far from cities and the usual haunts of men. On holidays and Sundays, when my studio staff had their times off, I would look up locations. Though locations in the technical language of the craft, they were really sites for military camps and historic battlegrounds that I was seeking. I found one such wonderful site in Bear Valley. Down the length of it I could see, in fancy, Sherman's legions marching to the sea; across its upper width were as plainly discernible to the practised eye the larger natural features of the Siege of Petersburg. Thither I sent my sappers and miners, ditch-diggers, camp-makers, engineers and landscape reconstructors. A small army of people were soon getting the great location into shape. Then I communicated with the chief officers of the California National Guard, who willingly assented to my plan. This was in brief to hire whole regiments of the Guard, under their own commanders, and take them for a month's marching and mimic fighting down into Bear Valley. Each soldier was to receive $5.00 a day for his camera work. This, with the commissary and other fixed expenses, made the cost seem almost staggering; but on the other hand, I was to get regular war, waged by actual soldiers and under conditions that perfectly reproduced the Civil War operations of fifty years ago.

The plan worked like a charm. I owe the artistically happy (though actually gruesome) result to the splendid enthusiastic service of those California guardsmen, to the codperation of war veterans and West Point experts who aided me, and to the painstaking use of all the devices of the latest science such as the field-telephone, etc. It was hard, gruelling work, directing these operations from a high tower by field-wires, wigwaggery and megaphone, virtually running both sides of the battle, typifying General Grant to one set of combatants and General Lee to the other.

Another important part of outdoor work was the getting of the longer Ku Klux rides. The Ku Klux Klansmen were the midnight cossacks of the South. Many a story as thrilling as Mazeppa's is told of them. The nature of the picture demanded that their wild rides be graphically exhibited. But thousands of horsemen on the public roads would be a menace. On private property only a very few could be shown in minutely brief runs. So I went out and borrowed one sound and perfectly good American county for one day for my Ku Klux. I put the idea up to the county supervisors, who quickly grasped the idea that the picture-makers spell prosperity to an entire countryside. They agreeing to lend me the roads of an area ten miles square, I had the macadam road surfaces covered by my workmen with ten inches of soft earth dressing, the public was warned off, and my horsemen raced over this wonderful Olympia from sunup to sundown of one gorgeous California day—my camera man keeping just a few jumps ahead of them all day on the motor car, on the platform of which our motion-picture machine was mounted with backward-gazing eye!

For nearly a year we worked with tireless energy in all departments, thousands of seamstresses making up costumes for the female principals and for the Ku Klux; sub-directors alternately drilling armies and mobs; carpenters and property men ceaselessly constructing and reconstructing, building the city of Atlanta, for example, only to have it fired by Sherman's "bummers"; the principals working like beavers on their tremendously long and important parts. When the work was done, several expert picture men expressed opinion that I could never make anything coherent of the multitudinous mass of takings in the reel cans. I knew differently, however. I had not forgotten a single day's toil of those strenuous eight months. The bits of story were picked out of the cans and matched in the order suggested by my conversational scenario. There were 140,000 feet of this original "Birth of a Nation" film. Careful pruning cut it down first to 28,000 feet and finally to 12,000 feet, which is about its length today. In other words, eleven-twelfths of our labor was chaff, and only the remaining one-twelfth was worth saving.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
JULY 1, 1915

[illegible] first half of next week. Griffith, Who Made "The Birth of a Nation." FF

David W. Griffith, who made "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle, which is now running in Boston at the Tremont theater, believes that the future of dramatic art lies in the screen rather than in the old-fashioned stage drama. On April 1, 1914, he set to work laying the ground plans for this great picture. Griffith's poetic imagination stretches across dreamy dales, through swaying trees, back to distant mountains with their snow-crested tops blazing in the sunlight. It reaches across the lapping waves of the sea to what seems to be the end of the universe. From one of these far-away vistas he brings forth the young girl and shows her progress until she comes so close you see a teardrop quiver on her eyelid before it falls to her cheek. And then in a flash you see great plains and on them nations grappling in their death throes and worlds battling for [illegible]

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG 11, 1915

FILM PROTEST IN BROCKTON.

Negro Residents Refuse to Discuss Plans for Trying to Suppress "Birth of a Nation."

BROCKTON, Aug 10—Colored residents are trying to prevent the presentation here of the moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which is scheduled to be shown at a local theatre during the week of Aug 22.

A meeting has been held and a collection taken, but the committee refuses to divulge any news. No complaint has been made to Mayor Burbank.

CLIPPING FROM
Herald
Northampton, Mass
Date 8-7-15

This week begins the sixth month of "The Birth of a Nation" with at the Liberty Theater, New York. Yet the scoffers said that a two-dollar picture was an impossibility. With the additional performances at Brighton Beach, "The Birth of a Nation" has now passed its three hundredth presentation in Greater New York.

BOSTON RECORD
AUG. 3, 1915

Tremont Theatre FF

With only three weeks remaining for the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont, that famous old playhouse will be crowded from now until the end of the engagement.

"The Birth of a Nation" will establish the record run of the season by the time it has left this city. Tonight will mark its 200th presentation in Boston, and by the end of the week will have exceeded every record for long runs made this year at any of the local playhouses. It is a significant fact that this wonderful picture, which has played at the highest scale of prices usually charged in the local theatres, should be the record-breaker of the season.

MARLBORO (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 10, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION STAR LEADING MAN IN BEULAH

Henry B. Walthall, who plays the leading part in "Beulah" at the Marlborough theatre today, is called the world's greatest moving picture actor. He plays the leading part in "The Birth of a Nation," which has had such a long run at the Tremont. This versatile actor is well worth seeing and the prices at this popular theatre are only 10c and 25c, while at the Tremont they run from 25c up to $1.50. Don't miss seeing him.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 10, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont.

This is the last week but one of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" has broken all Boston records for popularity with photoplays. In this wonderful production one is taken back in imagination to the days of the Civil War and, while the scenes on the screen show the charging soldiers and dying victims, the accompaniment of war strains of music and war sounds adds a realism long to be remembered. Two performances are given daily, at 2:15 and 8:15 p m.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 10, 1915

Tremont—Birth of a Nation FF

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episods. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG 11, 1915

If "The Birth of a Nation" is presented here in the censored form presented for months [illegible] without public objection, why should Brockton people be more finicky about it than the Bostonese.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG 11, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everybody is familiar with the wonderful production it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic limns history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's developements and these are contrasted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appomattox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's Theatre, Washington. The South both before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when this marvelous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade. As but a few performances remain before the end of the run those who have delayed viewing the great production will keep the Tremont Theatre crowded from now until the end of the engagement.

BEVERLY (Mass.) TIMES
AUG 11, 1915

MOVES TO DEFEND NEGRO

Educators Prepare Film Answer to "The Birth of a Nation"

New York, Aug. 11.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which objected to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" on the ground that scenes in which white girls were attacked cast a reflection on the negro race, now is preparing a motion picture of Civil War times that will act as an answer to "The Birth of a Nation," and defend the colored race.

Charles M. Studin, one of the directors of the association, said yesterday that the association had conceived the project several weeks ago and had engaged Miss Elaine Sterne, a professional movie writer, to prepare a scenario. This is now ready, he said, and the association is trying to interest capital to back the venture.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
AUG 12 1915

RECORD PRICE FOR A FILM

England Rights Over "Birth of a Nation," Which Excited Boston Negroes, Have Been Sold, According to Report

Fifty-two thousand dollars has been paid by a small syndicate for the New England rights to the "Birth of a Nation," according to reports circulated this afternoon. The report could not be verified in Boston, the statement being made that any authoritative announcement would have to come from the New York office. In fact, the Boston manager doubted if any such purchase had been made.

This sum is probably the largest price ever paid for New England rights to a single motion-picture film. Among the purchasers, it is said, are Coleman Levin and William Mann, both of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Mayer of Haverhill. Although the purchase is understood to become effective immediately, control of the Boston rights does not go into the hands of the reported purchasers until after the close of the present engagement at the Tremont Theatre. It is rumored the purchasers have been offerd $33,000 for thir right already. The films, it is stated, will be exhibited at Worcester, New Bedford and Providence and in other cities. Permit to show the film, with the objectionable features that caused so much discussion here eliminated, has been granted in Providence.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 13, 1915

MINISTER PROTESTS FILM.

Rev D. S. Turner of Brockton Says He Represents 800 Negroes.

BROCKTON, Aug 12—Rev S. David Turner, former years pastor of the Lincoln Congregational Church and dean of the clergymen in this city, today made a formal protest to Mayor John S. Burbank against the presentation in a local theatre for the week of Aug 22 of the moving picture "The Birth of a Nation."

City Solicitor Wilbar has ruled that Mayor Burbank has absolute authority to prevent the presentation if he chooses. Mr Turner claims he represents 800 colored people, who are opposed to the picture.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 13, 1915

SYNDICATE BUYS "BIRTH OF NATION" FILM RIGHT

New England rights to the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation" have been sold to a syndicate for $50,000. Among those to buy these rights were Samuel D. Kerr of Salem, Coleman Levin of Boston, William Mann of Boston and Louis B. Mayer, owner of the Haverhill Theatre and booking agent for this syndicate.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 13, 1915

BUY RIGHTS TO "BIRTH OF NATION"

The New England rights to the "Birth of a Nation" have been sold to a syndicate for $52,000, according to reports circulated in Boston yesterday afternoon, but which could not be verified. The Boston management announced that any authoritative statement would have to come from the New York office.

The sum is probably the largest ever paid for the New England rights to a single motion-picture film. Interested persons say that among the purchasers are Coleman Levin and William Mann of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Mayer of Haverhill.

It is stated that the films will be shown at Worcester, New Bedford, Providence and other cities.

BOSTON RECORD
AUG. 13, 1915

$52,000 PRICE PAID BY SYNDICATE FOR "BIRTH OF NATION"

A syndicate has paid $52,000 for New England rights to "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith photo-play based on "The Clansman," which has had a long run at the Tremont Theatre.

The syndicate is composed of Coleman Levin and William Mann of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Mayer of Haverhill. The films will be shown in Worcester, New Bedford, Providence and other cities. A permit has been granted in Providence, but refused in Springfield.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 10, 1915

FINAL FORTNIGHT OF "BIRTH OF A NATION"

The Pathe [illegible] news

There can be no extension of the run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. Notwithstanding the continuation of the popular interest in the production, the final fortnight started at that house yesterday. The demand for places was just as great as ever and the long line in front of the box office remained unbroken until after the photoplay had started.

The acme of photo-realism has been reached with "The Birth of a Nation," and the musical accompaniments, the rolls of the drums, the clatter of hoofs and the peal of artillery enhance the dramatic situations to an unusual degree. The cast includes many of the ablest [illegible]

BOSTON POST
AUG. 10, 1915

Tremont Theatre

The beginning of the end has come for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, [illegible] final fortnight of this photo-play started yesterday with throngs even larger than usual. The pictures of the thrilling scenes in the Civil war were given with the greatest of realism, and the ingenuity with which the accompaniment of the din of battle is given, adds vastly to the effectiveness of the presentation. Seats are now on sale at the box office of the Tremont Theatre for all the rest of the engagement.

CLIPPING FROM Enterprise
Brockton Mass
Date 8-10-15

"Birth of a Nation" at Hathaway

The first showing of the much talked of "Birth of a Nation" photoplay outside of Boston and New York is announced to be given at the Hathaway Theatre an entire week. The theatre, which has been closed for the summer season and is to re-open on Labor day for the stock season, will be opened for one week starting Monday, Aug. 23, for the showing of the big feature. The film will close a long run at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, Aug. 21.

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 10, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"—Tremont

There can be no extension of the run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. The final fortnight started yesterday. Late-comers were turned away, unable to get choice seats to witness the pictures which have established new Boston records for a production of this nature. "The Birth of a Nation" shows war in all its realism, and by the expenditure of a small fortune the spectator is enabled to witness the encounters which made the conflict between North and South the most spectacular that the world has ever known. Next week will be positively the last of the photo-play season at the Tremont Theatre. Seats are now on sale for all the remaining representations of "The Birth of a Nation" in Boston.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 10, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

This week and next are positively all that remain for "The Birth of a Nation" in Boston. The motion picture play has continued its success with the same large audiences in attendance as when it first came to town. In the course of the entertainment one gets an excellent idea of the reconstruction period, and one is brought face to face with the Ku Klux Klan. Seats are now on sale at the box office of the Tremont Theatre for every performance that remains of this [illegible]

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 12, 1915

MAYOR HAS AUTHORITY TO BAR THE PHOTOPLAY

City Solicitor Defines His Authority as Provided by Statute Law—Rev. S. D. Turner Makes First Formal Protest Against "Birth of a Nation."

In a formal protest to Mayor John S. Burbank against the presentation in this city of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," Rev. S. D. Turner, for 19 years pastor of the Lincoln Congregational church, asserts that he speaks for 800 of his people against "deliberate and deeply laid malicious propaganda to malign, insult and misrepresent 10,000,000 of colored Americans.

Simultaneously the promoters of the film announce the scale of prices for the week's engagement at the Hathaway Theatre the week of Aug. 23 as 50 and 75 cents and $1 for all seats except those in the boxes.

City Solicitor Wilbar states that Mayor Burbank has absolute authority to prevent the appearance of the photoplay here.

Although there was a meeting of colored citizens earlier in the week to consider measures against the film Mr. Turner's letter is the first formal protest to the mayor from the colored people. In his communication the colored clergyman says:

"I have just read that 'The Birth of a Nation' is to be shown in our city Aug. 23 at the Hathaway Theatre. As a citizen of Brockton who has lived here 19 years and interested in the good of all its inhabitants and sharing with you and others the Brockton spirit of inter-racial cordiality and friendliness, and sincerely believing that the above named photo-play is a part of a deliberate and deeply laid malicious propaganda to malign, insult and misrepresent ten million of colored Americans, I earnestly ask you to give this protest your serious consideration.

"The colored people are already subjected to conditions of hardship, restrictions and base calumnies such as no other race suffers. Against such unwarranted treatment they are compelled constantly to struggle, but have made commendable and unparalleled progress, as you are no doubt aware.

"This invidious photo-play has now a notorious record as a disturber of harmonious race relations. A small-sized riot was created in New York and Boston when it was allowed to be exhibited. In our splendid city, young, growing and prosperous, when inter-racial relations are the very best, we do not want anything calculated to disturb to be permitted. In this wish, I am sure, you are in full accord.

"It is not always easy for others to fully appreciate our viewpoint, but I feel there is sufficient justice in this plea that the play be prohibited. Other larger cities of our commonwealth have interdicted its exhibition and many of our most influential citizens have said it should be suppressed. I sincerely hope you will, if it be in your power, prohibit the showing of the play in our city. This is not my wish and plea only, but that of 800 of colored persons of your city."

MAYOR'S AUTHORITY IS DEFINED BY STATUTE

Because there has been some question as to the mayor's authority, City Solicitor Winfield M. Wilbar was asked how far this authority extended.

"The mayor has absolute authority to prevent the presentation of the photoplay in question, or any other film, play or act in a public amusement house, which he may deem against the interests of public morals or welfare," answered Mr. Wilbar.

The Acts of 1908, Chapter 385, Section 2, state that the mayor of a city "may revoke or suspend at his pleasure" the license of any playhouse. And it would not be lawful to show the photoplay in a house not duly licensed to charge admission as amusement places.

Further, it is stated at City Hall that the assent of the mayor was not asked, nor was he consulted in any way, prior to the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" was to be shown here. He has not stated his position regarding it, but it is known that the mayor feels it would have been only courteous for the management to have asked him if there would be any objection to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in this city.

It is stated that no further meetings have been arranged for by colored citizens to plan a united protest to the mayor. A delegation had planned to wait upon Mayor Burbank this morning at City Hall but the visit was deferred owing to the mayor's absence.

REV. S. D. TURNER.

Rev. S. D. Turner says he has not seen the photoplay in its original or deleted form. Not a few Brocktonians who saw it in Boston assert that the most objectionable features were cut out when the film was censored, following the sensational outbreak of feeling in that city by colored residents.

Scale of Prices Here.

High prices prevailed when the film was shown in New York and Boston, with $2 as a maximum for seats other than those in the boxes. This scale has been pruned by the management for the Brockton engagement, though it will make a record as the highest prices ever charged for admission to a photoplay here.

Seats are announced to go on sale Thursday, Aug. 19.

There will be matinees daily at 2:15 and evening performances at 8. The showing of the picture takes two hours and three-quarters. The scale of prices:

Matinees—Lower boxes $1.50, upper boxes $1, floor 50 and 75 cents, balcony 25 and 50 cents.

Evenings—Lower boxes $2, upper boxes $1.50, floor 75 cents and $1, balcony 50 and 75 cents.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 12, 1915

CONTRACTS SIGNED

Hitch Over Prices of Seats for Birth of Nation Overcome.

The contracts between the Hathaway theater management and the D. W. Griffith Co., producers of "The Birth of a Nation," have been signed and it will be here the week of Aug. 2 with two performances a day scheduled for that week. The box office at Hathaway's will open Thursday, Aug. 19 at 10 o'clock for the sale of tickets for this gigantic picture production and will remain open then for the season, as the sale of tickets for the regular season will begin shortly after "The Birth of a Nation" finishes its week's engagement.

A scale of prices has been accepted, though a hitch in the engagement seemed possible on account of them. In Brockton the show may be seen from the best seats for one dollar, although, to conform with the rule of the producers, the prices will run to $2. The latter figure, however, is only reached for, the lower boxes in the evening. The upper boxes will be $1.50 and the orchestra floor will be $1, with many 75-cent seats also. The balcony will be 50 and 75 cents. The matinee prices will be 25 cents to $1.50, the latter only being for lower boxes, with upper box seats in the afternoon $1. Seats on the floor will be 50 and 75 cents and in the balcony 25 and 50 cents.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 12, 1915

ASKS MAYOR TO STOP PHOTO-PLAY

Rev. S. D. Turner Submits a Letter of Protest.

Rev. S. D. Turner, pastor of the Lincoln Congregational church, has written Mayor Burbank a protest against presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Hathaway theater next week. The mayor today declined to comment upon the letter. The communication is as follows:

"I have just read in one of the local papers that 'The Birth of a Nation' is to be shown in our city Aug. 23 at the Hathaway theater. As a citizen of Brockton who has lived here 19 years, interested in the good of all its inhabitants and, sharing with you and others the Brockton spirit of inter-racial cordiality and friendliness, and sincerely believing the above named photo-play is a part of a deliberate and deeply laid malicious propaganda to malign, insult and misrepresent 10,000,000 of colored Americans, I earnestly ask you to give this protest your serious consideration.

"The colored people are already subjected to conditions of hardship, restrictions and base calumnies such as no other race suffers. Against such unwarranted treatment they are compelled constantly to struggle, but have made commendable and unparalleled progress, as you no doubt are aware.

"This insidious photo-play has now a notorious record as a disturber of harmonious race relations. A small sized riot was created in New York and Boston when it was allowed to be exhibited. In our splendid city—young, growing and prosperous, where inter-racial relations are the very best, we do not want anything calculated to disturb to be permitted. In this wish I am sure you are in full accord.

"It is not always easy for others to fully appreciate our viewpoint, but I feel there is sufficient justice in this plea that the play be prohibited. Other large cities of our commonwealth have interdicted its exhibition and many of our most influential citizens have said it should be suppressed.

"I sincerely hope you will if it be in your power, prohibit the showing of the play in our city. This is not my wish and plea only, but that of 80 colored persons of our city."

Under chapter 385, acts of 1908, the mayors of cities are given sole power to grant licenses to theaters and "may revoke or suspend such licenses at his pleasure."

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 13, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everybody is familiar with the wonderful production it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic links history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's developements and these are contrasted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appomatox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's Theatre, Washington. The South both before and after the war is pictured in its most [illegible] Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when this marvel ous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade. As but a few performances remain before the end of the run those who have delayed viewing the great production will keep the Tremont Theatre crowded from now until the end of the engagement.

SALEM (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 12, 1915

813

SALEMITE BUYS FAMOUS FILM

S. D. Kerr of This City One of Group of Men to Purchase New England Rights to "Birth of a Nation"; Paid $50,000 for the Privileges; Will Be Shown Here.

Samuel D. Kerr of this city is one of a group of men who have purchased the New England rights for the photoplay production "The birth of a nation," the sensational film which caused so much commotion in Boston for months, for a sum exceeding $50,000. Mr. Kerr is proprietor of the National House Furnishing Co. at the corner of Front and Washington streets, from whom a News man secured the story.

Associated with Mr. Kerr in the deal by which the much-talked-of film changes hands are Coleman Levin, a Boston carpet dealer; William Mann of the Boston Metallic Bed Co.; Mr. Greenblatt, a statuary manufacturer, and Louis B. Mayer, proprietor of a Haverhill theatre and the booking agent for the syndicate which has come into possession of the most valuable photoplay above mentioned and several other pictures of note. Outside of Mr. Mayer all of the other members of the syndicate take the role of investors.

The group of men above mentioned have secured the rights for "The birth of a nation" for a [illegible]-year period. They will succeed to the exclusive right for Boston the day following Labor day, but the remainder of New England territory is theirs now. Mr. Kerr states that the syndicate of which he is a member has been made a princely offer for the Boston rights already. As for the showing of the film outside of the Hub he states that it will be given performances in Providence, New Bedford and Worcester next week and will be seen at the Salem theatre in about two weeks.

It will be recalled that the photoplay was the subject of much attention by the newspapers and the public in general all over this section following its first appearance at a Boston theatre. There were near-riots, the legislature was appealed to in an attempt to exclude it from the public view and other measures were adopted to stop its production. Men and women in all walks of life went to the Hub to see the noted picture and there were many and varying opinions as to its merit. However, the fact remains that it has drawn crowded houses for months now and promises to do so wherever shown. The fact that a Salem man becomes part owner of the exclusive rights to the use of the famous film in New England lends particular interest to the photoplay, which, as stated before, is booked to show at the Salem theatre shortly.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 13, 1915

MAYOR WILL HEAR COLORED CITIZENS

And Then Make Decision on "The Birth of a Nation."

PETITION IS CIRCULATED

Councilman Rowe Comments on the Photoplay.

At the request of colored citizens, Mayor John S. Burbank has arranged for a conference this evening at City Hall, at which time he will hear the objections of the colored people to the presentation of the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Hathaway Theatre the week of Aug. 23. Mayor Burbank states that he has nothing to say at present, but it is probable that he will have a statement to make following the conference.

That the worst feature of the entire matter is the notoriety given to the film is the contention of Councilman Fred D. Rowe, dean of the common council, who witnessed it in New York city in its original form. Councilman Rowe was in the New York City Hall to keep an appointment with Mayor Mitchel when the latter was waited upon by a group of colored citizens who protested the picture, and it is his belief that the agitation is due to the unwarranted publicity the colored people are giving the picture.

"I saw it in its original form in New York city and the worst feature is the notoriety that is given to it," he states. "A part of the film was cut out and to my mind it minimized to a great extent the objections that were made to it at that time. There were no great demonstrations and not much comment against the picture in New York. I believe if the colored people would stop and consider they would realize that all this publicity only tends to make the matter more disagreeable."

✣

To Circulate a Petition.

The colored people of the city are preparing a petition which they intend to circulate about Brockton. It is an appeal to the mayor "to exercise your official authority and prevent the exhibition, in this city, of the infamous photoplay, 'The Birth of a Nation.' We protest the exhibition of this motion picture because we know that it arouses hatred and race prejudice. We protest it because it is a gross libel upon the negro and might have the effect of retarding the future advancement and progress of the colored people of this city. We believe that this picture play tends to create in the minds of young people, erroneous impressions of a peaceable and industrious people. The picture has been denounced by public men all over the United States as breeding race hatred and as grossly misrepresenting the part played by the colored people of the south during the reconstruction period. We do not believe the people of Brockton desire any demonstrations such as have occurred in other places in this city, where everyone is always given a square deal regardless of race, religion or color."

✣

Syndicate to Present Film.

A Boston dispatch says that New England rights to produce the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation" have been sold to a syndicate for $50,000. Among those to buy these rights were Samuel D. Kerr of Salem, Coleman Levin of Boston, William Mann of Boston and Louis B. Mayer, owner of the Haverhill Theatre and booking agent for this syndicate.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 12, 1915

FAMOUS FILM COMING HERE

"Birth of a Nation" to Be Shown at the Premier at an Early Date.

Samuel D. Kerr of Salem, is one of a group of men who have purchased the New England rights for the photoplay production "The Birth of a Nation," the sensational film which caused so much commotion in Boston for months, for a sum exceeding $50,000. The film is to be shown in this city in the near future.

Associated with Mr. Kerr in the deal by which the much-talked-of film changes hands are Coleman Levin, a Boston carpet dealer; William Mann of the Boston Metallic Bed Co.; Mr. Greenblatt, a statuary manufacturer, and Louis B. Mayer, proprietor of a Haverhill theatre and the booking agent for the syndicate which has come into possession of the most valuable photoplay above mentioned and several other pictures of note. Outside of Mr. Mayer all of the other members of the syndicate take the role of investors.

The group of men above mentioned have secured the rights for "The Birth of a Nation" for a 10-year period. They will succeed to the exclusive right for Boston the day following Labor day, but the remainder of New England territory is theirs now. Mr. Kerr states that the syndicate of which he is a member has been made a princely offer for the Boston rights already. As for the showing of the film outside of the Hub he states that it will be given performances in Providence, New Bedford and Worcester next week, and will be seen at the Salem theatre in about two weeks.

It will be recalled that the photoplay was the subject of much attention by the newspapers and the public in general all over this section following its first appearance at a Boston theatre. There were near-riots, the legislature was appealed to in an attempt to exclude it from the public view and other measures were adopted to stop its production. Men and women in all walks of life went to the Hub to see the noted picture and there were many and varying opinions as to its merit. However, the fact remains that it has drawn crowded houses for months now and promises to do so wherever shown.

LOWELL (Mass.) COURIER CITIZEN
AUG. 9, 1915

[illegible] But there will be a presidential election next year.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everyone is familiar with the wonderful production, it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

NEW YORK (N. Y.) TELEGRAPH
AUG 13 1915

SYNDICATE PAYS $50,000 FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—A syndicate has paid $52,000 for [illegible] England rights to "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith photo-play based on "The Clansman," which has had a run at the Tremont Theatre despite opposition by negroes.

The syndicate is composed of Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Levin and William Mann shown in Worcester, New Bedford, Providence and [illegible] Mayer of Haverhill.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 14, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—Fifty-two thousand dollars has been paid by a small syndicate for the New England rights to the "Birth of a Nation," according to reports circulated yesterday afternoon. The report could not be verified in Boston, the statement being made that any authoritative announcement would have to come from the New York office. In fact, the Boston manager doubted if any such purchase had been made.

This sum is probably the largest price ever paid for New England rights to a single motion-picture film. Among the purchasers, it is said, are Coleman Levin and William Mann, both of Boston, Samcel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Mayer of Haverhill. Although the purchase is understood to become effective immediately, control of the Boston rights does not go into the hands of the reported purchasers until after the close of the present engagement at the Tremont theatre. It is rumored the purchasers have been offered $35,000 for their right already. The films, it is stated, will be exhibited at Worcester, New Bedford and Providence and in other cities.

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 14, 1915

Tremont Theatre

New England has been coming to Boston ever since last April to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, and this powerful moving picture has proved such a sensation to all classes of amusement seekers that it has seemed to be the impression that it might remain for a long time to come without losing its interest in the least. Other engagements stand in the way, however, and that is why the final presentation in Boston, and in New England as well, must be given at the Tremont Theatre next Saturday evening. "The Birth of a Nation" has proved a vivid and most interesting method of teaching histor

LOWELL Mass COUR CITIZEN
AUG. 14, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE.

The coming week is announced to be the final week of the wonderful moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. Hundreds of Lowell people have seen this picture, and without a dissenting voice, pronounce it marvelous, educational, enjoyable and entirely striking. In the coming week, many more will seize this final opportunity for seeing it, and it is certain that the effort will repay all who undertake it. Few pictures have attained the position of "The Birth of a Nation" in public esteem or have attracted so widespread attention. It cannot be adequately described, but must be seen to be appreciated. For weeks the Tremont Theatre has been packed to capacity. The final week will be no exception and it is a mistake not to be counted among those present.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York C
About Boston
AUG

DROP FREE TICKETS FROM AEROPLANE FOR "NATION"

IN its novel method of advertising to keep the Tremont theatre, Boston, full, the management of "The Birth of a Nation" last week employed an

Donna Montran, one of the [illegible] in the film spectacle, made two flights from the Saugus aviation field to Re[illegible] in Captain Chauncey Redding's

When over the business [illegible] she threw out a hundred pennant's bearing insignia of "The Birth of a Nat[illegible] about thirty-five of which were [illegible] tickets for the photoplay. The finders were admitted to the Tremont that night free

BOSTON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO
AUG. 14, 1915

bill at the Majestic theater next week Andrew Mack in "Arrah na Pogue," the well-known Irish play which has not been seen in Boston for five years. Many extra people have been secured for the production, and Mr. Mack is to offer several new songs.

New England rights to produce the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," are reported to have been sold to a syndicate for $50,000. Among those to buy these rights were Samuel D. Kerr of Salem, Coleman Levin of Boston, William Mann of Boston and Louis B. Mayer, owner of the Haverhill Theater and booking agent for this syndicate.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 14, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"

Before half the people who have been anxious to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity the run of this wonderful production will have terminated.

Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city.

During its stay in Boston "The Birth of a Nation" has broken every record of the season. By the end of the engagement it will have exceeded all recent records for long runs. Special arrangements have been made for the numerous excursionists and out of town visitors who flock to Boston during the month of August. As everybody is familiar with the wonderful production it will be one of the first things of interest to see in the Hub.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic links history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's developements and these are contrasted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appomattox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's Theatre, Washington. The South both before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when this marvelous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade. As but a few performances remain before the end of the run those who have delayed viewing the great production will keep the Tremont Theatre crowded from now until the end of the engagement.

JOURNAL
AUG. 14, 1915
Boston Journal

"RIRTH OF A NATION" RUN ENDS NEXT WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation" is nearing the close of its long run in Boston. It has broken all the records of local theatrical history for motion picture productions and twice daily the Tremont Theatre has been packed to the doors by audiences eager to see the spectacular production of the struggle between the North and the South, and the vivid presentation of episodes of the Reconstruction period.

A big fortune was expended in placing the work upon the screen and the result is an array of pictures the like of which Boston has never seen. The demand for seats at the Tremont Theatre is as great as ever, but the engagement is nevertheless to end a week from tonight.

BOSTON RECORD
AUG. 14, 1915

CORPORATION TO SHOW "BIRTH OF NATION" IN NEW ENGLAND

Among the new corporations to receive charters from the Commissioner of Corporations this week was the "Master Photoplay Co." of Boston, incorporated for the purpose of "exhibiting in the New England states the photo play called "The Birth of a Nation." The incorporators are A. Morris Greenblatt, Colman Levin, Louis B. Mayer, and the authorized capital is $100,000.

BOSTON RECORD
AUG. 14, 1915

CORPORATION TO SHOW "BIRTH OF NATION" IN NEW ENGLAND

Among the new corporations to receive charters from the Commissioner of Corporations this week was the "Master Photoplay Co." of Boston, incorporated for the purpose of "exhibiting in the New England states the photo play called "The Birth of a Nation." The incorporators are A. Morris Greenblatt, Colman Levin, Louis B. Mayer, and the authorized capital is $100,000.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 14, 1915

However marked the differences of opinion with regards to the character and value of "The Birth of a Nation," there can be only unanimity on one point, the promoters have solved the problem of gratuitous publicity, [illegible] well in line with other cities.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 14, 1915

WANT PHOTO-PLAY KEPT FROM CITY

Colored Citizens Protest Birth of a Nation.

MAYOR WILL SEE FILM BEFORE GIVING REPLY

Says He Will Prevent It if It Seems Objectionable.

That the general reputation of the photo-play, and its suggestions, notwithstanding certain scenes have been eliminated from the original, makes presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Brockton undesirable and endangers race prejudice where harmony and cordial relations have existed, was the claim of a delegation of colored citizens before Mayor Burbank Friday night at city hall, protesting appearance of the movie picture in Brockton.

All of the delegation admitted to Mayor Burbank they had not witnessed a presentation of the play. They claimed this is not necessary in order to determine the advisability of permitting exhibition of the film.

Copies of remarks on the play by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, professor of history at Harvard university; by Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad of the Park Street church, Boston, and resolutions passed by St. Mark's Congregational church of Boston, all severely criticising "The Birth of a Nation," declaring it to be historically incorrect, an unjust reflection upon the north in the Civil war and a reflection upon the colored race, were read by James E. Attus and were presented Mayor Burbank.

One speaker declared he has been a resident of Brockton 18 years and not until it was announced in newspapers "The Birth of a Nation" would be presented here had he been insulted because of his color. He said Friday he was insulted six times while at work by shopmates and told the play truthfully depicts "you fellows just as you are." This man said he had no desire to witness a play that was an unjust reflection upon his race, that did not truthfully represent his race as it now is, and which, in his opinion, seriously would affect in many ways the future welfare of the children of colored people.

Andrew Gale said he represented Edward E. Bennett lodge, G. U. O. O. F., and had been delegated by the lodge to protest to the mayor against presentation of the play in Brockton. He asked Mayor Burbank if he could not see the play in Boston and not give opportunity even for a private presentation in this city.

The mayor replied, to be fair to both sides, it would be necessary for him to see the play and that as his time if fully occupied, he would be unable to view the film in Boston. He informed the delegation he has no power to stop presentation of the play but has the power of revoking a theater license.

Members of the delegation contended the opinions expressed by leading members of the white and colored races declaring the play unfit for presentation and harmful to relations now existing between the two races, should be sufficient evidence from which a conclusion could be reached.

The mayor said he will insist upon seeing a presentation of the play in order to form his own opinion, unbiased by any comment favorable or unfavorable, to the picture as proposed to be presented in Brockton.

It was stated several cities have refused to permit the play to be presented. Mayor Burbank asked for the names of those cities, and they were given. Providence was mentioned, Attleboro, Springfield and Worcester being included in the list.

William B. Howell presented the mayor written manuscript of remarks he had prepared, in which he referred to pleasant relations always existing in Brockton between the white and colored races, expressing a hope they not be endangered by presentation of the play in question. He spoke of the advance of the colored race and declared it to be a shame scenes of a half century ago should be exaggerated today for commercial purposes.

Rev. Henry H. Jones, former pastor of the Messiah Baptist church, made a strong appeal the play be forbidden presentation in Brockton. He referred to his long residence in Brockton, to harmony existing between the two races in this city and said he felt assured the mayor would see his way to forbid the film being staged here.

Mayor Burbank then informed the delegation he desired to be fair to both sides; if, when he sees the film at a private presentation, there are any objectionable features about it, he will have them eliminated and, furthermore, if he considers the entire play objectionable, he will prevent its presentation in Brockton. He said he would not render a decision before seeing the film.

These present at the hearing included: Rev. H. H. Jones, James E. Attus, Andrew Gale, William B. Howell, Charles J. Harris, Daniel Hynson, Theophilus Brummell and others. A representative of the Hathaway theater was present.

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
AUG. 14, 1915

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatre Bulletin for Next Week.

Boston Theatre.—Motion-pictures.
Majestic Theatre.—Motion-pictures and Majestic Players in "Arrah-na-Pogue."
Tremont Theatre.—"The Birth of a Nation."

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its last week at the Tremont Theatre on Monday. The play has drawn large audiences throughout its entire Boston run, and its closing performances show no lessening of its popularity. The pictures of the Civil War and the following era of reconstruction are presented with remarkable realism and have been notable for their historic interest and scenic beauty.

CHELSEA (Mass.) RECORD
AUG. 14, 1915

WATERS CLUB DISCUSSION

That "The Birth of a Nation," the photo-play which has just finished its season in Boston, is unfair to the negro of the North and should be prohibited from any further exhibition, was the opinion of the majority of the speakers at the Robert Waters club last evening.

Standard
Bedford Mass 8.15.19.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Owing to the impossibility of obtaining two copies of the picture, "The Birth of a Nation," at the same time, with all the accessories connected therewith, including a musical director, a drummer, three electricians and an operator, the management makes the announcement that the picture will be shown at the Orpheum theatre only on the week of August 23d. This production is such a large one and everything has been arranged with such perfect care to preserve all the effects made possible in the original production, that the staging affair at two theatres at one time has been found to be a larger undertaking than was at first expected.

There are only five copies of this picture allotted to the New England territory, including the one which is now running in Boston at the Tremont theatre. These other copies will be run for the first time on the same day in New Bedford, Providence, Brockton and one other city yet to be selected. This change has necessitated a reconstruction of the hours at which the picture was to have been shown. The time that has been decided upon is 2 o'clock in the afternoon and 8 in the evening. The prices will range from 25 cents to $1. All of the $1, 75-cent and 50-cent seats will be reserved and will be on sale beginning Monday morning at The Orpheum theatre box office. There will also be engaged especially for this production an orchestra of 12 pieces in addition to the musical director and the drummer who accompany the picture.

So much has been said and written about this famous picture that no further introduction seems necessary except that it will be the first time it has been shown anywhere at the prices mentioned above. It may also be truthfully said that the copy of the film to be shown here is not an old, full of "rainstorms" is many times the case, but a brand new one. When a film has been run for two months or more it has decreased in length from 1000 feet to possibly 575, owing to the fact that portions of it have been cut out, a little at a time, to keep it in good condition. This is why figures apparently jump from one position to another very suddenly and unexpectedly. With a new film

Morn Herald of Boston
Aug. 15. 1915.

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" has held the stage in Boston ever since last April. The positive farewell must come next Saturday night. The story is one that interests all Americans. It shows the most thrilling episodes of the civil war and hundreds of participants make realistic the fierce encounters between North and South. The reconstruction period is taken up with dramatic effectiveness and one sees the dashing riders of the Ku Klux Klan carrying out their methods of punishment. Seats are now on sale at the box office of the Tremont Theatre for any re[illegible]

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 15, 1914

"The Birth of a Nation" will start upon its 50th week at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow afternoon, but as the production has been given here twice daily, it has the equivalent of a run of 25 weeks and thus takes the record of the season for duration [illegible]

BOSTON AMERICAN
AUG. 15, 1914

Griffith Set Up Big 'Movie Zone'

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staking of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," now showing at the Tremont Theatre, he was confronted by seemingly insuperable obstacles.

An area about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces was required; thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown in an historic raid by the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord" with power to commandeer.

In this emergency the authorities of the country in which "The Birth of a Nation" was being produced were appealed to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of Director Griffith for one day. All the roads in this section were closed to traffic during the day, and the cameras were at work on this scene from sunrise to sunset.

The roads did not look like the old Southern roads, and Mr. Griffith, with the permission of the county officials, remade such of the highways as would come within the camera eye. Tons of sand were spread, also tons of gravel, too. Landscape engineering changed the appearance of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of North Carolina.

The race of the clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day without a flaw or accident. After it was all over Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course.

It cost about $25,000 to do this trick, but it was worth it, as those who have seen this wonderful spectacle will cheerfully testify.

Boston Morning Globe Aug. 15, 1915.

An interesting group at the Tremont Theatre on Tuesday evening of last week was made up of tourists from Richmond, Va., who were on their way up to the Maine coast for the Bunker. They enjoyed the [illegible] of "The Birth of a Nation" and were especially interested in the riding of the Ku Klux Klan. One of the gentlemen stopped on his way out of the theatre to express to business manager Fred Zweifel his appreciation of the realistic manner in which Southern localities had been reproduced upon the screen for the background of this film.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 15, 1914

With the backing and support of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People an opposition film to "The Birth of a Nation" is soon to make its appearance on the screen. It is written by Elaine Sterne and is called "Lincoln's Dream." This picture is intended as an answer to the Nation film, which, the negroes and their friends assert, is against their best interests and derogatory to their ideals and traditions. Among those who are interested in the new film are Oswald Villard and Rabbi Stephen Wise.

Boston Post Aug. 15 1915

Tremont Theatre

Boston will be sorry, indeed, to take its farewell of "The Birth of a Nation." Ever since last April this photo-play has held the local stage at the Tremont Theatre, and has packed the house to the doors. Much was expected of this work when it came to Boston from its first production in New York, but not half enough was said in advance concerning the merits of the work, and the stirring pictures of the war scenes created a sensation that amazed all.

War is thrilling at all times, and when a small army of participants started in to reproduce the most amazing period in American history, it was easy to see what a notable achievement would be accomplished. Everybody talked about "The Birth of a Nation," and the motion pictures of the mighty conflict between the North and South created a sensation that astounded the supporters of each side in the national conflict.

The most desperate features of the greatest struggle of the world's history were reproduced by means of the film, and the accessories of music and the like served to make vivid the moments that settled the destiny of the Blue and the Gray. The war time battles, the assassination of President Lincoln, the educational episodes of the reconstruction period, the madcap flashes of the riders of the Ku Klux Klan, all these served to make "The Birth of a Nation" an object lesson in American history of the utmost [illegible]

Boston American 8, 15, 15

Tremont Theatre. FF

"The Birth of a Nation" will start on the last week of its engagement in Boston at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow evening. Ever since the opening of the Summer this wonderful photo-play has held the stage at the Tremont and has attracted the attention of [illegible] in a manner never before [illegible]

Aug. 15, 19.

D. W. GRIFFITH
Manager and Producer of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Opera House, This Week.

Springfield Mor. Union Aug 15.

The war has taught us to think in terms of tens of thousands and up to millions and the movies are continuing the system. A news item quite casually announces that the New England rights for "The Birth of a Nation" have been sold for $50,000 and this despite the fact that a permit to show the Griffith picture in Springfield has been refused. When one thinks of the movies one thinks of 10-cent admissions and it seems that quite a good many dimes will have to be yanked from the rock-ribbed soil of New England to make up $50,000. But, bless you, "The Birth of a Nation" is none of these 10-cent exhibitions. As much as $2 is charged and collected in Boston for certain seats from which a spectator may see the stirring scenes in the film that was made from "The Clansman." From $2 the prices grow smaller, but they do not dwindle to the vanishing point in any part of the house. The news dispatch that tells of the sale says the picture will be shown in Worcester, New Bedford, Providence and other cities. A license has been granted in Providence. Mayor Stacy refused to license the picture because of the opposition that, starting in Boston, spread all over the State. Scenes that caused the opposition have been deleted and it is possible that another application for license may be made later with different results.

A. L. S. WOO[illegible]

Worcester (mass) Telegram 8,15,19.

It is reported that the New England rights to "The birth of a nation" have been sold, and that the picture will be shown in Worcester, Providence, New Bedford, and other cities at the close of the engagement at the Tremont theatre, Boston. This is the picture which excited a race riot in Boston, and which movie fans in Worcester have been clamoring to see. It is said that the purchase price is probably the largest ever paid for the New England rights to a single motion picture film.

Boston Globe 8,15,19.

Farewell to "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont

The Birth of a Nation will start upon its final week at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow. For 19 weeks the production has held the stage at the theatre and the remarkable pictures of the War of the Rebellion and of the Reconstruction period have served to crowd the house.

All the ensemble features of "The Birth of a Nation" are conspicuous for their artistic and dramatic elements and the incidental musical accompaniments have served to enhance the force of the entertainment. The arrangements are so complex for the harmonious presentation of this work that it cannot be given in many smaller places, therefore every [illegible] will be all that [illegible]

Boston Record Aug 15 1915.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE ORPHEUM

FF

Owing to the impossibility of obtaining two copies of the picture "The Birth of a Nation," at the same time, with all the accessories connected therewith, including a musical director, a drummer, three electricians and an operator, the management makes the announcement that the picture will be shown at the Orpheum theatre only, on the week of Aug. 23d. This production is such a large one and everything has been arranged with such perfect care to preserve all the effects made possible in the original production, that the staging of the affair at two theatres at one time has been found to be a larger undertaking than was at first supposed.

There are only five copies of this picture allotted to the New England territory, including the one which is now running in Boston at the Tremont theatre. The other copies will be run for the first time on the same day in New Bedford, Providence, Brockton and other cities yet to be selected. This change has necessitated a reconstruction of the hours at which the picture was to have been shown. The time that has been decided upon is 2 o'clock in the afternoon and 8 in the evening. The prices will range from 25 cents to $1. All of the $1, 75-cent and 50 cent seats will be reserved and will be on sale beginning Monday morning at The Orpheum theatre box office. There will also be engaged especially for this production an orchestra of 14 pieces in addition to the musical director and the drummer, who accompany the picture.

So much has been said and written about this famous picture that no further introduction seems necessary except that it will be the first time it has been shown anywhere at the prices mentioned above. It may also be truthfully said that the copy of the film to be shown here is not an old, full of "rain storms" that has been exhibited over and over again, and cut down, as is many times the case, but a brand new one. When a film has been run for two months or more it has decreased in length from 1000 feet to possibly 975, owing to the fact that portions of it have been cut out, a little at a time, to keep it in good condition. This is why figures apparently jump from one position to another very suddenly and unexpectedly. With a new film such defects never appear.

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) JOURNAL
AUG. 15, 1914

Ku-Klux Riders in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Opera House

BOSTON AMERICAN
AUG. 15, 1914

The Triangle Film Company, which is the big motion picture combination, including Griffith, Ince and Sennett, is said to be trying to secure for the $2 film a lease of the Hollis Street Theatre, the home of the highest type of drama, and the stopping place of the very greatest legitimate stars for the last quarter of a century.

The Triangle has already secured the Knickerbocker Theatre in New York and the Studebaker in Chicago, two of the most celebrated theatres in the country, and the chances are excellent that they will get hold of a good theatre here.

They expect to begin business early in September with three big films displaying Raymond Hitchcock, Douglas Fairbanks and Frank Keenan.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 15, 1914

ELF-LIKE FACE ON THE SCREEN IS ATTRACTIVE

Mae Marsh Who Plays the Little Pet Sister in "The Birth of a Nation," Has Host of Admirers.

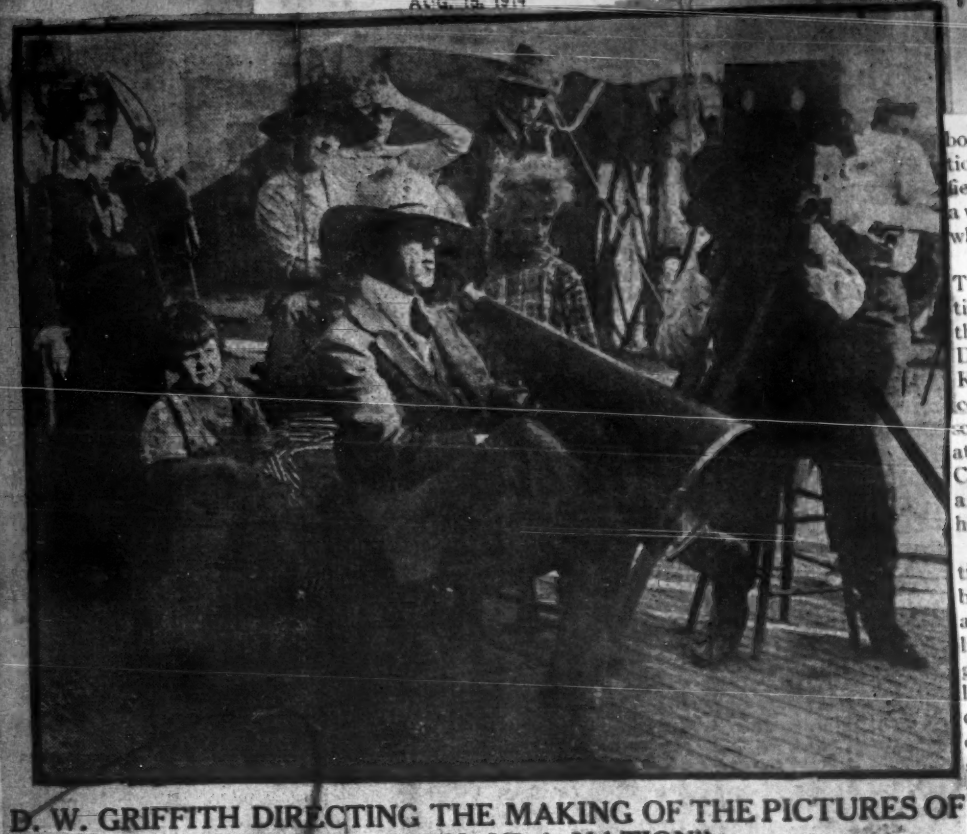
Mae Marsh.

Lovers of photo plays have their favorites among the actors. Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron, the little pet sister in the southern household in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, by her successful appearance in many photo plays during her three years before the camera, has attracted a host of admirers who greet with pleasure the appearance of her elf-like face on the screen.

Miss Marsh has many bits [illegible] acting in the picture. Among the most delightful are the welcoming of her brother back from the war, the making of "Southern Ermine" with raw cotton and chimney black for the glad occasion; the scene in the cellar with her mother and sister when the guerilla troops raid the little town of Piedmont; the garden-making that follows the return from the war, and the pretty scene where she rains kisses on her brother Ben to console him for the temporary loss of his sweetheart Elsie.

There is always a touch of comedy or of pathos when Miss Marsh appears. Her expressive, everchanging, mood-adapting face is one of the most valuable in the whole list of film favorites. Lotts of other days, both in face [illegible] semblance and in her method [illegible]

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) EVE. TRIBUNE 726
AUG. 15, 1914



D. W. GRIFFITH DIRECTING THE MAKING OF THE PICTURES OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

1. National Mag. Boston mag. August 15. 1915.

WITH all the cares and honors that have come into his life as President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson remains an author who loves his work. His republished book, "When a Man Comes to Himself," has attracted a great deal of attention because of the opinions expressed, and the appreciation of an unidentified millionaire philanthropist. The President in his literary work always has a winsome and attractive style that is reflected in public speeches and messages which might be called a Wilsonesque.

In it he refers to men who "find themselves" later in life than others. There are many paragraphs from the book that are interesting reading at this time. Quotations from the President's book are thrown on the screen in the presentation of the "Birth of a Nation," which is taken from Thomas Dixon, Jr.'s novel, "The Clansman." The play includes a story of the days of the Klux and reconstruction days in the South, upon which President Wilson commented in his earlier historical works. These excerpts are thrown on the screen to illustrate the picture. In the tiny library in the executive mansion at Washington are copies of his book and those of his predecessor and friend, Colonel Roosevelt. The last three Presidents have certainly contributed a liberal number of books to the library shelves of America, all dealing with historical data and public questions.

Some hold that in re-reading the books of men later promoted to high positions, they can discover the basis of this or that trend of thought or impulse, but they seem to think that in this book written by President Wilson years ago, "When a Man Comes to Himself," he may have changed his mind in the light of late events and experiences, so it would seem entirely unsafe to always gauge a man's views and impulses by what was written in earlier years.

love of alliteration and the tendency to use unique and unusual phrases characterized President Wilson's earlier work and traces still remain of Wilson characteristics. The scrawling essay of school days may make us wonder how we ever had such thoughts and ideas, but underneath it all is the marked tendency and drift of the mature mind.

President Wilson in earlier years loved the word "processes" and utilized it in his books and papers. "Processes" appears to be one of his pet words, and no writer can escape the charge of having favorites, no matter how much he may try to vitalize his vocabulary in galvanizing into life an old idea in phrasings and words that sound altogether novel.

BOSTON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MON
AUG. 16, 1915

CHARTERS ARE ISSUED TO NEW CORPORATIONS

Certificates to Do Business Given by Masachusetts Commissioner to Companies Engaging in Wide Variety of Enterprises

Among the Massachusetts corporations to receive charters from the commissioner of corporations in the past week was the "Master Photoplay Company" of Boston, incorporated for the purpose of "exhibiting in the New England states the photoplay called "The Birth of a Nation." The incorporators are A. Morris Greenblatt, Colman Levin, Louis B. Mayer, and the authorized capital is $100,000.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 16, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Owing to the impossibility of securing at the present time two copies of the film "The Birth of a Nation," it has been found necessary to cancel the booking of the film at Thevein theatre. Now that the film is released for general use outside of the metropolitan centres, the country has been divided up into specified territory. All of New England is included in one district and five copies of the film has been allotted to it. One of these is still running in Boston, and will be in use there until after Sept. 1. This allows only four films for distribution all over New England at that time. They will be ready for exhibition on Aug. 23rd, and one of the other four copies will be sent to New Bedford. New Bedford will, therefore, have the opportunity of seeing the picture on the first day that it is released outside of Boston.

LINCOLN PARK.

Miss Florence Ackley's singing at Lincoln Park last week has been hugely enjoyed by her hosts of admirers and genuine interest will be manifested in the announcement that this talented operatic artiste has been re-engaged to sing in this week's show.

"Ting-a-ling" is a breezy musical show, featuring Billy Carlton in the

CLIPPING FROM
BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
AUG. 15 1915.

Pen-Pictures of Walthall

And speaking of pen-pictures, here are two of Henry Walthall, the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation," drawn by one of the photoplay scribes:

"The pose of the matinee idol is lacking. The clothes that mark the movie star on the crowded streets are lacking. One interested in analyzing passersby would pick him for a clerk of retiring disposition on his way to a noonday Bible meeting at the First Methodist Church. There is no air of distinction, real or assumed; no desire to attract attention. A modestly gray clad figure, slender, slightly below the average height of men, with unfashionable hat and shoes, the simple bronze button of the Spanish war veteran on the lapel—this is the Henry Walthall of the street.

"An alert, lithe figure which spells grace in every movement, topped by a shock of wavy black hair; wholly unobtrusive, yet missing no detail of what is transpiring; a poet with dreaming eyes transformed in the fraction of a second into a dashing swashbuckler, a defiant, sinned-against hero or jealous lover—or anything else the script calls for. This is the 'Wallie Walthall' of the studio—a lovable fellow 'off and on,' who has always a pleasant nod for the adoring extra girl and a kindly smile or handshake for the broken-down old fellow who has fled to the studio as a haven of refuge when the 'legit' has cast him aside."

Walthall's figure handicapped him on the stage, but his progress was rapid after D. W. Griffith induced him to enter the movies. The Little Colonel was one of his last efforts under Griffith's direction.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 16, 1915

WOULD SPITE MAYOR CURLEY

Professor Allen W. Whaley Protests Address to Negroes Because of Film Vote

Professor Allen W. Whaley, lecturer on human rights, calls upon the Boston branch of the National Negro Business Men's League to rescind the invitation to Mayor Curley for an address of welcome at the convention which opens in Convention Hall, Wednesday morning. His appeal is based on the mayor's action with regard to "The Birth of a Nation."

"His action, throughout our long and bitter fight for justice, was for the destruction of our rights and the triumph of our defamers," Professor Whaley says of the mayor. "He tried to kill the bill in the Legislature, and, when defeated, trampled the rights of the negro people under foot, when he voted to keep in Boston that travesty on history, and slander of the people who have been wronged, robbed and outraged. To attempt to honor such a man, even if he be the President, would be cowardly. Mayor Curley, with those who invited him, should have the contempt and condemnation of the entire Afro-American race."

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 17, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" RUN ENDS SATURDAY

After enjoying a run which, at its conclusion, will have broken all records of the year in Boston, "The Birth of a Nation" entered yesterday its final week at the Tremont Theatre. This most elaborate and wonderful of film plays has been a revelation to all who have seen it. In "The Birth of a Nation," which is based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," the genius of D. W. Griffith has brought close to the people of today the scenes of the Civil War and of the subsequent Reconstruction days. Interwoven with the turbulent and stirring scenes of the play are two charming love stories. The music which accompanies the spectacle is an additional source of pleasure and wins hearty applause. "The Birth of a Nation" is interpreted by a brilliant cast of film favorites, among them being Mae Marsh, Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann, Joseph Henabery and others.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 17, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The first day of the seat sale for "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its New Bedford engagement on Monday, Aug. 23, far exceeded all expectations. The box office which is located in Orpheum theatre office on the second floor was visited by a large number of people. Tickets can also be reserved by calling Bell telephone 1970. Box office open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m.

This great offering is of unusual interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil war crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray.

The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by any producer, the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years ago. Daily matinees will be given during the entire engagement.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 17, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" entered upon the last week of its lengthy stay at the Tremont Theatre.

As it wends its way from charming scenes of the old South, through the horrors of the war and of the disorder and rioting which followed, this wonderful picture makes a forcible appeal to the emotions, an appeal which is enhanced by the music which accompanies the spectacle.

The enthusiasm with which it has been received from the beginning of its engagement in this city shows no signs of abating, notwithstanding the fact that by the time it has terminated its stay the play will have enjoyed a run which has broken all records for the season in Boston.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 16, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

The readiness with which some of our colored citizens spring to condemn the film play "The Birth of a Nation," while at the same time admitting they have never witnessed an exhibition of it, is somewhat surprising. What there is to the play which need cause them to protest would puzzle any person who has seen it. Unquestionably there are scenes in it which show the negroes of the reconstruction period in a decidedly unfavorable light, but it should not be overlooked the persons shown represent those of an earlier day and past history, while certain types of whites are shown in a manner even more unfavorable than that in which the negroes appear. In producing the play there has been an effort made to counteract whatever race feeling might be aroused in the minds of the thoughtless or irresponsible by showing a series of pictures which illustrate the remarkable advance made by the colored people since the days in question. These later pictures are not mere character representations, but are motion pictures of actually existing conditions in various parts of the south, pictures which are well calculated to surprise the audience by showing so clearly the progress of our colored citizens. It would indeed be a shame if a photo play of so stupendous a nature and one of such real historical interest as "The Birth of a Nation" should be barred from Brockton for no better reason than that which has been suggested.

BOSTON POST
AUG. 17, 1915

Tremont Theatre

With the longest engagement of the season to its credit, "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's wonderful film play of Civil war days, began yesterday its farewell week in Boston. The Tremont Theatre, upon whose stage the stirring and spectacular events of the story are unfolded, has been the scene of much enthusiasm throughout the engagement. As one thrilling picture follows another the critical period in the nation's life is brought close to the spectators as written history could never bring it. For the time being one lives the exciting life of that day and follows with friendly interest the romances which are entwined with the more stirring scenes. One of the distinctions of the production is the incidental music, which is particularly fine, and is responsible in a great degree for the emotional effect which the play has upon the audiences. The wild, weird strain which invariably heralds the coming of the Ku Klux Klan, the touching melodies of "In the Gloaming," "My Old Kentucky Home" and others of the matchless old songs put the auditors in a most receptive mood for the scenes which accompany them. The cast includes Mae Marsh, Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann, Joseph Henabery and others.

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 17, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"

When the longest engagement of the season to its credit, "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's film play of civil war days, began yesterday its farewell week in Boston. The Tremont Theatre has been the scene of much enthusiasm throughout the engagement. For the time being, one lives the exciting life of that day, and follows with friendly interest the romances which are entwined with the more stirring scenes. One of the distinctions of the production is the incidental music, which is particularly fine, and is responsible in a great degree for the emotional effect which the play has upon the audiences.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 16, 1915

There were several addresses by army workers, Adj. James Bowring of Fall River presiding.

WILL SEE PHOTO-PLAY

Rev. S. D. Turner Will Attend Birth of a Nation Production.

Rev. S. D. Turner, the pastor, conducted services Sunday at the Lincoln Congregational church, taking "Highway Religion" for the subject of his evening sermon. No special mention was made of "The Birth of a Nation," which it is planned to present in this city and the presentation of which Mr. Turner and other colored citizens have protested on the ground of gross misrepresentation of the colored race.

Wednesday Mr. Turner plans to witness the photo-play in Boston. He will attend the annual session of the National Negro Business Men's league, of which Booker T. Washington is president, in Boston Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 16, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Owing to the impossibility of securing at the present time two copies of the film "The Birth of a Nation," it has been found necessary to cancel the booking of the film at Thevien theatre. Now that the film is released for general use outside of the metropolitan centres, the country has been divided up into specified territory. All of New England is included in one district and five copies of the film has been allotted to it. One of these is still running in Boston, and will be in use there until after Sept. 1. This allows only four films for distribution all over New England at that time. They will be ready for exhibition on Aug. 23, and one of the other four copies will be sent to New Bedford. New Bedford will, therefore, have the opportunity of seeing the picture on the first day that it is released outside of Boston.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 17, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

[illegible]'s performance started "The Birth of a Nation" on the final week of its engagement at the Tremont Theatre. Notwithstanding its prolonged stay in this city, the magnificent spectacle continues to draw enthusiastic crowds. Among those who posed for the characters in the play are Mae Marsh, Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann, Joseph Henabery, and many others.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 17, 1915

When "The Birth of a Nation" presented at Hathaway's theatre will be produced in the same gorgeous manner that characterized its [illegible] York and Boston engagements. A special stage setting will be erected after the idea of a mammoth [illegible] box, such as is used to display [illegible] oil paintings, bringing out every detail of the subject. The theater will be decorated to correspond with the [illegible] act times that the production represents. A greatly enlarged orchestra will interpret the special music written for it. Produced at its actual cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars with a cast of 18,000 men, women and children and 3000 horses and requiring over two years to complete, "The Birth of a Nation" stands

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) JOURNAL
AUG. 17, 1915

Providence Opera House.

"The Birth of a Nation," the sensational and spectacular Griffith photoplay of the Civil War period, in 12 parts, was given its initial showing in the Providence Opera House last night before a large audience. It will run indefinitely.

Based on the book, "The Clansman," the photoplay breathes the spirit of that well-known work. The two great outstanding features of it are its controversial spirit and the splendor and magnificence of its production. Taken as a whole it is the most tremendous offering since "Cabiria" and in some respects may be truly classed above the great Kleine feature.

From the technical viewpoint it may be placed on a pedestal by itself. The appeal is far reaching and there never has been a picture offered probably to the American public that can approach the "swing" of its powerful "pull" or the sometimes almost uncanny reproductions of historical scenes.

The greatness of the film is in its spectacular points and the historical reproductions, yet so clearly defined is the drama and so carefully presented that it grips the audience hard.

In the production of the picture Mr. Griffith took over 200,000 feet of film to obtain the 12,000 feet of finished product. As a consequence much cutting and assembling is necessary. In this a producer may make or break any production, but with the great amount of such work necessary to put this picture on the market, the keen observer could not detect the spoilation of even the shortest flash, cut back or scene.

The cast which interprets the great play includes:

Col. Ben Cameron.....Henry Walthall
Margaret Cameron, the elder sister.....
.....Miriam Cooper
Flora, the pet sister.....Mae Marsh
Mrs. Cameron.....Josephine Crowell
Dr. Cameron.....Spottiswoode Aitken
Hon. Austin Stoneman, leader of the House.....
.....Ralph Lewis
Elsie, his daughter.....Lillian Gish
Silas Lynch, mulatto Lieutenant Governor.....
.....George Beisgmann
Gus, a renegade negro.....Walter Long
Abraham Lincoln.....Joseph Henabery

As history the picture sets the North right concerning some phases of the activities in the South in carpet bagging days after the war. Historically, also, the play reconstructs for the visual senses of the scenes of 50 years ago. The surrender of Lee at Appomatox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta move upon the screen as they never moved in print. And in so far as they surpass the written word, they justify the producer who declared after it had been assembled that he had tried to do a little something different.

Nor are the war spectacles the only impressive spectacular features. Two of the most wonderful pictures ever shown on the screen are Lincoln signing the first call for volunteers and the surrender of Lee. The assassination of the President is shown in full detail, and as the climax came in the great historical episode a gasp could be heard to run through the audience.

The impressiveness of the picture is also heightened by the presentation of the Ku-Klux Klan's riding and their invasion of the black's domain. The weird and mystical garb of these defenders of "Aryan race diplomacy" gave the director splendid opportunities, which he utilized to the fullest.

When these "Crusaders of the South" are seen mounted on superb horses, dashing furiously through field and forest and river to rescue innocent maidens or to punish "wicked Africans" the audience did not fail to respond with an liberal applause as during the wonderful battle scenes of the first section. The photography of the picture is exceptionally fine, the unusual sharpness being brought out.

While too much cannot be said of the directing, the choice of scenery and the story itself, the acting is such as might be expected with a director of the type and power of Griffith.

Mr. Walthall's performance is particularly fine. The parts of Stoneman and Silas Lynch were well taken care of, while Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman and Mae Marsh, as Flora Cameron, were all that could be expected of these artists.

An orchestra of 25 musicians, most of them from Boston, played music especially composed, while a corp of assistants on the stage furnished the noises necessary to add to the realism of the scenes.

Briefly summed up, the picture as a whole is tremendous, the story is gripping, the photography superb, the support of the star, Mr. Walthall, excellent, the detail perfect and staging splendid.

HAVERHILL (Mass.) GAZETTE
AUG. 17, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Slated at Colonial Labor Day Week

Everybody who has ever heard of the myriad Southern "Cunnell's" or who has chanced to see a Kentucky, thoroughbred, who loves the blue grass region, the tales of the Kentucky mountains and the delight that follows the quaffing of a fragrant mint julep mixed in true style of the Southland, will await with intense interest the appearance of "The Birth of a Nation," one of the most famous moving pictures ever shown, which comes to the Colonial theatre in this city for a week beginning Labor day, Sept. 4.

All the scenes made famous in Dixons' story will be brought to life vividly, and instead of the tango and grizzly bear and an accompaniment of diaphanous gowns, Haverhill's theatregoers will be regaled by dainty hoop skirts, stately curtseys, and the atmosphere of that south which has its touch of romance and pathos of those days "befoah de war." All have heard of "The Birth of the Nation". Its magnificense and true to life portrayal has been spread broadcast. In securing the picture the Colonial theatre management have shown a remarkably progressive spirit.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
AUG. 17, 1915

N. E. RIGHTS TO BIRTH OF NATION

Syndicate Buys Privilege to Show Famous Motion Picture Film For $32,000

It was reported in Boston, Saturday, that $32,000 had been paid by a small syndicate for the New England rights to the "Birth of a Nation," which is to be shown in a few of the larger cities of this section during the early fall. The sum, if the report is true, is probably the largest amount ever paid for the New England rights of a single motion picture film but the wonderful record of the picture in New York and Boston gives it a value far above that of the ordinary or average picture.

The purchasers of the film are said to consist of Coleman Levin and William Mann of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Meyer of Haverhill. While they have already secured the right to present the pictures they do not control the Boston rights until after Saturday, when the "Birth of a Nation" will close its engagement at the Tremont theater in Boston. It is also said that the purchasers have already been offered $35,000 for their right. While the deal securing the wonderful pictures is too recent to learn all the bookings scheduled it is understood that Providence, Worcester, New Bedford, Salem, Haverhill, Springfield and Fitchburg are being considered.

Permits to show the picture have already been issued in Providence and the widely advertised production will shortly be presented in the Rhode Island city. It is not believed that the purchasers will have any difficulty in presenting the picture throughout New England, as the various hearings, investigations, court decisions and other legal steps which marked its presentation in Boston are considered sufficient to warrant the promoters in planning a New England wide exhibition of the wonderful attraction. It is without question the biggest thing in a motion picture way that has ever been produced and its appearance should prove an event wherever it is shown.

The "Birth of a Nation" was shown in New York and Boston with a top price of $2 per seat. It is hardly feasible to expect the smaller cities to contribute that amount of money to see it and it is understood the promoters have adopted a lower scale of prices which will place the production within the reach of all and still enable them to present the wonderful spectacle exactly the same as in Boston and New York.

CLIPBURG
M
Date .....

RARE PHOTO SPECTACLE.

Gorgeous Dress for "Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial

"The Birth of a Nation" is coming to Haverhill. [illegible] joyous news to thousands of local people who have heard so much about this greatest of all film spectacles which has been showing for such a long run at the Tremont theatre, Boston, and at prices hitherto unheard of for a motion picture production. The Colonial theatre with its usual foresight and at an enormous expense has secured for its patrons the rights for the presentation of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle. Produced at an original cost of over $500,000, with a cast of 18,000 men, women and children and 3000 horses, and requiring over two years to complete "The Birth of a Nation" stands pre-eminent. When this remarkable spectacle is presented at the Colonial theatre it will be produced in the same gorgeous manner that characterized its Boston and New York engagements. The theatre will be decorated to correspond with the exact times that the production represents and a greatly enlarged orchestra of solo musicians will interpret the special music that was written for it.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 17, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the South and a woman of the North. Music accompanies the whole spectacle. The final week.

BOSTON AMERICAN
AUG. 17, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The last week of "The Birth of a Nation" is announced and there is a tremendous rush on the part of those who put off seeing it until the last minute. The picture has broken all records in Boston for number of performances.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 17, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The first day of the seat sale for "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its New Bedford engagement on Monday Aug. 23rd, far exceeded all expectations. The box office which is located in Orpheum theatre office on the second floor was visited by a large number of people. Tickets can also be reserved by telephone, by calling Bell telephone 2970. Box office open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m.

This great offering is of unusual interest to all Americans, for it unites pictorial spectacle, music and effects into a thrilling drama of the Civil War crisis, enlivened with delightful comedy and heightened by two charming love-romances of the Blue and the Gray.

The battle scenes are the greatest ever attempted by any director, the Ku Klux "rides" retain their old potency to stir the blood, whilst it is difficult to keep the feet from dancing to the catchy tunes of fifty years agone. Daily matinees will be given during the entire engagement.

BOSTON RECORD
AUG. 17, 1915

Tremont Theatre

After enjoying a run which, at its conclusion, will have broken all records of the present season in Boston, "The Birth of a Nation" entered yesterday upon its final week at the Tremont Theatre. This most elaborate and wonderful of film plays has been a revelation to all who have seen it, and the audiences sit breathless with interest throughout its three hours of varied entertainment.

From the beginning of the astonishingly successful engagement of this extraordinary play, the Tremont Theatre has been filled to its capacity. There has been no lessening of interest aroused, and now, when the engagement is drawing to a close, it would seem, judging by the crowds at every performance, that everybody is determined to see the wonderful picture at least once again. "The Birth of a Nation" is interpreted by a brilliant cast of film favorites.

BOSTON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
AUG. 18, 1915

AMERICAN THEATER NOTES

"The Birth of a Nation" has extended its run in Boston until Sept. 4. It has now been given in Boston 223 times to a total of 385,000 persons.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 18, 1915

SAW FIRST PRODUCTION

F. D. Rowe Says Modified Photo-Play Is Not Objectionable.

In connection with the protest being made by colored residents of Brockton against presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" week after next at the Hathaway theater, Councilman Fred D. Rowe today said he saw a presentation of the play in New York in its original form when protest was made to Mayor Mitchel against its production there.

The councilman says he was present in city hall in New York when the protest was made and was refused by Mayor Mitchel. He states the presentation there caused little stir. The objectionable features, he says, have been eliminated from the photo-play and, declares its presentation here should not be objectionable, in his opinion.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 18, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO STAY TILL SEPT. 4

Yesterday it was decided to keep "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre two weeks longer, until Saturday, Sept. 4, owing to the extraordinary demand for seats. Sold-out houses have been the rule ever since it was announced that the end of the run was near. The famous photoplay cannot remain beyond Sept. 4, for on the following Monday, Labor day, the new season will open at the Tremont, with "The Song of Songs" as the attraction.

"The Birth of a Nation" will have broken all records for consecutive performances in Boston before it leaves town. Some dramatic productions have stayed longer, but the daily matinee has already brought the total number of presentations up to 224, which equals the record of "Under Cover."

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 18, 1915

FIVE FILMS OF BIRTH OF NATION

Mayor to Have Private View Monday Morning.

The sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation" will commence Thursday morning at 10 at Hathaway's theater, where the engagement begins Monday. A notice in the Boston papers today that the production at the Tremont theater in Boston would be continued until Saturday, Sept. 4, caused many inquiries and doubts concerning the show in Brockton. The demand for the continuance of the picture has been known to the Boston management ever since the termination of the engagement was made known, and operations were put in effect so the show could be continued in Boston and shown to out of town patrons also. Four new films have been made for use in New England outside of Boston and the one which will be produced at Hathaway's theater next week is a totally new one that will be run off in this city for the first time. The new films, of which one will be shown here, are precisely as the picture is portrayed in Boston, with the scenes to which objection was raised eliminated.

The fact the Boston production is continued will not depreciate the merit of the screen to be given here, according to Manager J. J. Cahill, who was interviewed today while he was at the the United Booking office in Boston. Young ladies in the costumes of the civil war period will be in the front of the house and programs will be handed out with a curtesy, as is done in Boston. A leader of the orchestra accompanies the picture and there is a large body of musicians employed. Mr. Cahill said today he would consult the leader of the orchestra in Boston tomorrow and would then communicate with the president of the Musicians' union here, as all Brockton men who are capable of playing the special music composed for this piece will be given a preference in the augmented orchestra. It is expected Mayor Burbank will have a private view of the film Monday morning.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 18, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The second day's sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Orpheum theatre for the week of Aug. 23rd, has been in every way satisfactory. There has been a steady demand for the higher priced seats. The night prices are $1, 75, 50, and 25 cents; the matinee prices are 50, 35 and 25 cents, thereby placing the scale of prices within the reach of everyone. The box office is open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Tickets can also be reserved by Bell telephone, 2790.

The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation" is not a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history. Super-added to history is a delightful love romance of the north and south, whilst the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quite humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. There are said to be no less than 200,000 details in the picture.

BOSTON AMERICAN
AUG. 18, 1915

Extra Fortnight for 'Birth of a Nation'

"The Birth of a Nation" has secured an extra fortnight for its Boston engagement at the Tremont Theatre, and will not be compelled to leave that house next Saturday night, as had been originally intended. It was seen thousands would be disappointed by the closing of the engagement with this week. After negotiations between Boston and New York by long distance telephone, an extra fortnight was arranged for.

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL

"The Birth of a Nation," which is about to depart from the Tremont, will probably be the last $2 picture show Boston will see for many a moon. The new Triangle Company—which includes Griffith, Sennett and Thomas Ince, all brilliant directors—announces that it will have $2 houses [illegible] and Cohan's [illegible]

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 18, 1915

TWO SCENES DELETED FROM "BIRTH OF NATION"

ATLANTIC CITY, [illegible] Negro opposition to certain scenes in the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," showing here at the New Nixon Theatre, has been successful. After conferring today with pastors of the four largest Negro congregations of the resort, Samuel Nixon, lessee of the playhouse, agreed to delete the scene in which "Gus the renegade" drives a white maiden to death and the one in which "Lynch," the Negro Lieutenant-Governor, tries forcibly to marry his benefactor's daughter.

The pastors are understood to have mentioned the lynching of Leo M. Frank at the interview.

"What stronger argument could we have at this time than the terrible thing which happened in Georgia?" said the Rev. E. M. Clark of Jericho Presbyterian Church. "These same people lynch our people in southland on the flimsiest evidence."

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 18, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The second day's sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Orpheum theatre for the week of Aug. 23, has been in every way satisfactory. There has been a steady demand for the higher priced seats. The evening prices are $1, 75, 50 and 25 cents; the matinee prices are 50, 35 and 25 cents, thereby placing the scale of prices within the reach of everyone. The box office is open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Tickets can also be reserved by Bell telephone, 2790.

The filmed spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation" is not a feature in the ordinary sense, but a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history. Super-added to history is a delightful love romance of the north and south, whilst the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quite humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail. There are said to be no less than 200,000 details in the picture.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 18, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Because of the Great Popularity of the Famous Spectacle It Will Remain at the Tremont Until Sept 4.

Nineteen weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre has broken all Summer records of the Boston playhouses, but it has failed to satisfy the demands for seats to witness D. W. Griffith's spectacle of reconstruction days. Announcements that the engagement would end Saturday night brought an avalanche of orders for the remaining performances and it became evident yesterday that only by an extension of the engagement could all the orders be filled. It has been decided, therefore, to extend the run until Saturday, Sept 4.

The two weeks' extension means that all existing records of Boston theatres for consecutive performances and gross receipts will be equaled, if not broken, by the Griffith masterpiece. Considering that "Under Cover," "The Man from Home," "A Pair of Sixes" and other attractions that have enjoyed extended runs were presented during the regular theatrical season, the phenomenal success of "The Birth of a Nation" can be better appreciated. Straight through the Summer the big spectacle has been shown twice daily to large audiences, although the beaches and near by resorts offered strong counter attractions.

Although the attendance figures show that one-half of Boston's entire population has witnessed the spectacle capacity business is expected for the remaining performances. The cities and towns throughout New England are sending many visitors to the Tremont because it is realized that only in a theatre of such size and equipment can this mighty picture-play with its thousands of people and horses be seen at its best. The orchestra, consisting of 40 musicians, will be retained for the rest of the run.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 18, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" ENGAGEMENT IS EXTENDED

The photoplay "The Birth of a Nation" will continue at the Tremont Theatre until Saturday, Sept. 4. The managers planned to remove the Griffith spectacle at the end of the present week, but the continued demand for tickets caused them to extend the engagement into next month. Other plays booked to open Labor Day, Sept. 6, and in the weeks that follow, preclude a further extension of time.

The photoplay had its 224th performance in Boston last night. This surpasses the records of all other theatrical entertainments ever given in the city. More than 385,000 persons have seen the production since it came to the Tremont Theatre.

HAVERHILL (Mass.) GAZETTE
AUG. 18, 1915

FILM IS PROPER.

Mayor Bartlett Sees Birth of a Nation in Boston and Approves

In view of the great amount of talk that has followed the exhibition of the pictures, "The Birth of a Nation," and the criticism which has arisen in some places against the production, Mayor Bartlett went to Boston last Saturday and witnessed the films to see if there should be any reason why the city authorities should object to an exhibition in this city.

One of the local theatres has arranged for the presentation of the pictures Labor day week, and there will be no objection on the part of the chief executive to the pictures being shown.

MANCHESTER (Mass.) BREEZE
AUG. 13, 1915

The "Birth Of a Nation" is a wonderful show, and I sat from 8.10, with 8 minutes intermission, till 10.55. The interest, the enthralled with the wonder of it all, and I pathos and the patriotism came straight at me, and I forgot the theatre, and—myself, and lived through the times of the Civil War. I met Lincoln, Grant and Lee, I went through the Reconstruction Period, I rode with the Klu Klux Klan. I thought their thoughts, I sorrowed with their sorrows, and joyed with them in their joys. With them I cursed the horrible mad hellishness of war, and—forgot that it cost me two dollars and 75 cents, which was not the least wonderful thing either.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 19, 1915

STILL OPPOSES BIRTH OF NATION

Rev. S. D. Turner Sees Photo-Play in Boston.

Rev. S. D. Turner of 476 Crescent street, pastor of the Lincoln Congregational church and one of the leaders of the opposition raised to the presentation in this city of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," witnessed the presentation of this photo-play in Boston Wednesday evening.

While Mr. Turner does not wish to give a lengthy statement at present, he says, after seeing the production he is more opposed than ever to its presentation in this city. Mr. Turner said to The Times today:

"I was far from favorably impressed with 'The Birth of a Nation,' and still feel its presentation never should be allowed in Brockton. When I make this statement I am looking at the question not only from the standpoint of the colored man but from the strictly moral standpoint of man. All people, especially Christian people, it seems to me, should not allow anything that interferes with the moral advancement which we all desire to be given such exploitation in public."

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD
AUG. 19, 1915

All three of the Providence papers where the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" was given on Monday [illegible] in the highest terms of it. All uniting in saying that there is nothing in the picture which should give offense to any race of people, and a great deal that is historical and of the greatest interest. There has been a steady demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Orpheum theatre for the entire week of Aug. 23d. Matinees will be held daily at 2 p. m. for which the prices have been fixed at 50, 35 and 25 cents, while prices for the night performances have been fixed at $1, 75, 50 and 25 cents. The box office will be open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Seats may also be reserved by calling Bell telephone 2790.

LOWELL (Mass.) COUR.-CITIZEN
AUG. 19, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its 19th week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night, but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont—Boston's coolest theatre—until the Saturday before Labor day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18,000 people, 3000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in the smaller New England towns, but it should be borne in mind that only in a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The Symphony orchestra of 40 pieces and the great force of supernumeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont Theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse.

Daily matinees are given at 2.10 and the evening performances begin at 8.10.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 19, 1915

The screen actors in "The Birth of a Nation" are people who have [illegible] such an amount of fame that to mention them is to speak of some one familiar. Mae Marsh is one of the young women who have an important part, and as she meets a tragic death the girlishness of the character that is always attached to her is work that stands out. Henry Walthall, the hero, moves through the scenes with a manly uprightness that one cannot help admiring. Miriam Cooper is a Cameron sister to Mae Marsh and Mr. Walthall in character and Lillian Gish is a northerner and the heroine. She is one of the sweetest girls ever used in a movie and her acting has the charm one might expect. Robert Harron has the part of an irrepressible younger son who dies on the field of battle and one of the most touching incidents is his service with the north, meeting on the field of battle a young friend from the south, and the happy moment he has as he crawls over to the southerner and throws his arms about him before he dies. The much talked of character of Hon. Austin Stoneham is taken by Ralph Lewis.

MAE MARSH

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 19, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Felix Wendelschaefer, manager of the Providence Opera House, has secured for the patrons of that theater, the rights for the first presentation in Providence of D. W. Griffith's gigantic screen spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." This wonderful production has caused more newspaper comment than any other film production ever presented, describing as it does "The Birth of a Nation," of our own nation, and carrying it through the troublesome, hazardous times of the Civil war, and the causes of hostility between the North and South. Founded as it is on the great dramatic story and play, "The Clansman," D. W. Griffiths has taken advantage of the many tense dramatic situations, and has interwoven a beautiful love story between the scenes of war and strife for supremacy.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 19, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," which began its engagement at the Providence Opera house last Monday, and which comes to the Orpheum theatre next Monday, achieved a big success, according to the Evening Bulletin of Tuesday. In its review of the performance, it spoke in part as follows:

"The Birth of a Nation," the photo play presented by D. W. Griffith, which is founded upon the novel, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, is the attraction this week at the Providence Opera house, and there will be widespread interest in its production because of the opposition that has been made to it here and elsewhere by representatives of the colored people. As shown last night the pictures offer nothing in film form which the most sensitive members of the Negro race can reasonably take offense. The pictures were witnessed by the large audience with no exhibition of feeling antagonistic to north or south, white or black, and it is difficult to imagine how any feeling along those lines could be aroused.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
AUG. 19, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Engagement Extended at the Tremont Theatre

So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont until the Saturday before Labor Day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18,000 people, 3,000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in the smaller New England towns but it should be borne in mind that only a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The symphony orchestra of forty pieces and the great force of supernumeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont Theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse.

Daily matinees are given at 2.10 and the evening performances begin at 8.10.

MAY PRESENT "BIRTH OF A NATION" FILM HERE

Recreation Board Has Under Advisability Allowance of the Famous Picture in This City; Adverse Action is not Probable.

Arrangements are being made by the management of one of the local picture houses for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" while the Board of Recreation has under advisability the matter of allowing the presentation, or taking prohibitory action.

The picture play has been the object of contention in several cities, although its presentation has been allowed.

The colored people of Boston raised strong protest against the play here, though it is now being shown at the Tremont Theatre in Boston. The objection was at first to the entire play but it was afterwards modified and play is now presented without the objectionable scene eliminated.

The Recreation Board, or Supt. Hurley have taken no action in the matter as the play has not been definitely listed, and it is not probable that the presentation here will be prohibited.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
AUG. 20, 1915

PROVIDENCE OPERA HOUSE

The remarkable photo-play "The Birth of a Nation" opens with a peaceful picture of the South in the ante-bellum days. Here the love story which runs through the plot is formulated, but is frequently interrupted by the exciting episode incident to the outbreak of the conflict. Then follows a series of pictures showing actual engagements with all the horrors of war. The second half of the photo-play represents the South when it is under the regime of the so-called carpet-baggers and the lawless actions of the colored people who had forgotten the wrongs heaped upon them during the days of slavery. The formation of the Ku-Klux Clan for the protection of the white residents is one of the scenes never to be forgotten. The play opened at the Providence Opera House last Monday and has been playing to capacity audiences. It will be continued indefinitely.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 19, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," which began its engagement at the Providence Opera house last Monday, and which comes to the Orpheum theatre next Monday, achieved a big success, according to the Evening Bulletin of Tuesday. In its review of the performance, it spoke in part as follows:

"The Birth of a Nation," the photo-play presented by D. W. Griffith, which is founded upon the novel, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, is the attraction this week at the Providence Opera house, and there will be widespread interest in its production because of the opposition that has been made to it here and elsewhere by representatives of the colored people. As shown last night the pictures offer nothing in film form with which the most sensitive members of the Negro race can reasonably take offense. The pictures were witnessed by the large audience with no exhibition of feeling antagonistic to north or south, white or black, and it is difficult to imagine how any feeling along those lines could be aroused.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 20, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Ticket Sale Large

The Hathaway Theatre Box Office Is a Busy Place.

Tickets for "The Birth of a Nation," at the Hathaway Theatre went on sale yesterday and the ticket office was one of the busiest spots in Brockton. There was a long line waiting for the box office to open at 10 o'clock, and there was no cessation up to 12:30. The advance sale was for the entire week, and many were sold for the last half of the week as well as for the opening performance on Monday.

Painters have been at work at the theatre for the past week, and will have completed their work before Saturday night. The interior of the theatre has been thoroughly renovated.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 20, 1915

MAYOR APPROVES BIRTH OF NATIO

Sees Film in Boston; Pictu Will Be Shown Here.

"The Birth of a Nation" will [illegible] shown in Brockton. Mayor Burbe today said, after witnessing presen tion of the photo-play at the Trem theater in Boston, that in his opi there is nothing objectionable in scenes depicted. He communic with the management of the Hatha theater a private exhibition of the will not be required by him.

The mayor was present at the n nee presentation in Boston Thur afternoon, and today expressed prise objection should be raised to movie. He believes a large propor of the people of Brockton desire see the play, and declared he does believe a wrong impression will be g ed by the public. He made the foll ing statement:

"Thursday I witnessed a presenta of 'The Birth of a Nation' in Bos I find nothing objectionable in presentation and will permit its duction in Brockton.

"'The Birth of a Nation' has b censored by an official board of sors. The censored presentation met with no apparent objection in city of Boston. Gov. Walsh and legislature raised no objection to censored play. The film will be sho in Brockton as it was shown in B ton. There will be no private exh tion."

ARRANGE FOR ORCHESTRA

The leader of the orchestra has supervision of all the music "The Birth of a Nation," and the sicians who will be employed at ferent cities in New England will in Brockton tonight and will hav conference with the Hathaway thea management and with James C. M len, secretary of the Musicians' un An orchestra of 18 pieces will used, and if there are men there pable of doing the work, they will employed. Mr. Mullen as a bandm and member of City theater orches as well as through his union posit will be be able to advise about th

The management of "The Birth Nation" also furnish one young who is in costume and gives out grams. The company carries ano costume and endeavors to get a young lady to wear it and be the ond program girl. Girl ushers used in Boston and in Providence the latter city for a week's engagem 16 good looking girls were adver for on Sunday and 70 responded day morning.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 24, 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

In the face of the constant demand for seats, the management of "The Birth of a Nation" has again found it necessary to extend the engagement of the most engrossing production of the season. Therefore, instead of departing from the Tremont Theatre last Saturday night, as had been planned, it will continue to absorb the attention of Boston playgoers through this week and next. A fine company of film favorites posed for the characters, including Henry Walthall, Mat Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann, Joseph Henabery and others.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 20, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Although there has been a steady demand for tickets all during the week, the management of the Orpheum theatre desire to impress upon the public the fact that there is still a goodly supply of tickets of all prices to be had for "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Orpheum theatre for the entire week of Aug. 23. Matinees will be held daily at 2 p. m., for which the prices have been fixed at 50, 35 and 25 cents, while prices for the night performances have been fixed at $1, 75, 50 and 25 cents. The box office will be open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Seats may also be reserved by calling Bell telephone 2790.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 20, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Although there has been a steady demand for tickets all during the week, the management of the Orpheum theatre desire to impress upon the public the fact that there is still a goodly supply of tickets of all prices still to be had for "The Birth of a Nation' which comes to the Orpheum theatre for the entire week of Aug. 23. Matinees will be held daily at 2 p. m., for which the prices have been fixed at 50, 35 and 25 cents, while prices for the night performances have been fixed at $1, 75, 50 and 25 cents. The box office will be open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Seats may also be reserved by calling Bell telephone 2790.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 20, 1915

MAYOR DECIDES TO SANCTION IT

Sees Nothing Objectionable in Photoplay, "The Birth of A Nation."

The photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," which has met with much opposition from colored people throughout the country, will be presented at the Hathaway Theatre the week of Aug. 23, Mayor John S. Burbank giving his approval after witnessing the picture Thursday in Boston. Mayor Burbank considered the protests of the colored people and in making his decision stated:

"The Birth of a Nation' has been censored by an official board of censors. The censored presentation met with no apparent objection in Boston. Gov. Walsh and the legislature raised no objection to the production of the censored photoplay. Thursday I witnessed the presentation of it in Boston and I find nothing objectionable in the production and will allow it to be shown here. There will be no necessity for a private exhibition here as the play will appear here in the same form as in Boston."

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 21, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle. The engagement ends September 4.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 21, 1915

Brockton to Permit Film.

BROCKTON, Aug 20—Mayor John S. Burbank today decided to allow the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at a local theatre next week. He received protests from colored people, including Rev S. David Turner of the Lincoln Congregational Church. Mayor Burbank witnessed the play in Boston yesterday.

BOSTON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
AUG. 21, 1915

The Colonial theater in Chicago has been taken over by the Epoch Corporation, which controls "The Birth of a Nation," and will become a [illegible] picture house when that film is transferred there from the Illinois [illegible] 22.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 21, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO STAY TILL SEPT. 4

According to the original intention, tonight should see the finish of the long run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, but, as previously announced, the noted film play will remain two weeks longer. It cannot stay beyond Sept. 4, in all probability, no matter how urgent the public demand may be, for a play from New York is coming to open the new season at the Tremont on Sept. 6.

Since April 10 this stirring photo-play has been the attraction at the Tremont. Twice daily the capacity of the theatre has been tested, as a rule, in every part. The present week has seen the greatest sale of the entire engagement, and even in the terrific heat of last Monday and Tuesday there were no vacant seats. Seats are on sale for all the remaining performances.

[illegible] (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 21, 1915

PHOTO-PLAY MUSIC

Special Arrangements for Birth of Nation Accompaniments.

The director of music for "The Birth of a Nation" came from Providence to this city Friday and had a conference with W. R. Cross, J. J. Cahill and James C. Mullen of the Musicians' union. The music used with this photo-play all was composed for it and is on a grand opera scale in its construction. There are 18 men in the orchestra, exclusive of the leader, and seven of these will be brought from out of the city: A first bass, trumpet, violin, two French horns, clarinets and oboe. Three violins are used altogether. Two clarinets and duplicates of other instruments and the best performers available in Brockton have been secured.

Four of the best musicians who are with the show in Providence this week will accompany the leader to Brockton. A full rehearsal will take place Sunday at 2 at the Hathaway theater. There will be a dress rehearsal behind the scenes also.

Fifteen men are employed on the stage. The company comes with its own electrician and it needs 14 "clearers" to obey his directions, all colors of electric bulbs being used. Musketry, cavalry, infantry, cries of a mob and cries of joy and freedom are among the many sounds that accompany the picture and these outbursts are done with remarkable precision. Miss Beaudette has been engaged [illegible] the second program girl to appear [illegible] costume, the other one being pro[illegible] ed by the management of the pic[illegible]

GIVE HISTORY IN PHOTO-PLAY

Birth of Nation Production Cost $500,000

There is one point worth considering in motion picture plays—the spectator always sees the original cast. In producing "The Birth of a Nation," which is doing a sensational business all over the country, the selection of players was a most trying and serious problem. D. W. Griffith, as the range of players and characters and the work they had to perform covered a multitude of things that could not have been imposed upon ordinary workers in drama or musical comedy.

"The Birth of a Nation" presents the burning of Atlanta, Sherman's march to the sea, victory of the north

GLOUCESTER (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 20, 1915

LOCAL MAN OWNS IN FAMOUS FILM

Joseph Kerr of this city is one of the group of men who have purchased the New England right for the photo-play "The Birth of the Nation," the sensational film that caused such a commotion in Boston for months. Mr. Kerr is proprietor of the National House Furnishing Company of this city, and from him the Times man secured the story.

Associated with Mr. Kerr in the deal by which the much talked of film changed hands, are Coleman Levin, a Boston carpet dealer; William Mann, of the Boston Metallic Bed Company; Mr. Greenblatt, a stationery manufacturer; and Louis B. Mayer, proprietor of a Haverhill theatre.

The group of men above have secured rights of "The Birth of the Nation" for a 10 year period. They will succeed to the exclusive rights to Boston the day following Labor Day and the remainder of New England territory is theirs now. Mr. Kerr states that the syndicate of which he is a member, has already been offered a princely sum for the Boston rights. Men and women of all walks of life have visited the Hub to see this noted picture play and there were many and varing opinions as it its merit.

However, it has drawn crowded houses for months and promises to do sowherever shown. The fact that a Gloucester man becomes part owner of the exclusive rights to the use of the famous film in New England lends particular local interest to the photo-play and he hopes that the films may be shown in this city some time in the future.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
AUG. 21, 1915

Miss Gish, with "The Birth of a Nation" at the Providence Opera House.

POSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 21, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Continues

"The Birth of a Nation" has been refusing to depart from the Tremont Theatre tonight. Ever since April 10 this stirring photo-play had held the stage at this house with unflagging interest. From all over New England playgoers came to Boston, and so many persons had sent on mail orders that could not be filled it was imperative to secure an extension of the engagement, if that could possibly be done. Only two weeks were available, however, and a longer lease of life was out of the question. The date for opening the regular dramatic season at the Tremont was positively booked for Monday, Sept. 6, Labor day. All the many features will be retained for the supplementary fortnight.

POSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 21, 1915

BUSINESS LEAGUE DELEGATES HAVE SAIL AND BANQUET

Through the courtesy of Mayor Curley, several hundred delegates who have been attending the 16th annual convention of the National Negro Business League spent the last day of their visit to Boston as guests of the city. The delegates were taken on a trip around the harbor on the city steamer Monitor. This feature was one of the most pleasing in the program of entertainment that has been offered the delegates, as many of them come from far inland points and have never experienced a ride on the salt water.

After three days spent in long business sessions the 16th convention was brought to a close last night with a banquet and ball at Convention Hall. More than 800 delegates were seated at the banquet board and nearly that number were on the dancing floor. At the close of the business session yesterday afternoon a set of resolutions were submitted to the convention by the committee on resolutions. With the exception of one resolution—that extending the thanks of the convention to Mayor Curley for his courtesy to the delegates—the resolutions were approved. It is understood the reason for the rebuff to the mayor is the attitude he displayed in the recent controversy over the showing of the "Birth of a Nation" photo-play in Boston.

BOSTON AMERICAN
AUG. 22, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" will start upon its extra fortnight in Boston at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow evening and the indications are that the high-water mark for patronage which has been attained in the earlier nights of the engagement, will be continued throughout the remainder of the stay in this city.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO

CLIPPING FROM Standard Times New Bedford Mass

Date 8-22-15

AN APPEAL TO LINCOLN

Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee at Appomattox and reconstruction struggles, with 18,000 people and 3000 horses in action. It includes love and romance of history, battle scenes, the assassination of President Lincoln, the dauntless rides of the Ku-Klux-Klans and a tender domestic drama and charming comedy. "The Birth of a Nation" took two months in the making and cost $500,000.

When "The Birth of a Nation" is at Hathaway's theater next week the audiences will see the same cast as the audiences in New York city, Boston, Providence, San Francisco, Philadelphia and other cities throughout the country for in motion pictures there are no No. 2 companies. The original cast always is seen.

One of the strongest and most touching scenes in the play is the visit of the southern mother to the Capitol at Washington, where she pleads for the life of her soldier son, condemned to be shot to death. President [illegible] refuses, yet thinks soberly and sadly and then recalls the woman and grants her petition.

BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 21, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Although there has been a steady demand for tickets all during the week the management of the Orpheum theatre desire to impress upon the public the fact that there is still a goodly supply of tickets of all prices still to be had for "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Orpheum theatre for the entire week of Aug. 23. Matinees will be held daily at 2 p. m., for which the prices have been fixed at 50, 35 and 25 cents, while prices for the night performances have been fixed at $1, 75, 50 and 25 cents. The box office will be open from 10 a. m. to [illegible] p. m. Seats may also be reserved by calling Bell telephone 2790.

ORPHEUM.

The question of the censorship of "The Birth of a Nation" has been up both in Boston, Chicago and Providence, and in each instance a protest failed to accomplish its purpose.

The superior court decision in Chicago regarding this massive production was as follows: A legal permit for the Chicago production of the play was granted early in the spring by the then mayor, Carter Harrison, and the censor board under his direction. Through political influences or otherwise, this permit was subsequently "revoked" by the new mayor, William Hale Thompson, and Police Chief Healey, immediately following the mayor's election.

Joseph J. McCarthy, general manager of the production, then took the matter to the courts. His prayer for an injunction to restrain Mayor Thompson and Chief Healey from interfering, came before Judge William Fennimore Cooper of the superior court.

Much testimony was given and argument adduced on both sides. The result of the court proceedings was a complete victory for "The Birth of a Nation."

This picture will be shown at the Orpheum theatre twice daily this week, in the afternoon at 2 o'clock, and in the evening at 8. The prices for the afternoon performances are 25, 35 and 50 cents; and for the night performances 25, 50, 75 cents and $1.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the development of America, and its final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world. With history as its background, the writer reared a plot of fundamental dramatic appeal and evolved a story of such prodigal details that its bigness alone astounds you. It is the work of a master dramatist who has a story to tell and sets about creating an epoch with its results. He dramatizes the moving force of vast numbers of people and

WAVERHILL (Mass.) RECORD.
AUG. 22, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" SOON TO BE HERE

For once the press agent has been outdone. In "The Birth of a Nation," gorgeous spectacle of the twentieth century, the press agent finds himself at a loss for words to describe the production even in a minor way. D. W. Griffith is out of the question and the writer must now work his brain overtime in order to do even meagre justice to the subject.

"The Birth of a Nation," soon to come to the Colonial, cannot be exaggerated. It is too tremendous, too gigantic. It is too tremendous, too scenes in that. There are countless [illegible] that tongue or pen cannot [illegible]. Only the eye alone can realize the wonderful progress the motion picture has made in this phenomenal masterpiece. It seems that everything that the brain of man could conceive has been put into this subject. There were 18,000 people used in telling the story, 3000 horses and countless guns, shells, etc, utilized in its massive battle scenes. Two years' time was consumed in its making and the approximate cost has been $500,000.

Imagine a pictorial production of love, romance and history, including tremendous battle scenes the equal of which have never yet been shown upon a screen; imagine such scenes as the Burning of Atlanta, Sherman's March to the Sea, Grant and Lee at Appomattox, the thrilling rides of the Ku Klux Klan, entire cities built up and destroyed by fire, the assassination of Lincoln at Ford's theatre, Washington; wonderful artillery duels in which real shells costing $80 apiece were used, miles and miles of trenches with thousands of fighters; cavalry charges; infantry charges; deeds of heroism on the field of battle; making the hundreds of such mighty scenes—and there you have "The Birth of a Nation," the pinnacle of filmed spectacles.

Is it any wonder that the press agent bows humbly to D. W. Grimth, the mighty producer of this tremendous screen triumph and admits he is unable to faithfully describe this production?

BOSTON POST
AUG. 22, 1915

Tremont Theatre

was good news for the theatregoers ostponement was announced
e last Wednesday that a little ex-time had been secured for "The h of a Nation" at the Tremont e the tomorrow night at that e a supplementary fortnight will entered upon by the photo-play ch has been the talk of all New land ever since last April. Ac-ling to the original intentions, the run of "The Birth of a Nation" ld have closed last night, but as y hundreds who had sent mail or-would have been disappointed, nuous efforts were made to secure extension of the run here, and at they were crowned with success.
was only possible, however, to re an extra fortnight, as the ar-gements were all made and con-cts signed for opening the regula-matic season at the Tremont on bor Day, and thus it will be necesy for "The Birth of a Nation" to e its departure on Saturday, Sept.
"The Birth of a Nation" now takes place at the head of all long runs Boston theatrical history. Being en twice daily, it attains a grand al in a less number of weeks, than er offerings which have only two atinees.
t has been the regulation thing to ve the capacity of the Tremont eatre tested twice daily, and the long e of purchasers of tickets at the x office has been unbroken for hours, owing the great interest of the asses in the entertainment. All the ditional features will be retained for e extra fortnight of the engage-ent in this city, and the high stand-rd which "The Birth of a Nation" has aintained will be continued clear to e finale.

BOSTON POST
AUG. 24, 1915

Tremont Theatre

Although "The Birth of a Nation" has been in Boston since last April, giving two performances daily, the announcement of its approaching departure aroused such emphatic protests from Boston theatregoers that the management deemed it advisable to remain at the Tremont Theatre for two additional weeks. In consequence of which, during this week and next, local playgoers will continue to be thrilled and delighted by the famous Civil war spectacle. This amazing film play is of intense and incessant interest, keeping the audience at a high pitch of excitement from beginning to end. The battle scenes, and those portraying the rioting and depredations of the mobs, are terrifyingly vivid and real, while the romance which pervades the plot is especially charming. Nothing has been omitted from the production which can add to its grip on the emotions of the spectators, and the musical accompaniment is quite in keeping with the incidents exhibited on the screen. The regular dramatic season will open on Labor Day, Sept. 6, with "The Song of Songs."

BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 24, 1915
615

"The Birth of a Nation is giving me domestic as well as official trouble," said City Solicitor Henry E. Woodward yesterday morning as he stood in the outer office of the mayoralty suite in city hall waiting for the conference which Mayor Hathaway was engaged in with the opponents of the play, to end, in order that he might go in to discuss a matter of official business with the chief executive.

"How has it cause any domestic trouble for you?" asked one of the other gentlemen-in-waiting.

"Well, you see," explained the city's legal light, "the number of the telephone at the Orpheum theatre where the "Birth of a Nation" is being played is 2790, and the number of the phone at my home is 2970. There's been a lot of people who wanted to get the theatre who got their numbers mixed or else central got them mixed.

"Anyhow I have answered at least two dozen calls at my home during the past few days and found that the person on the other end of the line wanted the Orpheum and wanted to talk about tickets for the show.

"The number of the telephone at my house has been 2970 since I had it installed, and I suppose the number of the theatre has been 2790 since long before I had a home here to have telephone in, but I never before was troubled on account of confusion with the numbers. I suppose it's because there is so much calling on account of the interest in the "Birth of a Nation." Here I am now held up from seeing the mayor because there is some opposition to the same show which folks who have been calling up my house are so much interested in."

WORCESTER (Mass.) TELEGR
AUG. 24, 1915

MAYOR'S APPROV

Manager ... Wants to Sho
Worcester ... Birth of a Nation
Worcester ... see [illegible] Griff his film, "The birth of a nation," season if Mayor George M. Wright proves of its showing. Frank D. S manager of Worcester theater, c on the mayor for the latter's appr in presenting this great picture
Worcester theater.

"The birth of a nation" has b running for many weeks in Boston is closing a season of seven mon in New York. It is considered by m as the greatest picture ever filmed.

BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 24, 1915
615

MAYOR PUTS O.K. ON BIRTH OF NATIO

SAW PHOTO PLAY LAST NIGHT AT SOUTH EN THEATRE AND FOUND NO GROUND FOR OBJECTION

"The fact that a number of estimabl colored citizens and nine local clergy men who joined with them in a pro test against the production of "The Birth of a Nation" in this city, are sin cere in their belief that the famous photoplay is a libel on the Negro race does not, in the opinion of Mayor Hathaway, make the film an objection able one, and he announced this morn ing that despite the protest registered with him yesterday, when a delegation of 10 engaged him for more than two hours with remonstrance against the play, he will permit the production at the Orpheum theatre to go on.

The mayor attended the performance at the Orpheum theatre last night and he saw nothing in the play, he states, that would warrant him in ordering its presentation discontinued as the remonstrants requested.

He declares that the worst part of the film is no more a reflection on the colored race of today than many productions in vaudeville and minstrel shows to which nobody thinks of objecting and that the men who are opposing the play are "fighting a shadow."

That the film is of great historical value, and is one which many New Bedford citizens desire to see and that it would be holding the city up to ridicule and would do anything but good to the credit of colored people here to prohibit the exhibition of the play is the belief expressed by the mayor in his statement, which follows:

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD
AUG. 22, 1915

PROTEST FILM.

ASS MEETING TODAY IN BETHEL A. M. E. CHURCH

xhibition of "Birth of a Nation" Pictures in New Bedford Opposed by Colored Residents—Plan to Appoint Committee to See Mayor.

A special mass meeting to protest grainst the exhibition in this city this eek of the "Birth of a Nation" pic-ures in the Orpheum has been called Rev. D. Ormond Walker, pastor of he Bethel African Methodist Episcopal hurch. This meeting will be held in he Bethel church this afternoon at :30 o'clock.

The meeting will be opened by an nvocation by the pastor. Introduc-ory remarks will be made by J. D. oates. A paper will then be given y C. D. Hardee and a Haynes Insti-ute paper will be read by William ass, Jr. Oliver Green and H. H. ames will also speak.

Several citizens refused to talk last ight on the proposed mass meeting. ne said, "The pictures were given ltogether too much free advertising y the protests in Boston. We have ecided not to give them any such atisfaction."

It is understood that the meeting ill appoint a committee to voice its rotest against the "Birth of a Na-ion" pictures to Mayor Hathaway nd to ask that he view the show and, f he agrees to forbid them being ex-ibited here.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 24, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" NEARING END OF RUN

Yesterday "The Birth of a Nation" entered the final fortnight of its engagement at the Tremont Theatre. The famous film play cannot remain beyond Sept. 4, as "The Song of Songs" is to come to the Tremont Sept. 6.

The management of the company controlling "The Birth of a Nation" officially announced that the price obtained for the New England rights of D. W. Griffith's play was $75,000. In the contract with the syndicate taking over the rights there are stringent restrictions as to presentation of the play at $2 prices, in first class theatres, and with the accompaniment of large orchestras.

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 13, 1915

"WE DON'T WANT CURLEY," NEGRO LEAGUE HEAD SAYS

In protesting against the invitation extended to Mayor Curley to speak at the National Negro Business League convention today, Archibald H. Grimke of Washington, D. C., declared he believes the majority of the colored people of Boston as well as those in the business league are opposed to the plan. Mr. Grimke is vice-president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and president of the Washington local.

To a Traveler reporter, Mr. Grimke said today: "I wish to enter my protest against the invitation of the league to Mayor Curley to make an address before its members today. This I do because of the mayor's attitude relative to the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," which misrepresents outrageously the history of the country both in respect to the Union side in the war of the rebellion and also in respect to the history of the reconstruction. It is almost incomprehensible to me that a colored organization in Boston or elsewhere should invite a man who permits the exhibition of such a play to make a speech before it.

"I hope the public will not misinterpret such an invitation as having come from the great body of colored people in Boston, for it did not come from them nor do I believe that it represents the sentiment of the great body of the business league itself, but that of a few individuals on the committee who have the organization of meetings for this convention in hand."

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 24, 1915

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Tremont—Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and Ku-Klux Clan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle. The engagement ends Sept.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD

Tremont Theatre

Although "The Birth of a Nation" has been in our midst since last April, giving two performances daily, the announcement of its approaching departure aroused such emphatic protests from Boston theatregoers that the management deemed it advisable to remain at the Tremont Theatre for two additional weeks. In consequence of which, during this week and next, local playgoers will continue to be thrilled and delighted by the famous Civil War spectacle. This amazing film play is of intense and incessant interest, keeping the audiences at a high pitch of excitement from beginning to end. The battle scenes, and the scenes depicting the rioting and depredations of the mobs, are terrifyingly vivid and real, while the romance which pervades the plot is especially

WORCESTER (Mass.) GAZETTE
AUG. 23, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION" HEADED THIS WAY

Frank Shea, manager of the Worcester theatre, had a conference with Mayor George M. Wright this noon to find out whether the Mayor would object to the moving pice show, "The Birth of the Nation," being shown in Worcester.

The Mayor did not give Mr. Shea a decided answer and said he would not see it if he has seen the show. He expects to see it within a week. He has received several protests against the show being put on in Worcester and has some letters commending it. The letters, objecting to it being shown in Worcester with one or two exceptions, came from persons living outside Worcester. The Mayor says if he finds anything objectionable in it he will not allow it to be shown but if it proves as harmless as the theatrical men say it is he sees no reason why it should not be shown here.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 24, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

The Birth of a Nation" will continue to be the attraction at the Tremont theatre this week and next.

The production is picturesque and thrilling, and the outbursts of enthusiastic applause which greet its stirring and dramatic scenes is sufficient indication of the hold it takes on the audiences. The skill of D. W. Griffith has brought with uncanny vividness to the people of the present day scenes of the troublous times of the Civil War, which so nearly succeeded in dividing the Nation. "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's novel, furnishes the plot for the production.

MANCHESTER (N. H.) MIRROR
AUG. 20, 1915

[illegible] which is the reigning fad in New York at the [illegible] and a cake walk.

Tremont Theatre.

So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night, but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont until the Saturday before Labor day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18,000 people, 3000 horses and countless other wonders, being exhibited in the smaller New England towns, but it should be borne in mind that only in a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented.

BOSTON RECORD
AUG. 21, 1915

[illegible] production of Daniel Frohman's

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" had been scheduled to depart from the Tremont Theatre tonight. Ever since April 10 this stirring photo-play had held the stage at this house with unflagging interest, and under normal conditions it would have worn its welcome out with all amusement seekers. However, "The Birth of a Nation" was an unusual offering. It appealed to all classes of theatregoers and the fashionable occupants of the orchestra stalls, and the boys up in the gallery, evinced equal interest in the stirring scenes of the War of the Rebellion and in the vivid pictures of the Reconstruction period where the reckless riders of the Ku Klux Klan showed their furious horsemanship. From all over New England playgoers came to Boston, and so many persons had sent on mail orders that could not be filled, that it was imperative to secure an extension of the engagement if that

PORTSMOUTH (N. H.) CHRONICLE
AUG. 18, 1915

48 Congress St.

BIRTH OF A NATION" TO REMAIN AT TREMONT THEATRE, BOSTON, UNTIL SEPT. 4

So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont—Boston's coolest theatre—until the Saturday before Labor Day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18,000 people, 3,000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in the smaller New England towns, but it should be borne in mind that only in a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The symphony orchestra of forty pieces and the great force of supernumeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont Theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse.

Daily matinees are given at 2:10 and the evening performances begin at 8:10. The scale of prices is: Nights, 25 cents to $2.00; matinees, 25 cents to $1.00. Tickets will be mailed to patrons sending cash with their orders or will be held for them in the box office.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
AUG 21 1915

. . .

Mary's Duke" made a hit here at the Boston and it introduced Mary Fuller and Matt Moore in an especially clever play full of vivacity and types.

. . .

We do not like to realize that there is anyone in the Hub who has not seen "The Birth of a Nation," which I have had the good fortune to see several times, always finding something new and wonderful to fill the eye. The last weeks are announced. A novelty in the way of advertising this picture was put forth the other day when one of the pretty girls of '61, gowned as in the play, went up in an aeroplane and scattered pennants, some of them having free tickets. She was dainty Donna Montran.

BOSTON (Mass.) COURIER
AUG 21 1915

TREMONT THEATRE

So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, September 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont—Boston's coolest theatre until the Saturday before Labor Day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18,000 people, 3 000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in the smaller New England towns but it should be born in mind that only in a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The symphony orchestra of forty pieces and the great force of supernumeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont Theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 21, 1915
113

THE STAGE
AND ITS PEOPLE.

Timely Chat about Plays and Players

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Hathaway Next Week—Arnaut Bros. and Weston at the City Theatre—Striking Picture and Vaudeville at the New Orpheum—Usual Varied Picture Bill at the Globe—Mary Pickford in "Fanchon" at the Colonial—The Keith Bill—Moving Pictures at Highland Park—Park Sunday Band Concert—Stage Gossip.

THE Birth of a Nation," the most talked of picture in the United States, will be shown at the Hathaway Theatre all of next week. The protest made by colored residents to Mayor John S. Burbank to have the picture barred has been overruled. His honor saw the picture in Boston Thursday and has decided that it can be shown here. The film is having a tremendous run in Boston, and has also run for a long time in New York. The photoplay combines a pictorial survey of Civil war history and of reconstruction days with love romances of the north and south. There are said to be 18,000 people and 3000 horses shown, and it is the most spectacular photoplay ever enacted. The picture is a dramatization of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." Its chief incidents are said to be purely historic. The pictures show the burning of Atlanta and Sherman's march to the sea, Lee's surrender, and the assassination of Lincoln. It shows deeds of vengeance by the Ku-Klux Klan, and fast riding by the raiders. As a work of art it is remarkable, and it is said that no less than 200,000 separate details are shown in the picture. It cost more than $500,000 to produce. When the film was first made there were 120,000 feet, but the process of selection and deleting has cut it down until as it stands now it contains 12,000 feet. Henry Walthall stars in the production, ably supported by Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Mae Marsh and others. An 18-piece orchestra will furnish music during the production. Two young ladies will distribute programmes at the entrance as in Boston. There will be two performances daily.

LILLIAN GISH.

A Leading Player in "The Birth of a Nation."

FALL RIVER (Mass.) GLOBE
AUG. 23, 1915

Business College graduates are filling such positions. Enroll early. adv.

STRONG ATTRACTION.

"The Birth of a Nation," easily the most famous picture in the world, is coming to the Savoy next Monday. It is the same production seen in New York and Boston, and all of the effects which lent distinction to the picture there will be included here, it is announced. There will be a symphony orchestra of 26 pieces, while 12 men are employed upon the stage during the presentation of the picture. It serves as a notable and auspicious beginning for the Savoy's new season, which, the management expects, will prove the most successful in the history of the theatre. The policy, following the appearance of the picture, will be either straight vaudeville or vaudeville with feature pictures as was in effect last year.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD

$3 Movies, Now

Wiseacres predicted that $3 motion picture productions would never succeed, but their predictions were falsified by D. W. Griffith's notable "Birth of a Nation" triumph. Now come the Griffith-Ince-Sennett plays which are to be put forth by the Triangle Film Corporation and for which in New York city $3 will be paid for some of the best seats. It is explained that the prices at the Knickerbocker Theatre will be the same as those charged now at the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is playing, except as to the so-called private loges.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 22, 1915

is seen in this play.

Tremont Theatre

The announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" had secured an extension of its time at the Tremont Theatre causes a redoubled interest on the part of the theatregoers of Boston. It was the original intention to close the long engagement last night, but Saturday, Sept. 4, will see the positive farewell at this house. For months this production has been breaking records in Boston theatrical circles. It has been given twice daily ever since April 10. All the features of the elaborate presentation will be given for the [illegible] additional.

HAVERHILL (Mass.) RECORD
AUG. 22, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" SOON TO BE HERE

For once the press agent has been o done. In "The Birth of a Nation," gorgeous spectacle of the twentieth c tury, the press agent finds himself a loss for words to describe the productio even in a minor way. D. W. Griffith h stripped him of his power; exaggeratio is out of the question and the write must now work his brain overtime order to do even meagre justice to h subject.

"The Birth of a Nation," soon to con to the Colonial, cannot be exaggerate It is too tremendous, too gigantic f that. There are countless scenes in that tongue or pen cannot cope wit "Only the eye alone can realize the wo derful progress the motion picture h made in this phenomenal masterpie It seems that everything that the bra of man could conceive has been put i this subject. There were 18,000 peo used in telling the story, 3000 horses a countless guns, shells, etc, utilized in massive battle scenes. Two years' t was consumed in its making and the proximate cost has been $500,000.

Imagine a pictorial production of lo romance and history, including tremen ous battle scenes the equal of wh have never yet been shown upon screen; imagine such scenes as t Burning of Atlanta, Sherman's March the Sea, Grant and Lee at Appomatto the thrilling rides of the Ku Klux Kla entire cities built up and destroyed fire, the assassination of Lincoln Fords theatre, Washington; wonderf artillery duels in which real shells cos $60 apiece were used, miles and mil of trenches with thousands of fighter cavalry charges; infantry charges; deed of heroism on the field of battle; imag ine hundreds of such mighty scenes these and there you have "The Birth a Nation," the pinnacle of filmed specta cles.

Is it any wonder that the press age bows humbly to D. W. Griffith, th mighty producer of this tremendou screen triumph and admits his inability to faithfully describe this massive vis

HAVERHILL (Mass.) RECORD
AUG. 22, 1915

RETURN OF THE TROOPS FROM THE BATTLE, SCENE IN "THE BIRTH O F A NATION."

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
AUG. 26, 1915

314

FF

EVENING HERALD DONATES PRIZES

Public Playground Athletic Contests on North Park This Afternoon to Be Rewarded by Buttons and Medals.

A group of handsome medals and buttons for the winners of the athletic events will be awarded by The Evening Herald this afternoon in the public playground meet at the North park. As in previous years, the youngsters who are taking part in the final playground meet are keenly anxious to secure one of The Herald's trophies, and both spirit and enthusiasm has been added to an already spirited affair.

Mayor Kay and the Board of Park Commissioners will act as judges, Bert A. Reynolds of the Boys' club as starter and conductor. The finals in the various races run off on the other parks last week will be the main part of this afternoon's program, all preliminaries in the track events having been completed. Those eligible for today's finals are the ones who took first and second places in the preliminary events.

AMUSEMENTS

BIG BILL AT BIJOU.

Harry Brooks & Co. in his own character playlet, "The Old Minstrel Man," will be one of the attractions on a remarkable program at Loew's Bijou theatre the last half of the week, beginning with this afternoon's matinee. Mr. Brooks is one of the best known character actors in vaudeville and in his present offering he has exceptional opportunities for the display of the talent that has made him famous.

Eddie Smith and Lea West, clever entertainers in musical comedy bits, are another turn that is certain to find a ready welcome from Fall River theatre-goers. Their act is one of those up-to-the-minute offerings always popular with lovers of mirth and music. The new program also lists one of the most accomplished laugh-getters in vaudeville in John Neff, known as "the brainstorm comedian." Another act on the bill is one that has ever been popular here, as elsewhere, the Kana Trio of sensational Japanese equilibrists and foot-jugglers.

One of the attractions is the Paramount Program feature, "Brother Officers," a production by [illegible] English company. "The Diamond from the Sky" and other film features are included.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Since the announcement yesterday that the Savoy theatre, through the foresight of its managers, Messrs. Shea and Benson, would reopen next Monday with "The Birth of a Nation," a pertinent question has been asked which the management hastens to answer in all good faith. No theatrical production of whatsoever nature has ever had so much publicity—publicity which the magnitude of the production has warranted.

Naturally, then, those who have read so much about the picture as a matter of current news, are asking if this, the production that is coming to Fall River, is the same about which so much has been written. The answer is positively "yes." It is the same production that is at present playing the Liberty theatre, New York city, where it is in its sixth month of continuous run; at the Tremont theatre, Boston, now in its sixth month of continuous run and playing to capacity daily; at the Illinois theatre in Chicago, where it is still selling out three weeks in advance, with a three months' summer run to its credit; at the Davidson theatre in Milwaukee, where it is breaking all records, at Atlantic City, Brighton Beach and San Francisco. This is the great and the only production of "The Birth of a Nation." There are no seconds of this picture.

The theatre will be decorated to correspond with the exact times the picture represents. A greatly enlarged orchestra, including 16 solo musicians, will interpret the music especially written for the picture. "The Birth of a Nation" as it will be presented at the Savoy twice daily beginning next Monday, is positively "The Birth of a Nation" as it was presented in New York and Boston.

MISS MAE MARSH.

TAUNTON (Mass.) HERALD-NEWS
AUG. 23, 1915

barber shops at the city will probably be opened again on Monday afternoon.

BIRTH OF A NATION CANCELLED

The photoplay production of "The Birth of a Nation" which was booked for the Park theatre for all next week, has been cancelled, for the present at least, owing to the great demand for the picture in other of the larger cities. There are but five prints of the picture in service, and through an error of the management of the theatre it was to have been shown here next week, but was cancelled yesterday. The picture will be shown here later in the season, it is expected. Arrangements are now being completed for the opening of the Park theatre season, which will occur a week from Monday. The season will be opened with the Park theatre stock company, which will give a series of the high-class plays during the season.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 23, 1915

A PETTY SLIGHT

In refusing to indorse resolutions thanking the mayor of Boston for courtesies extended them, although availing themselves to the fullest extent of the courtesies, the National Negro Business league took action which will go far toward depriving them of the friendly regard of the citizens of Boston, as well as those of the rest of New England. The reason given for the action was the fact Mayor Curley had allowed the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," to be exhibited in Boston in opposition to the desires of Boston's colored citizens. The convention seems to have overlooked the fact the mayor of Boston contributed to the expense of the National Negro Business league's convention, that he was instrumental in arranging a harbor excursion for the delegation, and that he willingly extended many other courtesies which were not in the direct line of his duties. His reward was a hint to the effect he would be given a disagreeable reception if he addressed the convention according to the original plan of those in charge and, later, the passage of the resolution which deliberately insulted the city of Boston by refusing to extend the customary courtesies to its mayor. Such action was unworthy of the better element among the delegates and showed a petty spirit that should never have been allowed to exhibit itself.

TON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 26, 1915

HERE ONE WEEK ONLY

Birth of Nation Produced Under Most Satisfactory Conditions.

There will be only one week's presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," at Hathaway's theater, as the film in use here is booked for Portland next week. There is no foundation in the report that there are no tickets to be had for the remainder of the engagement here, the management says. There are scores of tickets for afternoon and evening performances, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Every 25 cent seat for the matinees has been sold and most of the 50 cent seats for the evening shows have been taken, there are plenty of 50 cent seats for the afternoon, and plenty of higher priced seats for the evening performances.

Those who have seen the production in Boston and at Hathaway's vigorously assert the picture is clearer and better in this city. The music is given beautifully and the properties are indentical with those which accompany the Boston show. The fact the stage is smaller than at the Tremont theater in Boston is an advantage. The screen for the picture fits better at Hathaway's than on the Boston stage, where the picture appears small, in comparrison with the wide area on all sides of it. It is hardly likely the film will be put on in this part of the country again.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 23, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation" goes into the second week of its run at the Providence Opera House tonight with unabated interest. Its engagement in Boston has been extended until Saturday, Sept. 4, and it is still one of the centres of attraction in New York city where it has been running for many months. It is now released for service in the smaller cities, and New Bedford is one of the first places to secure it. The engagement is for one week beginning with a matinee this afternoon. There will be two performances daily, a matinee at 2 o'clock, and evening performance at 8, for which the prices have been fixed at 50, 35 and 25 cents for matinee and at $1, 75, 50 and 25 cents for evening. The box office will be open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Seats may also be reserved by calling Bell telephone 2790.

CHICAGO (Ill.) TRIBUNE
AUG. 23, 1915

"Birth" to Be Answered

It appears that a lady in the audience is inclined to lift up her scenaroic voice and pop an answer back at "The Birth of a Nation." The lady is Elaine Sterne, who has written many scenarios, and the information of her preparation of a script to be made into a twelve reeler, entitled "Lincoln's Dream," protégéed by the national negro organization, came via one Horace Fuld, with a card bearing a Dramatic Mirror label. The Dramatic Mirror acknowledges him as one of its employés and says he says the tale is true, though it knows nothing about it. The Universal company, which was credited with a contract for the mammoth production, says quite flatly that it has made no such contract.

BOSTON TRAVELER
AUG. 26, 1915

DELAYS MATINEE OWING TO PARADE

The Tremont Theatre management has arranged to defer the matinee of "The Birth of a Nation" until 2:30 this afternoon, so those who have purchased tickets for the performance may witness the military parade before entering the theatre. Because of the crowds which will be on Tremont street, arrangements have been made to have the Avery street and Head place entrances open so that patrons may secure seats without delay.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 23, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

To Be Shown at the Savoy Theater in This City Next Week.

"The Birth of a Nation," easily the most famous moving picture in the world, is coming to the Savoy next Monday. It is the same production seen in New York and Boston, and all of the effects which lent distinction to the picture there will be included here, it is announced. There will be an orchestra of 24 pieces, while 12 men are employed upon the stage during the presentation of the picture.

The picture serves as a notable and auspicious beginning for the Savoy's new season, which, the management expects, will prove the most successful in the history of the theater. The policy, following the appearance of the picture, will be either straight vaudeville, or vaudeville with feature pictures, as was in effect last year.

MAYOR HATHAWAY SEES "BIRTH OF NATION."

Issues Long Explanation of Act in Reply to Protests of Negroes and Others Yesterday—Finds Nothing Objectionable in Picture Here.

Mayor Hathaway will not interfere with the presentation in this city of the moving picture play known as "The Birth of a Nation."

In a long statement, issued at noon today, he expressed his interest in and admiration for the rise of the Negro race since the Civil war, and says that he believes them to be oversensitive in finding anything in "The Birth of a Nation" at which to take offense.

The mayor's statement is as follows:

"I visited the Orpheum theatre last evening in order to get first hand information on this much talked of film. I thought that the only fair way for me to decide the case was to look at the picture myself.

"The first act deals with incidents during the Civil war, and the battle scenes shown in this part are the most realistic and instructive that I have ever seen. There is certainly nothing in this part of the picture which which would tend in the least to arouse race prejudice of any kind.

"The second act deals with the 'reconstruction days' following the war, and one of the principal scenes portrays the assassination of President Lincoln, which is shown in a very spectacular manner. I can see no objection whatever to this part of the picture, but on the other hand, a great deal of historical value.

"The 'negro legislature' scene upon which so much stress was laid by the opponents of the production, seems to me to have been greatly exaggerated in importance. The whole scene is absurd. It is supposed to be absurd, and the fact that it is absurd is no more a reflection on the colored race than is a minstrel show.

"In the portrayal of the character called 'Gus' the most objectionable part has been eliminated.

"The worst parts of the film are no more a reflection on the colored race than many productions on the vaudeville stage to which no one thinks of objecting. There are Italian villains, French villains, Irish villains, or Cockney villains. Absurd scenes are built up with colored characters, with Irish characters, with Hebrew characters, with Chinese characters, with Yankee or Rube characters. You do not hear objections against such scenes from Irish, English, French, Italian, Hebrew, Chinese or Yankee. The colored people, in my estimation, have no more cause for feeling hurt than have the members of any one of these races or nationalities.

"It is furthest from my intention to allow anything which would detract from the great advancement which the colored race is making. I appreciate in the fullest degree all the fine things that the colored people have accomplished. Their progress in the last fifty years has undoubtedly been unparalleled in the history of the human race. We in New Bedford have so many shining examples of the heights to which the men of this race can rise, that we should be loath indeed to tear down in any respect their splendid work. The race which showed its patriotism by furnishing thousands of brave soldiers during both the Civil war and the Spanish-American war, and the heroic records standing to the credit of the various colored regiments, the race which gave us our own particular local hero, Sergeant Carney, has certainly nothing for which to be ashamed.

"To be too punctilious in taking offense at imaginary insults savors too much of a history of which to be ashamed. I think the colored race has everything to be proud of in history, and nothing of which to be ashamed.

"There was a special act of the legislature passed solely on account of this picture, but the board of censors created by the act, when they viewed the picture, approved it in its present form.

"The picture has been shown without interference in Boston, without interference in Providence, and in many of the other large cities.

"It is undoubtedly a great spectacular production. It has great historic value, and there is a desire on the part of a great many citizens of New Bedford to see it.

"I believe it would be holding New Bedford up to ridicule and would do anything but redownd to the credit of the colored people in this city if the picture were barred from showing here. I think the colored gentlemen, and their contemporaries who have seen me in regard to this matter are very sincere in their intentions, and in their belief, but I think that they are fighting a shadow.

"When all is said and done the colored race has accomplished too much and has grown too big to be harmed by such references as are made in this picture to what the race was sixty years ago. I think the people of New Bedford are too well aware of the fine things that the colored people have done, and of the progress they have made, to allow a picture of this sort, portraying events which are supposed to have taken place sixty years ago, to arouse any prejudice against the race at the present day.

"I am therefore going to allow the production to go on."

Barkentine in Distress.

Mobile, Ala., Aug. 24.—The American barkentine Daisy Read, which sailed from Mobile on March 16 has reached Paloma, Argentine, in distress, it was reported here today. The vessel was leaking, all stores were exhausted and Captain Griffin and all the crew were ill when the vessel was towed into port. Captain Mannin Swan of New York is own[er] of the Daisy Read. She carries

HOLYOKE (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
AUG. 24, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL BE SHOWN HERE

PICTURES THAT HAVE CAUSED WIDESPREAD ATTENTION WILL APPEAR AT THE HOLYOKE THEATER EARLY IN SEPTEMBER.

Mayor Woods this morning granted Manager Sage of the Holyoke Theater permission to exhibit "The Birth of a Nation," the picture that has been proclaimed as the most wonderfully constructed and educational film that was ever made. It is in 12 reels and requires about three hours to "reel" it off. "The Birth of a Nation" is still running in New York, where it has been for the last eight months, and in Boston for the past four months. Fifteen thousand dollars alone was expended for advertising one week before this picture was offered to New Yorkers, which alone is proof that "The Birth of a Nation" is the biggest thing that has ever been attempted in the film line.

Holyokers and those who reside in the vicinity can consider themselves very fortunate in securing the opportunity of witnessing this spectacular production for Providence and Worcester will be the only other cities this side of Boston that have permission to use this feature picture.

A few weeks ago an attempt was made to run the picture in Springfield, but, owing to the large number of negroes that reside there Mayor Frank Stacey, fearing that race riots would result, refused to sanction the use of the picture.

"The Birth of a Nation" will appear at the Holyoke Theater the first week in September.

4M (Mass.) ENTERPRISE 863
AUG. 24, 1915

Birth of a Nation.

Will Remain at Tremont Theatre, Boston, until Saturday, September 4. Big Griffith Spectacle Breaks all Summer records of Hub Theatres.

So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont—Boston's coolest theatre—until the Saturday before Labor Day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18,000 people, 3,000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in the smaller New England towns but it should be borne in mind that only in a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The symphony orchestra of forty pieces and the great force of supernumeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse.

Daily matinees are given at 2.'0 and the evening performances begin at 8.10. The scale of prices is: Nights, 25c to $2.00; matinees, 25c to $1.00. Tickets will be mailed to patrons sending cash with their orders or will be held for them in the box office.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
AUG. 24, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The Savoy theatrical season opens next Monday with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation." When it was learned that this great picture had been released for New England outside of Boston, the Savoy management put in a bid for Fall River which has been productive of results. A symphony orchestra of 26 pieces accompanies the famous picture, while 12 men are employed upon the stage in securing the effects. The picture is undoubtedly an auspicious reopening of the Savoy, which the management believes will be the most successful in the theatre's history. Following the picture, straight vaudeville, or vaudeville with feature pictures, as last year, will be the policy.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 24, 1915

BROCKTON SEES BIRTH OF NATION

Film Drama Wonderful Photographic Spectacle.

"The Birth of a Nation," an historical drama in two parts, staged for a moving picture film under the direction of D. W. Griffith and founded upon Thomas Dixon's famous book, "The Clansman," was presented to initial Brockton audiences Monday afternoon and evening at Hathaway's theater. The first matinee drew a good house, but the opening evening performance was attended by a comparatively small audience, due perhaps to the oppressive weather, the fact many were first nighters at other excellent shows, intending later in the week to see, "The Birth of a Nation," or due perhaps to the fact so many saw the Griffith film in Boston. Later in the week it is said, the box office is prepared to hang out the S. R. O. sign because of the heavy demand. Matinee advance sales for the balance of the week are very heavy.

As a moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation" is a peerless photographic spectacle. The effects are remarkable, the acting good, and the music an excellent entertainment. In fact, the music set to the reeling of the film sways the audience into a tensity of interest and adds a grandeur of seeing real life to the portrayals of the various scenes. There is a gasp of restful relief when the first part ends, more than of satisfaction, of relief from the strain. At the finale the audience seemingly "breaths once more." There are bits of the film that portray those human things that roll tears down the cheeks of the auditors and then there are the heavier stirring things so graphically done, that one fairly feels the atmosphere of reality in the wonders of the photographic depiction. It is a peerless thing as a whole.

The incidents are not of things of today, they are of the past; of a season when all men of all ages, creeds, color and races, in this great nation were striving out of the atmosphere that reeked in recent memories of scenes and actions in a great, bloody war. It is a wonderful photographic story of things that were and not of things that are. It is a story in perfect pictures of things that men did a half century ago and not what men today do. It is a story of mob rule in the war scarred south, where level-headedness, hate and love of nation and prejudices mingled. Unquestionably there is opportunity for folks to develop prejudices, especially among that class of people who forget it is a picture and not actual happenings and that is a story out of one man's mind of five decades ago in some sections of the south, and not among, or by, whole peoples of a nation.

The great battle scene, Petersburg, the final effort of Gen. Lee's southern army to vanquish Gen. Grant's federals, is a most striking and tremendous feature. It vibrates and tingles the nerves of the auditor. The near action is wonderful, the perspective of the battlefield struggle simply a stupendous presentation of war horror. The night battling, the exploding bombs, etc., hold the audience breathless. Then there is the wonderful scene around Atlanta, in "Sherman's march to the sea," the burning of a city, a night effect. The audience is silenced in spellbound interest.

The presentations of Abraham Lincoln, staged according to the best history has told us of the world's greatest humanitarian in government of peoples, are pathetically true. In the hearts and minds of American men, women, boys and girls of all creeds and colors, there is today the same strong, tender reverential love for his memory that men and women bore for him in the darker days of his presidential career. The depiction of the Ford theater scene, of the actual act of assassination, stuns the audience. It seems, of all the bits in the wonderful photographic drama, the one thing that to all men and women of whatever creed and race might reasonably be omitted without taking from the value of the production as a whole. It portrays a killing of a president, the most loved one in the history of the United States of America, and as the killing was un-American, the pictured incident is not a patriotic inspiration. It seems almost a needless sacrilege against the memory every American, either native or of alien birth, holds dear. It is startling, pictorially indescribably so. Pandemonium reigned in Ford's theater when Lincoln was shot and the assassin leaped onto the stage with "Sic Semper Tyrannis" hissing from his murderous mouth and even to the less impressionable auditors this scene strikes a moment of half-terror, of an interest wrapt more in awe, than in pleased interest at the marvelous side of the photographic story.

The first part of the show, which ends with the Civil war, has nothing to do with those things to which the colored people in Boston and elsewhere have arisen in protest. "The Reconstruction Period" in the south deals with those things upon which human prejudices have played. This is the second part. The scenes are wonderfully staged, the Ku Klux Clan gatherings, a horse, wonderfully done; all the incidents are swift, sure and photographically unequalled in film production in this country. Each part is a complete attractive film show and the music is superb. The presentation occupies two hours and 45 minutes.

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 24, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

Two large audiences witnessed the first performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Orpheum Theatre yesterday, a production that does not need the particular form of advertising it is receiving, to give it fame. The expense of the production was enormous and it represents the highest development of the application of the cinema to the presentation of a picture play. The production at the Orpheum is given with the attention to detail which has attended the presentation in other cities—programme girls in the hoopskirted dresses of the '60's and men in Union army uniform for ushers, while an orchestra plays the contemporary music of the war time. The scenes in the old mansions of the south in first part are very beautiful and the audience is quickly filled with the spirit of the times a half century ago. Many historic scenes are presented with fidelity, the interior of Ford's theatre having been accurately reproduced for the production, while the surrender of Lee and the meetings of Lincoln's cabinet are amidst surroundings that are accurate in every detail. The battle scenes are the most wonderful ever produced and the riding of the Ku Klux Clan surpasses the spectacle in the Wild West shows. The atmosphere of the piece is wonderfully preserved and the audience was very intent upon the unfolding of the incidents. Whether or not it perverts history or tends to stir race prejudice is a subject that is pretty well exhausted and need not be discussed here. That it is a marvelous picture play cannot be disputed. There will be two productions daily throughout the week.

CLIPPING FROM
CARLISLE (Pa.) Herald
AUG. 25, 1915

◆ ◆ ◆

Allegations to the effect that for political reasons officials of Atlantic City had ordered the closing of the moving-picture film The birth of a Nation, at the New Nixon Theatre were argued before Chancellor Walker today by Emerson L. Richards, counsel for the Esplanade Aumsement Company and the Epoch Producing Corporation owners, respectively, of the theatre and the picture. At the conclusion of the hearing the Chancellon made permanent the injunction restraining the Atlantic City Commission from interfering with the production.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 27, 1915

[illegible] engagements.

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," the photoplay that revolutionized the great motion picture industry and incidentally created more comment than any theatrical attraction for years, comes to the Cumings theatre direct from the Tremont theatre, the week of Sept. 6. "The Birth of a Nation" was the first film to show at $2 as a top price and is still running in New York to capacity business, playing to 18,000 people daily. Chicago comes to nearly that record and Boston has had its theatrical attendance records broken by it. This story o fthe reorganization of the South after the Civil war is a history in itself and in addition to the film, there will be the great effects as accompanied the picture in Boston. Fitchburg is to be one of the few New England cities to see this great picture.

L. RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
AUG. 25, 1915

SAVOY THEATRE TO OPEN WITH "BIRTH OF NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation," that sensational and spectacular, 12-part, Griffith photoplay which has, for one reason or another, been given more publicity than any other theatrical production on record, is coming to the Savoy theatre, Aug. 30, to remain the entire week. It marks the re-opening of that theatre for the fall and winter season under the management of Messrs. Benson and Shea, to whom credit must again be given for a remarkable stroke of theatrical enterprise.

The policy of the Savoy for the coming winter will be one of straight vaudeville with possibly a two-reel feature picture to close the show. It will be essentially a vaudeville show, however, with seven or more acts of Keith vaudeville, changing twice weekly. The firm bond of friendship which last season developed between the Savoy management and the Keith organization, coupled with the loyal support given by the Fall River public in the campaign for more and better vaudeville, makes it possible to offer during the coming season all of the big-time headline attractions at popular prices. It promises to be beyond all question the greatest vaudeville season in Fall River's theatrical season.

It is, then, according to the statement issued by the Savoy management last night, to be a vaudeville season, but in spite of the fact that there was some question as to whether the theatre ought not to open with its avowed policy in full blast the management felt that it was no more than its duty to use its prestige in securing for Fall River the opportunity to witness at home, "The Birth of a Nation," which, more than any other picture ever known, and as much as any theatrical production on record, has attracted the attention of the entire country.

TON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 24, 1915

The Theatres

"The Birth of a Nation" at the A
at City Theatre—Theda Ba Pictured at the New Orph ture Offerings—Mary Pickf
—The Pictures at Highland
With the Hathaway Player

FF

THE much talked of "The Birth of a Nation" was presented at the Hathaway Theatre twice yesterday, and both times to packed audiences. Although the film had occasioned much advance comment, some of it adverse, as it has in every city where it has been shown, there was no demonstration yesterday. The theatre was filled at both performances and the picture which has stirred thousands in other cities made a profound impression. The pictorial story of the days preceding the Civil war, of some of the scenes during that memorable strife, and on through the days of reconstruction, when the new nation arose from the ashes of battlefields and burned cities, is told by this story of Thomas Dixon, revamped from his novel, "The Clansman." The protests of some colored citizens against what they term an injustice to their race was what drew many curious persons to the theatre.

As a picture "The Birth of a Nation" is remarkable. All agreed as to that, and that the plot was powerful, and the climaxes admirably arranged. "The Birth of a Nation" may have in it, some people think, grounds for criticism, but its effectiveness as a great spectacle cannot be denied. The battle scenes, the burning of Atlanta, the scenes in Piedmont, the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, the arising and night riding of the Ku-Klux Klan, are among the striking features of the film.

An orchestra of 18 pieces played the effective incidental music during the presentation of the film. Miss Elisabeth Churchill and Miss Florence Ford, attired in costumes of the days of the Civil war, distributed programmes to the patrons as they passed into the theatre. The young ladies perform similar duties in every city in which the film is shown.

W BEDFORD (Mass.) MERCURY
AUG. 24, 1915

MAYOR'S COMMITTEE LIKES THE SHOW

Ministers Unite in a Protest Against "The Birth of a Nation."

The mayor was yesterday morning visited by members of the Negro race, representatives of the New Bedford Ministerial union and Federation of Churches, and others, to voice their protest to the presentation in the Orpheum Theatre this week of the moving picture show, "The Birth of a Nation." A committee appointed by Mayor Hathaway late Saturday night, when he learned that there was developing opposition to the presentation of the pictures here, reported just before 10 o'clock, their report being favorable to the pictures.

Those who oppose the picture were represented by Butler R. Wilson, a colored attorney of Boston. They spent the morning with Mayor Hathaway and were: Rev. D. O. Walker, pastor of the Bethel A. M. E. church; Rev. Dennis Scott of Zion church; I. C. Dade, J. R. Barreau, E. B. Jourdain, William C. Parker, Frank G. Munsey, Rev. F. E. Ramsdell, Rev. W. S. MacIntire, Rev. John Mason, D. D., Dr. Nelson, and T. F. Cunniff, who left early.

The committee appointed by Mayor Hathaway to see the pictures included the following: Clarence H. Bartlett, Charles E. Davis, Clifford B. Terry, L. Rodman Doane, Thomas R. Marsh, William Stitt, and Lieutenant Geoffrey Bartlett, nephew of Clarence H. Bartlett.

Mr. Bartlett's report to the mayor was substantially as follows: "As a spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation' is one of the finest things which is being produced today, and will, I believe, educate and instruct those who see it, and give a clear idea of the history of the country at the time of the Civil war. The colored people should have no feeling against the picture, because it shows such a very flattering advancement of the Negro race since the war." Mr. Bartlett also saw the pictures when they were presented in Boston. The committee reported that the part which proved particularly offensive to the Negroes in Boston is not shown here, and that objections to the show on those grounds are therefore not well founded.

Mr. MacIntire, acting for the Federation of Churches, at a protest meeting at 10 15 o'clock, presented the following letter, signed by himself:

"The exhibition of 'The Birth of a Nation' in any community will brutalize the people by scenes of wholesale human slaughter. It will leave the impression on the minds of those who see it that the very best specimen of the Negro is a betrayer of his best friends and a rapist, creating strong race prejudice against him. It contains the virus of moral degenerates."

Nearly all of the protestants against the pictures saw the motion picture in the Orpheum Theatre on Sunday afternoon by invitation of the manager, Mr. Lefebvre.

Mr. Wilson's argument against the picture consisted largely of reading a series of affidavits from public men, which characterized the play as false history and of evil influence. He called the mayor's attention to the fact that "The Birth of a Nation," as he alleged, has not been passed by the National Board of Censorship. Among the affidavits he read were the following: Ralph Cobleigh, editor of the Congregationalist, Dr. Jacques Loeb, of the Rockefeller institute, "I am shocked at the attempt to present the colored race as a fiendish, moral pervert."

He read the affidavit of Dr. Stephen S. Wise, of the Free Synagogue, New York, who calls the play "a grave and intolerable insult;" of Moorfield Storey, who says, "it tends to corrupt public morals"; of Albert Pillsbury, ex-attorney general, "It is a pack of pictured lies"; J. Mott Hallowell, "It is the assassination of a race"; Samuel W. McCall, "It is against public policy and unhistorical"; George Foster Peabody, of New York, "The effect of the presentation in New York is to develop much expression of prejudice against the Negro and I know it is not justified"; Dr. Frederick C. Howe, formerly president o the national board of censorship, "It is sure to lead to serious race riots"; Charles S. Mac Farland, general secretary of the Federated Churches of the United States, "It is deeply offensive to decency"; President E. T. Ware, of Atlanta University, Ga., "It is a sugar coating for black poison"; Booker T. Washington, "The play is fundamentally wrong."

He then read the affidavit of President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot of Harvard, "It is a perversion of history"; and of Dr. Samuel W. Crowthers, "It turns history the other side to and is a slander upon the Negro race"; Judge Philip Rubenstein, of the juvenile court of Boston, "The effect of the play upon the children is that of horror as well as antagonism to the Negro race"; and also read statements of Miss Adelen Moffat, a southern woman now living in Boston; resolutions of the Federated Churches of Greater Boston, of the Association of New England Teachers of English, and of the Boston Congregational ministers, all condemning the play.

Mr. Jourdain said:

"Most of this committee saw the demonstration yesterday. Not one commendable Negro character is shown in the entire production. There is one slide, it is true, setting forth something about the progress of the Negroes since the war, but this is not a part of the play.

"The play itself shows the Negro to be unutterably and unredeemably bad; it shows Negro soldiers to be riotous and rapists; it presents white officers of the north during the war as scalawags, and grossly insults those brave men who gave their lives for the Union in the early sixties.

"The play, furthermore, is a deification of the Ku-Klux-Klan and the damnation of the Negro. It attempts to reverse by the alchemy of the moving picture the verdict found by the United States courts that the Ku-Klux-Klan were law-breakers and murderers, and presents as typical of the race the lowest and worst of the race."

The protestants told the mayor that they clearly understood the dilemma he is in, when Mr. Hathaway, after courteously listening to all the speakers, said, "Gentlemen, you don't know the difficulty I am in."

The property rights of the theatre were discussed by Mr. Parker and Mr. Jourdain. It seems that the theatre will forfeit $2400, if it is forbidden to give the play.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 28, 1915

...y of Music, Monday.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The splendid advance sale of tickets at the Savoy for "The Birth of a Nation," already assures the management that the presentation of the production here is going to prove a great success, and that the Fall River public appreciates its showing here while it is still in tremendous demand in the largest cities all over the country.

Every show production is a gamble. What one may like in theatricals or pictures, another may scorn. There are always some who will criticise a production. The effort on the part of producers is to get the thing that will please the greater number of people. It was to such an effort that David H. Griffiths staked his entire fortune, a matter of some $500,000, and his reputation. If "The Birth of a Nation" had not been a success, Mr. Griffiths would have been a ruined man. It must be a satisfaction to such a man when the ever-growing tally of people who have admired his genius has reached five millions.

Yet the gamble is not over. Tremendous publicity has been given "The Birth of a Nation" for more than a year now, and with the presentation of the picture in each separate town, there always arises the question as to whether so much publicity has not grown monotonous, whether or not the people of that particular town, although they have not seen the picture, will not think that they are going to something not quite up-to-date and turn their attention to some more recent production,event though it be less notable. Such has not proven the case in Fall River. A bigger advance sale could not be desired.

NEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 27, 1915

Birth of a Nation,

Will Remain at Tremont Theatre, Boston, until Saturday, September 4. Big Griffith Spectacle Breaks all Summer records of Hub Theatres.

So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont—Boston's coolest theatre—until the Saturday before Labor Day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18 000 people, 3,000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in the smaller New England towns but it should be borne in mind that only in a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The symphony orchestra of forty pieces and the great force of supernumeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont Theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse.

Daily matinees are given at 2.'0 and the evening performances begin at 8.10. The scale of prices is: Nights, 25c to $2.00; matinees, 25c to $1.00. Tickets will be mailed to patrons sending cash with their orders or will be held for them in the box office.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 25, 1915

FAMOUS FILM COMING

Savoy Theater To Reopen With "The Birth of a Nation" Next Monday.

"The Birth of a Nation," that sensational and spectacular, 12-part Griffith photoplay which has probably been given more publicity than any other theatrical production on record, is coming to the Savoy theater for the week of Aug. 30. It marks the re-opening of that theater for the fall and winter season under the management of Messrs. Benson and Shea, to whom credit must again be given for a remarkable stroke of theatrical enterprise.

It was not mere chance that enables the Savoy to offer "The Birth of a Nation" to the Fall River public. As long ago as last winter, when the picture was to be seen in Boston of all the New England cities, the Savoy management made every effort to secure the picture. The request was carefully considered, but it was then deemed wise by the owners of the picture, to restrict the number of releases. It was agreed, however, that just as soon as it was released, the Savoy should have first bid for it. So it happened, that when the picture was recently released, the Savoy was notified, and thus offers it as its first attraction with the reopening of the theater.

There are surely but few who read the daily papers who are ignorant of the amount of attention which has been devoted to the production in Boston during the past season. And it is reckoned that five million people have seen it in the various large cities in which it has been shown. From these cities, where the price was invariably two dollars a head, have come reports from infallible authorities, which, while admitting that the wonder of the picture can be only half hinted at, still extol it to the skies.

The mere figures involved in the production are themselves somewhat suggestive of the grandeur of it. Mr. D. W. Griffith, whose master hand directed the production, took more than 200,000 feet of film from which he eventually selected the 12,000 feet which constitute the picture as it was eventually presented. More than 18,000 people were engaged in visualizing the remarkable story, and more than 3,000 horses were employed by the reckless riders who participate in its thrilling scenes. During its presentation, too, 18 men are actually engaged behind the scenes producing the effects required for its perfect realism. The cost was $500,000.

Sixteen musicians are also employed to accompany the production, but herein members fail to signify the peculiar significance of the music to this picture, for "The Birth of a Nation" has achieved a closer adjustment of music to pictures than was heretofore thought feasible. The average motion picture scene lasts from four to 15 seconds, and that there are several thousand such scenes in a 12-real play, would indicate the task that confronted Mr. Griffith when he conceived the idea of adapting the music scene by scene as music is adapted to words in grand opera. But with the assistance of his musical director, Joseph Carl Frid, they provided each character with a musical theme or motif, preparing a provisional score during the actual picture taking, and after the camera had completed its work, the provisional score was amplified and syncronized. The immense labor of fitting the music to the scenes and "flashes," each with its bit of appropriate music, may be imagined. But it was characteristic of the completeness with which Mr. Griffith went about immortalizing the subject matter of "The Clansman," from which the picture is drawn.

Concerning that story, as it has generally impressed critics who have seen it visualized, the following comment of the Providence Journal on Tuesday, Aug. 17, is timely:

"As history the picture sets forth the north right concerning some phases of the activities in the South in carpet bagging days after the war. Historically, too, the play reconstructs for the visual eye some of the scenes of 50 years ago. The surrender of Lee at Appomatox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta move upon the screen as they never moved in print. And in so far as they surpass the written word, they justify the producer who declared after it had been assembled, that he had tried to do something different.

Nor are the war spectacles the only impressive spectacular features. Two of the most wonderful pictures ever shown upon the screen are Lincoln signing the first call for volunteers and the surrender of Lee. The assassination of the President is shown in full detail, and as the climax came in the great historical episode a gasp could be heard to run through the audience."

The critic then comments upon the wonderful plight of the Ku-Klux Klan and their invasion of the black's domain, concluding: "Briefly summed up, the picture as a whole is tremendous, the story is gripping, the photography superb, the support of the star, Mr. Walthall, excellent, the detail perfect and scenery splendid."

"TWIN BEDS."

BROOKLINE (Mass.) CHRONICLE
AUG. 28, 1915

Tremont Theatre.

The extended engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre continues to draw large and enthusiastic audiences to this play house. The Civil War pictures are the most notable ever presented here, both for their beauty and for their historic interest. Among the motion-picture actors who posed for the films are: Henry Walthall, Mat Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann and Joseph Henabery.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) GLOBE
AUG. 25, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION," NEXT WEEK AT SAVOY.

"The Birth of a Nation," that sensational and spectacular 12-part Griffith photoplay which has for one reason or another, been given more publicity than any other theatrical production on record, is coming to the Savoy theatre Aug. 30, to remain one week. It marks the re-opening of that theatre for the fall and winter season under the management of Messrs. Benach and Shea, to whom credit must again be given for a remarkable stroke of theatrical enterprise.

The policy of the Savoy for the coming winter will be one of straight vaudeville with possibly a two-reel feature picture to close the show. It will be essentially a vaudeville show however, with seven or more acts of Keith vaudeville, changing twice weekly. The firm bond of friendship which last season developed between the Savoy management and the Keith organization, coupled with the loyal support given by the Fall River public in the campaign for more and better vaudeville, makes it possible to offer during the coming season all of the big-time headline attractions at popular prices. It promises to be beyond all question the greatest vaudeville season in Fall River's theatrical season.

It is, then, according to the statement issued by the Savoy management last night, to be a vaudeville season, but in spite of the fact that there was some question as to whether the theatre ought not to open with its avowed policy in full blast, the management felt that it was no more than its duty to use its prestige in securing for Fall River the opportunity to witness at home "The Birth of a Nation," which, more than any other picture ever known, and as much as any theatrical production on record, has attracted the attention of the entire country.

It is not mere chance that enables the Savoy to offer "The Birth of a Nation" to the Fall River public. As long ago as last winter, when the picture was to be seen in Boston alone of all the New England cities, the Savoy management made every effort to secure the picture. The request was carefully considered, but it was then deemed wise by the owners of the picture to restrict the number of releases. It was agreed, however, that just as soon as it was released the Savoy should have first bid for it. So it happened that when the picture was recently released the Savoy was notified and thus offers it as its first attraction with the reopening of the theatre.

There are surely but few who read the daily papers who are ignorant of the amount of attention which has been devoted to the production in Boston during the past season. And it is reckoned that five million people have seen it in the various large cities in which it has been shown. From those cities, where the price was invariably $2 a head, have come reports from infallible authorities which, while admitting that the wonder of the picture can be only half hinted at, still extol it to the skies.

The mere figures involved in the production are themselves somewhat suggestive of the grandeur of it. D. W. Griffith, whose master hand directed the production, took more than 200,000 feet of film, from which he eventually selected the 12,000 feet which constitute the picture as it was eventually presented. More than 18,000 people were engaged in the remarkable story, and more than 3000 horses were employed by the reckless riders who participate in its thrilling scenes. During its presentation, too, 18 men are actually engaged behind the scenes producing the effects required for it perfect realism. The cost was $500,000.

Sixteen musicians are also employed to accompany the production, but herein numbers fail to signify the peculiar significance of the music to this picture, for "The Birth of a Nation" has achieved a closer adjustment of music to pictures than was heretofore thought feasible. The average motion picture lasts from four to 15 seconds, and that there are several thousand such scenes in a 12-reel play would indicate the task that confronted Mr. Griffith when he conceived the idea of adapting the music scene by scene as music is adapted to words in grand opera. But with the assistance of his musical director, Joseph Carl Briel, they provided each character with a musical theme or motif, preparing a provisional score during the actual picture taking, and after the camera had completed its work the provisional score was amplified and synchronized. The immense labor of fitting the music to the scenes and "flashes," each with its bit of appropriate music, may be imagined, but it was characteristic of the completeness with which Mr. Griffith went about immortalizing the subject matter of "The Clansman," from which the picture is drawn.

Concerning that story, as it has generally impressed critics who have seen it visualized, the following comment of the Providence Journal on Tuesday, Aug. 17, is timely:

"As history, the picture sets the North right concerning some phases of the activities in the South in carpet-bagging days after the war. Historically, too, the plays reconstructs for the visual eye some of the scenes of 50 years ago. The surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta move upon the screen as they never moved in print, and in so far as they surpass the written word, they justify the producer who declared, after it had been assembled, that he had tried to do something different. Nor are the war spectacles the only impressive spectacular features. Two of the most wonderful pictures ever shown upon the screen are Lincoln signing the first call for volunteers and the surrender of Lee. The assassination of the president is shown in full detail, and as the climax came in the great historical episode a gasp could be heard to run through the audience."

The critic then comments upon the wonderful riding of the Klu Klux Klan and their invasion of the black's domain, concluding: "Briefly summed up, the picture as a whole is tremendous, the story is gripping, the photography superb, the support of the star, Miss Walthall, excellent, the detail perfect and scenery splendid."

LILLIAN GISH, APPEARING IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE SAVOY ALL NEXT WEEK.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 27, 1915

Amusements.

IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Donald Crispo as General Grant and Edward Gage as General Lee, at the Savoy Theater, Next Week.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Seats for "The Birth of a Nation," with which the Savoy theater reopens Monday, were placed on sale this morning, and the line of people waiting for first pick already indicates the vast local interest that is being taken in the production. What those people learned at the box office window this morning it is only fair to inform those who have not yet ordered their seats, for it was evident that many were laboring under a misapprehension.

The announcement stating that the prices of seats for the evening were from 25 cents to $2 has led many to believe that all of the orchestra seats were to be sold at $2 each. As a matter of fact there are but 77 seats at $2, and all the other orchestra seats are on sle at one dollar. The $2 seats are located in the very center of the house and are naturally the choicest seats from which to view the great picture. But the seats in front, at the sides and in the rear, many of which regular subscribers preferred last season, are but one dollar. The only seats priced at $1.50 are in the boxes.

The afternoon prices, varying from one dollar to 25 cents, apply in the same manner. There are only 77 seats at one dollar, the bulk of orchestra seats being reserved at 75 cents, while there are many fine 50 and 25 cent seats in the baleony. In no theater, heretofore, has it been possible to see "The Birth of a Nation" to such good advantage at less than the top price.

BOSTON TRAVELER

AUG 28 19

Tremont Theatre

The end has come for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, and notwithstanding the great interest which has been aroused by this powerful photo-play there can be no possible prolongation of the stay at this theatre. Ever since last April "The Birth of a Nation" has held the stage at the Tremont. Next Saturday night the local stage will see "The Birth of a Nation" for the last time.

STONEHAM (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 23, 1915

Birth of a Nation.

Will Remain at Tremont Theatre, Boston, until Saturday, September 4. Big Griffith Spectacle Breaks all Summer records of Hub Theatres.

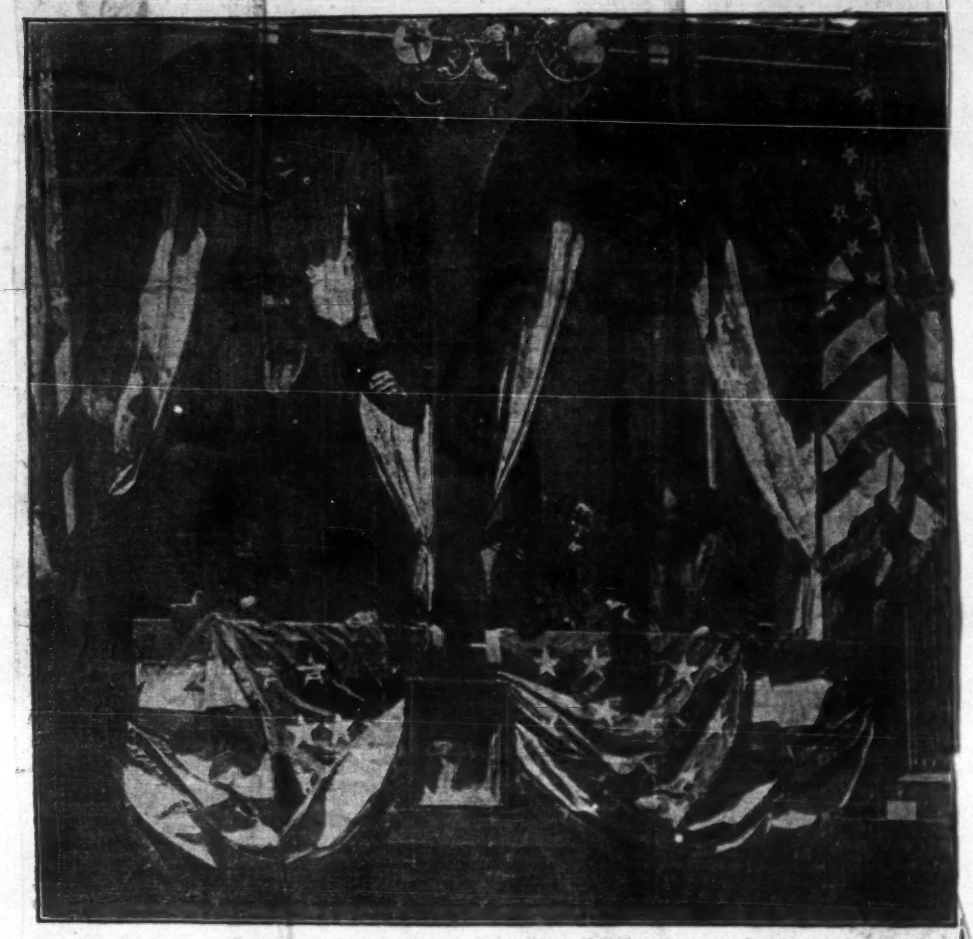
So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont—Boston's coolest theatre—until the Saturday before Labor Day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction.

Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18 people, 3,000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in smaller New England towns. It should be borne in mind that no a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The symphony orchestra of forty pieces and the great force of supernumeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont Theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse.

Daily matinees are given at 2.'0 and the evening performances begin at 8.10. The scale of prices is: Nights, 25c to $2.00; matinees, 25c to $1.00. Tickets will be mailed to patrons sending cash with their orders or will be held for them in the box office.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) GLOBE
AUG. 27, 1915

AT THE THEATRES



SCENE OF THE ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN,

IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT SAVOY ALL NEXT WEEK.

Seats for "The Birth of a Nation," with which the Savoy theatre reopens Monday, were placed on sale this morning, and the line of people waiting for first pick indicated the vast local interest that is being taken in the production. What those people learned at the box office window this morning it is only fair to inform those who have not yet ordered their seats, for it was evident that many were laboring under a misapprehension.

The announcement stating that the prices of seats for the evening were from 25 cents to $2 has led many to believe that all of the orchestra seats were to be sold at $2 each. As a matter of fact, there are but 77 seats at $2 and all the other orchestra seats are on sale at $1. The $2 seats are located in the very center of the house and are naturally the choicest seats from which to view the great picture. But the seats in front, at the sides and in the rear, many of which regular subscribers preferred last season, are but $1. The only seats priced at $1.50 are in the boxes.

The afternoon prices, varying from $1 to 25 cents, apply in the same manner. There are only 77 seats at $1, the bulk of the orchestra seats being reserved at 75 cents, while there are many fine 50 and 25-cent seats in the balcony. In no theatre, heretofore, has it been possible to see "The Birth of a Nation" to such good advantage at less than the top price. To secure those seats, however, it is advisable to reserve them early.

For out-of-town patrons the matinee bathing resort as the background. A marvelous invention in the form of a perfume, a mere whiff of which makes everybody hilarious, keeps the story moving gaily along by getting people concerned into trouble and out of it again. When troubles get too threatening, somebody only has to wave a handkerchief saturated with the magic perfume and everybody breaks instantly into song and dance and laughter. A richly-gowned and pretty chorus adds to the festivities.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 29, 1915

Last Week of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont

One week is all that remains for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, and next Saturday night the stay of this remarkable photo play will come to a termination. The success of the production was so notable that it was decided to secure an extension of the stay in this city. But two weeks additional were all that could be obtained, as it was arranged that the new dramatic year at the theatre should open on Labor Day.

The interest in the great motion-picture play is as great as it has been at any time since it first came to this city. Since last April "The Birth of a Nation" has been presented twice a day at the Tremont and thus the total of performances eclipses any record for musical or dramatic presentation ever seen upon the Boston stage.

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 28, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HAS ONE WEEK MORE

"The Birth of a Nation" ends the last week but one of its stay at the Tremont Theatre tonight, and the arrangements are such that it will be absolutely impossible to secure any prolongation whatever of the run of this notable photoplay beyond next Saturday night.

The cast of characters in this spectacular Civil War film embraces several of the foremost photo players, such as Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Mary Alden.

Seats are on sale for all the remaining presentations.

OSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD

AUG 29 1915

Tremont Theatre

Positively the last week of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont. The film will start tomorrow evening. Ever since last April this remarkable photo-play has held the stage at this house without the slightest diminution in popular favor. The pictures of the civil war have appealed to lovers of the vivid and dramatic in photo-plays. Seats are now on sale at the box office for all remaining performances.

BEDFORD (Mass.) STANDARD
AUG. 28, 1915

drawn against the account of France to the specified amount in the currency of its own land.—Editor Standard.

"The Birth of a Nation."

To the Editor of The Standard:

After viewing "The Birth of a Nation" at the Orpheum theatre I feel moved to publish the following as an open letter to D. W. Griffith. I hope that you will allow me space in your paper.

Mr. D. W. Griffith,

Dear Sir:—

I think it unfair to eleven million citizens of the United States to allow your "Birth of a Nation" to pass without due criticism. You attempt to delude your patrons by claiming a crusade against war and a desire to teach "historical facts." To the intelligent and analytical mind there can be but two motives in your undertaking; to exploit the theatre-going public and stir up race hatred. If you do not intend humiliating a race of men but do intend teaching "historical facts," why do you choose Thomas Dixon's "Clansman" for the purpose? By what process of human reasoning do you conclude that an elaborate production of the "Clansman" will prevent war? These are questions which engage the attention of well-meaning Americans. Thomas Dixon's "historical facts," if there are any, never produced anything good or reflected credit on the author.

In presenting your "Thomas Dixon, alias Historical Facts" you merely mention slavery. You show a jolly crowd of well dressed slaves picking cotton and dancing to entertain their master and his company. You depict slavery as an institution which once existed, purposely omitting all accompanying horrors. Why do you, in your mad desire to teach "historical facts," omit the auction block where shrieking babes were torn from the breast of mothers, and mothers knocked down for protesting? Why do you omit the snatching of fathers from wives and children, brothers from sisters, to be sold "down-river" to the highest bidder? Last, but not least, why do you omit the scene where virtuous Negro girls were flogged to death because they preferred death to degradation?

With all the ingenuity of the professional agitator, you make your audience fall in line with your "White South." You make them believe that the "White South" was as innocent as a child's smile. Their hearts were so pure that evil deeds could find no resting place. The Negroes, slaves of only yesterday, are characterized as a huge drunken monster, knowing nothing but cruel aggression of their former kind-hearted (?) masters. Here you both elicit sympathy for your "White South" and stir up the bitterest possible feelings against your "Black South" for all time. The curse of it all is that you were slick enough to put it in motion pictures, thereby teaching white youths lessons which will postpone amicable relations between the races for at least one hundred years.

With your usual skill you present Gus the renegade and a white maiden for the purpose of comparing the races and preparing your audience for what is to follow. You strengthen your foothold by presenting a one-sided romance between the purest of white girls and a Negro politician-gentleman-crook. In linking your rape-and-murder scene with the attempted force marriage, you make women scream with horror and men swear eternal vengeance on a race of men for crimes that were never committed. You kindle a flame which God-fearing Americans have been trying to extinguish for generations. You forever rivet race hatred in the minds of doubtful spectators. Yet you attempt to delude the people by saying you are trying to "prevent war" and teach "historical facts." Sir, you undoubtedly shut both eyes, turned your back, dipped your pen in blood drawn from the heart of a reptile, and penned these words on the darkest and stormiest night of the year.

In keeping up your delusion, you show the Ku Klux Klan in all its glory. Of course no evil deeds were ever committed by this God-sent (?) band of men. Their mission was to drive the "Black South" and carpet-baggers out of power. These deliverers of men were to raise their land high above all selfish and mundane things, make it a land overflowing with milk and honey, where every bird is a songster and the wicked cease to worry. Do not beguile yourself into any beliefs of success in this treacherous attempt. Any one acquainted with the facts in the case knows that the Ku Klux Klan perpetrated cruelties on innocent Negroes far beyond the possibility of description.

In the end, you make the "White South" triumph over the "Black South." Right triumphs over wrong. You attempt to ease the pain of Negro spectators by showing pictures of progress made at Hampton Institute. Bear in mind the fact that the Negro race is not for sale. If it were you couldn't buy it for that price.

The time has come when Tillman, Dixon, Vardaman and you, D. W. Griffith, the "Enlightening," must choose other methods for political and financial advancement. You can no longer receive silk-glove applause by blackening justice in the grave. The material progress of the Negro race in the south stands as an unanswerable argument to you and your kind. In referring to the whites as a superior race, you show either an ignorance of history or a brazen opinion. In either case it is not worthy of the consideration of an intelligent people. God in his infinite wisdom has placed the various people on the earth for a definite purpose. No adventurer has, as yet, been able to defeat it. Public and racial progress are rapidly driving such schemers as you into oblivion. In the natural course of events you will pass out of the memory of men as completely as the fabric of a vision. On your day of departure to the land of no return reason will smile, while evil grumbles at the loss of her dear loved and faithful servant.

Respectfully,

Chas. R. Humbert, [illegible] D.

2 Union street, New Bedford.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
AUG. 23, 1915

...and herald the supper table laden with

BIRTH OF A NATION

Famous Photoplay Founded on "The Clansman To Be Shown at the Cummings Labor Day Week'

"The birth of a nation" is coming to the Cummings theater for the entire week of Sept. 6 opening with a matinee performance on Labor day. That means the most wonderful production ever brought to Fitchburg is to be seen at prices that will be less than half charged in Boston, New York and Chicago. This wonderful production has caused unusual newspaper talk as well as special magazine articles and comments. It is founded on the powerful story of "The clansman," but D. W. Griffith has taken advantage of the many tense dramatic situations and interwoven a beautiful love story. "The birth of a nation" needs no introduction to theater goers the world over. It has been witnessed by thousands of people and no doubt hundreds are eagerly waiting for its first production in Fitchburg.

LILLIAN GASH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

It cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to produce, it has a cast of 18,000 men, women and children as well as 3000 horses and required over two years to complete. It stands in a class by itself. It has played over six months in New York, and six months at the Tremont theater in Boston. It will be presented exactly the same as in Boston. A special stage setting will be installed, there will be an enlarged orchestra, special costumed ushers and other things which will make "The birth of a nation" an event to be remembered.

"The birth of a nati... mas-sive that the manage... no hesitation in booking it ... entire week. The advance s... tickets begins on Wednesday an... fish-ing favored seats would ... se-cure them at once.

CLIPPING FROM ...
Date ...
1914-15 Amusements

INTERESTING characterization of Gen. Robert E. Lee in "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its second week at the Orpheum theatre tomorrow.

CLIPPING FROM ...
Date ...
1914-15 Amusements

ORPHEUM

In order to meet the unprecedented demand for seats, it has been decided to put "The Birth of a Nation" on for a second week. New Bedford people have shown their great willingness to pay as high as a dollar for a moving picture show. This is the first time in the history of the city that a motion picture has been run for two weeks. The best record heretofore made has been one week, made by "The Traffic in Souls."

There have been very few lines of business that have shown such a wonderful development in so short a time as the motion picture show. Ten years ago any sort of an old store fitted up with two or three hundred seats was deemed sufficient for a motion picture exhibition, and the price was fixed at five and ten cents. Now it is by no means an uncommon thing to find pictures housed in first class theatres and playing at any price from 25 cents to $2 and doing an enormous business.

Manager Lefebre has shown great confidence in the New Bedford public by booking the biggest feature yet produced for two weeks at his house at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1 at night, and 25 cents to 50 cents in the afternoon. Not only that but only one city in the whole of New England outside of Boston has seen this picture ahead of the New Bedford public. It began in Providence just one week earlier. In Brockton it was shown simultaneously with New Bedford. Tomorrow night the picture will go on exhibition in both Fall River and Portland, Me. So that New Bedford played very close to the front rank in the exhibition of the picture.

The prices for the second week will remain the same as the preceding week—$1, 75, 50 and 25 cents for the night performances and 50, 35 and 25 cents for the afternoons. There will be two performances daily, afternoons at 2:10 and evenings at 8 o'clock. Seats are going very rapidly, and it behooves those who desire choice seats to make their application as early in the week as possible. The box office is open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. and tickets can be ordered in person or by calling Bell 'phone 2790. This is positively the only theatre in this city at which this picture will be exhibited at any time.

BOSTON POST
AUG. 29, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" has been breaking all sorts of records at the Tremont Theatre ever since this stirring photo-play first came to town last April and there is no question whatever but that the same condition might prevail for a long time, but an imperative finale must come next Saturday night. The photo-play is in a class by itself. It is a production in which heart interest predominates and the touching episodes of the drama are witnessed with the greatest interest by all amusement seekers, while the spectacular elements are so great that they command instant attention.

SCENE OF THE ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT KEITH'S NEXT WEEK.

TLAND (Me.) ARGUS
AUG. 28, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION COST HALF A MILLION COMES KEITH'S MONDAY

"The Birth of a Nation" the biggest moving picture play the world ever saw will be thrown on the screen at the B. F. Keith Theatre next week for the first time east of Boston.

There were over 120,000 feet of film when the cameras finished their work in the West and South, but the process of selection, which plays such a telling part in these productions, has reduced this to 12,000 feet. The spectacle as it now stands takes about two and three-quarter hours to present.

The production cost $500,000 and the first presentation was given in Los Angeles, since which the production has been shown in New York City, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Seattle, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Atlantic City, Princeton, Beach and Long Branch and a long run and playing to the house capacity at each performance.

This remarkable photoplay opens with a peaceful picture of the south in the ante-bellum days. Here the story which runs through the plot is formulated, but is frequently interrupted by the exciting episode incident to the outbreak of the conflict. Then follows a series of pictures showing actual engagements with all the horrors of war graphically vivid and is accompanied by the sounds of cannonading and the shouts of combatants.

The surrender of General Robert E. Lee to General U. S. Grant at Appomattox Court House is a brief but interesting incident, and then comes a singularly life-like picture of the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theatre, Washington, the night of April 14, 1865. This, it is said is the only photographic reproduction of the national tragedy ever given and has been arranged with much attention to detail, taken from the most reliable records available.

The second half of the photoplay, represents the South when it is under the regime of the so-called carpet-baggers and the lawless actions of the colored people who had not forgotten the wrongs heaped upon them during the days of slavery. The formation of the Ku-Klux Klan for the protection of the white residents is one of the scenes never to be forgotten and receives prolonged applause wherever it is shown, and a number of the scenes shown are even more thrilling and realistic than the actual pictures.

The music which was written expressly for the production is interpreted by an enlarged orchestra of solo musicians and assists, in fact, puts the finishing touch to a performance that is in a class by itself, "par excellence." The scale of prices will be found in the ad.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
AUG. 30, 1915

AMUSEMENTS

What the Press Agents Say About Various Theatrical and Moving Picture Attractions

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Cumings.

The seat sale for "The birth of a nation," which will be presented at the Cumings theater, all next week, opens at the box office on Wednesday morning. This is D. W. Griffin's original mighty spectacle which has created the sensation of the age in New York and Boston. It required a cast of 18,000 people and 3000 horses and is said to have cost $500,000 to make. It required eight months time and is the first and only play of the kind to be presented at regular Broadway legitimate prices. It will be presented at the Cumings at half the price of admission charged in Boston although the wonderful play will be exactly the same as at the Tremont theater where is closes on next Saturday night.

Fitchburg is the first city in New England to see "The birth of a nation" after the Boston engagement. The orchestra will be enlarged, there will be specially costumed attendants and hundreds of incidental features that are seen in no other attraction. It is a dramatic triumph dwarfing all records. See the decisive battles of the Civil War, Sherman's march to the sea, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln, the rise of the Ku Klux Klan, and the coming of the prince of peace.

BROCKTON (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 30, 1915

in this city, and is a nephew of tonio Pelosi, the real estate dealer.

GO AWAY WITH FILM

Colberg Is at Fall River and Hathaway at Portland, Me.

Brockton musicians, who filled special engagements in the augmented orchestra at the Hathaway theater last week during the production of "The Birth of a Nation," were warmly praised by William F. Krauth, the leader and director of music for the production throughout New England. Mr. Krauth directed the orchestra at Hathaway's until Thursday, after which he turned over the baton to Robert F. Colberg and watched and listened to the performance from the back of the house. He claimed that Mr. Colberg took hold of the cues and played the music with unusual facility and could do the work as well as he could.

Negotiations were opened and the result was Mr. Colberg went to Fall River Sunday and will be director of the orchestra there while "The Birth of a Nation" is on. It is expected the production will be kept there for several weeks. Walter H. Damon, the bassoon player, was another musician who received special notice from Mr. Krauth, who offered him attractive money to go with him to Portland, Me., where the same film that was used here was started today. It is believed this picture play will have a lengthy run in Portland as the entire state of Maine will be covered from there. Mr. Damon finished the week at Hathaway's and went to Portland Sunday.

At Hathaway's Saturday matinee and evening the entire house was sold out.

TCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
AUG. 31, 1915

AMUSEMENTS

What the Press Agents Say About Various Theatrical and Moving Picture Attractions

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Cumings.

New theatrical attractions seen i this city has had the vast amount o advertising that has marked the his tory of "The birth of a nation," th wonderful spectacle which will be pre sented at the Cumings theater all nex week commencing with a Labor da matinee. Produced in New York severa months ago in a leading Broadwa theater at the highest prices ever ask ed for such an attraction, "The birt of a nation" immediately sprung int such popular favor that it is still bein presented to crowded houses.

The same thing is true in Bosto where its engagement at the Tremon theater has twice been extended. Th story is so wonderful, the incident so important, realistic, pathetic an epoch making that every person whether a regular theater goer or no is deeply impressed and amazed at th magnitude of the production. D. W Griffith, the man who is responsibl for the production, labored f eigh months in making the attraction al though years were spent previous t that in planning, outlining and pre paring for the actual work of produc ion. About 18,000 people were used i the various scenes while 3000 horse appear. The cost of the production has been placed at $500,000.

"The birth of a nation" deals with the United States previous to, during and after the Civil war. While that war is the foundation for the production it is only part of the attraction as there is a wonderful love story running through the entire production as well as various incidents and details which give a realistic and natural touch to the development of the main theme. The production is said to be historically correct. Entire regiments were secured to portray the battle scenes which were presented on such an immense scale that the director had to issue his commands by telephone. Tickets for the production go on sale Wednesday morning at 9 a. m.

BOSTON POST

AUG 31 1915

timuou.

Tremont Theatre

The old phrase, "the survival of the fittest" is exemplified in the case of "The Birth of a Nation," now in its last week at the Tremont Theatre. This extraordinary film play has the longest run of the season to its credit, and for a good reason. Seldom is such a wealth of genuine interest and entertainment crowded into one performance as is provided in D. W. Griffith's highly popular spectacle. "The Birth of a Nation" is the last word in moving productions. Its pictorial story of Civil war times progresses, in a spirited and exciting fashion, from peaceful views of Southern life, through the hardships of the war and of the reconstruction period, to a triumphant ending. In the achievement of the latter result, the celebrated Ku Klux Klan bears a conspicuous and picturesque part. The painful realism of the battle scenes, and of the lawlessness and rioting which resulted from the war, produces the highest pitch of excitement in the audiences—an excitement which is heightened by extremely emotional and appropriate music. It is all so real that, to the spectators, it seems as if they were actually living in those by-gone days of strife.

BOSTON HERALD
AUG. 31, 1915

BOSTON JOURNAL
AUG. 31, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation" yesterday began its final week at the Tremont Theatre. Notwithstanding its record-breaking run, the famous film play's popularity is as great as ever. Each performance yesterday found the Tremont Theatre thronged with enthusiastic spectators, to whom the exciting story and realistic scenes of the sensationally successful play made their usual emotional appeal. There are daily matinees. Among the film favorites appearing in this big photo-spectacle are Lillian Gish, Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Mary Alden and Miriam

TREMONT THEATRE

Yesterday's performances of "The Birth of a Nation" marked the beginning of the famous photo-play's farewell week at the Tremont Theatre. D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle commands instant attention, and spectators cannot fail to be impressed by its realistic pictures of the South during the civil war and the reconstruction period. The part the Ku Klux Klan played at this time is shown in many highly exciting scenes.

"The Song of Songs" will open the regular dramatic season Monday, Labor day, with Irene Fenwick as the heroine and Thomas A. Wise in a leading character. The sale of seats for the engagement will open at the box office next Thursday morning.

RIDE OF THE KU-KLUX KLAN IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

PORTLAND (Me.) TELEGRAM
AUG. 29, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT KEITH'S THIS WEEK.

Beginning Monday and running one week only, there will be thrown on the screen at the B. F. Keith Theater, the most remarkable photo play in the world, The Birth of a Nation. This play has been shown in a majority of the largest cities from coast to coast and at prices that are ordinarily charged for seats to a high class dramatic production or stellar musical comedy has drawn packed houses constantly.

A person who has never seen this film story of our own Country can't begin to realize what a wonderful thing it is. The action starts in the South just before war times, and carries us through the stirring scenes of the Civil War including such world famous incidents of history as the surrender of Lee, and the assassination of Lincoln. It hardly seems possible that real battles of the Rebellion and real characters of history can be so faithfully depicted, as this remarkable picture, but the faithfulness to detail is such that many old soldiers of the North and many Southerners have been astounded to see the reproductions of scenes which they themselves have actually witnessed.

There is a special orchestra which will be augmented by the regular Keith orchestra, for music forms no small part of the inspiration of this big picture, and also helps to make the impression created of realism much stronger.

By examining the price scale of seats in this issue it will be found that orchestra as well as balcony seats are to be obtained at a very reasonable figure considering the magnitude of the attraction.

With the approach of half a century after the actual scenes of the Civil War, this highest development of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flight it brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the Nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art, to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past that we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right.

The dramatic form has often been employed by the greatest minds of the world to express underlined truths and as regards the usages and the sufferings of war, no pen has been able to make as impressive a picture as Griffith has encompassed in this masterpiece. A born realist he cuts into the quick of facts that he may establish his dramatic plot. He has not been concerned with factions of propaganda but with the unerring view of the master of the new art he has made his impress upon our times in a way which is startlingly original and a force to be reckoned with in the future. He masses great armies upon a historic plane to reproduce the records of a mighty struggle and by the human interests of two families makes a great nation's efforts a topic of a dramatic construction which appeals to the heart and the sympathies as no bald narrative of facts could hope to do. To attain these results he employs the passions, the loves and the conflict of essential drama. He writes history by flashes of lightning and with it all has built up a spectacle that thrills the human soul, brings tears to the eyes mingles pathos with laughter, and above all else, does something fine upon the most tremendous scale that was ever undertaken by a dramatist in the world's history.

It is well worth while and when one has seen it, it is easy to understand why it has created such a stir.—Advertisement.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT

AUG 31 1915

view and Path[illegible] Travel Series found out a particularly strong and pleasing three-hour programme.

Tremont—The Birth of a Nation

Ever since last April "The Birth of a Nation" has held the stage at the Tremont, but the end is now in sight, as this is the last week here. Everybody has talked about "The Birth of a Nation" since it first came to Boston and it will go down in history as having aroused the greatest controversy known to the Boston stage. It is splendidly staged, and the characters in the story are spiritedly portrayed by an excellent cast. Henry Walthall, as the dashing "little Colonel," Mae Marsh, as the elfish Flora Cameron, and Lillian Gish who, as Elsie Stoneman, is the centre of a romance, are all players who [illegible] the audience. Others in the cast are Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann, and Joseph Henabery.

LL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 30, 1915

Amusements.

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

ADVANCE SALE IS LARGE.

"The Birth of a Nation" Opens at Savoy Theater To-Day.

The tremendous advance sale for "The Birth of a Nation," with which the Savoy re-opens to-day, indicates that the great spectacle is about to enjoy a "run" in this city unsurpassed in any one of the big cities where it has been shown. Thomas B. Spry, of the American Feature Film Co., which controls this particular production, and David Dow, its travelling manager, arrived in town Saturday, and together started the rehearsals for its production here.

Mr. Spry, who has seen the picture all through no less than 27 times, while he has witnessed many of its scenes countless times, was no less an interested spectator at this rehearsal than the veriest stranger. "It is fascinating to me," said Mr. Spry. "I find something new every time I see it. And, do you know, I sometimes believe the scenes vary from time to time. It is, of course, a trick of the imagination, but it even seems to me that the actors at different times vary their interpretations, so that I find myself saying, 'Ah' that is better than before,' or 'You are not quite up to snuff to-day.' It is, I suppose, a matter of matter of my varying mood, but 'The Birth of a Nation,' of the thousands of pictures I have seen and handled, has for me an appeal more personal than any play I have ever seen."

After a single view of "The Birth of a Nation" it is not difficult to appreciate the sentiment of a man constantly associted with it. Truly such such a vast spectacle, such a tremendously personal historical romance, must become more than an obsession to one who is permitted constant companionship with it. Mr. Spry, who is as sensitive to the slightest fault in the picture as the musician is to a faulty instrument, yesterday declared to the Savoy managers that he truly believed the picture had never been given under more favorable circumstances.

"The music is excellent," he said after the rehearsal. The house is specially adapted to the picture. The throw is neither too short nor too long. You might say to your patrons that this picture as run here is identical with the picture shown in Boston, except that the film is newer and in better condition, and that it retains still one of the big scenes which were cut out of the picture in Boston."

Messrs. Spry and Dow were critical observers throughout the rehearsals. Robert Coldberg, the famous Boston orchestra leader, was no less insistent upon the perfect execution of the remarkable music which accompanies the spectacle. "It would not only be poor business, but an absolute injustice to Mr. Griffiths who risked his health and his fortune in this production, if we were to permit this picture to degenerate one iota in its presentation," explained Mr. Spry. "It will be as near perfect as I can make it every time it is produced, where there are 10,000 or only ten people in the house."

"There will be at least 1,500 here Monday night," he was assured.

"So much the better. I am glad indeed. But what I say stands. If it takes the last cent I possess, 'The Birth of a Nation' shall never be allowed to become a second-rate production. I am an old picture man. This is the greatest picture the world ever saw. It is more than a business proposition to me. I thank God that I was permitted to be associated with it in my lifetime."

FALL RIVER (Mass.) GLOBE
AUG. 30, 1915

AT T

GREAT PICTURE AT SAVOY

"The Birth of a Nation" Opens a Week's Engagement Today.

The Savoy re-opens today with "The Birth of a Nation." The tremendous advance sale already registered assures the management that the production is about to experience as remarkable a run as it has had in any of the cities where it has been shown, which means that it will have the greatest run and cause the greatest sensation of any picture ever shown here. For "TheBirth of a Nation," is the greatest picture in the world.

In writing of the picture the other day, the writer intimated that "The Birth of a Nation," which has received the greatest amount of publicity ever accorded a theatrical production, might possibly suffer therefrom; that people having read of it so often might get to thinking of it as some freak production concerning which the papers were pleased to make news, rather than as a great historical spectacle with a personal appeal, an educational value, an enlightening message a tender romance and a tense drama. But today the writer has no such fear. For he has seen the picture. He was present at one of the rehearsals.

"Rehearsals for a picture?" you ask. Most certainly, yes. For this picture. Six rehearsals, hours long, has "The Birth of a Nation" had in the Savoy preparatory to its presentation today. In the first place, there has been the orchestra rehearsals. Robert Coldberg, one of Boston's noted leaders, has been carefully training the 16 musicians who tonight accompany the presentation of the great spectacle. For "The Birth of a Nation" is famous as a musical spectacle alone. The score is quite as elaborate as that of an opera. Each of the principal characters is provided with a musical theme which runs throughout the picture. Every scene has its special musical effects, every situation its particular musical atmosphere.

Then the rehearsals for the 18 men back stage who provide the "effects." These are men as carefuly trained to their work as any actor. To one side of the screen, concealed in unique stage arrangement, sits a man at a little electric switch board, and by the flashing of tiny electric lights he gives the cues to his different assistants. One little light flashes. It is the cavalry charge. Another, they are meeting with resistance, and the shots begin to sound. Now several lights; the engagement is general and all the turmoil of battle is heard. Another flash; the cheers of victory mingle with the despairing cries of the vanquished.

And rehearsals, too, for the four expert operators who in the booth up in the balcony are unwinding the story of "The Birth of a Nation" with the nicest skill. Delicate mechanism it is that they are manipulating, as sensitive in the producing as in the taking, and none but specialists are entrusted with this responsible work. It would be easy to undo the efforts which cost D. W. Griffiths weeks of mental strain and hundreds of thousands of dollars by a moment's carelessness up there in that booth. And, yet, how much can be added by slowing down here, quickening the speed there and keeping everything in tune to the subject all the time.

LILLIAN GISH, IN
"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" need fear neither too much nor too little publicity. It lives on its great merit because no one has ever seen it has anything but praise for it, because anything one may say in praise of it is inadequate. One cannot exaggerate about it. If there were but a hundred people to see it tonight—there will be 1500—but suppose it were only a hundred, the word they carry out would pack the house tomorrow.

Thomas B. Spry of the American Feature Film Co. was personally present to see that all was well, and he with David Dow, the traveling manager of the picture, pronounced conditions perfect. "I have seen it 27 times," said Mr. Spry, "and I find something new every time. Conditions here are perfect. Please tell your patrons that it is the full production, including some [illegible] that were cut in Boston."

FITCHBURG (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 30, 1915

Original Cast In "Birth Of a Nation"

LILLIAN GISH, In "BIRTH OF A NATION."

There is one point worth considering in motion picture-plays—you always get the original cast. In producing "The Birth of a Nation," which is at present doing sensational business all over the country, the selection of players must have been a most trying and serious problem for Mr. Griffith, as the range of players and characters and the work they had to perform covered a multitude of things that could not have been imposed upon ordinary workers in drama or musical comedy.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the greatest sensational success in stage annuals of the world, for the first time in history of art you see the great historical conflicts pass before you, the burning of Atlanta, Sherman's march to the sea. Victory of the North, General Grant and General Lee at Appomattox, reconstruction struggles, 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in action, the pinnacle of film spectacles, love and romance of history, tremendous battle scenes, the assassination of President Lincoln, the dauntless rides of the Ku-Klux Klans and a tender domestic drama and charming comedy. "The Birth of a Nation" took 2 months in the making and cost $500,000.

When "The Birth of a Nation" is shown at the Cumings theatre all next week, commencing Monday afternoon, the audiences of Fitchburg will see the same cast as the audiences in New York City, Boston, Providence, San Francisco, Philadelphia and other cities throughout the country for in motion pictures there are no number two companies, you always see the original cast. Tickets go on sale Wednesday morning and intending patrons will be pleased to know the price of admission is half charged in Boston, New York and other places. It will be shown twice daily.

FOMINSTER (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 30, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic portrature introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18,000 people visualizing the story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 3000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world, dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains, and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is unfolded.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the developments of America and its final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world.

With history as its background reared a plot of fundamental dramatic appeal and evolved a story of such prodigal details that its bigness alone astounds you. It is the work of a master dramatist who has a story to tell and sets about creating an epoch with its results. He dramatizes the moving force of vast numbers of people and as his means of expression is the camera of the highly developed motion picture art he is not confined by any of the narrow limitations which have heretofore hindered stage spectacles.

Given his story and the people, Griffith has secured startling results. His mammoth canvas often reveals battlefields covering an area of a dozen square miles and by following historical details he reproduces the stern battle effects as they actually took place half a century ago.

In all the expanse of scene and action he never loses sight of his basic story and the smallest detail becomes as astonishing a part of the narrative as the largest incident in it. The completeness and the wonder of the work make it unusual.

The premier production of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Cumings theater, Fitchburg, will take place on Labor day, Sept. 6, and will continue every afternoon and evening for the week. Tickets go on sale Sept. 1.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 26, 1915

Theatre Performance Delayed.

Owing to the parade this afternoon the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre will not begin until 2:30, at which time it is believed the parade will have passed the theatre, but if not, the entrances from Avery st and Head pl may be used.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
AUG

Tremont: The Birth of a Nation.

Ever since last April "The Birth of a Nation" has held the stage at the Tremont, but the end is now in sight. Next week it will be given for the last times here. Everybody has talked about "The Birth of a Nation" since it first came to Boston and it will go down in history as having aroused the greatest con[illegible] known

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
AUG. 30, 1915

3

AMUSEMENTS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Greatest Picture in World to Be Shown at Savoy Tonight.

The Savoy reopens today with "The Birth of a Nation." The tremendous advance sale already registered assures the management that the production is about to experience as remarkable a run as it has experienced in any of the cities where it has been shown, which means that it will have the greatest run and cause the greatest sensation of any picture ever shown herefor "The Birth of a Nation" is the greatest picture in the world.

In referring to the picture the other day, the writer intimated that "The Birth of a Nation," which has received the greatest amount of publicity ever accorded a theatrical production, might possibly suffer therefrom; that people having read of it so often might get to thinking of it as some freak production concerning which the papers were pleased to make news, rather than as a great historical spectacle with a personal appeal, an educational value, an enlightening message, a tender romance and a tense drama. But today, the writer has no such fear, he has seen the picture and was present at one of the rehearsals.

"Rehearsals for a picture?" you ask. Most certainly, yes. For this picture. Six rehearsals, hours long, has "The Birth of a Nation" had in the Savoy preparatory to its presentation today. In the first place, there have been the orchestra rehearsals. Robert Coldberg, one of Boston's noted leaders, has been carefully training the 16 musicians who tonight accompany the presentation of the great spectacle. For "The Birth of a Nation" is famous as a musical spectacle alone. The score is quite as elaborate as that of an opera. Each of the principal characters is provided with a musical theme which runs throughout the picture. Every scene has its especial musical effects, every situation its particular musical atmosphere.

Then the rehearsals for the 13 men back stage who provide the "effects." These are men as carefully trained to their work as any actor. To one side of the screen, concealed in the unique stage arrangement, sits a man at a little electric switch board, and by the flashing of tiny electric lights he gives the cues to his different assistants. One little light flashes. It is the cavalry charge. Another, they are meeting with resistance, and the shots begin to sound. Now several lights; the engagement is general and all the turmoil of battle is heard. Another flash and the cheers of victory mingle with the despairing cries of the vanquished.

And rehearsals, too, for the four expert operators who in the booth up in the balcony are unwinding the story of "The Birth of a Nation" with the nicest skill. Delicate mechanism it is which they are manipulating, as sensitive in the producing as in the taking of pictures, and none but specialists are entrusted with this responsible work. It would be easy to undo the efforts, which cost D. W. Griffiths weeks of mental strain and hundreds of thousands of dollars, by a moment's carelessness up there in that booth. And, yet, how much can be added by keeping down here, quickening the speed there; and keeping everything in tune to the subject all the time.

"The Birth of a Nation" need fear neither too much nor too little publicity. It lives on its great merit, because no one who has ever seen it has anything but praise for it, because anything one may say in praise of it is inadequate. One cannot exaggerate about it.

Thomas B. Spry of the American Feature Film Co. was personally present to see that all was well, and he with David Dow, the travelling manager of the picture, pronounced conditions perfect. "I have seen it 27 times," said Mr. Spry, "and I find something new every time. Conditions here are perfect. Please tell your patrons that it is the full production, including even some features that were omitted in Boston."

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
SEPT. 1, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A woman who had met and known President Lincoln attended a performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Orpheum theatre last night, and commented not only on the striking resemblance of the impersonator of the president, but also on the excellent likeness of the three, Secretary Seward, Stanton and Chase. The moment that the character of Stoneman, the radical leader, appeared on the screen, she exclaimed that it was remarkably like President Johnson, as she had seen him in person.

There will be two performances every day during the remainder of the week, at 2:10 and 8 o'clock. The prices are 50, 35 and 25 cents for matinees, and $1, 75, 50 and 25 cents for evening performances. The box office is open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Seats may also be reserved by calling Bell telephone 2790.

Patrons are urged to remember that

BEDFORD (Mass.) TIMES
AUG. 31, 1915

615

OLD MUSICIAN HEADS ORCHESTRA AT ORPHEUM

Score of "The Birth of a Nation" a Treat for Music Lovers

The coming of "The Birth of a Nation" has brought to New Bedford the first musical director connected with a moving picture show, and in fact, the second one that has been sent out in New England at the head of a show of this kind. Heretofore, the music arranged for a moving picture show has been simply left in the hands of the house director, who picks out such music as he thinks will approximate the action of the picture. This is necessarily a rather crude way of handling the matter, but it is the best that can be done under the circumstances, for the picture as a general thing only runs two or three days in a place and there is no time to arrange music especially for the purpose. By the time such arrangement could be made the picture has gone and another one taken its place.

In this instance the music was arranged by competent musicians before the show started out, and a splendid piece of work was done. One advantage of having simply a piano player and a drummer was that the pianist was left free to play any music that happened to strike his fancy. Therefore it depended largely upon the musical intelligence of the man who played the piano. Unfortunately many of the men who play a piano for moving picture shows are men of very limited musical knowledge so that in many instances the music does not even approximate the sense of the picture. There have been two notable exceptions in New Bedford, that of William R. Bishop at the New Bedford theatre, and Len Gray at the Orpheum theatre, both of whom have studied the pictures presented with great care, and evolved extemporary music which have added greatly to the enjoyment of the picture. One of the best of these attempts was made by Mr. Bishop at the New Bedford theatre when the picture of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle in the new dances was displayed. Without any rehearsal he improvised music which fitted every one of the new steps and brought out every point in the picture with absolute clearness.

A careful study of the score, written for "The Birth of a Nation" which is arranged for an orchestra of 40 men reveals a number of beautiful touches. Although the picture lasts nearly three hours there is not a moment in which the music is not fitted exactly to the action in the picture. This is done by a very clever combination of original music and excerpts from operas, old time melodies, and patriotic music. For example, for the first time in New Bedford music from "Parsifal," one of the greatest Wagner operas has been introduced. It would be interesting to get Mr. Wagner's view on the use of his music for such a purpose, if he were alive and could be interviewed on the subject. There are also extracts from "Zampa," the "Light Cavalry" overature of Von Suppa, and a number of other standard works. One of the prettiest touches in the whole course of the performance, is the song which Miss Stoneman sings in the picture while playing a banjo and watching over "the little colonel." This is an old plantation song, which had a great vogue in the New England states during the war time days. The first line of it begins:—

"Say, darkies, have you seen my massa with a moustache on his face?"

This song has a very attractive lilt that makes it stand out very prominently.

Self Educated Leader.

John J. Burns, the leader of the orchestra, is a South Boston musician who is largely self taught. His first engagement was played at the old Austin and Stone Museum as a violinist with John A. O'Connell, the father of Thomas, Joseph and Arthur O'Connell, all of whom are well known musicians in this city. His father was a blacksmith, and died when his seven children were all very young, leaving the care of them to his widow. When Burns was a small boy he obtained a very small violin, and attempted to teach himself. As he did not know how to tune it he got some very unusual effects, tuning his violin in thirds instead of in fifths. Some months afterwards he discovered, through the fact that his ear had become unusually well developed, that there was something wrong with his method of tuning. Therefore he was compelled after he had learned to play the violin, after his own style, to begin all over again. The loss of his father compelled him to seek employment as a cooper at $9 per week, but he never gave up his love for music and was later offered opportunties to play at dances, at $5 per evening, which he figured was considerably better than making barrels six days a week for nine dollars per week. He therefore gave up his work and started out to be a professional musician. So well has he succeeded that he has risen by successive steps from the humble position of a player of dance music to the head of the present organization. His beat is very clear and distinct and he has thoroughly mastered the entire technique of conducting.

Besides the musical director, which is carried by the company they have their own operator, electrician, and a stage force of 10 men who work the various effects behind the scenes. This makes a force of 13 men who are required to operate the picture, beside the orchestra of 14 men in the pit Some idea of the magnitude of the spectacle can be gained from this array of forces.

The men employed in the orchestra are all local musicians, none of whom has ever played in a show of this kind before. It is absolutely a new departure in the way of music. No who have so courageously attempted a new variety of music, and have played it with such good effect.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 1, 1915

Majestic which will be announced later.

The Birth of a Nation."

A great deal of film comedy is horseplay, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" which will be at the Cummings all next week, proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old-style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure-fire" order, for never does an audience miss, the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-mile away look. Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and reconstruction times that are heir-looms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born, and not akwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed. Seats went on sale this morning.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
AUG. 31, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

The last week of the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," started last night at the Tremont Theatre.

There is a pleasing variety of entertainment in this wonderful production romance, some charming comedy, and "battle, murder, sudden death," and intense excitement generally." The glimpse it gives of Civil War days, and of the thoughts and aims of people of that time, is excessively interesting.

The principal characters are impersonated by Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann and Joseph Henabery.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
AUG. 31, 1915

STRONG CLIMAXES THRILL AUDIENCE

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE SAVOY, FULLY MEETS ALL EXPECTATIONS.

Wonderful Moving Picture Drama Stirs Spectators To Enthusiastic Applause —Large Orchestra Feature of the Presentation.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's wonderful moving picture drama, which has created so much interest wherever it has been shown, opened at the Savoy theater on Monday for a week's run. Without doubt this is one of the greatest moving pictures ever produced. It is a thrilling, rapidly moving drama of the period of the Civil War, commencing just before the war and continuing through the reconstruction period, which followed.

Ever since the picture was released, "The Birth of a Nation" has caused widespread interest. It had an unusually long run in Boston. There are five releases of this picture showing in New England, the local picture being under the management of David Dow. The performances are at 2 and 8 o'clock daily and as a suggestion, the audience should be in its seats by those hours, for the better convenience of everyone concerned.

The picture is staged on a scale in keeping with the subject itself. A large orchestra plays the accompanying music, and at the door two misses in costumes of the 60's give out programs. The music itself is one of the features of the performance. Here and there patriotic songs and Southern melodies are played to accompany the scenes in the picture.

It has been said that the picture cost the producers a half a million dollars and it is no strain on the imagination to realize this fact. Hundreds of people were employed in making the picture and in several scenes they are shown at the same time.

It is not often that a moving picture gives a thrill to the average person, but the spectator who does not feel his pulse beat faster at times or does not feel sympathy at other times is indeed a rather lifeless sort of mortal. There are a number of stirring climaxes that for dash and action have probably never been equalled before. There is a battle scene that is a masterpiece of realism. The gathering of the Ku-Klux Klan and its charge upon a negro town is the crowning climax and one that never fails to bring out applause.

Fall River audiences are not especially noted for enthusiasm, but at times warm applause was given. For the first part of the picture the Monday evening audience sat quietly and watched the development of events. As the story progressed and became more intense, the audience became imbued with enthusiasm and gave evidence of its approval and when the strongest scenes were shown the applause was general

The story of the picture is taken from Dixon's "The Clansman." It begins at a period just before the war, continues through the struggle between the North and the South and thence into the period of reconstruction in the South. Many figures, who made history during that period, are shown in the picture and are especially well presented. Abraham Lincoln, Gen. U. S. Grant, Gen. Robert A. Lee, Wilkes Booth, who assassinated Lincoln, and the leader of the House of Representatives at that time, whose name is given as Stoneman, but who, in fact, must have been Thaddeus Stevens. Lincoln is shown signing the call for 75,000 volunteers, the organization of a Southern regiment and its marching away; later in the war, the battle of Fredericksburg. This battle is one of the finest scenes of the picture and probably the most realistic battle ever screened. An artillery duel is shown and the two armies face to face and finally at handgrips.

After the war comes the reconstruction and the elevation of the negroes, according to Stoneman's policy. Then comes the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's theater. The crisis is reached in the South, the situation having reached a stage that is unbearable to the Southern white people. The Ku-Klux Klan is organized for protection. Then comes the gathering of the clan to wreak vengeance on the negroes for their misdeeds. Probably 200 horsmen in their flowing robes are shown mustering and then comes their sweeping dash upon the town. A pitched battle takes place between the blacks and whites, ending in the rout of the former.

Henry Walthall, who is already well known in motion pictures, plays the leading role of a Southern colonel. Mirian Cooper and Mae Marsh appear as his sisters, and Lillian Gish, as the daughter of Stoneman. The other characters of the play are well portrayed, making the cast of principals a very strong one.

MINSTER (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
AUG. 31, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

With the approach of half a century the actual scenes of the Civ this highest development of the ion picture art bears a keen rela ship to current events. Aside from dramatic appeal and poetic flight brings back to a younger genera with a new-born realism the gs which our fathers and grand ers went through that out of the vail could come the nation we are proud of today.

The dramatic form has often been ployed by the greatest minds of the rld to express underlined truths and regards the usages and the sufferes of war, no pen has been able to ke as impressive a picture as ffith has encompassed in this nterpiece.

He masses great armies upon a his- plane to reproduce the records a mighty struggle and by the hu- n interests of two families makes great nation's efforts a topic of a ic construction which appeals the heart and the sympathies as no ld narrative of facts could hope to . To attain these results he em- oys the passions, the loves and the nflict of essential drama.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be esented at the Cumings theater in tchburg twice daily during the week ommencing Labor day, Sept. 6, with erformances beginning at 2.10 and .10 p. m. This is the same wonder- l production that has been in Bos- n. Tickets go on sale on Wednes- y morning. 1t

Philadelphia, (Pa.) North American

Date ..... SEP 8 1915

NEGROES TO URGE BAN UPON 'THE BIRTH OF A NATION' FILM

Will Ask Court to Vacate Injunction Restraining the Police

A delegation of negroes visited court of common pleas No. 3 yesterday to protest to Judge Ferguson because he permitted the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," to be shown at the Forrest Theater, by granting a five-day injunction to prevent the police from interfering with the production.

Counsel for the delegation did not appear until it was too late to see Judge Ferguson. Then they visited court of common pleas No. 4 and City Solicitor Ryan. It was decided that today or tomorrow the delegation, with counsel, will appear before Judge Finletter in court No. 4 and ask that the injunction be vacated and the police allowed to order the suppression of the picture.

They also purpose to ask for the elimination of certain scenes, which they believe incite hatred against their race, if the play as a whole is not enjoined or stopped by the police.

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) PRESS

Date ..... SEP 8 1915

CONTINUE FIGHT ON "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Delegations representing the colored people who are protesting against the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation," the photoplay now running in this city, will appear to-day or to-morrow before Judge Finletter, in Court of Common Pleas No. 4, and ask that the injunction protecting the production be vacated. They will also ask that certain portions of the picture, which the colored people allege are objectionable and an affront to their race, be eliminated in case the injunction permitting no interference by the police with the show is not vacated.

A delegation yesterday visited Judge Ferguson's court and protested against the judicial action in permitting the photoplay to be given. However, as their counsel, M. Luther Nicholas, did not appear, the representatives of colored residents decided to let the matter go over until to-day or to-morrow.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
SEPT. 1, 1915

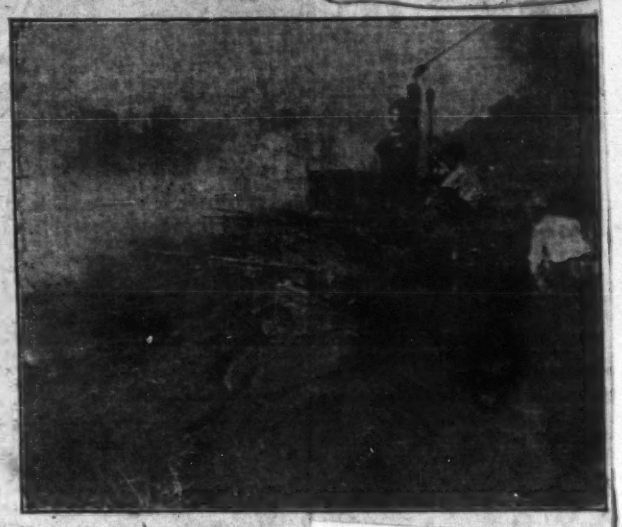
AMUSEMENTS

What the Press Agents Say About Various Theatrical and Moving Picture Attractions

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Cumings.

The new art of cinematic spectacle as developed in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," has achieved a closer adjustment of music to pictures than has hitherto been thought feasible. When, for example, Huperdinck's music was adapted to the motion play called "The Miracle" yards of music, so to speak, was sawed off to fit successive reels of the story. No one thought of adapting the music scene by scene, as music is adapted to words in grand opera.

The average motion picture scene lasts from four to fifteen seconds.



SCENE FROM "THE B

There are several thousand such scenes in a twelve-reel play. Griffith and his musical drector, Joseph Carl Briel, were undaunted. They provided each principal character with a musical theme or motif. This was done during the actual picture taking. A provisional score of the "opera" was prepared on the field. After the camera had completed its work, the provisional score was amplified and syncronized.

The immense labor of fitting the almost innumerable screen and "flashes" each with its bit of appropriate music may be imagined. The job was fairly done, however, before the opening in New York, the parts for the forty symphonic players written. Since then many improvements have been made. A musical plot exhibits the title of every important scene, the name of the proper music-motif, and the exact duration by seconds of that particular bit of photography. The timing is said to be perfect.

Will the grand opera of the future get along without prima donnas and star tenors? Will it substitute pictures for words, gestures and scenery?

These novel inquiries are certainly suggested by Mr. Griffith's marvellous achievement in musical spectacle, which apparently welds action and sound into one harmonious whole.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be presented at the Cumings theater commencing Monday for an engagement of one week, complete in every detail, as shown at the leading theaters in its different record-breaking runs. The seat sale began this morning.

HILL (Mass.) GAZETTE
SEPT. 7, 1915

394

Moving Pictures and Vaudeville

THE

"BIRTH OF NATION" OPENS

Unparalleled Picture Play is Shown at Colonial Theatre

Yesterday saw the opening performances of the much-talked-about screen spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," an historical drama in two gigantic parts, founded on Thomas Dixon's famous story, "The Clansman." The Colonial theatre was filled at both performances with a curious and expectant audience.

A picturesque note was struck at the very beginning, for young women in crinolines and pantalets, with flowing curls, distributed programs in the foyer as the patrons entered for their seats.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a triumph in photoplay upon which the producer, Mr. D. W. Griffith, and his associates may well plume themselves. As a spectacle it is unrivaled by any other production ever presented either in this city or any other. In no other production has there been such effective concerted action, such extraordinary achievements in perspective.

The photo-marvel is much more than an engrossing entertainment. The first part is an eloquent and impassioned protest against the horrors of warfare. The tragic leavetakings, the wrecking of homes, the broken ties, the fearful sights on the battlefield are depicted with relentless fidelity. The flower of American youth is shown going forth from northern and southern homes to certain destruction in the terrific conflict which rages with appalling realism. The calamity in Europe is brought home with sickening vividness.

The cast was excellent, each member was individually striking in facial play and pantomine. Young Ben Cameron was a picturesque hero, and the Misses Marsh, Cooper and Gish rivalled each other in daintiness and girlish charm. Mr. Seigmann was a stalwart and insinuating villain. Mr. Henaberry's portrayal of Abraham Lincoln was effective in make-up and bearing. Miss Lee provided comic relief.

Date .....

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" turned them away at the Cumings theatre, Thursday afternoon and night, and judging from the advance sale tonight and tomorrow will find the theatre packed to the limit of its seating capacity. The attendance was good on Monday, but each day found the attendance growing greater and greater as the people of Fitchburg and vicinity came to realize that all the things said about the play in the past were deserved. Nothing presented at the Cumings has created more comment and talk than "The Birth of a Nation." It appeals from a historical viewpoint, it appeals from a spectacular side, it appeals from a sensational point and best of all it appeals through the human interest love story which runs through the entire play. Few productions could combine so many different elements, take so many varied characters, such tremendous scene and such wonderful events and arrange them all into a continuous story, with the main thread always in plain view. That accounts for much of its attractiveness. It tells a story that is understood by all. It shows a condition of things that existed only in the minds of people of the north directly after the Civil war and pictures various things from a southern angle. It is a mighty spectacle, an immense production and a wonderful play. It is well worth a visit from all.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 4, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation" is to stay at the Savoy theatre for another week. The management made the announcement yesterday, what, after a week of the most phenomenal business ever recorded by a theatrical production in this city, it became apparent that not half of those who wished to see the great spectacle had as yet found the opportunity. It is a remarkable tribute from the city of Fall River to Griffith's great production, but it is no less a boon to the public of this city to have such a production here for another week.

There is no doubt but what the coming week is going to witness an even greater demand for seats for the "Birth of a Nation," for from the many thousands who have seen the picture since it came here the opinion regarding its merit is unanimous. It is doubtful if any production ever presented here has received such universal praise. It is doubtful if any production has been so generally discussed, in the home, in social circles, in clubs and social gatherings wherever two or three people congregate. And why not? What single experience could possibly provide any greater subject for thought and discussion?

There will naturally be a great demand for seats for the holiday performances, since it will provide many with their first opportunity to see the picture. Manager David Dow therefore wishes to urge that seats will be reserved as early as possible, and that having been reserved, they will be called for as early as possible in the day. Seats for the matinees are reserved until one o'clock, and for the evening performances until 7 o'clock. Mr. Dow has found it positively necessary to live strictly up to that arrangement on account of the great demand for seats, and he asks the public to co-operate with him that any possible unpleasantness may be avoided.

It might not be amiss to add to Mr. Dow's request, a word about Mr. Dow himself. Those who have witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Savoy cannot but have been impressed with the perfect arrangements and courteous treatment accorded them there. Mr. Dow, of course, has the regular house staff of the Savoy to assist him, but there is nevertheless, great credit coming to him for adapting himself to local conditions so readily and displaying a real concern for the comfort and satisfaction of his patrons. There is an "inside" and an "outside" to every road show, and those who are familiar with them know that the "inside" does not always compare favorably with the "outside."

Regarding Mr. Dow, however, it is to be regretted that every one who witnesses the great spectacle of which he is manager, cannot meet him personally. It would certainly add to the already great admiration for the production. Apparently the owners of "The Birth of a Nation" figured that only "live" men should be associated with such a big production, and no choice Mr Dow as one qualified to adequately represent the spirit which prompted the vast undertaking. Those who have met Mr. Dow are ready to congratulate "The Birth of a Nation" upon being capably and intelligently managed.

ER (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
SEPT. 1, 1915

FORCING HIS COLORS INTO THE MOUTH OF THE UNION CANNONS IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Coming to the Cumings Theater, Fitchburg.

The Cumings manager with his usual foresight, and at an enormous expense has secured for the patrons of his popular theater, the rights for the first presentation in Fitchburg of D. W. Griffith's gigantic screen spectacle "The Birth of a Nation."

This wonderful production has caused more newspaper comment than any other production ever presented, either on the spoken stage, or of the silent drama, describing as it does "The Birth of a Nation", of our own nation, and carrying it through the troublesome, hazardous times of the post rebellion, and the cause of hostility between the north and south.

Founded as it is on the great dramatic story and play "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith has taken advantage (as only he can) of the many tense dramatic situations, and has interwoven a beautiful love story between the scenes of war and strife for supremacy.

The ever-changing scenes hold an audience spell-bound from the first sound of the special music, written especially for this gigantic masterpiece, until the curtain falls on the last scene of this stupendous production.

Produced at an actual cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, with a cast of 18,000 men, women and children and 3000 horses and requiring over two years to complete "The Birth of a Nation" stands alone, pre-eminent; one feature in a class by itself, the one and only one that has commanded, and is playing the first class theaters at a $2.00 top price of admission.

At present playing at the Liberty theater, New York City, where it is in its sixth month of continuous run, the Tremont now in its sixth month of continuous run and playing to capacity daily, the Illinois theater, Chicago is still selling out three weeks in advance, with a three months' summer run to its credit. The Davidson theater, Milwaukee, is another high class theater that is breaking all records, and Atlantic City, Brighton Beach, New York, and San Francisco, Cal., and each vieing with one another to pay homage to this greatest of all attractions.

gagements. A special stage setting will be erected, after the idea of a mammoth shadow box, such as is used to display large oil paintings, bringing out every detail of the subject.

The theater will be decorated to correspond with the exact times that the production represents. A greatly enlarged orchestra of solo musicians will interpret the special music that was written for it.

The tickets went on sale this morning and prices ranged from 25 cents to $1.00, thus bringing this magnificent production to Fitchburg at less than half the prices charged in Boston. There will be two performances daily commencing at 2.10 and 8.10 sharp.

RIVER (Mass.) GLOBE
SEPT. [illegible] 1915

Amusements

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Big Savoy Attraction Is To Remain For Another Week.

"The Birth of a Nation" is to stay at the Savoy theater for another week. The management made the announcement yesterday, when, after a week of the most phenomenal business ever recorded by a theatrical production in this city, it became apparent that not half of those who wished to see the great spectacle had as yet found the opportunity. It is a remarkabel tribute from the city of Fall River to Grimth's great production, but it is no less a boon to the public of this city to have such a production here for another week.

There is no doubt but what the coming week is going to witness an even greater demand for seats for the "Birth of a Nation," for from the many thousands who have seen the picture since it came here, the opinion regarding its merit is unanimous. It is doubtful if any production ever presented here has received such universal praise. It is doubtful if any production has been so generally discussed, in the home, in hotel lobbies, in clubs and social gatherings, wherever two or three people congregate. And why not? What single experience could possibly provide any greater subject for thought and discussion?

There will naturally be a great demand for seats for the holiday performances, since it will provide many with their first opportunity to see the picture. Manager David Dow therefore wishes to urge that seats will be reserved as early as possible, and that having been reserved, they will be called for as early as possible in the day. Seats for the matinees are reserved until 1 o'clock, and for the evening performances until 7 o'clock.

It might not be amiss to add to Mr. Dow's request a word about Mr. Dow himself. Those who have witnesses "The Birth of a Nation," at the Savoy, cannot but have been impressed with the perfect arrangements and courteous treatment accorded them there. Mr. Dow, of course, has the regular house staff of the Savoy to assist him, but there is, nevertheless, great credit, coming to him for adapting himself to local conditions so rapidly and displaying a real concern for the comfort and satisfaction of his patrons.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) SENTINEL
SEPT. 7, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION AT THE CUMINGS

Big Production Opens Week's Engagement Monday—Incidental Music by Large Orchestra

The Cumings resembled a Metropolitan theater, Monday, when D. W. Griffith's mighty production of "The birth of a nation" received its first presentation in this city before two good-sized holiday audiences. For months "The birth of a nation" has been the talk of the theatergoers of the entire country and Monday the people of this city and vicinity were able to understand the reason. Aside from the splendor and magnificence of the production itself the many little things utilized to lift the production above the ordinary helped to put the audience in a mood to expect and receive something worth while.

The theater itself looked different. Two attractive girls dressed in Colonial style made a pretty little courtesy as they handed programs to the patrons, while the ushers were all attired in Colonial uniforms. That gave the atmosphere needed to transport the audience back to the early days of the United States and helped to create a sympathetic mood for the understanding of the wonderful play.

Then the orchestra pit was occupied by 16 skilled musicians over half of whom were from Boston. They discoursed special music that was written or arranged especially for this production and naturally it helped to make the presentation an eventful one. The orchestra was in splendid form and its 12 hour rehearsal Sunday gave it a knowledge of its duties that helped it to give a splendid interpretation of the musical end of the production. The stage was redressed and rearranged with handsome curtains for the beginning of the play.

With all those preparations in front of the curtain it is to be expected that the great historical play of "The birth of a nation" which is lifted almost bodily from Thomas Dixon's famous story of "The Clansman," should be well worth seeing. As a spectacular historical production as well as in the splendor of its scenic effects, "The birth of a nation" would win most favorable comment while the realistic acting of the principal characters help to make it easily the biggest production of the kind ever seen in Fitchburg.

It is perhaps the first realistic picture of the four years of the Civil War, followed by the disordered and lawless conditions of the South during the next 10 years. D. W. Griffith, the director and producer of this wonderful play, has become world famous. He surpassed every other production in his presentation of the South from 1861 to 1875 both artistically as well as historically.

There is a double love romance told in this play while the stirring scenes of the pre-Civil War period, the days of the war, including Sherman's march to the sea, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln, and many other scenes of historical interest are all presented as accurately as possible.

In the first half of the production the audience is carried through the war. In the second half are seen the bitter poverty of the white element who had given all for the cause of the South, their struggle against the insults of the negroes, influenced by the carpet-baggers of the North, the terror of the women, the ravages of the power-crazed whites and blacks who plundered the states, and finally the advent of the Ku Klux Klan whose rides forced the authorities to grant the franchise to the whites again.

The audience of Monday afternoon which practically filled the theater, included over 125 of the Franco-American Foresters and like the other members of the audience they evinced great interest in the stirring story. The audience was swayed and moved in a wonderful manner as was evidenced during the ride of the Klan when the applause was spontaneous and blood stirring.

There are 12 big parts to this production and each contains much that will appeal to the people of Fitchburg and vicinity. All will be well repaid for visiting the Cumings this week where "The birth of a nation" will be seen twice every day, commencing at 2.10 and 8.10 p. m. Henry Walthall as Col. Ben Cameron gives a splendid interpretation of his role while Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper and others have become world famous for their work in this play.

Fitchburg News
4-4-16

made into a serial and the first number will open the Bijou performance. They are said to be very [illegible].

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to attract large audiences to the Cumings theatre and incidentally it continues to be the sensation of the city and surrounding towns. Never before has such an elaborate and massive attraction been presented at the Cumings and after witnessing the mighty spectacle it is not surprising that it has been able to make long runs in the larger cities of the country. Playing in Fitchburg an entire week was something of an experiment but results justified the wisdom of the management in getting it for that period. Each day has witnessed a growth in the size of the audience and now it looks as if the closing performances will be witnessed by capacity audiences. This wonderful story of the south before, during and after the Civil war, is bound to make a powerful impression on all spectators. Aside from the historical interest there is a double love story running through the entire production and the spectators follow the course of love with the same intense interest they watch the development of the country, the overthrow of the carpet baggers and the supremacy of the white race. As shown at the Cumings it is hard to understand why any protest was ever made against the production. It is written in too broad a manner to give offense. On account of the large number of people from Ayer and other places attending the performance a special car will run Saturday night after the show.

Fall River Herald
Date 9-9-15

With "City Sports," at the Academy of Music, To-Night.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation" terminates its engagement at the Savoy with Saturday evening's performance. The demand for seats for the last few remaining performances exceeds anything heretofore in the history of the production, even in the greater cities. There is no doubt that the great spectacle would be able to do a phenomenal business here for a long time to come, but there are other worlds to conquer; it is booked for other places.

Those who have been in constant association with "The Birth of a Nation" since its arrival in Fall River, now find themselves trying to impress upon everybody how essential it is to see the great spectacle. And they are confronted with the same difficulty which confronted them on the occasion of their first attempt to describe the picture. For the powerful appeal and the exquisite thrill of "The Birth of a Nation" does not pale when seen 20 times, and only emphasizes the futility of trying to describe it. "It's great: you ought to see it before it leaves our town," is the last dying attempt on the part of the local press agent to impress upon people that they will have missed the big show event of the year if they fail to see "The Birth of a Nation."

THAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
SEPT. 7, 1915

913

SCHOOL HISTORIES AND "THE BIRTH OF A NATIUN"

When one sees D. W. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" and learns from it the many facts and sidelights of American history that are not to be found in the school editions of history, the thought comes that the educational departments of the country are neglecting the real education of the growing children. It is a know fact that the histories studied by the children in the schools of the South give an entirely different version of the great struggle of 1861 than that which is given in the schools of the North.

Then "The Birth of a Nation" comes and in clear, impressive motion pictures gives the real story of this great struggle and the spectator, be he a grown-up or a child, realizes that in his studies of the Great Rebellion he has learned but a small part of the actual history.

For instance, it was new knowledge to many to learn that after the States of the Confederacy had signed peace, there were Northern statesmen who wished and urged the President to treat the rebellious states as conquired provinces and to hang their leaders. This is but one of many things that are brought to light in "The Birth of a Nation" for the first time to millions of people who have always felt that they knew the better part of the real history of the Civil War.

The question arises in the minds of the many: "Why are so many facts kept from the students in the schools of the North; and Why should the people of the South be given a different version than the people of the North?" Why shouldn't there be one history for the entire country and that history absolutely truthful, unvarnished to suit the prejudices and sympathies of either class?

Must it remain for the motion pictures to give the people of the world the real truth of history and other educational matters? It would seem so. And if it must be, let there be more pictures produced like "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Scenic Theatre of this city for an engagement of three days, beginning Monday, Sept. 13.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
SEPT. 9, 1915

314

AMUSEMENTS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation" terminates its engagement at the Savoy with Saturday evening's performance. The demand for seats for the last few remaining performances exceeds anything heretofore in the history of the production, even in the greater cities. There is no doubt that the great spectacle would be able to do big business here for a long time to come, but as there are other worlds to conquer it is booked for other places.

Those who have been in constant association with "The Birth of a Nation" since its arrival in Fall River now find themselves trying to impress upon everybody in Fall River how essential it is that they shall see the great spectacle before it leaves Fall River forever. And they are confronted with the same difficulty which confronted them on the occasion of their first attempt to describe the picture. For the powerful appeal, and the exquisite thrill of "The Birth of a Nation" does not pale when seen 20 times, and only emphasizes the futility of trying to describe it. "It's great; you ought to see it before it leaves our town," is the last dying attempts on the part of the local press agent to impress upon people that they will have missed the big show event of the year if they fail to see "The Birth of a Nation."

The music which accompanies the presentation of the great spectable has been an important feature from the start. It has been universally commented upon, from the very first day of its engagement here. Those who attend the last few performances have even a greater treat in store, for the orchestra of 16 pieces which is now playing at the Savoy is the greatest orchestra of local musicians that has ever played in this city. Led by the renowned Carl Goldman, it has been welded into a perfect musical unit which executed the remarkable musical score of "The Birth of a Nation," as though it were the very pulse of the picture itself.

HAVERHILL (Mass.) GAZETTE
SEPT. 10, 1915

394

FAMOUS PLAY NEARS END.

"The Birth of a Nation" at Colonial Thrills Crowds

Just three more performances of D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" remain for local lovers of things on a grander scale at the Colonial treatre.

To attempt to describe the hundreds of wonders that are opened up to the spectator in "The Birth of a Nation" would be an impossible task even for the most imaginative writer. It is the one production which must be seen by all to have even a fair idea of its massiveness and power.

One has read of the assassination of President Lincoln, both in the history of our great republic and also in more detailed stories of the sad affair, but it must be truthfully said that no book yet brought to light, gives the story of the tragedy with such powerful vividness as it is presented in this wonderful production.

Sherman's March to the Sea has stirred the hearts of millions when read about but when seen in actuality, with thousands of soldiers, horses and guns, with thrilling battles, with such spectacular massiveness, one would give much rather than to have missed this wonderful visualization. In fact, when one has seen "The Birth of a Nation" the impulse comes to summon all of the glowing adjectives at command and hurl them broadcast in enthusiastic appreciation of the spectacular wonder.

The Burning of Atlanta is an inspiring scene that will long be remembered. A whole city ablaze makes one gasp. Yet this is but one of a hundred mighty scenes that must impress upon all, the lesson intended for the production.

If one can see "The Birth of a Nation" without feeling a horror for war and all it signifies, then indeed, is that person hardened. Yet, we are told that the terrible experiences of our soldiers in the Civil war were almost nothing compared with the present strife that is devastating all Europe.

The management of the Colonial has announced that this big engagement will positively terminate on Saturday evening and that means that those who would not miss it, must engage seats early as the attendances are growing daily and many must be disappointed. Produced on the same massive scale as at the Tremont theatre, Boston, with a Symphony orchestra of twenty musicians and forty effect workers and electricians, it is a spectacle that none can afford to slip [illegible].

(Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 7, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION IS COMING

The "Birth of a Nation," the premier production of filmdom, will open Monday, Sept. 13 at the Salem theatre for a week's run, afternoon and evening.

If you have not seen "The Birth of a Nation" you have missed the most astonishing achievement in dramatic portraiture introduced to the American stage. Imagine 18,000 people visualizing the story of intense human interest and dramatic purposes and then add 2000 horses ridden by some of the most reckless and daring riders in the world, dashing in great cavalcades over picturesque roads and through war-strewn valleys and plains, and you can begin to form a vague idea of the scale upon which this narrative is unfolded.

The plot of the drama deals with the relationship of the slavery question to the developments of America and its final solution reveals how out of the quarrel of the disputing states there arose the mightiest nation in the world.

Given his story and the people, Griffith has secured startling results. His mammoth canvas often reveals battlefields covering an area of a dozen square miles and by following historical details he reproduces the stern battle effects as they actually took place half a century ago.

MANCHESTER (Mass.) BREEZE
SEPT. 10, 1915

5

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Griffith's big picture, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Salem Theatre for one week only, beginning with a mat. next Monday, Sept. 13th. There will be a big orchestra of [illegible] pieces, and a chorus [illegible] scenes, while several [illegible] girls will act as ushers [illegible] local color, etc.

The picture is a [illegible] Dixon's "The Clansman" [illegible] incidents [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] certain [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) HERALD
SEPT. 10, 1915 619

Behind the

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Boston and New England simply would not allow to leave Boston D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which was seen for 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre by nearly half the population of Boston, and the past week at the Majestic, making its 23d big week in Boston. The 24th week begins next Monday, September 13. So insatiable has been the desire of the theatre-going population of New England to see more of this marvelous $500,000 production, and so forcible and overwhelming the demand for a longer stay of it in this city that arrangements had to be made for another theatre as its Boston home. And so the Majestic Theatre becomes the fortunate possessor of "The Birth of a Nation," as an attraction for a limited additional stay in Boston.

There have been very few instances in the history of the Boston stage of engagements of a theatrical attraction for such a prolonged stay. It is nearly half a year now that this "8th wonder of the world" has been presented continuously in Boston, every afternoon and evening for six days of each week and still crowded houses characterizes every presentation of the thrilling and realistic scenes which are so closely associated with the development and progress of the United States of America as a nation, before the Civil War, during it, and immediately after it, during the reconstruction period. Whole counties were commandeered for the presentation of this spectacle; 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses were used with the result that the unparalleled spectacle of great battles, Sherman's March to the Sea, the destruction of entire towns, and the inspiring wild rides of the Ku Klux are shown in their entirety on the screen. Historically true reproductions of Ford's Theatre on the night of the assassination of President Lincoln, and the various scenes in the Southern Congressional Chambers following the war add a touch of histire interest to the massiv production.

The 24th week of the continuation of the Boston run at the Majestic Theatre will begin next Monday afternoon, with performance given twice daily, every afternoon a 2.10 and every evening at 8.10 Seats are now selling for next week

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 10, 1915 6

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Big Production at the Premier—Seats Now on Sale.

Griffith's big picture, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Premier Thursday, September 16, for a three days' engagement. There will be a big orchestra of 16 pieces.

The picture is a dramatization of Dixon's "The Clansman." Its chief incidents are historic. The incident of the negro is responsible for the formation of the Ku-Klux Klan, which chases the carpet-baggers out of the south and rehabilitated the southland.

Few people know into what a lamentable situation the south fell nearly ten years after Appomattox. The whites were disfranchised because of their part in the war, and southern states were governed by a combination of newly franchised negroes and carpet-baggers from the north, whose main object was loot. How the whites of the south regained control of the country is one of the most dramatic passages in our history.

"The Birth of a Nation," is said to contain 18,000 people and 3000 horses. Nothing so spectacular has yet been shown upon the screen. For the first time in the history of film art, you see the great historical conflict pass before you; the burning of Atlanta; Sherman's march to the sea; victory of the north; Grant and Lee at Appomattox; reconstruction troubles; love and romance of history; tremendous battle scenes; the Lincoln tragedy; dauntless rides of the Ku Klux Klan; under domestic drama and charming comedy and the dawn of the "New Nation."

Owing to the tremendous patronage that will undoubtedly be showered upon this massive screen spectacle during its local engagement, patrons are warned to secure their seat reservations at the earliest possible moment, for the attendance at the Premier theatre will positively be greater than this city has ever known before, either for a production of the spoken stage or the silent drama.

Date 9-1-15

"The Country ... Soldiers," ... Whop" and others make up a great bill of fine quality.

Cumings Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" closes its engagement at the Cumings theatre tonight after a record that has never been equalled in this city for attendance and interest. It is doubtful if any other picture will be able to duplicate the success for some time to come. Next week the theatre reverts to a general program of feature pictures and some good attractions have been secured. Vivian Martin in "The Little Dutch Girl" from Quida's novel is the feature for Monday and Tuesday. It is based on one of Quida's best sellers and affords Miss Martin exceptional opportunity to display her emotional and dramatic ability. The 19th chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky" entitled "Fire-Fury-Confusion" will be shown on the first two days also. This takes Lottie Pickford, Irving Cummings and the other characters further along in the romantic novel. Henry Walthall and Dorothy Gish of "The Birth of a Nation" fame will be seen Wednesday and Thursday in "The Floor Above," a picturisation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's detective storp. "The Goddess" will also be shown on this program with another installment of the Hearst-Selig weekly and another reel. "Greater Love Hath No Man" with Emmett Corrigan is the Metro release for Friday and Saturday supported by "Romance of Elaine" and a comedy ... looks like a big week at the Cumings and should attract unusual audiences ...

SALEM (Mass.) OBSERVER
SEPT. 11, 1915 814

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Boston and New England simply would not allow to leave Boston D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which was seen for 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre by nearly half the population of Boston, and the past week at the Majestic, making its 23d big week in Boston. The 24th week begins next Monday, September 13. So insatiable has been the desire of the theatre-going population of New England to see more of this marvelous $500,000 production, and so forcible and over- ... the demand for a longer stay of ... that arrangements had to ... for another theatre as its Boston ... And so the Majestic Theatre becomes the fortunate possessor of "The Birth of A Nation," as an attraction for a limited additional stay in Boston.

The 24th week of the continuation of the Boston run at the Majestic Theatre will begin next Monday afternoon, with performances given twice daily, every afternoon at 2.10 and every evening at 8.10. Seats are now selling for next week.

EVERLY (Mass.) CITIZEN
SEPT. 11, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION"
Moved to the
MAJESTIC THEATRE.

Boston in order to contiuue the Remarkable Boston Run. 24th Big Week begins next Monday Sept. 13th

Boston and New England simply would not allow to leave Boston D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which was seen for 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre by nearly half the population of Boston and the past week at the Majestic, making its 23d big week in Boston. So insatiable has been the desire of the theatre going population of New England to see more of this marvelous $500,000 production that arrangements had to be made for another theatre as its Boston home, and so the Majestic Tueatre becomes the fortunate possessor of "The Birth of A Nation" as an attraction for a limited additional stay in Boston. 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses were used in reproducing this picture; which is a complete story of the Civil War. The Majestic Theatre will begin next Monday afternoon, with performances given twice daily, every afternoon at 2.10 and every evening at 8.10. Seats are now selling for next week.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) GLOBE
SEPT. 10, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Tomorrow is the last day for "The Birth of a Nation," in Fall River. The great spectacle has drawn to the Savoy vast numbers of people during the past two weeks. It has probably established a record run for a single attraction in this city. It could continue to play here indefinitely, to full houses, in the opinion of those who have seen the daily throngs attracted by the picture. But the engagement positively terminates Saturday evening.

If there is anything which might have been said to induce somebody to benefit by "The Birth of a Nation" it is now too late to say it. The fame of the picture is national, and its appeal is local. There is hardly a person in Fall River who has not heard it discussed in the past two weeks. It is merely a question as to how impressed you were, whether or not you went to see the great spectacle. You were not especially concerned if you did not see it immediately, for you figured that you could see it tomorrow, or the next day, or the day after that.

There are still many good seats for this evening's and tomorrow's performances. There is sure to be a tremendous eleventh hour demand for them, however, so that it is almost essential that reservations be made now.

ALL RIVER (M... GLOBE
SEPT. ... 1915 31

... Friday and Saturday

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Tonight "The Birth of a Nation," makes its farewell appearance at the Savoy theatre. It is certain to be a memorable event, for there will be in the uadience not only all that the house can hold of those who are grasping this last opportunity, but there will be also many who are seeing the great spectacle for the second and even the third time. To the latter, it will mean bidding farewell to a production which could stand a hundred inspections; it means the withdrawal from Fall River of one of the most notable theatrical productions ever presented here.

Although this is the last night of the production at the Savoy, there need be no fear that it will be curtailed in any particular. There is the same big orchestra, the same crew at work back stage and the same care will be exercised in the presentation of the picture. For two weeks now the orchestra has played the wonderful music of "The Birth of a Nation," until, today, the musical programme surpasses anything ever presented by local musicians, and alone constitutes an evening of pleasure

Tonight is the last night of "The Birth of a Nation" in Fall River. Seat reservations should be called for early, and those who have not reserved seats should purchase them as early as possible for it is ... big night.

DANVERS (Mass.) MIRROR
SEPT. 11, 1915
232

Theatres.

SALEM THEATRE.

For once the press agent has been undone. For years it has been his duty to employ such exaggeration in the verbal presentation of his subject as to infuse in the mind of the reader a desire to see or hear that which he tells about; but now comes "The Birth of a Nation," the gorgeous spectacle of the twentieth century, and the press agent finds himself at at a loss for words to describe the production even in a minor way. D. W. Griffith has stripped him of his power; exaggeration is out of the question and the writer must now work his brain overtime in order to do even meagre justice to his subject.

"The Birth of a Nation" cannot be exaggerated. It is too tremendous, too gigantic for that. There are countless scenes in it that tongue or pen cannot cope with. Only the eye alone can realize the wonderful progress the motion picture has made in this phenomenal masterpiece. It seems that everything that the brain of man could conceive has been put into this subject. 18,000 people were used in telling the story, 3,000 horses and countless guns, shells, etc., utilized in its massive battle scenes. Two years time was consumed in its making and the approximate cost has been $500,000.

This truly wonderful picture will be shown at the Salem Theatre for one week, both matinee and evening, beginning next Monday. Seats for the entire engagement are on sale at the box office and may be engaged for any performance by calling Salem 8421. Special cars will be run to all suburban cities and towns after the evening performances.

HOLYOKE (Mass.) TELEGRAM
SEPT. 11, 1915

FAMOUS FILM FOR SUFFOLK

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Be Shown Here.

Manager Hammond Gets Letter This Morning Stating That Picture Will Be Here in 10 Days.

"The Birth of a Nation," the moving picture film that has been the sensation of New York and Boston, and a number of other cities, will be shown at the Suffolk Theater starting in about 10 days.

Manager Hammond of the Suffolk theater today received a letter from the firm handling the film stating that it will be shown in this city within the next two weeks, the exact date depending on certain exigencies.

The picture will run in the local theater as long as the crowds attend. Holyoke is the only place in Western Massachusetts that has been promised the film, although it is expected that after it has shown here it will be produced in many other theaters in the Connecticut valley.

BEVERLY (Mass.) TIMES
SEPT. 11, 1915
88

Birth of a Nation to be Seen at the Salem Theatre

MIRIAM COOPER,
As Margaret Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation."

Shows may come and shows may go, feature film be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions return to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" continues on its triumphant way and will be shown at the Salem Theatre, Salem, Mass., for one week beginning Monday, Sept. 13th. Beside the film spectacle itself "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil war and includes also much elaborate orchestration in modern modes.

For out-of-town patrons the matinee performance will be found attractive the same as night and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows will be given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle is being performed twice daily at 2.00 and evenings at 8.00 respectively.

The production will be presented at Salem in the same big manner that has characterized its performances in the large cities, with augmented orchestra and all other details exact.

EWBURYPORT (Mass.) HERALD
SEPT. 11, 1915
619 least [illegible]

the imperishable remembrance that France gave us Lafayette.

A Tempest in a Teapot

According to recent gossip drifting out of Philadelphia, there was really nothing in the great motion-picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" to object to, but the suppression of this biggest of all photoplays by the local authorities was confidently expected because an election for mayor is approaching and the dominant political party, if threatened with the loss of negro votes, would respond to the slightest protest and cause prompt actio[n] [illegible] Taken. After the fir[st] [illegible] nance, however, it looked as if th[e] expected was not likely to happe[n] for the Philadelphia Press, whic[h] represents the dominant politica[l] party, saw fit to praise "The Birt[h] of a Nation" almost extravagantl[y] reporting that there was nothin[g] even tending to excite racial pre[j]udice" in a "wonderful master[-]piece" which brought forth "out[-]bursts of patriotic applause," eve[n] the "sprinkling of colored spectator[s] joining the whites" therein.

The astute observer at a distance begins to wonder whether the temp[est] in a teapot stirred up over thi[s] picture-spectacle in several cities i[s] merely a shrewd advertising scheme or a self-seeking effort of designin[g] politicians, and whether the ne[gro]es, if let alone, would really fin[d] ground for complaint. In any case why should the "Afro-Americans" of the Northern cities in our time consider themselves responsible fo[r] the crimes or follies of the ignorant ex-slaves of the South when these were placed in control of the Southern State governments through the temporary disfranchisement of a majority of the white voters? Why should anybody object to a historical picture of the efforts of a "Ku Klux Klan" to frighten the blacks and thus grapple with an intolerable situation in the only way then possible? If such a spectacle must be forbidden, then there is no room on the stage for "The Merchant of Venice" or any other play that may be unwelcome to a relatively small element of the public in a given community.

ALTHAM (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 11, 1915
918

MAJESTIC THEATRE

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Boston and New England simply would not allow to leave Boston D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which was seen for 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre by nearly half the population of Boston, and te past week at the Majestic, making its 23rd big week in Boston. The 24th week begins next Monday, September 13. So insatiable has been the desire of the theatre-going population of New England to see more of this marvelous $500,000 production, and so forcible and overwhelming the demand for a longer stay of it in this city that arrangements had to be made for another theatre as its Boston home. And so the Majestic Theatre becomes the fortunate possessor of "The Birth of A Nation," as an attraction for a limited additional stay in Boston.

There have been very few instances in the history of the Boston stage of engagements of a theatrical attraction for such a prolonged stay. It is nearly half a year now that this "8th wonder of the world" has been presented continuously in Boston, every afternoon and evening for six days of each week and still crowded houses characterizes every presentations of the thrilling and realistic scenes which are so closely associated with the development and progress of the United States of America as a nation, before the Civil War, during it, and immediately after it, during the reconstruction period. Whole counties were commandeered for the presentation of this spectacle; 18,000 persons and 3000 horses were used with the result that the unparalleled spectacle of great battles, Sherman's March to the Sea, the destruction of entire towns, and the inspiring wild rides of the Ku Klux are shown in their entirety on the screen. Historically true reproductions of Ford's Theatre on the night of the assassination of President Lincoln, and the various scenes in the Southern Congressional Chambers following the war add a touch of historic interest to the massive production.

The 24th week of the continuation of the Boston run at the Majestic Theatre will begin next Monday afternoon, with performances given twice daily, every afternoon at 2.10 and every evening at 8.10. Seats are now selling for next week.

TRAVELER
SEPT. 11, 1915

...ers of its admirable cast.

...e Birth of a Nation"

...eginning next Monday afternoon D. ... Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of ... Nation," will enter into the 24th week ... its phenomenally long run in this ...city at the Majestic Theatre where it ...is now being shown to capacity attend...ances every afternoon and evening. No other theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage has equalled the number of consecutive performances played in this city attained by this wonderful film play. No other film play can approach in magnitude this stupendous spectacle of thrilling battle scenes, Sherman's march to the sea, the inspiring ride of the Ku Klux Klan, and the various episodes connected with the regime of the carpetbaggers in the South following the civil war, which necessitated the photographing of vast areas in the South and the employment of 18,000 persons and 800 horses.

Theatregoers will find at the Majestic the same augmented orchestra and the same comfortable environment which prevailed during the engagement at the Tremont.

...ow FROM New
...dRiverMass
4-11-15

...There are many pretty and clever singing and dancing girls, and the costumes and scenery are elaborate.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Tonight "The Birth of a Nation" makes its farewell appearance at the Savoy Theater. It is certain to be a memorable event for there will be in the audience not only all that the house can hold of those who are grasping this last opportunity, but there will be also many who are seeing the great spectacle for the second and even the third time. To the latter, it will mean bidding farewell to a production which could stand a hundred inspections; it means the withdrawal from Fall River of one of the most notable theatrical productions ever presented here.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN

SEP 12 1915

...atrons that patronize this house.

Majestic Theatre.

...orrow afternoon marks the ...77th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth ... tion," in this city, by far the greatest ...record of consecutive performances for any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage. After twenty-two weeks of capacity business at the Tremont Theatre the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatregoers all over New England that the engagement be extended that arrangements were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic Theatre, and during the past week crowded houses attested to the public's appreciation of this coninuation.

...ORCESTER (Mass.) TELEG... 1 ...
SEPT. 15, 1915

...ture is to be at one end of the long front veranda.

...GETS "BIRTH OF NATION."

S. Z. Poli Plans to Show Film at Elm-street House Two Weeks.

S. Z. Poli yesterday closed a contract with Lewis B. Mayer, president and general manager of the American feature company, for "The birth of a nation," to be shown on his New England circuit of photoplay houses.

"The birth of a nation" is Griffith's big masterpiece, which has been showing in New York and Boston to record business. It depicts the reconstruction period following the Civil war and historical incidents prior to that period.

The picture will be shown at the Elm-street theater two weeks, when the consent of Mayor George M. Wright has been obtained. Mr. Poli said yesterday he plans to have Worcester one of the first nine cities in the showing. When the picture is playing the Elm-street theater, there will be no vaudeville.

...M (Mass.) FREE PRESS
SEPT. 13, 1915

REALISM IN BIG FILM PLAY

"Birth of a Nation" Opens at the Scenic Today

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," as a first class theatrical attraction which has been crowding the houses all over the country at "two-dollar top" prices.

"The Birth of a Nation," which opens a three days' engagement at the Scenic Theatre today, is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred people are employed in the music and mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid, yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters hours' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Griffith plan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay in so far as spectacular features are concerned.

A few years ago we were wont to hear of photoplays as being "in their infancy." But "The Birth of a Nation" may be said to be the full grown adult of that infant, for it is hard to conceive of a greater achievement in moving picture projection. The marvellous scenes simply astound the spectator; they thrill him again and again with their magnitude, dash and realistic detail. Scenes are projected upon the screen that would seem almost impossible to produce, yet they are shown and because Mr. Griffith's master mind has made these wonders possible he has been placed in the list of a very few who are claimed to be "underpaid at $100,000 a year."

BOSTON TRAVELER
SEPT. 14, 1915

...Ted and Helen Clarke deserve great credit for their artistic dancing, and the musical comedy can well boast of the best music Bostonians have heard in many years.

Majestic Theatre

Boston's appreciation for the continuation of the engagement of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which began the 24th week of its record-breaking engagement in this city at the Majestic Theatre yesterday, is evidenced in the crowded houses which view this wonderful film play at every performance. From all indications large houses will be the rule for some weeks to come.

No film play ever produced can approach in magnitude this spectacle of the civil war times and the reconstruction period in the South. No end of painstaking research was necessary to stage the fac-similes of Ford's Theatre on the night of Lincoln's assassination; the Court House at Appomattox where Gen. Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant, and the local color essential to the staging of Southern life in the sixties. Thrill follows thrill as the pretty love story unfolds amid the stirring battle scenes, the destruction of whole towns and the wild night-riding of the Ku Klux Klan.

...ass.) N... ...
SEPT. 14, 1915 ...

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" BIGGEST SPECTACLE EVER

Two Packed Houses Saw First Performances of Now-Famous Film Play at Salem Theatre Yesterday and Came Away Satisfied; Mayor O'Keefe Sees Nothing to Censor.

"The birth of a nation," the much talked of motion picture, opened a week's engagement at the Salem theatre yesterday. Two big audiences greeted the screen production of the episodes of the civil war and reconstruction period, and were entertained with the most spectacular battle scenes, wild rides by the Ku Klux Klan, destruction of cities, Lincoln's assassination, etc., for a period of two and three-quarter hours. At the end, all were a unit in pronouncing the picture the biggest spectacle ever produced. Mayor O'Keefe at the close of the performance told Manager Fredericks that he saw nothing in the picture to censor. His honor seemed highly pleased with the picture as was everybody else. At times it was most pathetic and more than one person found tears trickling down her cheeks, while many a lump was felt in the throat.

To judge the production correctly one must see it, as it is enacted on a most elaborate scale. It was heralded as the premier production of filmdom and it certainly lives up to the reputation and a great deal more. To begin with

Some 18,000 People,

3000 horses and 5000 scenes were required in the producing. It took eight months to make the picture in the south and west. The advance notices said that cities were made and destroyed by fire and this cannot be denied, for during the battle engagements it is plainly seen that scores of buildings are destroyed and devasted by flames.

The wonderful artillery duels between the Confederate and Union armies with thousands of warriors is vividly illustrated along miles of trenches. The battle scenes are spectacular and hundreds of soldiers are seen lifeless where they have fallen. One of the most thrilling scenes in the wild ride of the Ku Klux tribe after the close of the war in their successful dash against the southern blacks. The pretty love affair between Col. Ben Cameron of the Confederate army and Elsie Stoneman, the northern girl, was most romantic and everyone seemed glad when the young officer ultimately won her hand.

The production is in two parts; the first deals with the negro race coming to the south and how the southerners used them as slaves in the cotton field and servants about their homes. The narrative is centred around Col. Ben Cameron and his people in a town in South Carolina. Ben Cameron is the eldest son of Dr. and Mrs. Cameron and has two brothers and two sisters. All play important parts in the story before it ends. Ben has just returned from boarding school and after a short stay at home invites his school boy chum, Phil Stoneman, from the north to his home. Phil is the oldest of three children, the other two being Tod and Elsie, the latter the heroine. They are the children of Hon. Austin Stoneman, leader of the House in Washington during the reign of President Lincoln. Phil and Tod Stoneman are next shown in the production arriving at the home of Ben and spending a most enjoyable time.

A Romance Develops

between the boys and girls.

Shortly after their departure for home the southern states seceded. President Lincoln is depicted in the capitol calling for 75,000 volunteers. Then are shown the most gruesome scenes of the entire production as the war is on and bloody hand-to-hand encounters are portrayed in every scene. The war shows the Union and Confederate forces marching to the battleground in a most pitiable state and on the verge of starvation and collapse.

The great march to the sea by General Sherman is handsomely illustrated, showing thousands of men in line on their long hike. The scenes are without doubt the finest war scenes ever presented on a canvas and the explosion of bombs and the heavy fire of artillery can easily be distinguished. The burning of dwellings and other buildings is also finely shown and the scenes generally make the audience recall Gen. Sherman's words "War is h—."

Then comes the end of the great strife with the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox. The actors here impersonate the big men of the war excellently. The quarters of Gen. Grant with Gen. Lee writing out his surrender and passing the document to Grant are shown. Next comes the rebuilding of the south with President Lincoln assisting in its uplift. The southerners are beginning to enthuse over the leading spirit when the president is assassinated in Ford's theatre, Washington. The shooting of the president is most pathetic. He is shown entering the theatre and taking his seat in the box with Mrs. Lincoln and army officers. His body guard left his post of duty only to have leave his seat in the audience to go to the president's box and fire point blank at him from behind. Booth makes a sensational escape after firing the fatal shot as he jumps from the box to the stage below and makes his escape from the stage exit. The assassination of the president closes the first part.

John Wilkes Booth

The second part tells of Hon. Austin Stoneman and his radical policy of making the black man the equal of the white man. He meets a mulatto by the name of Silas Lynch and introduces him to the statesmen as their equal. He furthers his interests by sending him to the town of Piedmont, South Carolina, the home of the Camerons, where he organizes the black men and is elected lieutenant governor by the black vote. The southern whites are not allowed to cast their ballots. Conditions got so desperate that the whites are practically their slaves as the blacks passed a vote in the house of representatives that if they desired they could Marry White Women.

Ultimately, after months of suffering, Col. Ben Cameron thinks of a scheme of organizing the Ku Klux Klansmen and after much hardship at the hands of the blacks finally conquers the black race. One of the most thrilling scenes at this point is the leap off the cliff by Ben Cameron's little sister, who was chased through the woods by Gus, a renegade negro, who wanted her to become his wife. The girl refused and after escaping from his clutches made a wild dash for liberty only to meet death in the jump from the cliff.

Another scene is the attempted forced marriage of Elsie Stoneman by Silas Lynch, who ruled the town and wanted her for his wife. Elsie was in love with Col. Ben, but had gone to the mulatto's quarters to plead for the life of Ben's father. She was an easy prisoner, once there, and the black forced his attentions on her, but she heroically refused to be his wife. Her father, who had placed the black in his position and was the direct cause of the negroes being in power, was congratulating Lynch upon selecting a white woman for his wife, never dreaming the girl was his own daughter. On learning this he refused, but Lynch was determined and held Stoneman and his daughter prisoners till the arrival of the Ku Klux tribe to their rescue.

Subsequent scenes show the end of the race war and the institutions that are in America at the present time, especially for the colored race. These scenes are of the educational type and show how the colored race has progressed since the dark days of the war.

L RIVER (Mass.)
SEPT. 13, 19

MINISTER TALKS ON "BIRTH OF NATION"

Rev. Clarence F. Swift, D. D., in Address at Central Congregational Church, Says Picture Tells Only Half Truth.

Dr. Clarence F. Swift, D. D., pastor of the Central Congregational church, in his address at the regular service here, last evening, branded "The Birth of a Nation" as a "false, hurtful, untimely, historically inaccurate, though wonderful spectacle," which makes more difficult for both blacks and whites the solving of the negro problem. In his foreward, Dr. Swift said that he agreed with the statement that the negro constitutes the most serious problem confronting the United States, and that he thought it proper to discuss in church the picture which had recently been shown at a local theatre because any means which brought the problem to the attention of the white public was worthy of consideration in the churches.

REV. CLARENCE F. SWIFT, D. D.

His address, in brief, follows:

There is nothing so false as a half-truth, masquerading as the whole truth,—and this is the falseness of The Birth of a Nation.

There is nothing so contemptibly hurtful as facts, even the truth, when needlessly paraded before the public to the injury of a race trying to rise to better things,—and this is the hurt of The Birth of a Nation.

I am somewhat puzzled, after watching the photo-play yesterday, as to the exact purpose for which the spectacle is presented. My interest centers in what it actually teaches,—the impressions it leaves, especially concerning the negro.

Purpose of Photo.

The purpose in this regard may be fairly guessed from the fact of its derivation from Dixon's "Clansman," for Dixon's avowed purpose is to belittle the negro, to make his stay in America as hard as possible, with a hint of impossible negro empire in some Libria. The known animus of Dixon discounts at the outset any confidence as to the accuracy of the pla

Forgetting, however, the origin, and taking the play as it is given, there are three parts.

First, there is the story of the nation through the Civil war up to the death of Lincoln. There can be no serious criticism of this part, though the bias of the Southerner crops out here and there. It is well for the North to realize the cost of the war to the innocent homes of the South.

Second, there is the spectacle of reconstruction.

Third, there is a fleeting glimpse of a different negro from that of the other parts, brought out by views from Hampton Institute.

This is a fine, brief, afterthought of somebody, true to the facts, impossible to reconcile with the impressions of part second. If part two were correct then part third would be a miracle of racial history. The last part is a good recompense for the false impression of the previous extended presentation.

Our interest centers in part second because it is this in which people are talking, and which they are taking as a correct presentation of reconstruction days. It is supposed to "true to life," whereas it is false to life in any large meaning. It is therefore open to serious criticism, both from the point of view of the believer in historical accuracy, and specially from the point of view of the believer in fair play for the negro, in his history and his future.

Only Half True.

There is nothing so false as half-truths when set forth as the whole truth. There is nothing more deceiving than facts,—isolated facts,—when they are presented as typical of a people or a period. If every incident portrayed in The Birth of a Nation actually happened, yet the impression it leaves would be false.

It gives a glimpse of slavery, of the happy peaceful animal existence under the kindly sway of the good owner,—it leaves no hint of the horrible barbarities of the heartless owner and brutal overseer.

It tells, and truly, of the insolent negro underling and the more insolent white overling in the treatment of white Southerners,—it has no hint of the brutal methods of intimidation practiced by Southern whites against colored voters, men of property, and education and character.

There is no apology possible for the wrongs of the "carpet-bag" regime. Federal control, under radical supervision, had its evils which it is wholesome for the North to understand. But there were men also of fine spirit and character among the federal officials. And it is a fair question, in view of the rules evolved by the Southern States just after the war for the control of the negro,—compulsory labor, with written contracts and prescribed wages,—how soon slavery, apart from federal control, would have been re-established in fact, though under a new form.

The Ku Klux Klan is glorified as the saviour of the white civilization of the South. It has to its credit some fine deeds of characteristic Southern chivalry. But we have no hint, in the play, of the brutal excesses of the Klans, of the lynching of many negroes on suspicion, who were later proven innocent.

Quotes Pres. Wilson.

Woodrow Wilson, whose sentences adorn the screen of the photo-play, says of the Ku Klux Klan, in his History of the American People, "Brutal crimes were committed; the innocent suffered with the guilty; a reign of terror was brought on, and society was infinitely more disturbed than defended. Law seemed oftentimes given over."

The play regales one with suggestions of the brutal lust of the vagabond negro, and the unhallowed alliance of Stoneman with his negro mistress. If we must be reminded of these unsavory items, it is only fair that we should not forget the unholy lust of the Southern whites in their relations with defenseless negro women. This is the fact which Booker Washington had in mind when he spoke of Africa as the "land of his foremothers."

These are not pleasant truths, but if a period and a people are to be portrayed, all the essential facts should be shown.

If we are to do the negro justice, we can take into account not only the facts, or even the truth, but the extenuating conditions. He came to America, in 1620, against his will, on a slave ship. His 250 years of slavery were not good for cultivating manhood and womanhood.

But the most serious criticism to be made against the Birth of a Nation, so far as it affects the negro, is that it is so belated, so abortive, so out of date.

Nothing is more hurtful than facts of the past, paraded before the public when they serve no good purpose, when they make the task of a man or a people more hard, and should be forgotten.

When Hurt is Contemptible.

And when these needless and hurtful facts are thus paraded with the apparent purpose of making the progress more difficult when the hurt becomes contemptible is like advertising a man's prison record when he has reformed and is trying to make an honest living.

The tendency of the pictures is to exait racial antagonism, to "read into the negro problem as we face it today all the wrong in the situation during the days of reconstruction," and thus to make more difficult the task of the future for both black man and white.

The only settlement of the negro problem will come along the way of Burns' fine doctrine,

"A man's a man, for a' that."

There must be respect for personality, as such. Men must be treated as individuals, not as a race. In civil rights, educational opportunity, industrial possibilities, the lines must be horizontal, not perpendicular. The doors must be kept open for all worth, white and black, and closed, if at all, against all unworth black and white.

We must emphasize the facts so meagerly, though finely, presented at the close of the photo-play, so splendidly made known in the great "Lincoln Jubilee Exposition" at the Coliseum at Chicago.

The door should be kept open for the negro, and the negro should be helped in his struggle to make himself worthy to enter the door.

The Birth of a Nation makes [illegible] of these things more difficult.

ON JOURNAL
SEPT. 18, 1915

"Nobody Home" will spend two weeks more at the Wilbur. This will really be in the nature of an extended engagement, due to the strong showing made here by this extremely stylish production, which is notable especially for its wealth of comedy and dancing. Lawrence Grossmith, Adele Rowland, Tom Graves, Charles Judels, Maude Odell, Quentin Tod, Helen Clark and Nigel Barrie lend distinction to the performance.

"The Birth of a Nation" will celebrate its [illegible] consecutive Boston performance at the Majestic Theatre next Monday afternoon. This is the remarkable Griffith photo-production with Civil War scenes and a romantic background furnishing opportunities to such capable players as Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Mary Alden and other film favorites discovered and developed by the master producer.

BURLESQUE SHOWS

[illegible] Ribbon Belles [illegible]

WALTHAM (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 14, 1915

MAJESTIC THEATRE

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Tomorrow afternoon marks the 289th performance of D. W Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" in this city, by far the greatest number of consecutive performances for any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage. After twenty weeks of capacity business at the Tremont Theatre the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatre-goers all over New England, that the engagement be extended that arrangements were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic Theatre and during the past two weeks crowded houses attested to the public's appreciation of this continuation.

There is little to be said of the picture itself that has not already been said many times. In rapid sequence, one scene follows another, scenes in the North and South before the Civil War, during it and immediately following it. The scene of Lincoln's assassination and dark days of the reconstruction period in the South during the regime of the carpet-baggers and the various thrilling battle scenes presented on a most stupendous scale are miracles of photography and necessiated the use of large areas in the South and the employment of 18,000 persons and 3000 horses. The scenes of Sherman's march to the sea, the wild ride of the Klu Klux Klan, and the destruction of whole towns occasion hearty outbursts of enthusiasm at every performance. A wonderful picture in every respect is the unanimous opinion of all those who have seen it.

At the Majestic Theatre patrons will find the same augmented orchestra and comfortable environment which prevailed during the long run at the Tremont Theatre and judging by the attendances the past week, "The Birth of a Nation" is in for another long run. Performances will be given every afternoon and evening and seats may be procured for two weeks in advance.

WALTHAM (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 15, 1915

[illegible] street has given up his position with the Armour Beef Company.

—If there was any question as to the popularity of "The Birth of a Nation" and the anxiety of Waltham people to witness this magnificent spectacle, it would have been dispelled by a glance at the crowd which filled the Scenic Theatre last evening. Notwithstanding the torrid atmosphere, which was anything but conducive to turning people's thoughts theatreward, the house was taxed to its utmost capacity. Tonight is the last opportunity that Waltham people will have of seeing this stupendous production, one of the most alluring that has yet been seen on any film.

—The executive committee of the Watch City League met last evening and did some business, refunding forfeitures and winding up the routine affairs of the season.

SEPT. 14, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION WINS MUCH PRAISE

Famous Photoplay Given First Productions at the Scenic.

Waltham playgoers were treated to a new sensation yesterday when "The Birth of a Nation," the remarkable historical photoplay, arranged for the films and enlarged from Thomas Dixon's book, "The Clansmen," was given its first presentations at the Scenic Theatre. The playhouses in the State where a picture play of this magnitude can be given are few in number, outside of Boston, but the management of the Scenic demonstrated that it was equal to the occasion. The production was staged with first-class effect, the screen being moved well back on the stage, enabling a fine set-off for the stirring and dramatic pictures. An excellent orchestra of 20 pieces enhanced the attractiveness of the play.

"The Birth of a Nation" itself needs no comment. Its long run of 34 weeks at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, and its continued popularity at the Majestic, shows that it is a powerful play, well deserving the title of the greatest photoplay ever produced. It is the story of the reconstruction of the country at the close of the Civil War, depicting in vivid, and often harrowing details, the disadvantages under which the conquered States were obliged to labor in their efforts to rebuild what had been torn down during the great conflict.

Perhaps to the average playgoer the magnificent reality of the battle scenes, the cannonading, the charge and repulse, the grand army of General Sherman on its march to the sea and the wild ride of the Ku Klux Klan, made the strongest appeal. At this particular time, when the eye is daily caught and surfeited by the horrors of war on European battlefields, the manner in which the real tragedies of the battlefield are brought home by the realism of the films, is timely and educating.

The setting of the slender plot of the play is beyond praise. The acting of the leading characters is what was to be expected from their reputations and there are no disappointing features, due, of course, to the marvelous care and pains expended on the preparation of the films. The management of the Scenic is to be congratulated on having secured this production. A house filled to overflowing, is already assured for the remainder of the engagement, which ends Wednesday night.

A large number of invited guests, including Mayor Kearns of this city, Mayor Childs of Newton, ex-Mayor Hatfield of Newton, Chief Fred Mitchell of the Newton police, Superintendent Lally of the public buildings department, Chairman Gleason Wood of the recreation board and Chief McKenna of the Waltham police, were placed in the orchestra seats, as the rearrangement of the stage forbade the use of the boxes.

LY (Mass.) TIMES
SEPT. 14, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION.

...endous Production on at the ... Theatre, Salem.

"The Birth of a Nation" cannot be exaggerated. It is too tremendous, too gigantic for that. Eighteen thousand people were used in telling the story, 3000 horses and countless guns, shells, etc., utilized in its massive battle scenes. Two years' time was consumed in its making and the approximate cost has been $500,000.

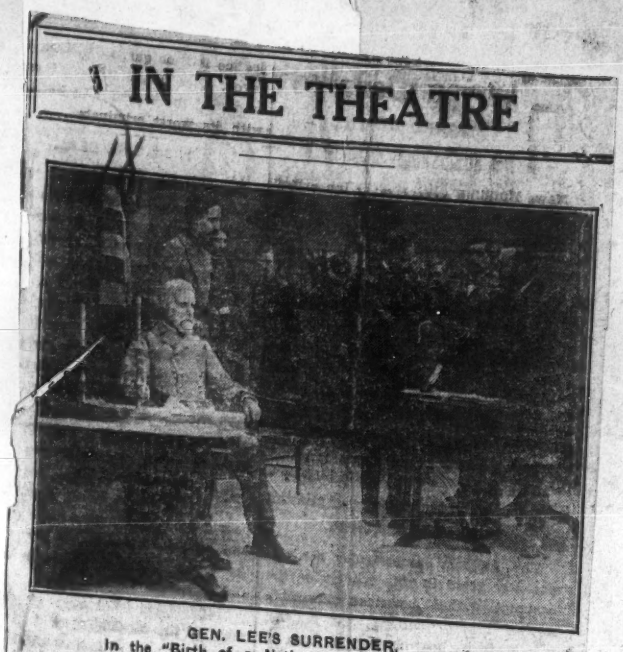
Imagine a pictorial production of love, romance and history, including tremendous battle scenes the equal of which have never yet been shown upon a screen; image such scenes as the burning of Atlanta; Sherman's march to the Sea; Grant and Lee at Appomattox; the thrilling rides of the KuKlux Klan; entire cities built up and destroyed by fire; the assassination of Lincoln at Lord's theatre, Washington; wonderful artillery duals in which real shells costing $80 apiece were used; miles and miles of trenches with thousands of fighters; cavalry charges; infantry charges; deeds of heroism on the field of battle; imagine hundreds of such mighty scenes as these and there you have "The Birth of a Nation" the pinnacle of filmed spectacles.

This truly wonderful photo-drama will be shown at the Salem theatre, Salem, all this week and is positively the same production as is now playing in Boston, New York and Chicago.

Seats for this engagement are on sale at the box office and may be secured for any performance by calling, Salem, 8121.

EWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 14, 1915 621

IN THE THEATRE



GEN. LEE'S SURRENDER.
In the "Birth of a Nation" at the Premier Thursday.

ON JOURNAL
SEPT. 16, 1915

SON-DRAM-ORAMA

By E. F.

With the exception of "The Birth of a Nation," which is celebrating at the Majestic Theatre the 24th consecutive week of its unexampled run, the rule in the picture houses is to make weekly or semi-weekly changes.

Thus at the Boston today the new week-end bill will be topped off by the film version of one of the Porter Emerson Browne plays, "The Spendthrift," Irene Fenwick, leading woman of "The Song of Songs" company, which is in the midst of a three weeks' engagement at the Tremont, is also leading woman in "The Spendthrift" film. F. X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow are coming to the Boston on Monday in "The Silent Voice."

At the Park next week the double bill will have two distinguished stars of the male gender, Lou-Tellegen, who is making his screen debut in a picture play called "The Explorer," and John Mason, who is showing his art before the camera for the first time in a new setting of the old English melodrama, "Jim the Penman." Mr. Mason was the Capt. Redwood in the revival briefly enjoyed of Sir Charles Young's play some five years ago. Lou-Tellegen is the young actor who was formerly leading man in Bernhardt's company.

CY (Mass.) TELEGRAM
SEPT. 15, 1915 751

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Marvelous Spectacle in its 25th Consecutive Week in Boston, at Majestic Theatre

To-morrow afternoon marks the 289th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" in this city, by far the greatest number of consecutive performances of any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage. After twenty weeks of capacity business at the Tremont Theatre the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatre goers all over New England, that engagement be extended that arrangement were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic Theatre and during the past two weeks crowded houses attested to the public's appreciation of this continuation.

There is little to be said of the picture itself that has not already been said many times. In rapid sequence, on scene follows another, scenes in the North and South before the Civil War, during it and immediately following it. The scene of Lincoln's assassination and the dark days of the reconstruction period in the South brings the regime of the carpetbaggers and the various thrilling battle scenes presented on a most stupendous scale are miracles of photography and necessitated the use of large areas in the South for employing 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses. The scenes of Sherman's march to the sea, the wild ride of the Ku Klux Klsn, and the destruction of whole towns occasion hearty outbursts of enthusiasm at every performance. A wonderful picture in every respect is the uanimous opinion of all those who have seen it.

At the Majestic Theatre patrons will find the same augmented orchestra and comfortable environment which prevailed during the long run at Tremont Theatre and judging by the attendances the past week, "The Birth of a Nation" is in for another long run. Performances will be given every afternoon and evening and seats may be procured for two weeks in advance.

...s) TELEGRAM
SEPT. 14, 1915 482

ENTERS ON 24TH WEEK IN BOSTON

Birth of a Nation Removes To Majestic Theatre To Continue Run

Boston and New England simply would not allow to leave Boston D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which was seen for 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre by nearly half the population of Boston, and the past week at the Majestic, making its 23d big week in Boston.

The 24th week began yesterday. So insatiable has been the desire of the theatre-going population of New England to see more of this marvelous $500,000 production, and so forcible and overwhelming the demand for a longer stay of it in this city that arrangements had to be made for another ...atre as its Boston home. And so ... Majestic Theatre becomes the for... ate pos-sessor of "The Birth of a Nation," as an attraction for a limited additional stay in Boston.

There have been very few instances in the history of the Boston stage of engagements of a theatrical attraction for such a prolonged stay. It is nearly half a year now that this "8th wonder of the world" has been presented continuously in Boston, every afternoon and evening for six days of each week and still crowded houses characterizes every presentation of the thrilling and realistic scenes which are so closely associated with the development and progress of the United States of America as a nation, before the Civil War, during it, and immediately after it, during the reconstruction period.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
SEPT. 18, 1915

...store send us 10c and we will send you a box prepaid.
THE GEORGE CLOSE COMPANY
244 Broadway, Cambridge, Mass
a 18,20,o 9,20,30(R)

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Majestic—The Birth of a Nation F F

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope, that for twenty-four weeks has held one or another Boston stage, The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion-pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and the Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

N TRAVELER
SEPT. 18, 1915

...their Graecian dancing. The choruses, costumes, scenery and ... of "Nobody Home" are ... most fastidious playgoer ... could wish for. Miss Elsie De Wolfe is ... stage decorations, which are the ... thing in interior decorating.

"The Birth of a Nation" F F

With the 288th consecutive performance in Boston of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic next Monday afternoon, this mighty spectacle starts on its 25th week in this city and has achieved the distinction of having been given more times in Boston than any other theatre attraction in the history of the city.

Every American heart thrills with enthusiasm over this offering which combines pictorial spectacle, music and realistic effects in a stirring drama of the civil war crisis, interspersed with lively comedy and heightened with charming love romances of the Blue and the Grey. There are such historic scenes as the battle of Gettysburg, Sherman's march to the sea, the last stand at Petersburg, the assassination of President Lincoln, Lee's surrender to Grant, the tragic and wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans and the destruction of entire cities by fire.

...publi...
...mation.

L RIVER (Mass.)
SEPT. 13, 19
314

SALEM (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 15, 1915
819

THE THEATRES

Attendance at Empire Light Due to Heat; Show, However, Is Good One; Offerings at Other Houses.

If the weather man ever gets over his grouch against the Empire theatre and turns off the heat, Salem theatre-goers will have a good and reasonable excuse for their presence at the and an underworld man effects a reunion.

"The ace of hearts," in two reels by Domino, features Walter Edwards. A very strong drama showing how by accident a policeman finds the guilty man, and by a lucky snow-drift overpowers him, and frees a friend who was held on suspicion.

"Old Mother Gray," a sort of juvenile drama in one reel by Reliance, features Leddy Sampson as Madge. Relatives of "Old Mother Gray," who has inherited a fortune, try to have her adjudged insane, but Madge, a [illegible] the catastrophe, making the old [illegible] the children of the neighborhood, who [illegible] her

Sherman's March to the Sea in "The Birth of a Nation" at Salem Theatre

BOSTON POST
SEPT. 19, 1915

entitled "Bed, Beautiful Bed." Adele Rowland [illegible] most captivating. Quentin Tod and Helen Clarke are [illegible] Boston has ever had. They have youth, beauty and grace, and exhibit the smartest thing in modern dancing

St. James Theatre

The great extemporaneous poet and singer, Rob Hall, originator of "ad lib" poesy on the stage, will be the headline attraction at Loew's St. James Theatre the first three days of the coming week. Hall never does the same thing twice on the stage, and never knows when he goes on what he is going to do. He opens with a poem telling intimate facts concerning the acts which have preceded him on the bill, and then asks the audience to suggest titles of songs, and subjects for him to construct rhymes as he goes along. The clever new drama, "When It Strikes Home," showing an incident in the down town quarter of New York involving a girl who went wrong, a young police reporter and a sergeant of detectives, will be another attraction. Others will include Van and Hazen, and the Max Oben troupe of 12 Arabian whirling acrobats. The bill the last half of the week will be headed by Darrell and Conway. Others will include Charles Hart, the blackface funmaker; W. J. Holmes and Iva Holliston; and the Carl Daman troupe of foot jugglers and acrobats.

Salem Mass
9-15

SALEM THEATRE

Never has such interest been shown in filmdom as there has been the past two days at the Salem theatre where the gigantic spectacle "The birth of a nation" is being presented on its week's engagement. Greater [illegible] ities seem to be carried away with production and all day yesterday there was a steady stream of humanity in line waiting to purchase tickets.

That Salem appreciates the production is evidenced by the capacity houses that have already greeted the picture. Despite the intense heat yesterday every seat in the playhouse was filled and the patrons came away perfectly satisfied with what they saw. If the advance sale of tickets can be taken as a criterion "The birth of a nation" could run for several weeks here and have patronage. The production is in two parts and the wildest of scenes are enacted.

The Symphony orchestra of [illegible] piece of Boston renders an elaborate musical program while the picture is being shown and the effects are most marvelous as the musicians have studied the picture and know what to play appropriate selections. This is one of the many features and helps materially in the presentation.

WORCESTER [illegible] TELEGRAM
SEPT.

WEYMOUTH (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
SEPT. 17, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Marvelous Spectacle in its 25th Consecutive Week in Boston, at Majestic Theatre.

Tomorrow afternoon marks the 289th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in this city, by far the greatest number of consecutive performances for any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage. After twenty weeks of capacity business at the Tremont theatre the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatre-goers all over New England that the engagement be extended that arrangements were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic theatre and during the past two weeks crowded houses attested to this public's appreciation of this continuation.

GLOUCESTER (Mass.) TIMES
SEPT. 15, 1915
3

Globe-Democrat.

AMONG THE PLAYHOUSES.

"Birth of a Nation" at Salem Theatre.

In motion pictures one always gets the original cast, which is one point worth considering in "The Birth of a Nation," which is shown all this week, matinees daily, at the Salem theatre. In producing "The Birth of a Nation," which is at present doing sensational business all over the country, the selection of players must have been a most trying and serious problem for Mr. Griffith, as the range of players and characters and the work they had to perform covered a multitude of things that could not have been imposed upon ordinary workers in drama and musical comedy.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the greatest sensational success in stage annals of the world. For the first time in film spectacles one sees in a single masterpiece 6000 scenes of gigantic magnitude; 18,000 characters; 3000 horses all in a production which cost a little over $500,000 to produce.

Cities were built up and then destroyed by fire. The biggest battle of the Civil war is re-enacted. Ford's theatre, Washington is reproduced to the smallest detail of the Lincoln Tragedy. A series of wild Ku Klux "rides" are shown that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000. Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux costumes 25,000 yards of cloth. Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells, costing $80 apiece, were used; miles of trenches; thousands of fighters show "War as it really is." Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at a cost of $5000 is shown.

A musical score for an enlarged orchestra, perfectly synchronized to the thousands of distinct and individual scenes, perfect to the instant adds still more to the production, making altogether the most stupendous dramatic and spectacular enterprise ever conceived by the brain of man.

[illegible] (Mass.) MORN HERALD

[illegible] week matinee at popular prices.

Majestic Theatre

Tomorrow afternoon at the Majestic Theatre the 288th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given, starting the 25th week of this attraction in Boston. In number of consecutive performances ever given in Boston this attraction eclipses all records. The opportunity is given to occupy a reserved seat in a grand stand, which commands a view of such historic scenes as the actual Battle of Gettysburg, Sherman's March to Sea, the last stand at Petersburg, the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, Lee's Surrender to Grant, the tragic and wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans, the destruction of entire cities by fire, artillery duels, miles of trench fighting, in

[illegible] (Mass.) TIMES
SEPT. 16, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Marvelous Spectacle in its 25th Consecutive Week in Boston, at Majestic Theatre

Tomorrow afternoon marks the 289th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" in Boston, by far the greatest number of consecutive performances for any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage. After twenty weeks of capacity business at the Tremont Theatre the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatre-goers all over New England, that the engagement be extended that arrangements were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic Theatre and during the past two weeks crowded houses attested to the public's appreciation of this continuation.

There is little to be said of the picture itself that has not already been said many times. In rapid sequence, one scene follows another, scenes in the North and South before the City War, during it and immediately following it.

At the Majestic Theatre patrons will find the same augmented orchestra and comfortable environment which prevailed during the long run at the Tremont Theatre and judging by the attendances the past week, "The Birth of a Nation" is in foranother long run. Performances will be given every afternoon and evening and seats may be procured for two weeks in advance.

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Mayor to See Photoplay Before Taking Any Stand.

Mayor [illegible] M. Wright will see the photoplay, "The birth of a nation," in Providence, Friday. Before taking any stand on the showing of the picture in Worcester, the mayor wants to see it.

There have been some protests. In some cases these protests have been sincere. In others they simply amount to an effort to continue the fine publicity work carried on in Boston. Mayor Wright has been told that many protests are only paid publicity work.

The loudest protest thus far has come from a man who admits that he has never seen the picturized version of "The clansman." The mayor received word this week that a Chicago Superior court judge enjoined the mayor and city government from stopping the play. The judge held that the play is not an undue reflection on any race.

BOSTON AMERICAN
SEPT. 19, 1915

JOHN BROWN ON FARRAR'S PICTURE.

Not even the "Birth of a Nation" has created more furor than the picture of Geraldine Farrar in Carmen which will be shown at Symphony Hall October 1. Miss Farrar is to be present, and will rehearse the film as hard as she ever rehearsed an opera. She has set great stress upon the importance of the big airs from Carmen occurring at the proper moments in the picture, and the orchestra of fifty pieces will have a lot to do.

The other day, in discussion of the effect upon the box office the appearance of legitimate stars in motion pictures will have, I asked John Brown, business manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company, whether he thought these picture would affect the drawing powers of Farrar in opera and concert.

"In most cases I would say that it would," he replied. "But I have seen this picture, and I assure you that those who are led to see Farrar play 'Carmen' will never rest until they hear her in opera or concert."

Such sentiments from a business man of Mr. Brown's calibre is by far the best testimonial to the Farrar pictures that I have encountered.

[illegible] GLOBE and Quentin [illegible] have youth, beauty and grace and exhibit the smartest thing in modern dancing. The music of "Nobody Home" is pleasing, the chorus girls are comely and the costumes and stage

"Birth of a Nation" Pictures at the Majestic

Tomorrow afternoon, at the Majestic Theatre, the 289th performance of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given, starting the 25th week of this attraction in Boston.

The pictures graphically reproduce such historic scenes as the Battle of [illegible] March to the Sea, the last stand at Petersburg, the Assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, Lee's Surrender to Grant and vividly show the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans, the destruction of entire cities by fire, wonderful artillery duels, miles of trench fighting and, in fact, war as it actual[illegible]

Traveler
aug 12th.

SALEM SYNDICATE BUYS 'NATION' FILM RIGHT FOR $50,000

New England rights to reproduce the sensational film drama "The Birth of a Nation" have been sold to a Salem film syndicate for $50,000, it was announced today. Among those to buy these rights were Samuel D. Kerr of Salem, Coleman Levin of Boston, William Mann of Boston and Louis B. Mayer, owner of the Haverhill Theatre and booking agent for this syndicate.

Record
aug
13

$52,000 PRICE PAID BY SYNDICATE FOR "BIRTH OF NATION"

A syndicate has paid $52,000 for New England rights to "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith photo-play based on "The Clansman," which has had a long run at the Tremont Theatre.

The syndicate is composed of Coleman Levin and William Mann of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Mayer of Haverhill. The films will be shown in Worcester, New Bedford, Providence and other cities. A permit has been granted in Providence, but refused in Springfield.

Transcript
aug 12th

RECORD PRICE FOR A FILM

New England Rights Over "Birth of a Nation," Which Excited Boston Negroes, Have Been Sold, According to Report

Fifty-two thousand dollars has been paid by a small syndicate for the New England rights to the "Birth of a Nation," according to reports circulated this afternoon. The report could not be verified in Boston, the statement being made that any authoritative announcement would have to come from the New York office. In fact, the Boston manager doubted if any such purchase had been made.

This sum is probably the largest price ever paid for New England rights to a single motion-picture film. Among the purchasers, it is said, are Coleman Levin and William Mann, both of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Mayer of Haverhill. Although the purchase is understood to become effective immediately, control of the Boston rights does not go into the hands of the reported purchasers until after the close of the present engagement at the Tremont Theatre. It is rumored the purchasers have been offerd $35,000 for their right already. The films, it is stated, will be exhibited at Worcester, New Bedford and Providence and in other cities. Permit to show the film, with the objectionable features that caused so much discussion here alliminated, has been granted in Providence.

Journal
aug 13

BUY RIGHTS TO "BIRTH OF NATION"

The New England rights to the "Birth of a Nation" have been sold to a syndicate for $52,000, according to reports circulated in Boston yesterday afternoon, but which could not be verified. The Boston management announced that any authoritative statement would have to come from the New York office.

The sum is probably the largest ever paid for the New England rights to a single motion-picture film. Interested persons claim that among the purchasers are Coleman Levin and William Mann of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Lewis B. Mayer of Haverhill.

It is stated that the film will be shown at Worcester, New Bedford, Providence and other cities.

Poster paper

THAM (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 17, 1915 91

SCENIC KEEPS UP ITS HIGH STANDARD

After a record breaking half-week with "The Birth of a Nation" at the Scenic Theatre, the regulation vaudeville and photoplays were resumed yesterday. Notwithstanding the intense heat outside, the Scenic was as cool as the proverbial cucumber. Whether anyone knows the exact temperature of this succulent vegetable it cannot be said here, but it is perfectly safe to infer that the mercury didn't fall below zero. A red-hot program served to accentuate the difference, resulting in shocks of pleasure from start to finish. It would hardly be fair to give a detailed account, since everybody is better pleased with having an opportunity to enjoy unlooked-for sensations. A slight change was noted last night by the substitution of Jack Wallace and his trained cuckatoo, White Eagle for another act. This beautiful bird won instant favor with the audience and was given a rousing recall at the finish.

The roller skating and comic antics of Coogan and Gilman kept the audience in roars of laughter but quite astonished at the remarkably clever stunts performed on roller skates.

Miss Whiteside and her Pickaninnies surpassed expectations with her goodly store of excellent comedy, picturesque costumes, plantation melodies and the general magnetism and vivacity of it all. In addition the great big program of feature photoplays made up a mammoth three-hour entertainment that bubbled over with interesting details from overture to curtain.

Recorder
Needham-Mass.
9-14-15.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

To-mirrow afternoon marks the 289th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" in this city, by far the greatest number of consecutive performances for any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage.

There is little to be said of the picture itself that has not already been said many times. In rapid sequence, one scene follows another, scenes in the North and South before the Civil War, during it and immediately following it. The scene of Lincoln's assassination and the dark days of the reconstruction period in the South during the regime of the carpetbaggers and the various thrilling battle scenes presented in a most stupendous scale are miracles of photography and necessitated the use of large areas in the South and the employment of 18,000 persons and 3000 horses. The scenes of Sherman's march to the sea and the wild ride of the Ku Klux Klan, and the destruction of whole towns occasin hearty outbursts of enthusiasm at every performance. A wonderful picture in every respect is the unanimous opinion of all those who have seen it.

At the Majestic theatre patrons will find the same augmented orchestra and comfortable environment which prevailed during the long run at the Tremont theatre and judging by the attendances the past week, "The Birth of a Nation" is in for another long run. Performances will be given every afternoon and evening and seats may be procured for two weeks in advance.

—Mrs. Frank Pulsifer has gone to Waterville, Maine, for a visit among relatives.

BRYANTVILLE (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 16, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation" the sensational and spectacular Griffith production of the Civil War period, in twelve parts based on the book "The Clansman" breathes the spirit of that well-known work. The two great outstanding features of it are its controversial spirit and splendor and the magnificence of its production. Taken as a whole it is the most tremendous offering ever projected.

This spectacular production will be presented at the Old Colony Theatre, three days commencing Monday, Sept. 20; daily matinees will be given for the benefit of those living in the suburbs—or a special car will be run providing a party can be arranged. This production is warranted to be equal to that shown in Boston and at popular prices of 25—50—75 and $1.00. Seats now on sale.

MANCHESTER (Mass.) BREEZE
SEPT. 17, 1915 5

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

To-morrow afternoon marks the 289th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" in Boston by far the greatest number of consecutive performances for any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage. After twenty weeks of capacity business at the Tremont Theatre the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatregoers all over New England, that the engagement be extended that arrangements were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic Theatre and during the past two weeks crowded houses attested to the public's appreciation of this continuation.

LYOKE (Mass.) TELEGRAM
SEPT. 18, 1915 4

SUFFOLK THEATER REFUSES PICTURE

Hammond Will Not Show "Birth of a Nation."

Would Have to Charge $2 a Seat—Contract Gives House But 25 Per Cent of Receipts.

Theater goers will be interested in the announcement made today by Manager George Hammond of the Suffolk theater to the effect that his house will not show the "Birth of the Nation" as was previously announced. Mr. Hammond has just returned from Boston where he met the manager of the big film and after a lengthy conversation with that person came to the conclusion that the Suffolk theater did not want to show the film.

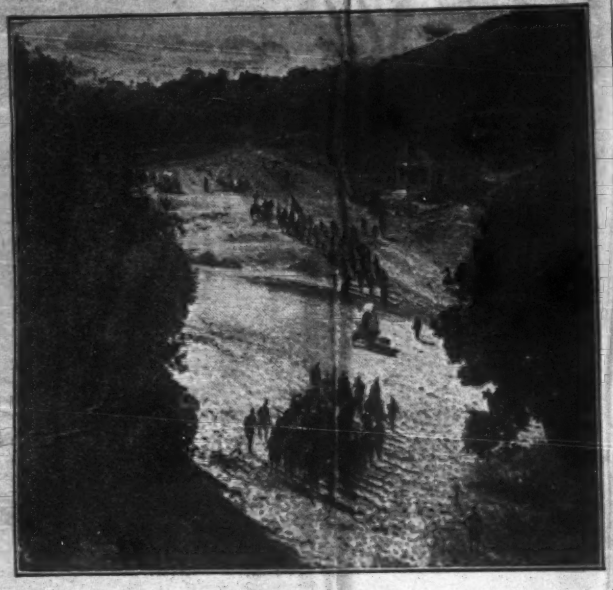
The local manager says that his house is doing a very good business and that he has a patronage that comes week in and week out to see his big bill and that by putting in this picture he would deprive these people of their favorite stars for two weeks. But his was not the big reason for his refusal to show the film, he declared.

He had planned to play the "Birth of the Nation" at popular prices that would be within the reach of all classes, but the management of the film showed him a contract that would compel him to charge $2 a seat and he would be allowed but 25 per cent of his house, while the owners of the film would get 75 per cent.

Out of his one-fourth he would have an expense of about $400 for billing the show and would have to put in a 15-piece orchestra. He must pack his house each night for the two weeks at the $2 rate his profit would be less than were he to continue with his regular bill and besides, he pointed out, he would deprive his steady customers of seeing their favorites for two weeks.

L RIVER (Mass.)
SEPT. 13, 19 D 314

PLYMOUTH (Mass.) MEMORIAL 702
SEPT. 17, 1915



Sherman's March to the Sea

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Wonderful Photoplay Coming to the Old Colony Theatre.

The much-talked-about screen spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," an historical drama in two gigantic parts, founded on Thomas Dixon's famous story "The Clansman," comes to the Old Colony Theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 20, 21, 22.

A picturesque note is struck at the very beginning, for young women in crinolines and pantalets, with flowing curls, will distribute programs in the foyer as the patrons enter for their seats.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a triumph in photography upon which the producer, Mr. D. W. Griffith, and his associates may well plume themselves. As a spectacle it is unrivalled by any other production ever presented. In no other production has there been such effective concerted action, such extraordinary achievements in perspective.

The photo-marvel is much more than an engrossing entertainment. The first part is an eloquent and impassioned protest against the horrors of warfare. The tragic leave takings, the wrecking of homes, the broken ties, the fearful sights on the battlefield are depicted with relentless fidelity. The flower of American youth is shown going forth from Northern and Southern homes to certain destruction in the terrific conflict which rages with appalling realism. The calamity in Europe is brought home with sickening vividness.

The picture is valuable as a lesson in history, for besides the decisive battles of the Civil War, Lee's surrender to Grant, Sherman's march to the sea (one of the finest pictures), the burning of Atlanta, the assassination of President Lincoln, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan are among the incidents pictured, and here it might be well to state that some of the most wonderful and reckless riding is shown by hundreds of these daring horsemen.

There is, of course, an exciting plot which concerns the Cameron and Stoneman families, respectively of the South and North. There is romance and tragedy, and in the second part of the pictur thrilling melodrama. Here, Flora Cameron, terrified by Gus, a renegade Negro, jumps from a high cliff to her death. Her brother, Col. Ben Cameron, swears revenge, and this enables the producers to show the activities and ceremonies of the Ku Klux. The play teaches an exciting climax in which the Ku Klux is triumphant and villainy punished.

It is difficult to pick and choose among the most striking pictures. The war scenes, the remarkable representation of Ford's Theater, with views in turn of the audience, the play in progress and the President's box, the sheeted Ku Klux riders hastening on their deeds, the mob scenes, the happy plantation life which preceded the war.

The cast, too, is excellent, each member was individually striking in facial play and pantomime. Young Ben Cameron is a picturesque hero, and the Misses Marsh, Cooper and Gish rival each other in daintiness and girlish charm. Mr. Seigmann is a stalwart and insinuating villain. Mr. Henaberry's portrayal of Abraham Lincoln is effective in make up and bearing. Miss Lee provides comic relief.

Mr. Griffith, himself a southerner, in producing this marvelous pictorial spectacle, must have had for his object a desire to produce a subject that would equal in eloquence the spoken word.

A feature, in fact, a big feature of the performance, is the musical score, which is rendered in conjunction with the production synchronized with every action and scene, and presented by a picked orchestra of twelve concert players.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
SEPT. 21, 1915

The club is contemplating [illegible] operative work for the coming year, both in food-stuffs, farming implements and other essentials. The public is cordially invited to the meetings.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" RIOT.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 21.—The district-attorney's office has begun an investigation to determine the identity of the persons who instigated the agitation that last night resulted in a riot between 500 negroes and 100 policemen in front of the Forrest Theatre, where the photo play "Birth of a Nation" is being shown. Many heads were cracked.

TAUNTON (Mass.) GAZETTE
SEPT. 18, 1915

ACROSS THE FOOTLIGHTS

Auditorium

A crowded house last night at the Auditorium greeted Nance O'Neil in "The Princess Romanoff." This wonderful feature picture is in six full reels and is probably one of the most interesting photoplays ever produced. Four other pictures are shown and include Billy Ritchie in "Life and Moving Pictures," in two reels; "Quits," "The Bogus Baron," and the Animated Weekly. The vaudeville list is up to the usual high standard and is made up of Charlie Brown, Taunton's favorite [illegible]endor; Bud Shepard, "the Charlie Chaplin of vaudeville;" and Maria Lauro, the girl with the golden voice. The same bill will be repeated this afternoon and evening.

An entire change of program will be given on Monday and will be made up of Marie Tempest, in "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," in five reels; "Chasing the Limited," "Dan Cupid, Jr.," and "The Trust." The vaudeville part of the bill will include the Bartlemes, who style themselves The Upside Down Comedians," George Mack, singing, talking and dancing, and Charlie, in [illegible] bits.

The afternoon performances start at 2 and are continuous till 4:30, and the evening from 7 till 10:15.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith's big picture, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Park theatre, Middleboro, Mass. There will be a big orchestra of ten pieces and a chorus behind the scenes, while several very beautiful girls will act as ushers to furnish local color, etc.

The picture is a dramatization of Dixon's "The Clansman." Its chief incidents are historic. The incident of the negro is responsible for the formation of the Klu-Klux Klan, which chases the carpet-baggers out of the south and rehabilitates the Southland.

Few people know into what a lamentable situation the South fell nearly ten years after Appomatox. The whites were disfranchised because of their part in the war and Southern states were governed by a combination of newly franchised negroes and carpet-baggers from the North, whose main object was loot. How the whites of the South regained control of the country is one of the most dramatic passages in our history.

"The Birth of a Nation" is said to contain 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. Nothing so spectacular has yet been shown upon the screen. For the first time in the history of film art you see the great historical conflict pass before you—the burning of Atlanta, Sherman's march to the sea, victory of the North, Grant and Lee at Appomatox, Reconstruction troubles, love and romance of history, tremendous battle scenes, the Lincoln tragedy, dauntless rides of the Klu-Klux Klan; tender, domestic drama and charming comedy and the dawn of the "New Nation."

Owing to the tremendous patronage that will undoubtedly be showered upon this massive screen spectacle during its local engagement, patrons are warned to secure their seat reservations at the earliest possible moment for the attendance at the Park theatre, Middleboro, will positively be greater than this city has ever known before, either for a production of the spoken stage or the silent drama.

USTON (Mass.) COURIER
SEP 18 1915

popular prices, while there is a Bargain matinee Wednesday when the best seats are $1, and every seat in the house is reserved.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

Monday afternoon marks the 25th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" in this city, by far the greatest number of consecutive performances for any theatrical attraction in the history of the Boston stage. After twenty weeks of capacity business at the Tremont Theatre the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatre-goers all over New England, that the engagement be extended that arrangements were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic Theatre and during the past two weeks crowded houses attested to the public's appreciation of this continuance.

In rapid sequence, one scene follows another, scenes in the North and South before the Civil War, during it and immediately following it. The scene of Lincoln's assassination and the dark days of the reconstruction period in the South during the regime of the carpet-baggers and the various thrilling battle scenes presented on a most stupendous scale are miracles of photography and necessitated the use of large areas in the South and the employment of 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses.

SALEM (Mass.) OBSERVER 81
SEPT. 18, 1915

The Theatres.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

After 20 weeks of capacity business at the Tremont Theatre, the announcement that the engagement would end a week ago occasioned such an overwhelming demand from theatre-goers all over New England, that the engagement be extended that arrangements were made to transfer the picture to the Majestic Theatre and during the past two weeks crowded houses attested to the public's appreciation of this continuation.

At the Majestic Theatre patrons will find the same augmented orchestra and comfortable environment which prevailed during the long run at the Tremont Theatre and judging by the attendances the past week, "The Birth of a Nation" is in for another long run. Performances will be given every afternoon and evening and seats may be procured for two weeks in advance.

SALEM (Mass.) REGISTER 79
SEPT. 18, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"
Marvelous Spectacle in Its 25th Consecutive Week at
MAJESTIC THEATRE.

Tomorrow afternoon marks the 289th performance of D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," in this city, which was seen for 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre by nearly half the population of Boston and the past 2 weeks at Majestic, making it 25th big week in Boston. So insatiable has been the desire of the theatre going population of New England to see more of this marvelous $500,000 production that arrangements had to be made for another theatre as its Boston home, and so the Majestic Theatre becomes the fortunate possessor of "The Birth of A Nation" as an attraction for a limited additional stay in Boston. 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses were used in reproducing this picture; which is a complete story of the Civil War. The Majestic Theatre will begin next Monday afternoon, with performances given twice daily, every afternoon at 2.10 and every evening at 8.10. Seats are now selling for next week.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 17, 1915 621

BIG SPECTACLE AT THE PREMIER

"The Birth of a Nation" Easily the Greatest Film Ever Shown.

"The Birth of a Nation," the much talked of [illegible] opened a three days' engagement at the Premier theatre yesterday. Two big audiences greeted the screen production of the episodes of the Civil war and reconstruction period, and were entertained with the most spectacular scenes, wild rides by the Ku Klux Klan, destruction of cities, Lincoln's assassination, etc., for a period of two and three quarter hours. At the end, all were a unit in pronouncing the picture the greatest spectacle ever produced.

To judge the production correctly one must see it, as it is enacted on a most elaborate scale. It was heralded as the premier production of filmdom and it certainly lives up to the reputation and a great deal more. To begin with, some 18,000 people, 2000 horses and 6000 scenes were required in the producing. It took eight months to make the picture in the south and west. The advance notice said that cities were made and destroyed by fire and this cannot be denied, for during the battle engagements it is plainly seen that scores of buildings are destroyed and devastated by flames.

The wonderful artillery duels between the Confederate and Union armies with thousands of warriors is vividly illustrated along miles of trenches. The battle scenes are spectacular and hundreds of soldiers are seen lifeless where they have fallen. One of the most thrilling scenes in the wild ride of the Ku Klux tribe after the close of the war in their successful dash against the southern blacks. The pretty love affair between Col. Ben, Chamcter of the Confederate army and Elsie Stoneman the northern girl, was most romantic and everyone seemed glad when the young officer ultimately won her hand.

The production is in two parts: the first deals with the negro race coming to the South and how the southerners used them as slaves in the cotton field and servants about their homes. The narrative is centered around Col. Ben Cameron and his people in a town in South Carolina. Ben Cameron is the eldest son of Dr. and Mrs. Cameron is the eldest son of Dr. and Mrs. Cameron and has two brothers and two sisters. All play important parts in the story before it ends. Ben has just returned from boarding school and after a short stay at home invites his school boy chum, Phil Stoneman, from the north, to his home. Phil is the oldest of three children, the other two being Ted and Elsie, the latter the heroine. They are the children of Hon. Austin Stoneman, leader of the House Washington during the reign of President Lincoln. Phil and Tod Stoneman are next shown in the production arriving at the home of Ben and spending a most enjoyable time. A romance develops between the boys and girls.

Shortly after their departure for home the southern states seceded. President Lincoln is depicted in the capitol calling for 75,000 volunteers. Then are shown the most gruesome scenes of the entire production as the war is on and bloody hand-to-hand encounters are portrayed in every scene. The war shows the Union and Confederate forces marching to the battleground in a most pitiable state and on the verge of starvation and collapse.

The great march to the sea by General Sherman is handsomely illustrated, showing thousands of men in line on their long hike. The scenes are without doubt the finest war scenes ever presented on a canvas and the explosion of bombs and the heavy fire of artillery can easily be distinguished. The burning of dwellings and other buildings is also finely shown and the scenes generally mage the audience recall General Sherman's words.

Then comes the end of the great strife with the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox. The actors here impersonate the big men of the war excellently. The quarters of General Grant with General Lee writing out his surrender and passing the document to Grant are shown. Next comes the rebuilding of the South with President Lincoln assisting in its uplift. The southerners are beginning to enthuse over the leading spirit when the president is assassinated in Ford's theatre, Washington. The shooting of the president is most pathetic. He is shown entering the theatre and taking his seat in the box with Mrs. Lincoln and army officers. His bodyguard left his post of duty only to have John Wilkes Booth leave his seat in the audience to go to the president's box and fire point blank at him from behind. Booth makes a sensational escape after firing the fatal shot as he jumps from the box to the stage below and makes his escape from the stage exit. The assassination of the president closes the first part.

The second part tells of Hon. Austin Stoneman and his radical policy of making the black man the equal of the white man. He meets a mulatto by the name of Silas Lynch and introduces him to the statesmen as their equal. He furthers his interests by sending him to the town of Piedmont, South Carolina, the home of the Camerons, where he organizes the black men and is elected lieutenant governor by the black vote[illegible] are not allowed to cast their ballots. Conditions got so desperate that the whites are practically their slaves as the blacks passed a vote in the House of Representatives that if they desired they could marry white women. Ultimately, after months of suffering, Col. Ben Cameron thinks of a scheme of organizing the Ku Klux Klansmen and after much hardship at the hands of the blocks finally conquers the black race.

A thrilling scene is the attempted forced marriage of Elsie Stoneman by Silas Lynch, who ruled the town and wanted her for his wife. Elsie was in love with Col. Ben, but had gone to the mulatto's quarters to plead for the life of Ben's father. She was an easy prisoner, once there, and the black forced his attentions on her, but she heroically refused to be his wife. Her father, who had placed the black in his position and was the direct cause of the negroes being in power, was congratulating Lynch upon selecting a white woman for his wife, never dreaming the girl was his own daughter. On learning this he refused, but Lynch was determined and held Stoneman and his daughter prisoners till the arrival of the Ku Klux tribe to their rescue.

Subsequent scenes show the end of the race war and the institutions that are in America at the present time, especially for the colored race. These scenes are of the educational type and show how the colored race has progressed since the dark days of the war.

BEVERLY (Mass.) TIMES
SEPT. 18, 1915

[illegible]nstitute for Girls in that city, is accompanied by Miss Ethel Grose, up of New Jersey.

SCHOOL HISTORIES.

Birth of a Nation" Gives Better Story of Civil War.

When one sees D. W. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" and learns from it the many facts and sidelights of American history that are not to be found in the school editions of history, the thought comes that the educational departments of the country are neglecting the real education of the growing children. It is a known fact that the histories studied by the children in the schools of the South give an entirely different version of the great struggle of 1861 thanthat which is given the schools of the North.

Then "The Birth of a Nation" comes and in clear, impressive motion pictures, gives the real story of this great struggle and the spectator, be he a grown-up or a child, realizes that in his studies of the Great Rebellion he has learned but a small part of the actual history.

The question arises in the minds of the many: "Why are so many facts kept from the students in the schools of the North; and why should the people of the South be given a different version than tthe people of the North?"

Must it remain for the motion pictures to give the people of the world the real truth of history and other educational matters? It would seem so. And if it must be let there be more pictures produced like "The Birth of a Nation" which will be shown tonight at the Salem Theatre.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) NEWS
SEPT. 18, 1915

FOR LAST TIME TONIGHT.

"Birth of a Nation" Attracting Large Audiences at the Premier.

Two more performances of D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given at the Premier theatre, one this afternoon and the other tonight.

To attempt to describe the hundreds of wonders that are opened up to the spectator in "The Birth of a Nation" would be an impossible task even for the most imaginative writer. It is the one production which must be seen by all to have even a fair idea of its massiveness and power.

One has read of the assassination of President Lincoln, both in the history of our great republic and also in more detailed stories of the sad affair, but it must be truthfully said that no book yet brought to light, gives the story of the tragedy with such powerful vividness as it is presented in this wonderful production.

Sherman's March to the Sea has stirred the hearts of millions when read about but when seen in actuality, with thousands of soldiers, horses and guns, with thrilling battles, with such spectacular massiveness, one would give much rather than to have missed this wonderful visualization. In fact, when one has seen "The Birth of a Nation" the impulse comes to summon all of the glowing adjectives in enthusiasand hurl them broadcast in enthusiastic appreciation of the spectacular wonder.

The Burning of Atlanta is an inspiring scene that will long be remembered. A whole city ablaze makes one gasp. Yet this is but one of a hundred mighty scenes that must impress upon all, the lesson intended for the production.

If one can see "The Birth of a Nation" without feeling a horror for war and all it signifies, then indeed, is that person hardened. Yet, we are told that the terrible experiences of our soldiers in the Civil war were almost nothing compared with the present strife that is devastating all Europe.

Number
466	Demy
468	Demy
470	Medium
472	Medium

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE 113
SEPT. 18, 1915

[illegible] prove that he acted as a manager is allowed to, and it is really as an actor that he belongs to this association.

"Birth of a Nation" Riot.

At Philadelphia Wednesday night the arrival of 50 policemen averted a riot when 600 negroes, urged by agitators, collected in front of the Forrest Theatre and threatened to attack the theatre and the throng inside unless the management immediately withdrew "The Birth of a Nation," the Civil war film drama which has been showing there several weeks. The police charged the crowd several times and arrested several of the leaders.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
SEPT. 20, 1915

The funeral of Mrs Sarah Kane was held at the home of her sister, Mrs Henry Padden of Maple street, Saturday morning with requiem mass in St Patrick's [illegible] Rev. T. Sheldon officiated and the burial was in St Jerome's cemetery.

"Birth of a Nation" Not to Appear

Manager George Hammond of the Suffolk theater has decided not to book the film "The Birth of a Nation," which, it was announced, would come to the Suffolk. The plans were to present the film at popular prices, but he found that the contract would compel him to charge $2 a seat and that he would receive but 25 per cent of the proceeds. Out of this he would have to provide a 15-piece orchestra and the expenses would be so great that should he sell out the house at each performance his profits would be less than if he continued with his regular bill. Taken altogether Holyoke is probably just as well satisfied that the much-talked-of film is not to appear.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
SEPT. 21, 1915

[illegible] The audience leaves the theatre with this dismal truth emphasized by the horrors which have just been enacted before its eyes."

PICTURES AND MUSIC

Majestic—The Birth of a Nation

A FILMED spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope, that for twenty-four weeks has held one or another Boston stage. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender and the assassination of Lincoln—on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion-pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction, the carpet-baggers and the Ku-Klux Klan, ranging from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure between a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Music accompanies the whole spectacle.

STON TRAVELER
SEPT. 25, 1915

[illegible] should not be missed by lovers of good music and a delightful evening's entertainment.

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacle, started on its 25th week in Boston at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon and the playhouse was filled at both performances. Although this realistic reproduction of the most tragic scenes in the history of our country had to move to another theatre in order to satisfy the great demand in Boston for more of it still continues to fill the theatre twice daily.

With next week's performances "The Birth of a Nation" will have been seen for just a half-year in Boston—not [illegible] during on the basis of 6 weeks, but the

HARRY BROWN, Manager

Both Phones 92

THE LAST WORD IN LUXURY, COMFORT AND SAFETY

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE

BOARDWALK

Delaware Avenue and St. Charles Place

CAPACITY 3000

Atlantic City, N. J.,

-6-

BIRTH OF A NATION

(ATLANTIC CITY)

RECORD JULY 18

"A Mother's Appeal to 'The Great Heart'"—Scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

BIRTH OF A NATION

Immense Drama Splendidly Staged to Be Put on at Atlantic City.

Samuel F. Nixon, managing director of the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, announces an extraordinary attraction for this playhouse by the sea in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will begin its summer engagement at the New Nixon this Sunday evening, continuing with daily matinee and night performances, including Sundays. This is the production which is now turning into its sixth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been the sensation of the current season. It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in startling scenes. Mr. Griffith was eight months making the production, at a cost of $500,000.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been enlarged upon that theme to cover the relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles are shown over an area of 12 square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the Sea and the last meeting of Grant and Lee before Petersburg. War in its actual sweep is shown, and ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces. With the South going about the work of rehabilitation this movement is arrested by the assassination of President Lincoln. The famous old Ford's Theatre in Washington on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's great career ended, is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the reconstruction period. Here springs into existence the Ku Klux Klan, originally devised to put down the lawless element and restore peace and prosperity to the South. There are wonderful rides of daring horsemen and thrilling rescues. The finale progresses to an allegory showing the welding of the divided sections and the establishment of permanent peace and happiness. In building up this narrative Mr. Griffith has maintained the suspense so vital to drama and has never lost sight of the fundamentals in the way of heart interest and human attributes. His central characters are members of Northern and Southern families whose relationships developing into a romance keep alive the human interest in the story along the proper constructive lines. Everything connected with the production is upon the large scale of its original purpose.

PUBLIC LEDGER JULY 18

C[illegible] WAR DRAMA

"Birth of a Nation" Films to Be Shown at Seashore Tonight

"The Birth of a Nation," a stupendous historical spectacle in motion pictures that has excited widespread comment, will be seen in Atlantic City for the first time tonight at the New Nixon Theatre there. Daily matinee and evening performances of this drama, in which many Civil War personages appear, will be given. In its successive scenes 3000 horses and 18,000 men take part. D. W. Griffith, the producer, devoted eight months to its preparation.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been so enlarged upon as to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves brought to the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown in realistic detail, and the climax is reached in the scenes revealing General Sherman's famous march to the sea. The war scenes end at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces.

With the South going about the work of rehabilitation comes the assassination of President Lincoln. The Ford's Theatre, in Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's career was ended, is reproduced in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the reconstruction period, introducing the Ku Klux Clan. The finale progresses to an allegory showing the welding of the divided sections and the establishment of permanent peace and happiness.

INQUIRER 7-5 18

"Birth of a Nation" at Atlantic City

Scene From "The Birth Of A Nation" The Nixon, Atlantic City

Announcement is made by Samuel F. Nixon that the New Nixon Theatre at Atlantic City will house D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins its summer engagement here this evening and continues with daily matinees and night performances, including Sundays.

It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in a most thrilling series of scenes of dramatic action.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been enlarged upon that theme to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the Colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the Abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown over an area of twelve square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the Sea, and the last meeting of Grant and Lee before Petersburg. War in its actual sweep is graphically shown, and ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces. With the South going about the work of rehabilitation the movement is arrested by the assassination of President Lincoln. The famous old Ford's Theatre, in Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's great career ended, is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the Reconstruction period. Here springs into existence the Ku Klux Clan, originally devised to put down the lawless element and restore peace and prosperity to the South. These events are pictured in the most thrilling of incidents imaginable. There are wonderful rides of daring horsemen and thrilling rescues. The finale progresses to a series of allegorical pictures, showing the welding of the divided sections, and the settlement of permanent peace and happiness in the sections. In building up this masterly narrative, Mr. Griffith has maintained the suspense so vital to drama and has never lost sight of the fundamentals in way of heart interest and human attributes. His central characters are members of Northern and Southern families, whose relationships developing into a romance keep alive the human interest and develop the story along the proper constructive lines. Everything connected with the production is upon the large scale of its original purpose.

7-18 PUBLIC LEDGER

SHERMAN'S MARCH TO SEA RECONSTRUCTED IN $2 MOVIE

One of the big and dramatic bits of Civil War history recorded in D. W. Griffith's great photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," now moving from a Broadway theatre to Atlantic City.

TUESDAY JULY 13

PRESS

BIRTH OF NATION COMING TO CITY

Griffith Spectacle Has Been Secured for Two Performances July 18th

Samuel F. Nixon has finally succeeded in completing arrangements for bringing the biggest attraction of the year to Atlantic City. Announcement to this effect was made last night when Mr. Nixon gave out the details for the commencement of an indefinite run of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theatre on Sunday night, July 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been running to an unbroken record of crowded houses and is easily the sensation of the theatrical season in the metropolis.

The production is the largest thing ever presented in a theatre of the world. Griffith employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in his mammoth undertaking. He was eight months making the stupendous production and it cost in the neighborhood of $500,000. He has succeeded in creating an epic which it is claimed sets a new standard for a highly developed form of expression, the like of which had never been dreamed of.

The story is American in every detail and is of vital importance in these days. It begins with the advent of African slaves into the colonies and progresses up to the establishment of the new south showing in graphic form the relationship of the slavery question to the most momentous developments of American history. The south before the war is pictured in its economic safety. Then comes the election of Lincoln and the declaration of war between the North and South. The great battles of those terrible four years are shown and includes Sherman's march to se sea and Lee's last stand at Petersburg, Va., and extending to Appomattox, where Grant and Lee made terms of peace, which was the first move towards welding the divided sections into the greater nation. Lincoln's assassination in Ford's theatre, at Washington, is also revealed in historic detail. The final half of the picture shows the South in the early days of the carpet-bagger government and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan to cope with some of the abuses which developed in the days of the reconstruction period. In all this there is tense drama revealed and the most stirring and thrilling series of episodes that have ever been upon a stage. It is all carried forward to allegorical flights and reveals the birth of the enlarged nation, one and indivisable ith the coming of that sure peace hich follos clearer understandstanding.

This vast theme has been handled by the master dramatist. Its basic ideas are the fundamentals of true drama and it has a grip and touch which sets it apart from all other achievements.

Mr. Nixon is to be congratulated upon his enterprise in securing this wonderful offering for the summer season in Atlantic City. It is bound to be one of the greatest attractions

ATLANTIC
D
PUBLISHE
Ev
THE Corner of Atla
NATHAN
F. E. C
ALBERT J.

REVIEW

BIRTH OF A NATION COMING

New Nixon Theatre to Show Gigantic Spectacle Beginning Next Sun.

After earnest negotiations to bring the biggest thing of the season to Atlantic City Samuel F. Nixon of the Nixon Theater announced last night that he had completed arrangements for the presentation in that theater of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." This is the marvelous production which is now creating a sensation at the Liberty Theater New York where it has been running for five months to the largest business ever known in the history of that house. Other productions are also appearing in Boston, Chicago and Brighton Beach, N. Y., where the same great crowds are attending the runs in these cities.

This is the biggest thing that has ever been shown in an Atlantic City theater and the great picture will create the same sensation here that it has in New York. Manager Nixon is to be commended in bringing to the Boardwalk the world's biggest theatrical hit. The run begins on Sunday night, July 18.

UNION

GREATEST FILM ON EARTH COMING

"Birth of Nation," D. W. Griffith masterpiece, to Show at Nixon for Sunday, July 18th

Samuel F. Nixon has finally succeeded in completing arrangements for bringing the biggest attraction of the year to Atlantic City. Announcement to this effect was made last night when Mr. Nixon gave out the details for the commencement of an indefinite run of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theatre on Sunday night, July 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been running to an unbroken record of crowded houses and is easily the sensation of the theatrical season in the metropolis.

The production is the largest thing ever presented in a theatre of the world. Griffith employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in his mammoth undertaking. He was eight months making the stupendous production and it cost in the neighborhood of $500,000. He has succeeded in creating an epic which it is claimed sets a new standard for a highly developed form of expression, the like of which had never been dreamed of.

The story is American in every detail and is of vital importance in these days. It begins with the advent of African slaves into the colonies and progresses up to the establishment of the new south showing in graphic form the relationship of the slavery question to the most momentous developments of American history. The south before the war is pictured in its economic safety. Then comes the election of Lincoln and the declaration of war between the North and South. The great battles of those terrible four years are shown and includes Sherman's march to se sea and Lee's last stand at Petersburg, Va., and extending to Appomattox, where Grant and Lee made terms of peace, which was the first move towards welding the divided sections into the greater nation. Lincoln's assassination in Ford's theatre, at Washington, is also revealed in historic detail. The final half of the picture shows the South in the early days of the carpet-bagger government and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan to cope with some of the abuses which developed in the days of the reconstruction period. In all this there is tense drama revealed and the most stirring and thrilling series of episodes that have ever been upon a stage. It is all carried forward to allegorical flights and reveals the birth of the enlarged nation, one and indivisable ith the coming of that sure peace hich follos clearer understandstanding.

This vast theme has been handled by the master dramatist. Its basic ideas are the fundamentals of true drama and it has a grip and touch which sets it apart from all other achievements.

Mr. Nixon is to be congratulated upon his enterprise in securing this wonderful offering for the summer season in Atlantic City. It is bound to be one of the greatest attractions of the year and will more than duplicate its enormous success elsewhere. It will be given exactly as presented in New York in every detail with an orchestra of 40 playing the wonderful score which has been syncronized to the action of the film drama. The engagement will include two performances daily a matinee in the afternoon and a night performance.

PRESS JULY 15

RECORD JULY 18

'A Mother's Appeal to 'The Great Heart'"—Scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

BIRTH OF A NATION

Immense Drama Splendidly Staged to Be Put on at Atlantic City.

Samuel F. Nixon, managing director of the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, announces an extraordinary attraction for this playhouse by the sea in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will begin its summer engagement at the New Nixon this Sunday evening, continuing with daily matinee and night performances, including Sundays. This is the production which is now turning into its sixth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been the sensation of the current season. It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in startling scenes. Mr. Griffith was eight months making the production, at a cost of $500,000.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been enlarged upon that theme to cover the relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles are shown over an area of 12 square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the Sea and the last meeting of Grant and Lee before Petersburg. War in its actual sweep is shown, and ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces. With the South going about the work of rehabilitation this movement is arrested by the assassination of President Lincoln. The famous old Ford's Theatre in Washington on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's great career ended, is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the reconstruction period. Here springs into existence the Ku Klux Klan, originally devised to put down the lawless element and restore peace and prosperity to the South. There are wonderful rides of daring horsemen and thrilling rescues. The finale progresses to an allegory showing the welding of the divided sections and the establishment of permanent peace and happiness. In building up this narrative Mr. Griffith has maintained the suspense so vital to drama and has never lost sight of the fundamentals in the way of heart interest and human attributes. His central characters are members of Northern and Southern families whose relationships developing into a romance keep alive the human interest in the story along the proper constructive lines. Everything connected with the production is upon the large scale of its original purpose.

PUBLIC LEDGER JULY 18

C.[illegible] WAR DRAMA

"Birth of a Nation" Films to Be Shown at Seashore Tonight

"The Birth of a Nation," a stupendous historical spectacle in motion pictures that has excited widespread comment, will be seen in Atlantic City for the first time tonight at the New Nixon Theatre there. Daily matinee and evening performances of this drama, in which many Civil War personages appear, will be given. In its successive scenes 3000 horses and 18,000 men take part. D. W. Griffith, the producer, devoted eight months to its preparation.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been so enlarged upon as to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves brought to the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown in realistic detail, and the climax is reached in the scenes revealing General Sherman's famous march to the sea. The war scenes end at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces.

With the South going about the work of rehabilitation comes the assassination of President Lincoln. The Ford's Theatre, in Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's career was ended, is reproduced in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the reconstruction period, introducing the Ku Klux Clan. The finale progresses to an allegory showing the welding of the divided sections and the establishment of permanent peace and happiness.

INQUIRER July 18

"Birth of a Nation" at Atlantic City

Scene From "The Birth Of A Nation" The Nixon, Atlantic City

Announcement is made by Samuel F. Nixon that the New Nixon Theatre at Atlantic City will house D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins its summer engagement here this evening and continues with daily matinee and night performances, including Sundays.

It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in a most thrilling series of scenes of dramatic action.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been enlarged upon that theme to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the Colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the Abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown over an area of twelve square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the sea, and the last meeting of Grant and Lee before Petersburg. War in its actual sweep is graphically shown, and ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces. With the South going about the work of rehabilitation this movement is arrested by the assassination of President Lincoln. The famous old Ford's Theatre, in Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's great career ended, is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the Reconstruction period. Here springs into existence the Ku Klux Clan, originally devised to put down the lawless element and restore peace and prosperity to the South. These events are pictured in the most thrilling of incidents imaginable. There are wonderful rides of daring horsemen and thrilling rescues. The finale progresses to a series of allegorical pictures, showing the welding of the divided sections, and the settlement of permanent peace and happiness in the sections. In building up this masterly narrative, Mr. Griffith has maintained the suspense so vital to drama and has never lost sight of the fundamentals in way of heart interest and human attributes. His central characters are members of Northern and Southern families, whose relationships developing into a romance keep alive the human interest and develop the story along the proper constructive lines. Everything connected with the production is upon the large scale of its original purpose.

JULY 18 PUBLIC LEDGER

SHERMAN'S MARCH TO SEA RECONSTRUCTED IN $2 MOVIE

One of the big and dramatic bits of Civil War history recorded in D. W. Griffith's great photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," now moving from a Broadway theatre to Atlantic City.

TUESDAY JULY 13

PRESS

BIRTH OF NATION COMING TO CITY

Griffith Spectacle Has Been Secured for Two Performances July 18th

Samuel F. Nixon has finally succeeded in completing arrangements for bringing the biggest attraction of the year to Atlantic City. Announcement to this effect was made last night when Mr. Nixon gave out the details for the commencement of an indefinite run of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theatre on Sunday night, July 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been running to an unbroken record of crowded houses and is easily the sensation of the theatrical season in the metropolis.

The production is the largest thing ever presented in a theatre of the world. Griffith employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in his mammoth undertaking. He was eight months making the stupendous production and it cost in the neighborhood of $500,000. He has succeeded in creating an epic which it is claimed sets a new standard for a highly developed form of expression, the like of which had never been dreamed of.

The story is American in every detail and is of vital importance in these days. It begins with the advent of African slaves into the colonies and progresses up to the establishment of the new south showing in graphic form the relationship of the slavery question to the most momentous developments of American history. The south before the war is pictured in its economic safety. Then comes the election of Lincoln and the declaration of war between the North and South. The great battles of those terrible four years are shown and includes Sherman's march to se sea and Lee's last stand at Petersburg, Va., and extending to Appomattox, where Grant and Lee made terms of peace, which was the first move towards welding the divided sections into the greater nation. Lincoln's assassination in Ford's theatre, at Washington, is also revealed in historic detail. The final half of the picture shows the South in the early days of the carpet-bagger government and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan to cope with some of the abuses which developed in the days of the reconstruction period. In all this there is tense drama revealed and the most stirring and thrilling series of episodes that have ever been upon a stage. It is all carried forward to allegorical flights and reveals the birth of the enlarged nation, one and indivisable ith the coming of that sure peace hich follos clearer understandstanding.

This vast theme has been handled by the master dramatist. Its basic ideas are the fundamentals of true drama and it has a grip and touch which sets it apart from all other achievements.

Mr. Nixon is to be congratulated upon his enterprise in securing this wonderful offering for the summer season in Atlantic City. It is bound to be one of the greatest attractions of the year and will more than duplicate its enormous success elsewhere. It will be given exactly as presented in New York in every detail with an orchestra of 40 playing the wonderful score which has been syncronized to the action of the film drama. The engagement will include two performances daily a matinee in the afternoon and a night performance.

ATLANTIC
D PUBLISHI
Ev
THE Corner of Atla
NATHAN
F. E. C
ALBERT J.

REVIEW

BIRTH OF A NATION COMING

New Nixon Theatre to Show Gigantic Spectacle Beginning Next Sun.

After earnest negotiations to bring the biggest thing of the season to Atlantic City Samuel F. Nixon of the Nixon Theater announced last night that he had completed arrangements for the presentation in that theater of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." This is the marvelous production which is now creating a sensation at the Liberty Theater New York where it has been running for five months to the largest business ever known in the history of that house. Other productions are also appearing in Boston, Chicago and Brighton Beach, N. Y., where the same great crowds are attending the runs in these cities.

This is the biggest thing that has ever been shown in an Atlantic City theater and the great picture will create the same sensation here that it has in New York. Manager Nixon is to be commended in bringing to the Boardwalk the world's biggest theatrical hit. The run begins on Sunday night, July 18.

UNION

GREATEST FILM ON EARTH COMING

"Birth of Nation," D. W. Griffith masterpiece, to Show at Nixon for Sunday, July 18th

Samuel F. Nixon has finally succeeded in completing arrangements for bringing the biggest attraction of the year to Atlantic City. Announcement to this effect was made last night when Mr. Nixon gave out the details for the commencement of an indefinite run of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theatre on Sunday night, July 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been running to an unbroken record of crowded houses and is easily the sensation of the theatrical season in the metropolis.

The production is the largest thing ever presented in a theatre of the world. Griffith employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in his mammoth undertaking. He was eight months making the stupendous production and it cost in the neighborhood of $500,000. He has succeeded in creating an epic which it is claimed sets a new standard for a highly developed form of expression, the like of which had never been dreamed of.

The story is American in every detail and is of vital importance in these days. It begins with the advent of African slaves into the colonies and progresses up to the establishment of the new south showing in graphic form the relationship of the slavery question to the most momentous developments of American history. The south before the war is pictured in its economic safety. Then comes the election of Lincoln and the declaration of war between the North and South. The great battles of those terrible four years are shown and includes Sherman's march to se sea and Lee's last stand at Petersburg, Va., and extending to Appomattox, where Grant and Lee made terms of peace, which was the first move towards welding the divided sections into the greater nation. Lincoln's assassination in Ford's theatre, at Washington, is also revealed in historic detail. The final half of the picture shows the South in the early days of the carpet-bagger government and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan to cope with some of the abuses which developed in the days of the reconstruction period. In all this there is tense drama revealed and the most stirring and thrilling series of episodes that have ever been upon a stage. It is all carried forward to allegorical flights and reveals the birth of the enlarged nation, one and indivisable ith the coming of that sure peace hich follos clearer understandstanding.

This vast theme has been handled by the master dramatist. Its basic ideas are the fundamentals of true drama and it has a grip and touch which sets it apart from all other achievements.

Mr. Nixon is to be congratulated upon his enterprise in securing this wonderful offering for the summer season in Atlantic City. It is bound to be one of the greatest attractions of the year and will more than duplicate its enormous success elsewhere. It will be given exactly as presented in New York in every detail with an orchestra of 40 playing the wonderful score which has been syncronized to the action of the film drama. The engagement will include two performances daily a matinee in the afternoon and a night performance.

PRESS JULY 18

WEDNESDAY-July 14

UNION

Beginning Sunday Night July 18

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

The New Nixon Boardwalk-

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Bro

D. W. Griffith's
Mighty Spectacle

Has Claimed the Admiration of a Million Playgoers

18,000 People Used to Tell the Drama

Cost $500,000 To Assemble Its Mighty Forces

Watch these bulletins daily for paensof praise the like of which were never heard before.

No. 1 "You See, Like the Angels Looking Down From Heaven Must ave Seen, The C

AN ORCHESTRA OF 40 Direction The Epoch Producing Co., H. E. Aitken,

NIXON TO SHOW 'BIRTH OF NATION

The Greatest Production Ever Filmed to Show Here on Sunday Night

Next to the ocean the Nixon Theatre was about the busiest thing in Atlantic City yesterday. These unusual activities were started by the advance guard of technical experts who arrived to get everything under way for the first presentation here on Sunday night of D. W. Griffith's mammoth spectacle "The Borth of a Nation." There is no detail too small to attract Griffith's attention and the correct handling of his production is one of the things he is most insistent upon. Frederick Arundel has charge of the music and is assembling the orchestra of 40 men who will play the score which accompanies each of the several thousand scenes of the spectacle. Cecil Wood, the electrical expert, will have a corps of men working night and day from now on finishing up the adjustment of all the expert appliances which are vital to the proper projection of the story. The auditorium will be rearranged to suit the latest scientific requirements for the proper focal adaptability of the great film play to the theatre. This attention insures a projection which is as near perfect as con be made.

At the same time James Dolliver the general stage manager of the Griffith enterprises and Mrs. Ryan, the wardrobe mistress, are rounding up nearly a hundred men and girls who are to have part in the narrative. Mose of these people are used back stage in the effects which are so important a part of the entire performance. The girls will be seen in the front of the house dressed in the old fashioned hoop skirts and crinolines of the period of 1860, during which time the greater part of the play takes place. This is an atmospheic touch which lends to the performance. The dresses have to be mad to order. A dozen of Atlantic City's prettiest girls were engaged yesterday and Mrs. Ryan and her seamstresses will start in today to fit them out with the charming costumes which were the pride of their grandmothers in the days of the war.

Not to be behind in this lavish display Mr. Nixon has a force of interior decorators at work renovating and redecorating the theatre so that it will be spick and span for the great engagement.

The seat sale for the first week opens tomorrow morning at the regular box office. In a few days the tickets for the indefinite run will be placed on sale four weeks in advance in anticipation of the mid-summer rush.

North American July 15

Bulletin July 17

"The Birth of a Nation," the picturization of "The Clansman," which created a stir in New York when it was shown as the first $2 movie, will begin a run at the New Nixon Theatre at Atlantic City to-morrow. It is this picture which established the reputation of its producer, David W. Griffith, as the master "movie" director of the country.

'The Birth of a Nation' at Seaside

"The Birth of a Nation," the magnificent motion-picture play of D. W. Griffith, will be given at the New Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, this evening, and continue with daily and matinee performances indefinitely. This piece, which is founded on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," is now beginning its sixth month at the Liberty Theater, New York.

N. Theatre
DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.
LK-

77 Bro Business Manager.

TWICE DAILY There-After

NIGHTS—8.30 SHARP MATINEES, 2.30 SHARP

At These Rare Prices In Reach of All Patrons

Eves., 25c, 50c, $1, $1.50, $2 All Matinees 25c, 50c, $1.

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

Comprising the 8th Wonder of the World

Stampeded the Newspapers and Magazines of America

3,000 Horses Mounted by Daring Riders

Took 8 Months of Super-Human Effort to Produce it

Unfolding the great American play at last in a new and startling form of expression.

e Causes That Led to the Civil War." Dorothy Dix in the Journal

en, Prest. SEAT SALE THURSDAY FOR 1st WEEK

PRESS. (Phila) July 18

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT ATLANTIC CITY

Samuel E. Nixon, managing director of the New Nixon, Atlantic City, announces an extraordinary attraction for this popular playhouse by the sea, in D. W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" which begins its Summer engagement at the New Nixon this Sunday evening, continuing with daily matinee and night proformances, including Sundays.

This is the wonderful production which is now turning into its sixth month at The Liberty Theater, New York City, where it has been a sensation of the current season in Metropolitan theatricals. It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in one of the most startling series of scenes of dramatic action ever conceived. Mr. Griffith was eight months making the production and at a cost of $500,000.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but that story has been enlarged upon to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown over an area of twelve square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the Sea, and the last meeting of Grant and Lee before Petersburg. War in its actual sweep is graphically shown and ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces. With the South going about the work of rehabilitation this movement is arrested by the assassination of President Lincoln. The famous old Ford's Theater in Washington on the night of April 14, 1865 when President Lincoln's great career ended is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpet-baggers and the terrors of the Reconstruction period.

UNION

"N. American July 19

"THE BIRTH OF A NA[illegible] OPENS IN ATLANTIC CITY

Celebrated Motion-Picture Drama Inaugurates Season at New Nixon Theater

ATLANTIC CITY, July 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" inaugurated the summer season tonight at the New Nixon Theater on the boardwalk. This is D. W. Griffith's celebrated motion-picture drama which created such a stir in New York and elsewhere as the first "movie" to be offered in this country at the usual $2 scale of prices charged in the regular theaters.

It is a remarkable production in twelve reels, showing the beginning of slavery in the American colonies and then progressing to the settlement of that question in the civil war. The main incidents of the story are taken from Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," but Griffith has made the story so much bigger in its present form that the title was changed to fit it. The last half of the picture deals with the reconstruction era in the south following the war.

More than 18,000 people took part in the big production, together with 3000 horses. Atlantic City accorded the work an enthusiastic reception.

Press July 19

"BIRTH OF A NATION" PUT ON IN ATLANTIC CITY

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Atlantic City, July 18.—"The Birth of a Nation" began the Summer season at the New Nixon Theater on the Boardwalk to-night. This is the D. W. Griffith motion picture drama which has created such a stir in New York and elsewhere as the first "movie" to be offered in this country at the usual $2 scale of prices charged in the regular theaters.

It is a production in twelve reels, showing the beginning of slavery in the American colonies and then progressing to the settlement of that question in the Civil War. The main incidents of the story are taken from Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," but Griffith has made the story so much bigger in its present form that the title was changed to fit it.

The last half of the picture deals with the reconstruction era in the South following the war.

More than 18,000 persons took part in the production together with 3000 horses. It is the largest and most thrilling thing of the kind ever undertaken in moving pictures.

Atlantic City accorded the work an enthusiastic reception. It will continue as an attraction the remainder of the Summer at the Nixon.

MIRIAM COOPER in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Nixon Theatre Sunday night.

Wed. July 14 PRESS REVEIW

MAE MARSH, known as the Maude Adams of the movies, has an impor tant part in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Nixon Sun. nigh

MIRIAM COOPER in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Nixon Theatre Sunday night.

'BIRTH OF A NATION' AT THE NIXON SUN.

Big Film Spectacle Here for First Two Performances

Next to the ocean the Nixon Theatre was about the busiest thing in Atlantic City yesterday. These unusual activities were started by the advance guard of technical experts who arrived to get everything under way for the first presentation here on Sunday night of D. W. Griffith's mammoth spectacle "The Borth of a Nation." There is no detail too small to attract Griffith's attention and the correct handling of his production is one of the things he is most insistent upon. Frederick Arundel has charge of the music and is assembling the orchestra of 40 men who will play the score which accompanies each of the several thousand scenes of the spectacle. Cecil Wood, the electrical expert, will have a corps of men working night and day from now on finishing up the adjustment of all the expert appliances which are vital to the proper projection of the story. The auditorium will be rearranged to suit the latest scientific requirements for the proper focal adaptability of the great film play to the theatre. This attention insures a projection which is as near perfect as con be made.

At the same time James Dolliver the general stage manager of the Griffith enterprises and Mrs. Ryan, the wardrobe mistress, are rounding up nearly a hundred men and girls who are to have part in the narrative. Mose of these people are used back stage in the effects which are so important a part of the entire performance. The girls will be seen in the front of the house dressed in the old fashioned hoop skirts and crinolines of the period of 1860, during which time the greater part of the play takes place. This is an atmospheic touch which lends to the performance. The dresses have to be mad to order. A dozen of Atlantic City's prettiest girls were engaged yesterday and Mrs. Ryan and her seamstresses will start in today to fit them out with the charming costumes which were the pride of their grandmothers in the days of the war.

Not to be behind in this lavish display Mr. Nixon has a force of interior decorators at work renovating and redecorating the theatre so that it will be spick and span for the great engagement.

The seat sale for the first week opens tomorrow morning at the regular box office. In a few days the tickets for the indefinite run will be placed on sale four weeks in advance in anticipation of the mid-summer rush.

BIG ORCHESTRA FOR SPECTACLE

"Birth of a Nation" At Nixon Sun. Requires Tremendous Effects

The advance guard of D. W. Griffith's technical forces arrived here yesterday to begin early preparations for the engagement of the great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Nixon Theatre starting next Sunday night.

At the same time these experts are making the mechanical changes in the theatre necessary for this big production. Mr. Nixon has a special force at work redecorating the house and putting the interior in the finest possible order.

In Mr. Griffith's forces are Frederick Arundel who is assembling the orchestra of forty men who play the operatic score which accompanies every scene of the several thousand in this mammoth narrative. Cecil R. Wood who looks after the installation of al lthe electrical appliances for the production has a corps of men at work putting everything into the Nixon and in addition is readjusting the arrangements of the entire auditorium to bring it within the requirements of the latest scientific methods of focal range to make the projection as near perfect as Mr. Griffith desires in the presentation of his great work.

James Dolliver the general stage manager of the Griffith enterprise, is here engaging the men who will work behind the scenes and supply the human note in many of the thrilling scenes. Though these forces are never seen in the production there are nearly a hundred men back stage who handle the effects and supply the details which are entrusted to this part of the work. With the stage manager is Mrs. Ryan, the wardrobe mistress who passes upon the young ladies who are seen in the front of the house. These girls are all dressed in the bewitching crinolines and hoop skirts that were the correct dress of 1860 during the period of the major part of the big story. This detail lends a delightful atmosphere to the production before the first scene of the drama is flashed upon the screen. These dresses are made for the girls after they have been selected. There were hundreds of applicants for these positions yesterday and the management was able to secure several of the prettiest girls of Atlantic City.

From now on the Nixon will present an air of unusual activity as all these preparations are carried on without any interference with the vaudeville bills now finishing out the season there.

The tickets for the advance sale have also arrived and will be placed on sale tomorrow for the first week of the engagement. As these were the only ones ordered after the opening date was determined upon in New York the sale for the remainder of the engagement will open the following week when seats can be secured four weeks in advance.

Evening Telegraph July

GRI[illegible]TL[illegible]E[illegible]S[illegible]8

"The Birth of a Nation" Shown At Nixon in Atlantic City.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 13.—"The Birth of a Nation" began the summer season at the Nixon on the Boardwalk last night. This is the D. W. Griffith motion-picture drama celebrated as the first "movie" to be offered at a $2 scale of prices.

It is in twelve reels, showing the beginning of slavery in America and progressing to the settlement of that question in the Civil War. The main incidents of the story are taken from Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," but Griffith has made the story so much bigger in its present form that the title was changed to fit it. Over 18,000 people took part in the production, together with 3,000 horses.

Atlantic City accorded the work an enthusiastic reception.

Ledger

"BIRTH OF A NATION" FILM THRILLS ATLANTIC CITY

Griffith Motion Picture Accorded an Enthusiastic Reception

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 13.—"The Birth of a Nation" began the summer season at the new Nixon Theatre on the Boardwalk tonight. This is the celebrated D. W. Griffith motion picture drama which has created such a stir in New York and elsewhere as the first "movie" to be offered in this country at the usual $2 scale of prices charged in the regular theatres. It is a wonderful production in 12 reels, showing the beginning of slavery in the American colonies and then progressing to the settlementof that question in the Civil War.

The main incidents of the story are taken from Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," but Griffith has made the story so much bigger in its present form that the title was changed to fit it. The last half of the picture deals with the reconstruction era in the South following the war. More than 18,000 people took part in the big production, together with 3000 horses. It is the largest and most thrilling thing of the sort ever undertaken in moving pictures. Atlantic City accorded the work an enthusiastic reception. It continues as an attraction for the remainder of the summer season at the Nixon.

THUR. July 15

PRESS

'BIRTH OF A NATION' HERE ON SUNDAY

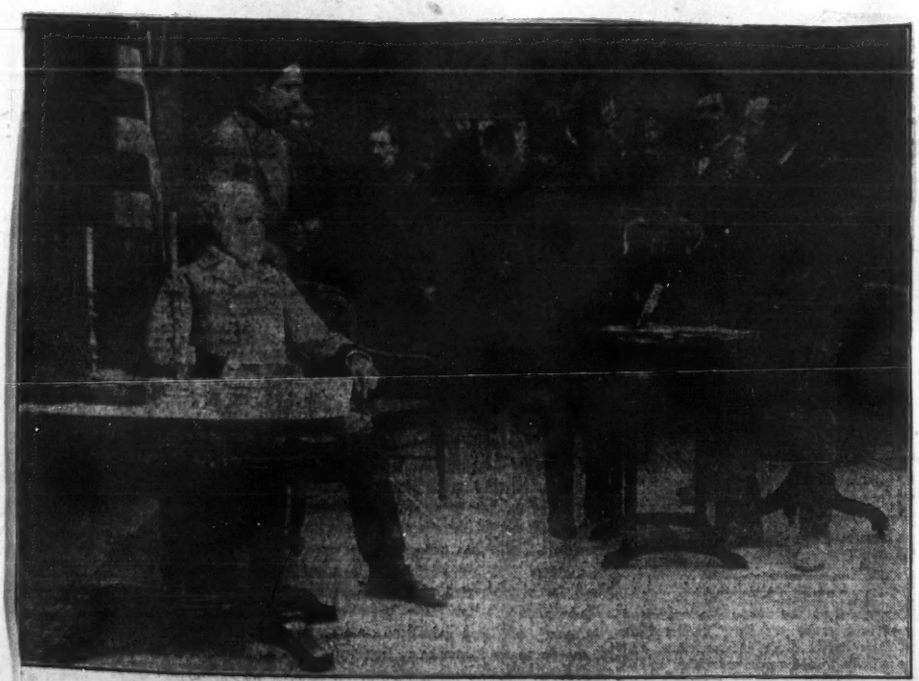
Griffith's Stupendous Film Play Will Have Its First Presentation at the Nixon

With the opening of the seat sale for the first week of the engagement of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the New Nixon Theatre for a summer run on Sunday night, the start for this record breaking offering on the Boardwalk is under way.

Some important additions to the story, which will be incorporated in the Atlantic City representation, arrived here yesterday from California, where they have just been thoroughly gone over by Griffith's expert photographers and made to fit into the theme of his big narrative. These films show views of Hampton Institute in Virginia, where the fine work of educating young colored boys and girls is being carried forward successfully. The scenes show the students at work in the many departments of the school and in addition it shows the surroundings at Hampton and what is being done to make the students fine citizens. In addition and in keeping with this phase of the narrative other startling figures and scenes are shown which demonstrate the remarkable development the colored people have made in the fifty years they have enjoyed the rights of citizenship. This is a detail of several minutes in the great story, which runs for considerably over two and one-half hours. The idea is one which will illustrate to the millions who are to see this marvelous story some facts and figures which will do simple justice to a percentage of our citizenship. In the earlier phases of this great historical narrative the drama necessarily shows conditions as they were in the reign of the Carpetbaggers when they undertook to pillage the South and build up a political machine of their own. Some negroes just released from slavery were used in this work unmindful of the fact that most of the carpet baggers were trying to make their private fortunes out of the failure of the southern cause.

The contrasts and conflicts are the basic notes in this great drama and its historical relationship holds it true enough to exact data to make it doubly interesting on this score. This careful attention to so many details which were crowded into those momentous years before and immediately following the civil war is what makes it so distinctly interesting to those who like to go a little under the surface of dramatic entertainment. On the other hand, Griffith has worked upon so large a scale and has gone so deeply into the subject that it is not easy to give an idea of the sweep and power of his work. It is so immensely spectacular and yet so minutely human in its developments that it sets new standards of its own and literally establishes a new epoch in the drama of this country.

UNION



Grant and Lee Signing Peace Terms at Appomatox in "The Birth of a Nation," Coming to the New Nixon Sunday Night.

REVIEW

GREATEST PICTURE SPECTACLE COMING

"Birth of a Nation" Has Startled the World—Most Stupendous Undertaking of Modern Times Will Show at New Nixon Theatre on Sunday

With the opening of the seat sale for the first week of the engagement of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the New Nixon Theatre for a summer run on Sunday night, the start for this record breaking offering on the Boardwalk is under way.

Some important additions to the story, which will be incorporated in the Atlantic City representation, arrived here yesterday from California, where they have just been thoroughly gone over by Griffith's expert photographers and made to fit into the theme of his big narrative. These films show views of Hampton Institute in Virginia, where the fine work of educating young colored boys and girls is being carried forward successfully. The scenes show the students at work in the many departments of the school and in addition it shows the surroundings at Hampton and what is being done to make the students fine citizens. In addition and in keeping with this phase of the narrative other startling figures and scenes are shown which demonstrate the remarkable development the colored people have made in the fifty years they have enjoyed the rights of citizenship. This is a detail of several minutes in the great story, which runs for considerably over two and one-half hours. The idea is one which will illustrate to the millions who are to see this marvelous story some facts and figures which will do simple justice to a percentage of our citizenship. In the earlier phases of this great historical narrative the drama necessarily shows conditions as they were in the reign of the Carpetbaggers when they undertook to pillage the South and build up a political machine of their own. Some negroes just released from slavery were used in this work unmindful of the fact that most of the carpet baggers were trying to make their private fortunes out of the failure of the southern cause.

The contrasts and conflicts are the basic notes in this great drama and its historical relationship holds it true enough to exact data to make it doubly interesting on this score. This careful attention to so many details which were crowded into those momentous years before and immediately following the civil war is what makes it so distinctly interesting to those who like to go a little under the surface of dramatic entertainment. On the other hand, Griffith has worked upon so large a scale and has gone so deeply into the subject that it is not easy to give an idea of the sweep and power of his work. It is so immensely spectacular and yet so minutely human in its developments that it sets new standards of its own and literally establishes a new epoch in the drama of this country.

Ledger July 17

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GOES TO ATLANTIC CITY THEATRE

New York's First $2 Photoplay to Startle the Vacationists.

The first movie that New York ever saw at $2 prices is going to be in Atlantic City next week.

Samuel F. Nixon, managing director of the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, announces an unusual engagement for that popular playhouse by the sea beginning tomorrow (Sunday) night, when D. W. Griffith will present his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," for a summer run, with daily matinee and night performances, including Sundays.

The manner of producing this masterpiece is something so new in the development of the theatre that there are no comparative standards by which it can be gauged. Griffith was eight months creating his marvelous narrative in a form of expression that is startling realistic and intensely dramatic. He employed 18,000 men and 3000 horses to get the desired effects. The total cost of the production is approximately $500,000. The story ranges over hundreds of years of American development, but its greater action is represented in the span of 16 years covered by the events leading up to and following the civil war. The relationship of the slavery question to these momentous developments is the basic theme of the epic. For details of this Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" was taken originally. There is a blending of history and romance showing the old South before the war, and the meeting of the members of the Northern and Southern families whose fortunes furnish the human interest and individual appeal which is essential to true drama. For big effects the master producer has shown several great conflicts of the war, including Sherman's march to the sea, and the final meeting of Grant and Lee, first at Petersburg in the last great battle, and then the peace arrangements at Appomattox. Ford's Theatre in Washington and the assassination of President Lincoln is another great scene. This tragedy is followed by the representation of the South under the carpetbagger and reconstruction periods, with the rise of the Ku Klux Klan to bring about the rehabilitation of the South. Thrilling rides and stirring rescues furnish the great dramatic force in this part of the story.

FRIDAY July 16

UNION

PRESS

MIGHTY MOVING PICTURE SPECTACLE

"The Birth of a Nation" to Open at New Nixon Theatre on Sunday Night. Coming of Picture Feature Incites Wild Interest

The Nixon Theatre opens for the remainder of the summer season with D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Sunday night, July 18. Special ventilating arrangements have been made to keep the run at this theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town. With the refreshing temperature that prevails in the theatre and the excellence of the production which unfolds vividly and diversely the most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interests ever shown, the production at Atlantic City is sure to be welcomed by the populace here. The earlier episodes lead up to the Civil War and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre. The succeeding narrative reveals the dramatic intensity of the Reconstruction days and the reign of the carpetbaggers, the rise of the Ku Klux Klans and their thrilling efforts to reclaim the South. The tale develops allegorically into an apotheosis of our national unity.

The historical incidents are interwoven with threads of love and adventure and a score of harmonious relationship to the several thousand details of the drama lends intensity to the presentation.

Grant and Lee Signing Peace Terms at Appomatox in "The Birth of a Nation," Coming to the New Nixon Sunday Night.

REVEIW

Delaware 1-2-17

TELEGRAPH

MASTER PICTURE AT SHORE

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" for Atlantic City.

D. W. Griffith's massive photoplay production, "The Birth of a Nation," around which controversy has raged in several places, will approach Philadelphia, via Atlantic City. The production will open an engagement at the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, tomorrow night and it is expected to have a run at the seashore resort.

"The Birth of a Nation" is heralded by its producers as the forerunner of "Two-Dollar" motion pictures and is now in its sixth month at a New York playhouse.

Mr. Griffith was eight months creating the picture. He employed 18,000 men and 3,000 horses to get the desired effects. The total cost of the production is said to have been approximately $500,000. The story ranges over a wide area of American development, but its greater action is represented in the span of sixteen years covered by the events leading up to and including the Civil War. The relationship of the slavery question to those momentous developments is the basic theme of the epic. For details of this Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" was taken as a base.

There is a blending of history and romance, showing the old South before the war and the meeting of the members of the Northern and Southern families whose fortunes furnish the human interest and individual appeal which is essential to true drama. For big effects the master producer has shown several great conflicts of the war, including Sherman's march to the Sea and the final meeting of Grant and Lee at Petersburg in the last great battle and then the peace arrangements at Appomattox, Ford's Theatre in Washington and the assassination of President Lincoln. This tragedy is followed by a representation of the South under the Carpetbagger and Reconstruction periods, with the rise of the KuKlux Klan to bring about the rehabilitation of the South.

GIGANTIC CAST FOR SPECTACLE

On Sunday night, July 18, in the Nixon Theater, D. W. Griffith will present, a photographic spectacle entitled "The Birth of a Nation," for a Summer run. The story upon which the work is based is Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman."

Mr. Griffith has been known heretofore as the foremost producer of motion picture successes in houses devoted to this style of entertainment. His present production is a step forward which will demonstrate the marvelous scope and artistic values of the camera play as a work of incomparable dramatic appeal. There are no established standards by which his newest production can be guaged. The producer devoted eight months to its making. He employed the services of 18,000 people and 3000 horses to get the needed effects. A complete score has been written fof the presentation. The accompanient will be played by an orchestra of 40 musicians.

The story begins in the Seventeenth Century with the coming of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War with its terrific battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the Reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem; the establishment of an everlasting peace in the end. These historical scenes are given in accurate detail. A drama of human conflicts as shown in well drawn characters links history to romance. It is all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world.

BIRTH OF A NATION' WILL REMAIN SEASON

First Showing of the Big Film Sunday Night—Has Created Records Elsewhere

The Nixon Theatre opens for the remainder of the summer season with D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Sunday night, July 18. Special ventilating arrangements have been made to keep the run at this theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town. With the refreshing temperature that prevails in the theatre and the excellence of the production which unfolds vividly and diversely the most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interests ever shown, the production at Atlantic City is sure to be welcomed by the populace here. The earlier episodes lead up to the Civil War and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre. The succeeding narrative reveals the dramatic intensity of the Reconstruction days and the reign of the carpetbaggers, the rise of the Ku Klux Klans and their thrilling efforts to reclaim the South. The tale develops allegorically into an apotheosis of our national unity.

The historical incidents are interwoven with threads of love and adventure and a score of harmonious relationship to the several thousand details of the drama lends intensity to the presentation.

Saturday July 17

PRESS

UNION

BIRTH OF NATION' TOMORROW NIGHT

Big Film Will Have Its First Sho ing Then at New Nixon Theatre

D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," is all in readiness for the commencement of its summer run at the New Nixon Theatre. The opening performance is announced for tomorrow night at 8:30 P. M. In recognition of Manager Nixon's enterprise in bringing this marvelous production to Atlantic City at the crest of its triumphs in New York a brilliant audience will be on hand for the local premiere.

The experts who look after the technical details of the big production have been working night and day and have every thing in tip-top shape so that the New York offering will be duplicated here as minutely as if it were lifted bodily from the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running for six months and is still the most talked of play in the metropolis.

It seems almost useless to say anything in advance regarding "The Birth of a Nation." Everybody seems to know something about it and yet when one comes to make simple statements about some of its high lights the description sounds superlative. This is due to the magnitude of the story and its unfolding. A few days ago we spoke glowingly of a play that used 100 people and showed a dozen different scenes. A spectacle that employed 500 was phenominal and none was ever conceived that held together a story of gripping interest in absorbing sequences. Griffith has no use for single numerals or hundreds. He thinks and works in the thousands. For his human forces he used 18,000 men and women. Not content with this he took over the roads of an entire county for a week and there develop the action of 3,000 of the most daring riders in the world upon horses that were trained for this part of his epic. Mere tinsel scenery could not frame his poetic fancies and dramatic purposes. The great artist of all ages put in his background, from mountains to the oceans. Trees that have been growing for centuries wave along his side lines. Whole cities were built up specially for his thrilling conflicts only to be burned in imitation of the ravages of war. One great battle scene stretches across a plane of 10 square miles and beneath the bursting shells and the sweep of mortor bombs ten thousand men in the spirit and lust of war charge across these vales and trenches with a fidelity that makes you gasp with astonishment.

When the half of it is grasped you no longer wonder why it has been such a triumph. It is the greatest thing ever achieved upon the stage and it is only meet that an American should have realized its opportunities.

The local engagement is for the remainder of the summer with performances every afternoon at 2:30, and every night at 8:30 P. M.

MAE MARSH in "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon commencing Sunday night.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NIXON

REVIEW

Wonderful Spectacle Will Begin Season's Run Sunday Night

With every arrangement complete for it next brilliant offering the New Nixon Theater to-morrow night will begin its mid-summer season under the most favorable circumstances. D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen there. Special pains have been taken to see that nothing is lacking to enhance the success of this marvelous work of art. A representative audience will be on hand to greet the opening which is announced for 8.30 P. M. Sunday night. After this there will be two performances daily, a matinee at 2.30 and a night performance at 8.30.

It would seem that everybody knows more or less about "The Birth of a Nation." This is the great picture drama which has set a new standard in the theaters of the country. Since its initial presentation in New York it has been the sensation of the year. It has run nearly six months and is still the most talked of play on Broadway. The business has been simply phenomenal and this success has been duplicated in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and other important cities. Where former managers were content to measure their achievements in single numerals Griffith operates in thousands. Instead of the usual great company of 100 people he employed 18,000 men and women to get his human effects. Where Mazeppa once thrilled you with her single charger across a wooded stage of apparent scenic splendor Griffith shows 3000 of the wildest riders in the world dashing for miles over country roads for which an entire county had to be commandeered for his setting. Almighty nature painted the background. The ablest artist can only hope to give a fleeting glimpse of an imitation in the plastic forms that once proved satisfactory. In all the excitement there is the ever essential human note holding you spellbound to the developing narrative. Tears and smiles mingle and music lulls the sense as only those old melodies and the modern treatment of the recurrent theme can work one's emotions.

The Atlantic City engagement bids fair to be the most sensationally successful of all. The Nixon Theater is ideal for the perfect projection of the great picture and the heighth of the season will find "The Birth of a Nation" one of the really big attractions of the current season along the famous Boardwalk.

GRIFFITH PICTURE AT NEW NIXON

Great Advance Sale of Seats for "Birth of a Nation" to Open Tomorrow for an Unlimited Run

D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," is all in readiness for the commencement of its summer run at the New Nixon Theatre. The opening performance is announced for tomorrow night at 8:30 P. M. In recognition of Manager Nixon's enterprise in bringing this marvelous production to Atlantic City at the crest of its triumphs in New York a brilliant audience will be on hand for the local premiere.

The experts who look after the technical details of the big production have been working night and day and have every thing in tip-top shape so that the New York offering will be duplicated here as minutely as if it were lifted bodily from the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running for six months and is still the most talked of play in the metropolis.

It seems almost useless to say anything in advance regarding "The Birth of a Nation." Everybody seems to know something about it and yet when one comes to make simple statements about some of its high lights the description sounds superlative. This is due to the magnitude of the story and its unfolding. A few days ago we spoke glowingly of a play that used 100 people and showed a dozen different scenes. A spectacle that employed 500 was phenominal and none was ever conceived that held together a story of gripping interest in absorbing sequences. Griffith has no use for single numerals or hundreds. He thinks and works in the thousands. For his human forces he used 18,000 men and women. Not content with this he took over the roads of an entire county for a week and there develop the action of 3,000 of the most daring riders in the world upon horses that were trained for this part of his epic. Mere tinsel scenery could not frame his poetic fancies and dramatic purposes. The great artist of all ages put in his background, from mountains to the oceans. Trees that have been growing for centuries wave along his side lines. Whole cities were built up specially for his thrilling conflicts only to be burned in imitation of the ravages of war. One great battle scene stretches across a plane of 10 square miles and beneath the bursting shells and the sweep of mortor bombs ten thousand men in the spirit and lust of war charge across these vales and trenches with a fidelity that makes you gasp with astonishment.

When the half of it is grasped you no longer wonder why it has been such a triumph. It is the greatest thing ever achieved upon the stage and it is only meet that an American should have realized its opportunities.

The local engagement is for the remainder of the summer with performances every afternoon at 2:30, and every night at 8:30 P. M.

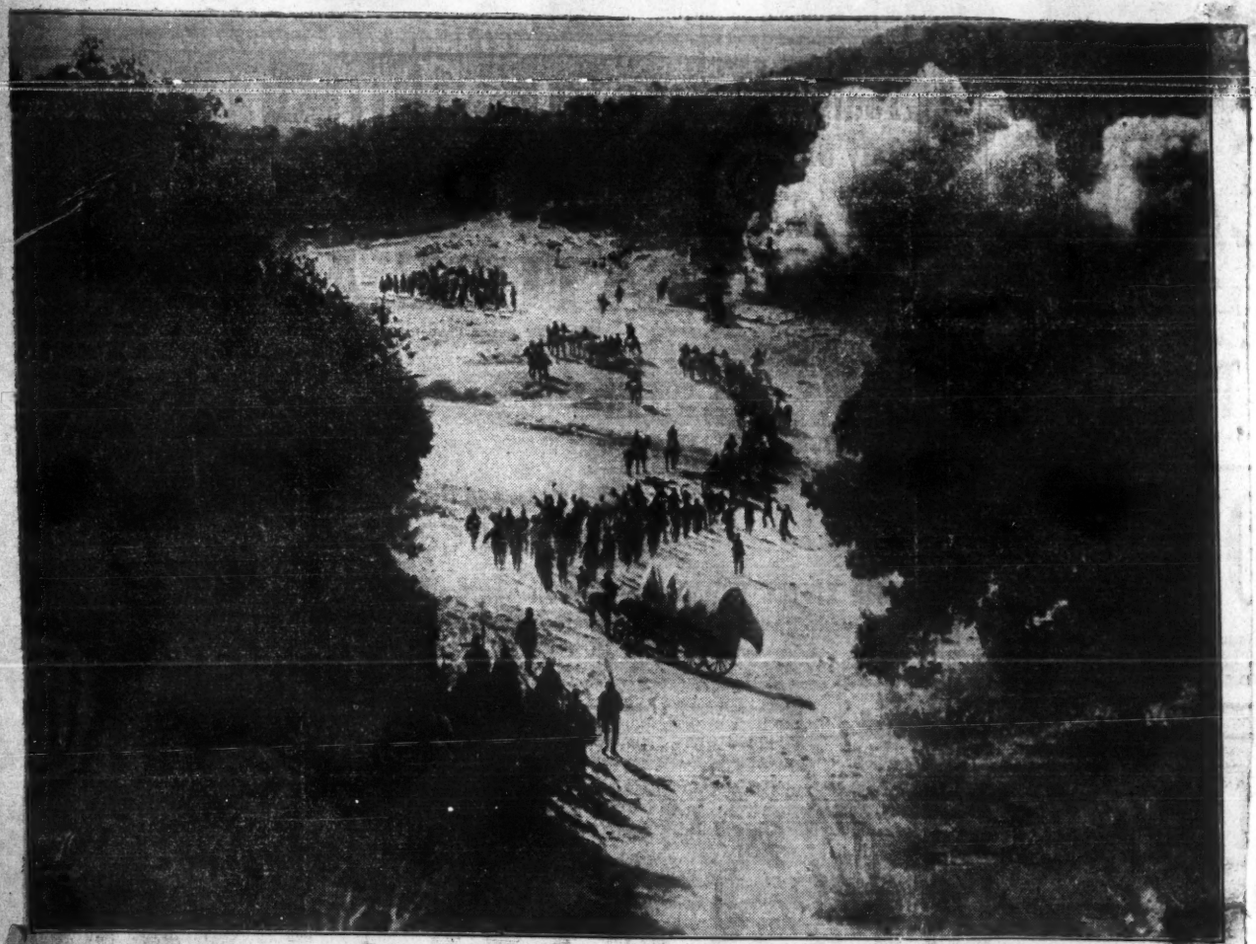
$2 MOVIE AT THE SHORE

"Birth of a Nation" Enthusiastically Received at Atlantic City

Special to The Inquirer.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 18.—The "Birth of a Nation" began the summer season at the New Nixon Theatre on the Boardwalk tonight. Griffith motion picture drama which has created such a furore in New York and elsewhere as the attraction at the regular theatre, is being presented in this resort to the usual $2 scale of prices. The picture is a wonderful production in twelve parts showing the beginning of slavery in America, the colonial settlement of that section in the Civil War, the reconstruction era in the South following the war. The main incidents of the story are taken from Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," but Griffith has made the story form that much bigger in the present form than the last half of the picture deals with the reconstruction era in the South following the war. Over 18,000 persons took part in the production, the latter and most thrilling thing of the part ever undertaken in showing pictures. Atlantic City attended the work on an elaborate scale for the premiere. It promises to be the attraction for the remainder of the summer season at the Nixon.

SUNDAY July 18 GAZETTE



Sherman's March to the Sea, A Scene in "The Birth of a Nation" which Begins its Summer Run at New Nixon Tonight.

Ball at Piedmont, S. C., Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" Which Opens at Nixon

GAZETTE

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS TONIGHT AT THE NEW NIXON

Griffith's Great Spectacle Begins Its Summer Engagement at the Popular Playhouse Now Under Personal Management of Harry Brown.

D. W. Griffith's great spectacle will be presented tonight at the New Nixon Theatre for the first time in Atlantic City. All the details for this great summer engagement of the most important attractions obtainable have been completed and nothing remains but to present the wonderful story which Mr. Griffith has put together.

It is determined that the most brilliant apdience of the season will be on hand tonight to witness the local premiere. In recognition of Manager Nixon's enterprise in booking the great photo-drama for his handsome new theatre the most prominent citizens of the city have signified their intention of being present at the opening.

When "The Birth of a Nation" is unfolded here it will be recognized as the most masterly treatment of the American war theme and the drama which clusters about that story which has ever been conceived by any producers. With the original locale of the great conflict for his background, Griffith has builded an epic. In all the great excitement of his stirring spectacle he has never lost sight of the inherent drama of these historical episodes. He has succeeded in blending history and romance in a way which is astonishing. In the midst of great battles that are flung across an acrea of 10 square miles he enhances his action by those deft touches of human nature which keep his dramatic narrative building up to its great climaxes and subsequent denouncements.

As fast as the eye can follow its sequences the story develops its main characters and its heart interests. A brief prelude introduces the motif of African slavery. Following this event of the 18th century the action leaps to the 19th. century with the beginning of the nation wide movement in the North to abolish this ancient institution. The Stoneman boys of Pennsylvania go South to visit their boarding school chums, the Camerons of South Carolina. Benny Cameron falls in love with Elsie Stoneman and Phil Stoneman surrenders his heart to the elder of the Cameron girls. As romance buds in the waving cotton fields and the hospitable South of the ante-bellum days the note of alarm tears asunder these old cronies. Abraham Lincoln has been elected president and the South threatens to secede. The

(Continued on Page Two)

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

(Continued from Page One)

Stonemans rush north and the Cameron boys catch the spirit of insurrection in their neighborhood. South Carolina goes out of the Union. President Lincoln calls for volunteers. The long delayed clash is on. Great armies begin their movements. The Camerons cast their fortunes with the South. The Stonemans join their northern regiment. The war rolls on for two years and the old chums meet upon the battlefield, one wearing the blue and the other the grey. The younger chums are laid low and die in each others arms. War has cast its blight upon romance. The older boys are Colonels in their respective regiments and too busy to think of love or courting. Death has claimed its tears and treds in divided homes. Ben and Phil at the head of their respective regiments face each other as enemies at Petersburg. It is the last grey days of the Confederate cause but the battle is one of the most desperate ever fought in the world's history. It passes before your vision like a great conflict viewed from a distant coign of vantage. These scenes are the mightiest ever placed within the view of an audience. Ben leads a last desperate charge and falls wounded upon the breast works behind which his former chum commands. He is lifted to a place of safety and desperately wounded is carried to the rear and then sent to the hospital at Washington where Elsie Stoneman is a nurse. In suffering the thread of romance is picked up and followed once more. Meanwhile the old home in the Southland has been torn and wounded and brave hearts left behind suffer all the agonies of war without the valorous compensations of achievements on the field of glory.

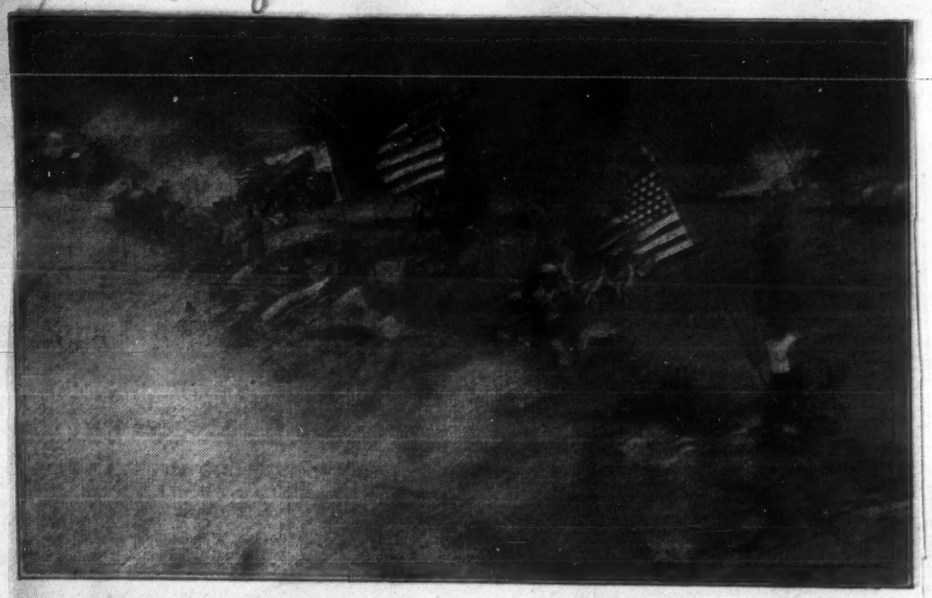
With the realism of a old, Griffith has shown where the real heart aches and sufferings are encountered. Peace at last is in sight when Grant and Lee meet at Appomattox and make terms for ending the terrible conflict. Ben Cameron is released by President Lincoln and goes home to take up the work of rebuilding the shateered South. Just when peace seems in sight and happiness is once more apparent at Piedmont comes the terrible news of the assassination of Lincoln and the South is left to have an even worse fate than the four years of war had meant to its people.

This national calamity is shown in historic detail in Ford's Theatre the night that President Lincoln laid down his life. The carpetbagger horde and the unscrupulous politicians rush in to carry away the remaining booty. Lawlessness and riot run rampant. The freed slaves are cozened and beguiled by white scalawags and not knowing better are carried into riotous excesses. Out of the flickering ashes of their sectional honor springs the Ku Klux Klan. Old enemies are re-united in defence of their aryan birth right. Thrilling rescues and wild rides though the night lend a thrill of great excitement to the narative. At last order finds its way out of chaos. The long separated lovers forgive and forgot and find their romance still fresh in their young hearts. The mighty nation, one and indivisible realizes Daniel Webster's dream at last and the peans of peace break through the rifts. Scenes of the wonderful institutions where the descendants of the former slaves are being educated and made worthy and useful citizens show the progress of this era in a most important branch. Misunderstandings cleared away the permanency of peace is established.

The successful manner in which Griffith has handled this comprehensive theme passes understanding until one has seen the production. It is complete in a thousand details. A great orchestra plays an accompanying theme which lends color and warmth to the telling. It is so big and fine in every department that the narrative establishes a new epoch in a form of art that revleals its unlimited possibilities. The great American play has been realized at last and as one able critic has said "you will be a better American" for seeing it.

MIRIAM COOPER, IN THE "BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE NEW NIXON THEATER.

MONDAY July 19 PRESS



In The Union Trenches As Seen In "The Birth of a Nation" Summer Run at the New Nixon Now Playing

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Now Playing
Twice Daily
Inc. Sundays
Nights 8.30; Mats. 2.30
PRICES:
Eves., 25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00
All Mats. 25c, 50c, $1.00

D. W. GRIFFITH'S MIGHTY SPECTACLE

18,000 People in Great Battles

History in the Making

Love and Romance

Cost $500,000

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3,000 Horses

Thrills on Thrills

Wild Rides

Poetry in Action

Intense Drama

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40
THE MOST STUPENDOUS DRAMATIC ACHIEVEMENT EVER CONCEIVED BY ANY PRODUCER.
Watch These Daily Bulletins for Paens of Praise the Like of Which Were Never Heard Before

No. 5— "It is doubly interesting to one who was himself alive and moving at the time of which it speaks."
Tanner Cox, Crossey of the Brownies

STUPENDOUS FILM IS 'BIRTH OF NATION'

Griffith's Big Photoplay is an Epoch-Making Production. First Performance at the Nixon Last Night

D. W. Griffith has achieved something to talk about in "The Birth of a Nation," which pened for a summer engagement at the New Nixon last night.

So much had been said of this work that one was naturally expectant but all the preparatory superlatives about it faded into insignificance in the face of what it actually portrays. It makes the drama of former days look like a cheap mitation. You no longer look at immobile scenery or players confined within the narrow limits of the three walls which have constituted play land. Here you have the whole country before you and you jump from one century to another while you watch history being made. You see statesmen grappling in the very time of their development with the mightiest problems that were to be faced and the preservation of the Union accomplished. You see the machinations of politics and the outcome of things which are hidden behind the scenes of an ordinary play. In fact all of it is presented with such faithfulness and yet is brought forward at such a pace that the present writer admits an inability to cover the hundredth part of it.

One thing is sure, this man Griffith is the genius of the twentieth century theatre. It seems incredible that one mind could carry so many details and bring it before you in the similitude of a gripping drama which reaches out from a shadowed screen and makes you feel as if the pages of history were turning so fast you are learning things about your own country which had escaped your notice before. He has mastered two essentials of the new art. He knows the value of suspense and he is the master of rhythm. The astonishing part is that he employs thousands where other dramatists were content with a cast of twenty players or some of them have undertaken to utilize a hundred contributors to the mise-en-scene. He slowly begins to play upon your interest by establishing his central topic before carrying you into the important beginning of his narrative and then the pace quickens and for two hours you sit in breathless amazement watching the greatest drama that has ever been associated with American history. It is indescribable. In fact it is almost unbelieveable. You have seen drama upon a so-called scale of magnitude, but you have never seen real drama until you see the Griffith brand of it. He has lifted the once lowly "movie" to sublime heights. There are moments of such tender appeal that they fascinate you and the next second you thrill with the mad rush of thousands of warriors over nistoric scenes and filling every space as far as the eye of the camera can reach into the distance. Great shells are hurled through the air, bombs explode with terrific force in the midst of frenzied men and thousands of antagonists charge upon guarded trenches wiah an abandon that is war as it is actually played in the great drama of history.

When these thousands of men and scenes had been going along we thought the dramatist had reached his climax too soon. Then imagine the surprise of having this wonderful narrative carried to greater heights. Dich Lincoln's passing the South faces the stern problem of finding itself without the master hand to guide the people to this end. A horde of scheming mercenaries pile out of the victorious north to set up their rights in the torn and bleeding land. What follows is reflective of eight years of the darkest pages that have been written in American history. War gives way to the civilian struggle which is more terrible because it is more individually human.

The simple stories of the Northern

PRESS

GREAT AUDIENCE FILLS NEW NIXON

"Birth of a Nation" Opened Last Night—No Picture Has Commanded Half so Much Interest

D. W. Griffith has achieved something to talk about in "The Birth of a Nation," which pened for a summer engagement at the New Nixon last night.

So much had been said of this work that one was naturally expectant but all the preparatory superlatives about it faded into insignificance in the face of what it actually portrays. It makes the drama of former days look like a cheap mitation. You no longer look at immobile scenery or players confined within the narrow limits of the three walls which have constituted play land. Here you have the whole country before you and you jump from one century to another while you watch history being made. You see statesmen grappling in the very time of their development with the mightiest problems that were to be faced and the preservation of the Union accomplished. You see the machinations of politics and the outcome of things which are hidden behind the scenes of an ordinary play. In fact all of it is presented with such faithfulness and yet is brought forward at such a pace that the present writer admits an inability to cover the hundredth part of it.

One thing is sure, this man Griffith is the genius of the twentieth century theatre. It seems incredible that one mind could carry so many details and bring it before you in the similitude of a gripping drama which reaches out from a shadowed screen and makes you feel as if the pages of history were turning so fast you are learning things about your own country which had escaped your notice before. He has mastered two essentials of the new art. He knows the value of suspense and he is the master of rhythm. The astonishing part is that he employs thousands where other dramatists were content with a cast of twenty players or some of them have undertaken to utilize a hundred contributors to the mise-en-scene. He slowly begins to play upon your interest by establishing his central topic before carrying you into the important beginning of his narrative and then the pace quickens and for two hours you sit in breathless amazement watching the greatest drama that has ever been associated with American history. It is indescribable. In fact it is almost unbelieveable. You have seen drama upon a so-called scale of magnitude, but you have never seen real drama until you see the Griffith brand of it. He has lifted the once lowly "movie" to sublime heights. There are moments of such tender appeal that they fascinate you and the next second you thrill with the mad rush of thousands of warriors over nistoric scenes and filling every space as far as the eye of the camera can reach into the distance. Great shells are hurled through the air, bombs explode with terrific force in the midst of frenzied men and thousands of antagonists charge upon guarded trenches wiah an abandon that is war as it is actually played in the great drama of history.

When these thousands of men and scenes had been going along we thought the dramatist had reached his climax too soon. Then imagine the surprise of having this wonderful narrative carried to greater heights. Dich Lincoln's passing the South faces the stern problem of finding itself without the master hand to guide the people to this end. A horde of scheming mercenaries pile out of the victorious north to set up their rights in the torn and bleeding land. What follows is reflective of eight years of the darkest pages that have been written in American history. War gives way to the civilian struggle which is more terrible because it is more individually hu-

UNION

REVIEW

BIG SPECTACLE STARTS SEASON

"Birth of a Nation" at New Nixon Proves a Revelation

D. W. Griffith's much-talked of spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," began an engagement at the Nixon Theater last night before a tremendous audience, the size of which was unprecedented in Atlantic City Theatres.

Much was expected of this famous motion picture, the first for which a two dollar scale of prices has prevailed, and which is now in its sixth month in New York its fifth month in Boston and a third in Chicago but let us say at the start that instead of fulfilling local expectation, it exceeded our most favorable anticipations. It bewildered and completely swept the audience off its feet. Such enthusiastic applause and cheering has not been heard here in many a day.

"The Birth of a Nation," is by far the most marvelous and gigantic production ever witnessed here. It is everything that goes to make up a powerul drama a stupendous spectacle, an astounding motion picture, and withal a stirring inspiring, hisorical pageant. All of the momentous incidents of American history are re-enacted before one's eyes with startling realism. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced, showing 18,000, soldiers in fierce conflict, long lines of trenches extending three miles in the distance, shells exploding, artillery duels, terrific cavalry charges, all of which are without doubt the most wonderful war scenes ever conceived and revealed. The night battle scenes were amazing, with the red glare of bursting shells. The burning of Atlanta Sherman's march to the sea, the Battle of Petersburg, and the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomatox are some of the remarkable scenes as is also the assassination of President of President Lincon at old Ford's Theater, Washington, D. C., The later one is one o fthe most impressive moments in the spectacle.

Then the terrible Reconstruction Days in the South following the War are depicted when that unfortunate country suffered the reign of the unscrupulous carpetbaggers from the North. The rescue of the South by the Klu Klux Klan and the realization finally of "Union Inseparable Now and Forever" among the United Staes of America form the climax of the great production.

The players who enact the thrilling drama give finished and powerful characterizations. There are so many in the cast and all so uniformily excellent that it is impossible to mention them all and it would be unfair to single out any special few. The large symphony orchestra which accompanies the presentation renders an exceptionally beautiful score most efficiently and impressively.

Finally "The Birth of a Nation" is invaluable as a historical study the difference between seeing it and reading history being that by the former it is much more forcibly impressed upon the mind by beholding it before the very eyes and moreover, one is besides treated to the most gorgeous spectacle the brain of man ever imagined.

IN THE TRENCHES, WAR SCENE FROM THE "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON — NOW THE ALL THIS WEEK

TUESDAY July 20 REVIEW

GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THIS WEEK.

SPECTACLE IS TREMENDOUS HIT

Great Enthusiasm Over "Birth Of a Nation" At New Nixon

After the phenominal hit scored by D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Sunday evening when it was given here for the first time there was no longer any doubt of its success for the remainder of the run.

Such bigness of theme, such wonderful handling of the great production down to the smallest detail was quite a surprise despite all that had been said of it in advance. It is easy to understand why it has had such sensationally successful runs in New York, Boston and Chicago. It outdoes the mightiest things of the theater and then proceeds to set a new standard for accomplishment which one naturally wonders how on earth it can be duplicated. It also sets new records in the matter of enthusiasm.

Griffith's multiplicity of detail and the careful manner in which he has worked out every essential of the big production was the most astonishing thing. There had been some misgivings here as to the matter of the public acceptance of the $2 moving picture attraction on a par with the biggest things of the theater. This does not exist after seeing it. It establishes a new standard in this respect also for at both performances yesterday the long line of people before the box office attested that Atlantic City had capitulated to the stirring work the same as every other city where it has been presented, pos-

PRESS

BIG INTEREST IN 'BIRTH OF A NATION

Griffith Film Has Made a Wide Appeal to all Types of Film Lovers

"The Birth of a Nation" has started in at the New Nixon Theatre to duplicate its phenominal success as shown in the runs now current in New York, Boston and Chicago. It is a wonderful work, and after the enthusiasm shown at the opening it is easy to understand why it has made such an impression everywhere. There is more drama and history piled into the three hours of its duration than is usually covered in half a season of theatre-going. Despite the magnitude of his work, the astonishing thing about this Griffith creation is that the producer has kept it so closely related to the theme of the original narrative. Usually there is a slight thread of a story which carries a big production along, but here is an instance where the production is so much bigger than anything ever undertaken one would naturally expect to lose all continuity of plot. However, this story dominates the production at every angle. You never lose sight of the human interest of the protagonists and their little world of love and misunderstandings and mutual discoveries holds attention rivetted to the developments, even though the action is carried to the great battlefields or in the theatre where Lincoln met his death or on the outskirts where the Klansmen rush in solid numbers to the rescue of those in distress.

It is the human appeal which gives the vast material Griffith has assembled such unusual force. The long line of ticket buyers at both performances yesterday attested to the instantaneous hit the mighty spectacle had made with theatre-goers in Atlantic City. It is a wonderful production for the summer engagement, and the Nixon will be the mecca for 'play patrons for the remainder of the season on the Boardwalk.

BROWN HOUSING BIG AUDIENCES

"Birth of a Nation," the Mighty Picture Spectacle, Marks New Era for the New Nixon Theatre

UNION

"The Birth of a Nation" has started in at the New Nixon Theatre to duplicate its phenominal success as shown in the runs now current in New York, Boston and Chicago. It is a wonderful work, and after the enthusiasm shown at the opening it is easy to understand why it has made such an impression everywhere. There is more drama and history piled into the three hours of its duration than is usually covered in half a season of theatre-going. Despite the magnitude of his work, the astonishing thing about this Griffith creation is that the producer has kept it so closely related to the theme of the original narrative. Usually there is a slight thread of a story which carries a big production along, but here is an instance where the production is so much bigger than anything ever undertaken one would naturally expect to lose all continuity of plot. However, this story dominates the production at every angle. You never lose sight of the human interest of the protagonists and their little world of love and misunderstandings and mutual discoveries holds attention rivetted to the developments, even though the action is carried to the great battlefields or in the theatre where Lincoln met his death or on the outskirts where the Klansmen rush in solid numbers to the rescue of those in distress.

It is the human appeal which gives the vast material Griffith has assembled such unusual force. The long line of ticket buyers at both performances yesterday attested to the instantaneous hit the mighty spectacle had made with theatre-goers in Atlantic City. It is a wonderful production for the summer engagement, and the Nixon will be the mecca for 'play patrons for the remainder of the season on the Boardwalk.

Wednesday July 21

REVIEW

"BIRTH OF A NATION" A MIGHTY PROSPECT

Griffith, In Planning Spectacle, Masters Tremendous Mass of Detail

When you see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of A Nation," which has taken Atlantic City by storm since it opened at the new Nixon Sunday night the first thing you do is to wonder how on earth one man ever kept track of so vast a subject and crowded so much into this powerful narrative.

This is an old story with Griffith. Like most men who make their mark in a chosen calling he has an infinite capacity for detail. Nothing is too large or small to escape his interest if it bears upon the subject he is handling. In the case of the big spectacle he was fully fortified before he began. It may be interesting to note how he went about it. When the financial sponsors of this big production first notified Mr. Griffith that they had chosen the theme of "The Clansman" for his next great picture he set about to familiarize himself with everything relating to the story and the facts of history which had prompted it originally. Four university professors looked after this end of the work for him and nightly reported the results of their research work in relation to the drama which Griffith was shaping up in his mind. At the same time military experts and West Point men were laying out the plans for the reproduction of some of the greatest battles that had ever been fought in the world. One by one each department was organized and instructed in exactly what Griffith wanted. Meanwhile the director and his expert camera men were roaming about the country selecting ideal spots in the various localities for the scenes of their action. This matter of topographical selection is something Griffith never entrusts to any of his subordinates. Out of the mass of detail he was ready when the time arrived to go ahead with his task of direction. He produced his picture in an incredibly short time when he started the actual work of photographing the different scenes and incidents.

It was the patient preparatory work that counted in the end. Cities had been laid out, towns built, roads reconstructed, great battlefields made over, thousands of soldiers drilled for the camera warfare other thousands of riders and horses trained for their part and costumes and everything all laid out in readiness. When he started it worked out smooth as clock work. All told, from the time he took up the book to make his production until the first completed copy of it came from the studios he had consumed exactly eight months.

REVIEW

PRESS

FACTS ABOUT THE GRIFFITH PICTURE

Titanic Production Over a Year in the Making. Based on Historical Facts. Now Showing at the New Nixon

Now that D. W. Griffith's great production, "The Birth of a Nation," has been presented in Atlantic City and is on every one's tongue as the main topic of interest as far as summer amusements go, those who know the inside details of the work are being flooded with inquiries regarding how it was done.

In reply to several of these, it has been stated that this wonderful producer selecter his story over a year ago. Once having mapped out the idea in his own mind, he went about to gather his data and complete arrangements for assembling the mightiest series of actions that had ever been shown in a theatre in the world. This was rather an ambitious undertaking, but Griffith is the sort that does things differently. This is why he has risen from a $50 a week actor in less than eight years to the foremost position in motion picture direction and earns a salary of over $100,000 a year.

"The Birth of a Nation" is his masterpiece to date, but he says he has only begun to do big and startling things. For this work he began by laying in a solid foundation. Four university professors gathered the historical facts for the big scenes and verified the incidents which Griffith had suggested he would utilize in his drama. They read over 5,000 volumes and war records to get the required data. For his military effects he had the co-operation of five graduates of West Point and he also consulted with veterans who actually fought on both sides in the great conflicts which are so faithfully reproduced. While these plans were being completed, Griffith, with his expert photographer, was traveling over many sections of the country to locate the ideal spots in which to get his finest photographic effects and still keep his story within its historic surroundings. Views were taken in South Carolina, Virginia, Louisiana, Mexico and California. Of course, the great studio effects were all made in California. This careful attention to a side of the picture which is unknown to the public is only an evidence of everything Griffith does. He planned carefully, and when he was ready to begin the actual work of direction he had everything so methodically laid out, and was so familiar with each detail, that he completed his mammoth work in record time. All told, however, he was exactly eight months making it from the time the story was selected until it was turned out a complete production.

GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF [illegible]

UNION

REQUIRED YEAR FOR 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

Griffith the Producer, Began the Big Film Now at the Nixon Over Year Ago

Now that D. W. Griffith's great production, "The Birth of a Nation," has been presented in Atlantic City and is on every one's tongue as the main topic of interest as far as summer amusements go, those who know the inside details of the work are being flooded with inquiries regarding how it was done.

In reply to several of these, it has been stated that this wonderful producer selecter his story over a year ago. Once having mapped out the idea in his own mind, he went about to gather his data and complete arrangements for assembling the mightiest series of actions that had ever been shown in a theatre in the world. This was rather an ambitious undertaking, but Griffith is the sort that does things differently. This is why he has risen from a $50 a week actor in less than eight years to the foremost position in motion picture direction and earns a salary of over $100,000 a year.

"The Birth of a Nation" is his masterpiece to date, but he says he has only begun to do big and startling things. For this work he began by laying in a solid foundation. Four university professors gathered the historical facts for the big scenes and verified the incidents which Griffith had suggested he would utilize in his drama. They read over 5,000 volumes and war records to get the required data. For his military effects he had the co-operation of five graduates of West Point and he also consulted with veterans who actually fought on both sides in the great conflicts which are so faithfully reproduced. While these plans were being completed, Griffith, with his expert photographer, was traveling over many sections of the country to locate the ideal spots in which to get his finest photographic effects and still keep his story within its historic surroundings. Views were taken in South Carolina, Virginia, Louisiana, Mexico and California. Of course, the great studio effects were all made in California. This careful attention to a side of the picture which is unknown to the public is only an evidence of everything Griffith does. He planned carefully, and when he was ready to begin the actual work of direction he had everything so methodically laid out, and was so familiar with each detail, that he completed his mammoth work in record time. All told, however, he was exactly eight months making it from the time the story was selected until it was turned out a complete production.

THUR Eve. July 22

UNION

REVIEW

PRESS

THE WORLD AWAITS 'BIRTH OF NATION'

The Picture Will go to the Veriest Corners of the Earth—Is Filling the New Nixon Theatre

Never in the history of the theatre has there been so widespread a demand for a play as there is for David Wark Griffith's magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has commenced a successful summer run at the New Nixon Theatre by playing to the largest audiences that have ever assembled in this city. Over two thousand offers have been received for playing rights of this spectacle. Although an American subject the demand is not less insistent from foreign countries than in the United States. Arrangements have been completed for its presentation in one of the principal theatres in London, where it is expected to remain for at least a year. Cables have come from Australia, Spain, Portugal, Switzerland, Sweden Norway, Denmark, South Africa, India, China and Japan, making bids for the production rights. Over twenty million people are today anxiously awaiting an opportunity to see this masterpiece.

In New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Milwaukee the record made by this spectacle has been nothing short of phenomenal. Never in the history of the theatre have so many people flocked to see an entertainment. Twice every day the theatres have been filled while ordinarily high-priced theatrical offerings only give two matinees a week. No dramatic or musical attraction could make such a record even if the actors could stand the physical strain.

Few people realize that nearly one hundred people are required to properly present to the public this gigantic spectacle. Musicians, expert electricians and operators, men to handle mechanical effects and men in other departments make up this roster which is as large as that of a large musical comedy company.

It is the massiveness in both material and manner of presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" that has made the public not only willing but eager to pay the high price to witness such a production. Not even Nero gazed upon so magnificent a spectacle. Nor did those who participated in the actual scenes shown see what can be witnessed today in the comfort of a theatre seat for those who liver then never had such a comprehensive outlook.

Performances are given twice daily at 2:30 and 8:30 P. M.

WAR SPECTACLE TREMENDOUS HIT

Birth of a Nation" Draw-in Capacity Houses At New Nixon

D. W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle of peace and war, "The Birth of a Nation," is playing to capacity houses twice daily at the New Nixon Theatre, in San Francisco, Las Angeles, Milwaukee record now being made daily at the Liberty Theatre, in New York, the Tremont Theatre, Boston, the Illinois Theatre in Chicago and the leading theatres in San Francisco, Lon Angeles, Milwaukee and Brighton Beach. In the abovenemed cities "The Birth of a Nation" has been attracting these record audiences for many months and in New York and Chicago it will be shown for a year to come.

Produced during the fiftieth anniversary of the closing events of the Civil War, the play offers an unusuallly vivid portrayal of those epoch-making scenes. It is half a century since Lee's surrender to Grant, and the collapse of the Confederacy and the terrible assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, Washington. These events that stirred the nation to its depth are depicted by Mr. Griffith in so realistic manner as to startle with their realism every fast scattering few who were themselves a part of what was done in those momentous days.

The first part of the picture covers the entire period from 1861 to 1865 with massive battle scenes which by their horrors accentuate the blessings of peace. The second half Mr. Griffith devotes to the soul-stirring drama of Reconstruction. He shows the stricken South in the clutch of the Carpetbagger and how it was saved by the Scottish Clan of the Carolinas. Here the dramatic power reaches its zenith. The eyes of the spectators look backwards for fifty years and see history in its making.

This wonderful spectacle is made still more impressive by the art of music, interpreted by forty picked musicians. Extensive mechanical effects increase the illusion of reality.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the first film spectacle to play any first class theatre at the same prices that are obtained for the most elaborate dramatic productions. Its success promises to revolutionize the theatrical world. It has set a higher standard for all forms of entertainment. And first of all "The Birth of a Natioa" is great entertainment. In addition to that it is like reading history by flashes of lightning.

PRESS

1st. PRIZE LETTER.

PROTESTS AGAINST RACE HATRED

Editor of TE HREVIEW,

Dear Sir:—Please allow me space for the following: "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown in this city. As every one knows this picture appeals to race hatred.

In your morning issue of the 19th I read a letter that you published which was written and endorsed by several of Atlantic City's leading colored citizens. I would like to suggest to these gentlemen that they should make an appointment with Mayor Riddle and tell him personally of their grievance.

Letters which are written to the newspapers protesting against this trouble making moving pictures serve only to advertise it.

When this picture was shown in New York thousands of dollars were paid to advertise it to the public and we all know that a half page of advertising in a New York paper costs a good deal of money. It was quite amusing to read in one section of the paper a protest against the picture and in another a large ad and in still another section an article saying it was the best ever, and every white person ought to go to see it. Several weeks ago "The Nigger" was shown at the City Square" and the "Criterion." I think producer Griffith heard about it and thought the floating population, the citizens and Mayor Riddle would stand for his trouble maker.

"The Negger" only lasted four days in Philadelphia and cannot be shown in Wilmington. Why? Because the colored citizens, a better word, the VOTERS, went to the Mayor with their protest. That is what we want to do: Let a delegation of our leading citizens, tax payers and voters, go and tell their troubles to the Mayor.

I believe he will run the "Birth of Trouble" out of the city. Mr. Dixon knew what he was doing when he gave up the ministry to write against the Negro. He knew then if necessary, he could meet Tillman, Hedin and the others in the sweet beyond and say: "Brother trouble makers, I did what I could to keep the black man down."

JEROME DOUGLAS.
11 North Kentucky avenue.

WIDESPREAD DEMAND FOR 'BIRTH OF NATION'

Almost All Countries Want to See Film Now at the Nixon

Never in the history of the theatre has there been so widespread a demand for a play as there is for David Wark Griffith's magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has commenced a successful summer run at the New Nixon Theatre by playing to the largest audiences that have ever assembled in this city. Over two thousand offers have been received for playing rights of this spectacle. Although an American subject the demand is not less insistent from foreign countries than in the United States. Arrangements have been completed for its presentation in one of the principal theatres in London, where it is expected to remain for at least a year. Cables have come from Australia, Spain, Portugal, Switzerland, Sweden Norway, Denmark, South Africa, India, China and Japan, making bids for the production rights. Over twenty million people are today anxiously awaiting an opportunity to see this masterpiece.

In New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Milwaukee the record made by this spectacle has been nothing short of phenomenal. Never in the history of the theatre have so many people flocked to see an entertainment. Twice every day the theatres have been filled while ordinarily high-priced theatrical offerings only give two matinees a week. No dramatic or musical attraction could make such a record even if the actors could stand the physical strain.

Few people realize that nearly one hundred people are required to properly present to the public this gigantic spectacle. Musicians, expert electricians and operators, men to handle mechanical effects and men in other departments make up this roster which is as large as that of a large musical comedy company.

It is the massiveness in both material and manner of presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" that has made the public not only willing but eager to pay the high price to witness such a production. Not even Nero gazed upon so magnificent a spectacle. Nor did those who participated in the actual scenes shown see what can be witnessed today in the comfort of a theatre seat for those who liver then never had such a comprehensive outlook.

Performances are given twice daily at 2:30 and 8:30 P. M.

COLORED PEOPLE PROTEST PICTURE

Pastors Sign Petition Objecting to "Birth of a Nation"

Editor Press:

We earnestly protest against the play known as "The Birth of a Nation," being staged and played in Atlantic City, N. J., for the following reasons:

1. It tends to create friction between the races and to distroy the good work of our great government which has been brought about by the sacrificing of so many good and brave white and black men and women.

2. It serves to discourage the Negro race in the United States and to place them before the world as unfit for assimulation or to participate in any part of government under which we live.

3. Because we are trying hard to eliminate the objectionable condition under which we have lived far too long, such condition being chiefly brought about by the Negro being deprived of a fair chance and an equal opportunity in the race of life in America. Now if I read the signs of the times correctly I think it is high time that the people in the United States should pinch themselves and rub their eyes and wake up. And instead of wasting their energy and time in the way of encouraging and applauding the trouble maker it should be the desire of every American to work for a very closely united people as well as the United States for to be united in name and not in heart and hand woefully fails to form that bulwark which serves to defend, love and serve the home, preserve the state, protect and defend one's country at all hazard whatever the sacrifice may be: for Jesus prayed the Heavenly Father to make us believers on Him, as He the Father are one, and so I pray, be the will of God, that the nation of become one united in spirit and work the uplift of all in order that this might perform the work which God assigned to its hands to do, for a devided against itself cannot stand. The same thing is true of a nation.

Now, hoping the editor and the proper officials will take the necessary steps to prohibit this diabolical play, we remain,

Respectfully yours,
JOHN W. LAND,
S. LeROY MORRIS,
President;
L. V. DOUGLAS,
Secretary;
Rev. EUGENE CLARK,
Rev. J. P. GREGORY,
All members of the N. L. of Equal Rights;
Dr. CHAS. D. DOUGLAS,
Pastor Second Baptist Ch.

FRIDAY July 23

REVIEW

BIG SPECTACLE EARNS SUCCESS

"Birth of a Nation" at New Nixon a Marvelous Work

D. W. Griffith's marvelous masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," is the most impressive spectacle ever staged. At the New Nixon it has successfully started on a summer run which promises to eclipse all records.

Thrilling battle scenes, love lyrics of romantic beauty, episodes of rare historical interest and drama in its fiercest garb are component parts of the most lavish production ever presented to the public. It is vital—throbbing with life and virility, of great historical and educational values—and withal a great love story that holds great audiences spellbound.

The stirring events of the Civil War and the period of Reconstruction are shown in striking detail. The fighting in the trenches of Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea and the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and the saving of the South by the Scottish Clans are faithfully reproduced.

Months of research by historians preceded the actual work of production. Engineers from West Point and veterans of the North and South assisted in laying out the great battle grounds. The artillery and other ordinances were those of the exact period. The actual work of assembling and rehearsing the armies took over two months. Director Griffith used twenty batteries of cameras which he directed from a central tower by means of a system of underground telephone connections.

Such perfection of detail insured the success which this spectacle has achieved in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Milwaukee and now Atlantic City.

There are two performances every day at 2.30 and 8.30.

Lillie Gish, in "The Birth of a Nation," at New Nixon Theatre this week.

PRESS

TRIUMPH OF GRIFFITH PHOTOPLAY AT NIXON

"Birth of a Nation" is Creating Records for Attendance in This City

The biggest thrill on the Boardwalk is D. W. Griffith's monster spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has achieved such a triumph at the New Nixon Theatre, where it has entered upon an all-summer run. Three hours of beauty and emotion; the most realistic battle scenes ever staged; the most poetic handling of man and nature.

After preliminary views developing the charming love interest in the South Carolina todnw of Piedmont, shown in the soft, leaf-flecked ? ? ? ? of the rosy days of romance before the war, the spectator suddenly finds himself in the midst of the most remarkable battle scenes ever staged. It is war itself! Sherman swings out on his march to the sea. Atlanta is captured and burned. Still more remarkable is the final battle showing the struggle in the opposing trenches, the vast sweep of infantry taking line after line of entrenchments, until the attacking forces are finally decimated as the "Little Colonel" rams the flag of his state in a still smoking cannon of the Federals.

The handling of these great masses of men is simply marvelous. The clock-like precision of the sweep of armies with the myriad detail of falling men, stricken horses and shrieking shells is the perfection of organized effort. It the last act, devoted mainly to the daring deeds of the Ku Klux Klan, the white array of the marshalled knights as they gather in the shadowy forests and then whirl to the rescue of their women and children is absolutely awe-inspiring. Never before has the theatre shown scenes of sweeping, stirring beauty.

There are two performances every day, at 2.30 and 8.30 P. M., and there are prices to please all.

MAE MARSH in "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theatre

UNION

GRIFFITH MADE MASTER OF FILMS

His Production "Birth of Nation" at the New Nixon a Dream of the First Picture Men

The biggest thrill on the Boardwalk is D. W. Griffith's monster spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has achieved such a triumph at the New Nixon Theatre, where it has entered upon an all-summer run. Three hours of beauty and emotion; the most realistic battle scenes ever staged; the most poetic handling of man and nature.

After preliminary views developing the charming love interest in the South Carolina todnw of Piedmont, shown in the soft, leaf-flecked ? ? ? ? of the rosy days of romance before the war, the spectator suddenly finds himself in the midst of the most remarkable battle scenes ever staged. It is war itself! Sherman swings out on his march to the sea. Atlanta is captured and burned. Still more remarkable is the final battle showing the struggle in the opposing trenches, the vast sweep of infantry taking line after line of entrenchments, until the attacking forces are finally decimated as the "Little Colonel" rams the flag of his state in a still smoking cannon of the Federals.

The handling of these great masses of men is simply marvelous. The clock-like precision of the sweep of armies with the myriad detail of falling men, stricken horses and shrieking shells is the perfection of organized effort. It the last act, devoted mainly to the daring deeds of the Ku Klux Klan, the white array of the marshalled knights as they gather in the shadowy forests and then whirl to the rescue of their women and children is absolutely awe-inspiring. Never before has the theatre shown scenes of sweeping, stirring beauty.

There are two performances every day, at 2.30 and 8.30 P. M., and there are prices to please all.

Tu. Thur Fri. July 22 themselves a part of what was done in those momentous days.

The first part of

Bginning DNIGHT July 18

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

The NEW N

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Mighty Spectacle

Has Claimed the Admiration of a Million Playgoers

18,000 People Used to Tell the Drama

Cost $500,000 To Assemble Its Mighty Forces

BI
NA

atch these bulletins for pæans of praise, the like of which were never heard before.

. 1—"You See, Like the Angels Looking Down From Heaven M
2—"For the First Time in Drama You See War As It Is Actua
3—"It Is Like Writing History With Vivid Flashes of Light

ORCHESTRA OF 40 Direction The Epoc

BRO

"Birt
M Ma
Ne

"The
in at t its pe runs in and Ch after t ing is made
There
into th is use theatre his wo
Griffith kept it the or slight big pe stance bigger would ity of ates th never the pa love a discov develo carrie theatr an, a rush them
In and inves
ave pro
in

SUNDAY GAZETTE

NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES PL.

tor — Harry Brown, Business Manager

Twice Daily Hereafter

NIGHTS—8.30 Sharp MATINEES—2.30 Sharp

At These Rare Prices In Reach of All Patrons

Eves. 25c, 50c, $1, $1.50, $2 All Matinees 25c, 50c, $1

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

Comprising the 8th Wonder of the World

Stampeded the Newspapers and Magazines of America

3,000 Horses Mounted by Daring Riders

Took 8 Months of Super-Human Effort to Produce It

Unfolding the great American play at last in a new and startling form of expression.

ven Mu Have Seen, the Causes That Led to the Civil War." DOROTHY DIX in the Journal Actually ought." RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, America's leading war correspondent.

Lightni" An enthusiastic observation of the Foremost Citizen of the World.

The Epoch P cing Corp., H. E. Aitken, Pres.

SEATS NOW SELLING FOR 1st WEEK

Saturday July 24 PRESS

ASKS MAYOR TO SUPPRESS SHOW

Riddle Gets Letter Declaring "Birth of Nation" Fosters Race Hatred

Atlantic City, N. J.
July 19, 1915.

Honorable William Riddle,
Mayor of Atlantic City,
Atlantic City, N. J.

Dear Sir:--

As mayor of Atlantic City you are no doubt acquainted with the chief or principal things that take place from time to time in Atlantic City and this, of course, leads me to understand that you know of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," which was shown at the New Nixon Theatre last night and which will be shown during this week.

Surely the people of Atlantic City placed great confidence in you when by a majority vote you were selected and elected as mayor of this city, and I trust that their confidence in you will be none the less during your administration. I wish, however, to call your attention to "The Birth of a Nation" for many reasons. In the first place you, as well as every fair-minded American, know of the evils wrought upon the American civilization by this and similar plays, and the continuance of such uncivilized and un-American methods of discriminating against the colored people of America will lead to serious consequences which will be worse than the Civil War of 1861.

The Negro was brought here by force and in spite of all the ill-treatments allotted him he has helped in many ways to make America what it is today. During the Civil War, when all was dark and dreary when the North had every cause to believe that they had lost their fight for the Union, who was it that came to the succor of the Union army—but 369,000 black soldiers, without whose aid we would be living in a divided country and with whose aid we are living under a single flag in a country of which you and I can be well proud of." The Negro has fought side by side with the white man, he has shed his blood for the preservation of the Union, and what are his rewards. His rewards for all that he has done are segregation, race hatred, injustice in the courts, disfranchisement and in whatever way he tries to gain a livilihood we find that barriers are thrown in his way. The Constitution of the United States gives him equal rights as an American citizen, yet, we find that he is denied his constitutional rights in the north, south, east and west. He is jimcrowed, lynched, murdered, burned at the stake, and in many cases after he has been lynched his body is mutilated and his fingers, ears and other parts of body are kept by the mob as souvenirs for their hellish and barbaric work. We shudder at the atrocities practiced by the Germans upon the Belgians, yet many of those are in no way to be compared with what is practiced upon the American Negro while he is supposed to be under protection of the Stars and Stripes, and living in the land of the free and the refuge of the oppressed. While in one part of the country the band is playing "Oh, say can you see by the dawn's early light," in another part the Negro is being lynched and his body riddled with bullets. This is what we call American civilization. Why send missionaries abroad when the barbaric south needs them to teach christianity to her white inhabitants

The play was written by one of the greatest of Negro-alters or Negro haters, that has ever treaded the civilized world. Pennsylvania, Illinois, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and several other states have barred "The Birth of a Nation" from their theatres. Surely New Jersey will not tolerate such filth within her borders

I for one, do not think it necessary for the people of Atlantic City to send you a petition in order that you may stop the play. You, I am sure, are aware of the evils wrought by this play and I think that you could use your executive power as mayor in no better way than to order this play barred from this city. In fact, no really decent christian ought to go to see such a play. If the writer of the play wanted to write the true history of the South, why didn't he include in the lay the immorality of the white man? Remember, the African slave was brought here—forced against his will. Was it the Negro who went to the white woman or was it the white man who had children with the Negro slave? The answer is well known for when we look about us we find colored persons who pass as whites, while of others we cannot tell whether they are white or colored. Look at the color of the average Negro boy or girl that you should meet on the street and you will notice that his color is nearer to that of the white man than itis to the Negro. Who brought abut this change? Is there, then, any reason why "The Birth of a Nation" should be shown? On the other hand if the play were written to give the truth of what actually happened, the white people would be the ones to be offended first.

I cannot but notice the ways of the Negro-hater of America. In their homes the white people employ colored cooks, maids and nurses who sometimes give such to the white child. There is no segregation in the household, yet, the moment these some white persons go out on the street they claim that they cannot stay near a Negro.

Race hatred is devastating Europe today. Will America not learn that wonderful lesson and preach universal brotherhood to all men irrespective of class, creed or color. Europe is having her day, remember that, and too, remember that America have her day. The time is fast approaching when God will call the white man of America to account for what he has done to the colored people. God help you and me that we may long be gone before that day.

When one sits and thinks of what the white people are doing to ten million loyal, law-abiding citizens he wonders that these ten million Negroes have not turned America into a Mexican or European battlefield.

Several years ago America protested against the ill-treatment of the Jews in Russia. Pray tell me if the Jews are worse off in Ruasia than the Negroes are in America. Are the jews lynched and burned in Rusia? Does not charity begin at home?

Why is it that wherever the American goes he takes with him the doctrine of segregation and race-hatred? Years ago the Cubans knew nothing of the "color line." Today Cuba hates the black man. The Republic of Panama knew nothing of the "color line" until the Americans went there. Americans in France, England and other countries are daily preaching race hatred abroad. The Americans want to see the "color line" drawn in every corner of the globe. What has the Negro done to the white man? Nothing. What has the white man done to the Negro? The world knows of America's barbaric deeds. The day of reckoning is close at hand and the white man will "pay the price."

The Negro asks for no special favors. He asks for fair play and equal justice in the courts of the land. Will equal justice ever be given him The white man says No. Will God's answer be no? Slavery solved itself into the Civil War but race-hatred, lynching, segregation, and injustice will be solved by God in terms not to be compared with the Civil War.

When "the price is paid" the writer of the "Birth of a Nation" will have a chance of making millions of dollars by writing—not "events leading up to the Civil War" but "events leading up to the paying of the price."

I know that you are too honest a gentleman and one too loyal to your trust to allow The Birth of a Nation" to be shown after you have read this letter or after having seen the play.

Why not join in with the good work of the Catholic Churches and preach peace, love and universal brotherhood. Oh, how I wish that we could follow the Catholics even in this one particular good deed. America would then be really "the land of the free" and the colored people of America could join their white brethren in singing:—

My country 'tis of thee,
Sween land of liberty, of thee I sing,
Land where my fathers died,
Land of my noble pride
From every mountain side
Let freedom ring."

You cannot realize what the Negroes are suffering except you yourself realize how great in their suffering. Put yourself in the place of the American Negro and five minutes later you would be able to understand what it means to be a Negro.

I pray God that you will stop this play from being shown here another night. I beseech you for the sake of ten million Negroes and in the name of God to use your executive power in stopping this play which is increasing racehatred.

I remain,
Yours for the uplife of humanity
CHAS. A. V. GIROD.

REVIEW

RUSH OF PHONE CALLS AT NIXON

Telephone Reservations for "Birth of Nation" Necessitates Extra Operator

So many telephone orders are being received at the New Nixon for D. W. Griffith's superlative spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," that it has been found necessary to employ an additional telephone operator. In this way inquiries and orders for seats will receive the most prompt and careful attention. Because of the large attendance it is advisable for patrons to make their reservations in advance.

The first half of thi sgreat production remains the same stirring series of exciting events ranging from the picturesque days of the Old South to the inspiring period of the Civil War. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assasination of President Lincoln and the second half is devoted to the baleful days of the reconstruction period.

At the close is shown the new era of the negro race giving scenes at Hampton, Virginia, which evidence the progress made by that people since the period of fifty years ago.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a complete pictorial story of the most momentous years in the history of the United States. No writer has ever been able to tell so vividly the story of the times that tried men's souls. It is not a revelation of the future, but a recrudescence of the past. Nothing so stupendous has ever before been shown to the public. It is educational but more than that it is interesting and entertaining. There are two performances every day, including Sunday, at 2.30 and 8.30.

PRESS

Ball at Piedmont, South Carolina, celebrating the battle of Bull Run as shown in "The Birth of a Nation" now showing at the New Nixon.

'BIRTH OF NATION' A WONDERFUL SPECTACLE

The Music is Not the Least of the Great Array of Feature in Film Play

The success of D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theatre, is the talk of the Boardwalk. So many telephone orders are being received at the box office that it has been found necessary to employ an extra telephone operator to answer inquiries and take orders for seats. The attendance is so large that it is advisable for patrons to make their reservations well in advance.

Theatre-goers who have wondered what historical basis there was for the Southern clans pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" may be interested to learn that they were an indirect outgrowth of the Highland clans of Scotland. David W. Griffith is a Southerner and has been a close student all his life of the Civil War and reconstruction periods. The facts given herewith are the results of his studies in that field.

Thousands of Scottish Highlanders, with their families broken by the Stuart wars, emigrated and settled in the Carolinas in the eighteenth century. The traveller to-int villages nestling in foothills where nearly nts are of Scottish de- ly and to shoot straight g mark of the men. lannish union for de- gly as ever. The rite drew's Cross is vividly many localities pre-into life during the les of 1869-71. Gen- Forrest, the dashing e organizer and first Morton, afterwards Tennessee, was Ad- incident in "The f the North Caro- to aid their South actual fact. Often ode fifty to sixty ch secret erranda, loers.

plays the role of er, is the son of a ed are taken from order, which was Tenn.' The

UNION

'BIRTH OF NATION' GREAT SPECTACLE

The Music is Not the Least of the Great Array of Feature in Film Play

The success of D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theatre, is the talk of the Boardwalk. So many telephone orders are being received at the box office that it has been found necessary to employ an extra telephone operator to answer inquiries and take orders for seats. The attendance is so large that it is advisable for patrons to make their reservations well in advance.

Theatre-goers who have wondered what historical basis there was for the Southern clans pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" may be interested to learn that they were an indirect outgrowth of the Highland clans of Scotland. David W. Griffith is a Southerner and has been a close student all his life of the Civil War and reconstruction periods. The facts given herewith are the results of his studies in that field.

Thousands of Scottish Highlanders, with their families broken by the Stuart wars, emigrated and settled in the Carolinas in the eighteenth century. The traveller to-

The Atlantic City Field Club and the Prudential life insurance nine

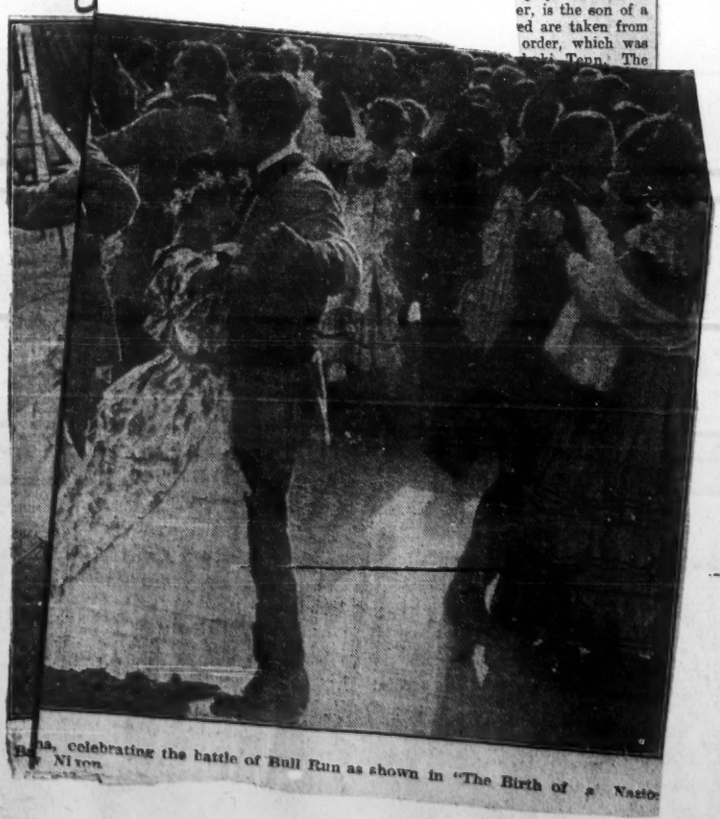
FIELD CLUB AND PRUES PLAY TODAY

Yesterday afternoon at the Inlet Play grounds the Inlet Senior team again defeated New Jersey Avenue team. Ginter started on the mound for New Jersey, but was knocked out of the box in the sixth inning. Hallister finished the game fairly well. The score was 13 to 12. Batter pitched for Inlet. The score by innings:

Inlet	0	0	1	3	1	6	2	0	0	13
New Jersey	1	1	3	2	0	5	1	1	1	12

N. JERSEY AGAIN

Photograph traced



Ball at Piedmont, South Carolina, celebrating the battle of Bull Run as shown in "The Birth of a Nation" now showing at the New Nixon.

Saturday, Feb 24

Now Playing

Second Big Week

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

The NEW NIX

BOA

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Mighty Spectacle

Has Claimed the Admiration of a Million Playgoers

18,000 People Used to Tell the Drama

Cost $500,000 To Assemble Its Mighty Forces

Watch these bulletins for pæans of praise, the like of which were never heard before

BIR
OF
NA

No. 11—"For the First Time in Drama You See War As It Is Actually
No. 12—"One of Those Overwhelming Melo-Dramatic Successes Tha
No. 13—"It Is Doubly Interesting to One Who Was Himself Alive and

AN ORCHESTRA OF 40

Direction The Epoch Produ

NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Harry Brown, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY

NIGHTS—8.30 Sharp MATINEES—2.30 Sharp

At These Rare Prices In Reach of All Patrons

Eves. 25c, 50c, $1, $1.50, $2 All Matinees 25c, 50c, $1

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Stampeded the Newspapers and Magazines of America

3,000 Horses Mounted by Daring Riders

Took 8 Months of Super-Human Effort to Produce It

Unfolding the great American play at last in a new and startling form of expression.

ly Fought." RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, America's leading war correspondent.

That Will Sweep the Country." BOOTH TARKINGTON and Moving at the Time of Which It Treats." PALMER COX, Creator of the Brownies oducing Corp., H. E. Aitken, Pres.

SEATS NOW SELLING FOR ADVANCE TWO WEEKS

Sunday July 25

SECOND SUCCESSFUL WEEK OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT NIXON

GAZETTE

The Most Talked of Picture Ever Produced to Start on Its Second Week of Success at This Popular Playhouse. Matinee and Evening Performances Today.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, starts today on its second successful week at the New Nixon. The historic features of this presentation have attracted wide attention and educators all over the world have now been convinced that there is no more effective way to tell the story of a nation. In picture form stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Robert E. Lee to U. S. Grant, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Sherman's famous march to the sea and the saving of the South by the Ku Klux Klan.

Mere words can never give a realization of the dramatic scenes, the beautiful photography and the vivid reproduction of the past. Realism is the keynote of the sucess of "The Birth of a Nation." To attain that $500,000 was expended in building towns, a replica of Ford's Theatre in which Lincoln was killed, and in laying out the vast battlegrounds. Then there were 18,000 people to be paid. Three thousand horses were utilized and eight months were consumed.

There are over five thousand scenes. The very stupendousness of the spectacle defies description. The battle scenes are said by Richard Harding Davis and other war observers to be the most wonderful and realistic ever presented to the American public. Thousands of soldiers are seen in the trenches, battling at breastwords, charging over fields with cold steel, masked batteries in action, a panorama of marching and countermarching troops, shells exploding in the air and in the midst of the struggling masses, the carnage of battle as it really is. There could be no more potent argument for peace.

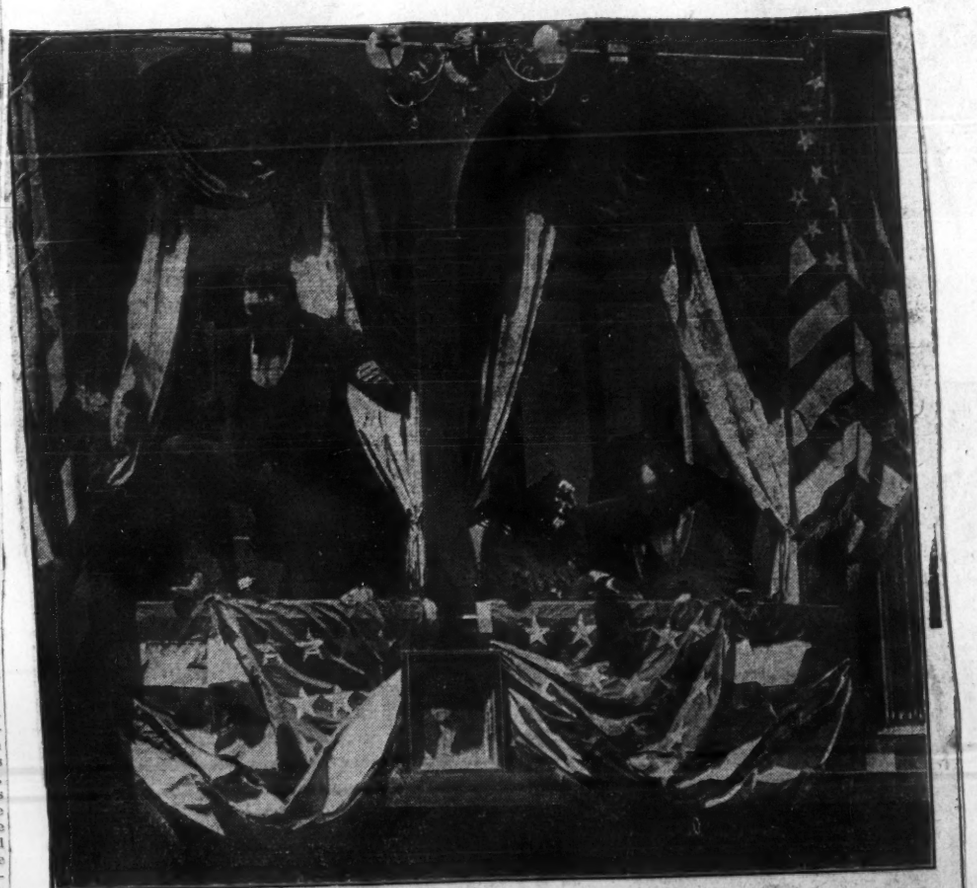
It is a picture of American history which will make an indelible impression on both children and adults. Running through the historical scenes are two romantic love episodes in which a colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North, and the officer of the North loves the sister of the colonel of the South. The proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern maid are shown in as thrilling and soul-gripping a story as was ever staged. Love turns to hate and then to love again as each girl watches the grim struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the land of her birth. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's world-famous stories, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots."

The cast includes such favorites as Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Spottswoode Aiken, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Ralph Lewis, Robert Harron, Mary Elden, Donald Crisp and others.

The symphony orchestra of forty is a pronounced feature of every performance. The orchestration by Joseph Carl Briel is a masterpiece of illustrative music.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its sixth month at the Liberty Theatre in New York, and there and in Chicago it will be playing for a year to come. In Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other large cities it is breaking all records and here it has started on what is evidently destined to be an all-summer run.

There are two performances daily at 2.30 and 8.30, and the prices run from 25 cents to $2.00 at night, and from 25c to $1.00 at the matinees.



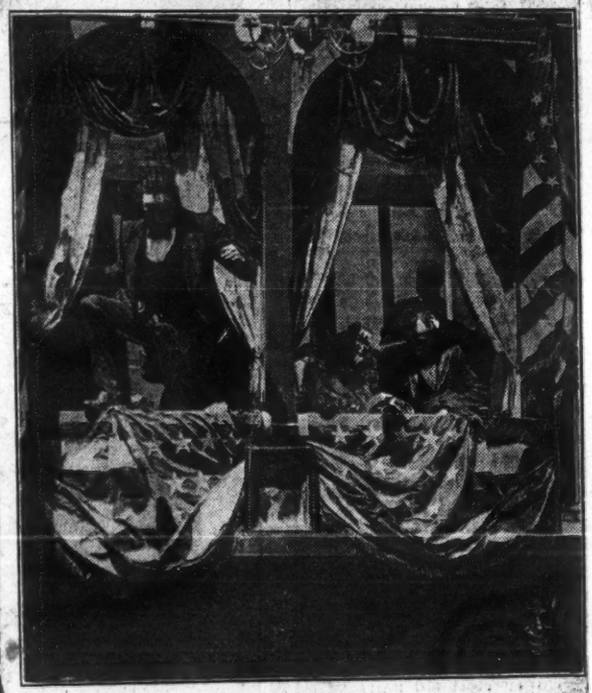
Booth Escaping After Shooting Lincoln—Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" at New Nixon

PHILADELPHIA RECORD July 25

Mr. Nixon a Crack Whip

Samuel F. Nixon is as usual passing his summer with a combination of business and pleasure at his beautiful residence at Atlantic City, which he occupies in the late spring, summer and autumn. Mr. Nixon is one of the few men of big affairs, who has not given up the love of driving for motoring. He is as ardent a whip as ever, and with his stable of 10 thoroughbreds is driving to his heart's content. Mr. Nixon is an expert at handling the reins, and with one or other of his prize teams that prance along Atlantic City's streets and adjacent country roads, the turnout looks as if it might just have come out of Hyde Park or Piccadilly, London. Mr. Nixon is the busiest of busy men (even in what to many would be entirely the recreation period), framing the schedules for the coming season at the three leading Philadelphia theatres of which he is managing director and his other theatres throughout the country. Just now he is watching with enthusiasm the stupendous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City.

Assassination of Lincoln



Scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

THE NEW NIXON Atlantic City
THEATRE BOARDWALK
SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director
Evenings at 8.30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

NOW PLAYING
2nd Big Week
Twice Daily, Including Sundays
Matinees at 2.30—25c, 50c, $1.00

D. W. Griffith's Stupendous Spectacle

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

Cost $500,000

8 Months To Produce

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY
DIRECTION EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, Prest.

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

American History Depicted on a Stupendous Field.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacle, starts today on its second week at The New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City. In picture form are seen stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Robert Lee to U. S. Grant, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Sherman's famous march to the sea and the saving of the South by the Ku Klux Klan. Realism is the keynote of the success of "The Birth of a Nation." To attain that, $500,000 was expended in building towns, a replica of Ford's Theatre in Washington, in which Lincoln was killed, and in laying out the vast battle grounds. Then there were 18,000 people to be paid. Three thousand horses were utilized. There are over 5000 scenes. The battle scenes are said by war observers, to be the most wonderful ever presented. Thousands of soldiers are seen in the trenches, battling in breastworks, charging over fields, masked batteries in action, a panorama of marching and countermarching troops. Love episodes in which a colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North, and the officer of the North loves the sister of the Colonel of the South. Love turns to hate and then to love again, as each girl watches the grim struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the land of her birth. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots."

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its sixth month at The Liberty Theatre, New York, and there and in Chicago it will be playing for a year to come. In Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other large cities it is breaking all records and in Atlantic City it has started on what is evidently destined to be an all-summer run.

There are two performances daily, including Sundays, at 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

'BIRTH OF NATION' AT SHORE

Photoplay Starts on What May Be Record Run

Special to The Inquirer.

ATLANTIC CITY, July 24.—D. W. Griffith's marvelous masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," is the most impressive spectacle ever staged. At the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, it has successfully started on a summer run that promises to eclipse all records.

Thrilling battle scenes, love lyrics of romantic beauty, episodes of rare historical interest, and nature in its fairest garb are component parts of the most lavish production ever presented to the public. It is vital—throbbing with life and virility, of great historical and educational values—and withal a great love story that holds great audiences spellbound.

The stirring events of the Civil War and the period of reconstruction are given striking detail. The fighting [illegible] at Petersburg, Sherman's [illegible] to the sea and the surrender of [illegible] Lee to General Grant at Appomattox and the saving of the South by the Scottish Clans are [illegible]

[illegible] two performances every day, [illegible] Sundays.

INQUIRER

THE NEW NIXON ATLANTIC CITY
THEATRE BOARDWALK
SAMUEL F. NIXON - - - Managing Director
Evenings at 8.30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

NOW PLAYING
2d Big Week
Twice Daily, Including Sundays
Matinees at 2.30—25c, 50c, $1.00.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

Cost $500,000

8 Months to Produce

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY
DIRECTION EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, Prest.

Sunday July 25

INQUIRER

CONSIDERABLE interest is attached to the first few showings here of the really great motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which opened on Sunday evening at the New Nixon, because the wiseacres were of the opinion that two dollars would not be paid by the residents or visitors. However the fame of the remarkable example of motion photography had preceded it and while the opening was not to capacity there was a satisfactory attendance, which has continued during the week. It will be continued indefinitely and while the two dollar seats may not all be taken there is good reason to believe that the engagement will be highly successful. No one who enjoys genuine thrills, excitement and beautiful picture efforts should miss this production. It impressed me as being the acme of dramatic achievement and a wonderfully accurate depiction of the stirring days of the Civil War and scenes in the stricken South immediately after the close of the conflict. Indeed, it sets such a high standard that it will be difficult for any producing manager to find a satisfying successor, no matter what the amount of money expended in the attempt. The war scenes and the incidents in which the Ku Klux Klan figure are so realistic that a thrill passes over the observer. I understand that negotiations have been progressing for the engagement in Philadelphia in the near future. It is quite probable that the picture will be shown at the Forrest Theatre, although that has not been finally settled.

Rex Beach's "The Spoilers" will be shown at the Cort during the coming week to fill in time, there being no available attraction. This film has been shown in nearly every part of the country and is therefore familiar to many of the visitors here.

* * *

Lillian Gish, New Nixon Atlantic City

NORTH AMERICAN

MIRIAM COOPER, NEW NIXON, ATLANTIC CITY

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE ATLANTIC CITY BOARDWALK
SAMUEL F. NIXON Managing Director

NOW PLAYING
2d Big Week
Twice Daily, Including Sundays
Matinees at 2.30—25c, 50c, $1.00.

Evenings at 8.30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

Cost $500,000

8 Months to Produce

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY
DIRECTION EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H.E. AITKEN, Pres.

ATLANTIC CITY

New Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's great photoplay, is achieving a deserved success at daily and evening performances. This great spectacle, which took eight months to produce and cost many thousands of dollars, is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

PHILA. PRESS

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE ATLANTIC CITY BOARDWALK
SAMUEL F. NIXON Managing Director

NOW PLAYING
2d Big Week
Twice Daily, Including Sundays
Matinees at 2.30—25c, 50c, $1.00

Evenings at 8.30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

Cost $500,000

8 Months To Produce

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY
DIRECTION EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

LILLIAN GISH, NEW NIXON, ATLANTIC CITY

Phila. PRESS

Judges 5

A.C. GAZETTE

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SUCCESS AT SEASHORE

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's big film spectacle, starts to-day in its second successful week at the New Nixon, Atlantic City. The historic features of this presentation have attracted wide attention. In picture form are seen stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Robert Lee to U. S. Grant, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Sherman's famous march to the sea and the saving of the South by the Ku Klux Klan. Words fail to describe the dramatic scenes the beautiful photography and the vivid reproductions of the past.

Realism is the keynote of the success of "The Birth of a Nation." To attain that $500,000 was expended in building towns, a replica of Ford's Theater in Washington in which Lincoln was killed, and in laying out the vast battle grounds. Then there were 18,000 people to be paid. Three thousand horses were utilized and eight months were consumed. There are over five thousand scenes in this stupendous spectacle. The very magnitude of the undertaking defies description. Thousands of soldiers are seen in the trenches, battling in breastworks, charging over fields with cold steel, masked batteries in action, a panorama of marching and countermarching troops, shells exploding in the air and in the midst of struggling masses the carnage of battle as it really is. There could be no more potent argument for peace. It is a picture of American history that makes an indelible impression.

SAMUEL F. NIXON MAKES HIS HORSES HIS HOBBY

Samuel F. Nixon is an usual passing his Summer with a happy combination of business and pleasure at his beautiful residence at Atlantic City, which he occupies in the late Spring, Summer and Autumn. Mr. Nixon is one of the few men of big affairs who has not given up the love of driving for the more rapid locomotion of motoring. He is as ardent a whip as ever and with his stable of ten thoroughbreds is driving to his heart's content. Mr. Nixon is an expert at handling the reins and with one or other of his prize teams that prance and pirouette along Atlantic City's streets and adjacent country roads, with the nobby phaeton and trim footman up behind, the spick and span turnout looks as if it might just have come out of Hyde Park or Piccadilly, London. Mr. Nixon is one of the busiest of busy men (even in what to many would be entirely recreation period), framing the schedules for the coming season at the three leading Philadelphia theaters of which he is managing director and his other theaters throughout the country. Just now he is watching with particular enthusiasm the immense success of the spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon, Atlantic City.

MORE DETAILS OF AITKEN'S $4,000,000 MOVIE COMPANY

Details which are coming to light, of the new $4,000,000 motion picture combination formed by H. C. Aitken, who has just resigned from the presidency of the Mutual Film Corporation, indicate that the scope of the new concern will be unusually comprehensive.

With D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, probably the three greatest directors in their particular fields, as the backbone of its producing staff, the new company intends turning out pictures which in scope and quality are promised to exceed "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Alien."

A number of the most famous actors in the country already are under engagement or soon will be. Weber and Fields have placed their names to contracts which will keep them acting for the screen for this combination six months out of every year.

Others equally well known will be in the playing end of the combination, a fact made possible because of the big number of $2 pictures of "The Birth of a Nation" class which are to be turned out.

A prominent part of the plan is to enlarge upon the idea carried out in "The Alien" at the Astor Theatre of having part of the entertainment "reel" and part of it "real."

As the concern will do its own exhibiting in the larger cities, this idea will be carried out over the entire circuit, although plays will be filmed in entirety for distribution in the remote quarters where the leading actors could not appear.

Among the companies which formerly released through the Mutual, which will follow Mr. Aitken into the new concern, are the Reliance, the Majestic, the Keystone, the Bison and the Broncho.

The three big producing companies will, of course, be under the direction of Mr. Griffith, Mr. Sennett, producing head of the Keystone Co., whose comedies are known the world over, and Mr. Ince, director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

The contracts which the New York Motion Picture Corporation, the Griffith-Reliance Corporation and the Keystone had with the Mutual Corporation will end on August 1.

PUBLIC LEDGER

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation," the $500,000 spectacle by D. W. Griffith, today starts on its second week at the New Nixon Theatre in Atlantic City. The noted film, dealing effectively with the history of the nation, has been an attraction for two large audiences daily during the initial week. Interest in it has spread among the visitors at the resort, and the managers of the spectacle are immensely pleased over the reception.

The historic features of the presentation are depicted graphically. In picture form are seen stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Robert E. Lee to General Grant, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea and the Ku Klux Klan in the South.

In filming "The Birth of a Nation" the services of appruximately 18,000 persons and 3000 horses were required to portray the scenes realistically. There are more than 5000 different scenes. Views of Southern battlefields, showing the struggles of Northern and Southern armies, are gripping in their realization.

A cast of favorites was assembled for the filming of the story, based on love themes in Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots." A symphony orchestra of 40 voices is under the direction of Joseph Carl Briel.

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NEW NIXON ATLANTIC CITY

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE ATLANTIC CITY BOARDWALK

SAMUEL F. NIXON - Managing Director

NOW PLAYING 2d Big Week

Twice Daily, Including Sundays

Evenings at 8:30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00. Matinees at 2:30—25c, 50c, $1.00

D. W. GRIFFITH'S STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

Cost $500,000

8 Months To Produce

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

DIRECTION EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, Prest.

Saturday July 24

TELEGRAPH

In Griffith Photoplay

MAE MARSH

Who has the part of Flora Cameron in David Griffith's massive photo-drama "The Birth of a Nation," which is enjoying a summer run at the New Nixon, Atlantic City. The picture, which is the first film for which an admission charge of two dollars has been received, is based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and has been produced with lavish staging and an exceptional cast. It has not yet been seen here, and its presence at the New Jersey resort will doubtless attract many local picture lovers.

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE ATLANTIC CITY BOARDWALK

SAMUEL F. NIXON ..... Managing Director

EVGS., AT 8.30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

NOW PLAYING

Next Week 2d BIG WEEK

Twice Daily, Including Sundays

MATINEES AT 2.30—25c, 50c, $1.00.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

Cost $500,000

8 Months to Produce

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

DIRECTION EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, Prest.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The biggest thrill on the Boardwalk," an Atlantic City admirer has called D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation, which has met with much success at the New Nixon, where it has entered upon a summer run. There are two performances every day, including Sunday.

EVENING LEDGER

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE ATLANTIC CITY BOARDWALK

SAMUEL F. NIXON - Managing Director

NOW PLAYING

Next Week 2d Big Week

Twice Daily, Including Sundays

Evenings at 8:30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00. Matinees at 2:30—25c, 50c, $1.00

D. W. GRIFFITH'S STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

Cost $500,000

8 Months To Produce

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

DIRECTION EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, Prest.

"Birth of a Nation" at Atlantic City

D. W. Griffith's big and impressive film, "The Birth of a Nation," continues on its way at the New Nixon Theatre in Atlantic City. It is probably the most unusual photoplay now showing in the United States by reason of the great battle scene of the Civil War which it discloses and the dramatic struggle of of the Ku Klux Klan with the Southern negro, which makes the second part of the film. Philadelphia will not see "The Birth of a Nation" until October.

Monday July 26.

PRESS

ANOTHER PROTEST AGAINST PICTURE

Editor Press:

The great picture play founded on Thomas Dickson's "Clansman," and entitled the "Birth of a Nation," is in point of scenic beauty all that could be disered, but in attempting to portray the colored man in the character of a brutish beast devoid of the higher and nobler attributes common to intelligent creatures it becomes a flagrant and contemptible exhibition of human depravity, reflecting discredit upon the common sense and decency of those responsible for its production. It is very evident that such pictures create a sentiment against the colored man and this sentiment inspires revenge which in turn becomes the fundamental reason—or rather excuse—for a continuation of the long-established policy of terrorism against the race in which neither the States nor the Federal Government have the moral courage to interfere.

It is hard to believe that in this age of culture and refinement a race of people who have struggled so hard to redeem themselves before the world should still be held up to ridicule because of past conditions which they had no part in creating except by virtue of their being. The committee of representative colored men who are protesting against this production are well within their constitutional rights to "peaceably assemble and petition for a redress of their grievances and I feel certain that the proper authorities will accord them a respectful hearing in keeping with the principle of equity and justice which, both in theory and practice Atlantic City has always nurtured and sustained.

Are we to stand forever devided on questions of vital interest to the welfare of the whole nation? The day may come when we shall need the colored man's help to defend the flag and there is no better time than now to remove the stumbling blocks so that in any emergency all may join to guard what each desires to gain—"An United Brotherhood and Peace With Honor."

ELIJAH HODGES.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 25, 1915.

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

Second Big Week

Matinee Prices 25c, 50c & $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

History in the Making

Love and Romance

Cost $500,000

Now Playing

Eve. Prices 25c, 50c, $1 $1.50, $2

3,000 Horses

Throbs and Thrills

Wild Rides

Intense Drama

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

Watch These Daily Bulletins for Paens of Praise the Like of Which Were Never Heard Before

"Everybody in America should see this marvelous work. It does justice to deeds of chivalry at last."

Mrs. Gen. George W. Gordon, widow of the man who wrote the creed of the Ku Klux Klan.

NO. 11

SEATS NOW SELLING Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

XON ONLY PLACE FOR 'BIRTH OF NATION'

wn Playhouse is Crowded with Those Witnessing the Film Spectacle

hs Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griff- masterpiece, is now in the second essful week of its summer run at the Nixon Theatre. This will be the engagement played in Atlantic City he contract between the Epoch Pro- g Corporation and the Nixon man- ent expressly provides that "The h of a Nation" will not be presented ny other theatre. In fact the magni- e of the production would preclude its g presented in any smaller theatre. his wonderful spectacle of the Ameri- military era is eminently suited to resent with the great war in the s of all.

Civil strife that grew out of misunder- dings; battles fought over wide- tching areas; the great, all-loving t of the President and the little men after his death thwarted his far- ng plans; the victory of the North the terrible aftermath of reconstruc- —these furnish a succession of themes working out of which impringes as ly upon 1915 as 1861-'71. Never be- has America's greatest war been comprehensively put on stage, film, rama or canvas.

s the biggest parriotic entertain- ment ever devised and it inculcates the lesson of national solidarity with sledge hammer strokes. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent act- ing and perfect photography, the emo- tional appeal of the music and the cun- ning art of the mechanical effects com- bine to make an offering satisfyingly de- lightful to all classes of theatregoers.

The blending of history, romance and emotional power proves irresistible. The titanic events sweep on with the force of a whirlwind. In its spectacular features, so prodigally detailed, "The Birth of a Nation" is positively superb.

Funeral services were held at Ruther- ford, N. J., July 24, for H. Clay Ford, who died Thursday morning in a hospital in Passaic, N. J., at the age of 7a.

Mr. Ford was the manager of Ford's Theatre in Washington when President Lincoln was assassinated and his collec- tion of pictures was of great help in building a replica of that historic theatre for "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Ford was a brother of the late John T. Ford, of Baltimore, and the uncle of the Ford Brothers, managers of Ford's Theatre in that city. A widow once known on the stage as Blanche Chapman, Harry, Heorge and Frank, his sons, al lof whom are in the theatrical professiou and a daughter, Ella, survive him.

PRESS

UNION

FILLED HOUSES PREVAIL AT NIXON

"Birth of the Nation" Has Intense Grip on Public. First Week Set up New Attendance Figures

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, is now in the second successful week of its summer run at the New Nixon Theatre. This will be the only engagement played in Atlantic City for the contract between the Epoch Producing Corporation and the Nixon management expressly provides that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be presented in any other theatre. In fact the magnitude of the production would preclude its being presented in any smaller theatre.

This wonderful spectacle of the American military era is eminently suited to the present with the great war in the minds of all.

Civil strife that grew out of misunderstandings; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the great, all-loving heart of the President and the little men who after his death thwarted his far-seeing plans; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impringes as vividly upon 1915 as 1861-'71. Never before has America's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on stage, film, panorama or canvas.

It is the biggest parriotic entertainment ever devised and it inculcates the lesson of national solidarity with sledge hammer strokes. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent acting and perfect photography, the emotional appeal of the music and the cunning art of the mechanical effects combine to make an offering satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatregoers.

The blending of history, romance and emotional power proves irresistible. The titanic events sweep on with the force of a whirlwind. In its spectacular features, so prodigally detailed, "The Birth of a Nation" is positively superb.

Funeral services were held at Rutherford, N. J., July 24, for H. Clay Ford, who died Thursday morning in a hospital in Passaic, N. J., at the age of 7a.

Mr. Ford was the manager of Ford's Theatre in Washington when President Lincoln was assassinated and his collection of pictures was of great help in building a replica of that historic theatre for "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Ford was a brother of the late John T. Ford, of Baltimore, and the uncle of the Ford Brothers, managers of Ford's Theatre in that city. A widow once known on the stage as Blanche Chapman, Harry, Heorge and Frank, his sons, al lof whom are in the theatrical profession and a daughter, Ella, survive him.

a four-part feature from the George Kleine Studios and features that very attractive and highly talented young woman, Marie Hesperia, in the dual role of herself and her sister.

"Bartered Lives" is the story of two sisters who resemble each other so closely in face and form that they cannot be told apart even by their most intimate friends. Hesperia is an artist's model, while her sister, Pierette, is a singer of some reputation. One day when Hesperia feels ill she sends her sister, Pierette, to pose for her. Pierette in this way becomes acquainted with a wealthy nobleman, who secures an opening for her in the opera. As a singer, Pierette makes a genuine sensation and is soon surrounded by many admirers, among whom is the banker, Darnell. One day in a fit of insane jealousy, Darnell wounds himself with a revolver and Pierette, fearing that she will be accused of the deed, goes into retirement, after writing her sister, Hesperia, to take her place. This complication results in many situations of great dramatic power in which the work of Marie Hesperia shows the genius of the true artist.

REVIEW

BIG SPECTACLE AT NIXON ONLY

D. W. Griffith's superb spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters to-day upon the second week of its successful Summer run, at the New Nixon Theater. The only opportunity in see this wonderful production in Atlantic City will be during the present run because the contract between the Epoch Producing Corporation and the Nixon management expressly provides that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be presented in Atlantic City in any other theater than the New Nixon.

The story of this wonderful historical and romantic offering begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to America. Its progress is closely related to phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War with its terrible battles; Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta; the fall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant; the assassination of President Lincoln; the ordeal of the Reconstruction period: the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem and the final establishment of an everlasting peace. These historic scenes are all shown in a way that links history to romance. It is all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world.

There are thrills and throbs enough for several plays and the appeal is gripping and vital. There are two performances daily.

OLD MANAGER IS BURIED

Mr. Ford Was Head of the Theatre in Which Lincoln Was Shot

Rutherford, N. J., July 25.—Funeral services were held here yesterday for H. Clay Ford, who died Thursday morning in a hospital in Passaic, N. J., at the age of 72.

Mr. Ford was manager of Ford's Theatre in Washington when President Lincoln was assassinated and his collection of pictures was of great help in building a replica of that historic structure for the "Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Ford was a brother of the late John T. Ford, of Baltimore, the uncle of the Ford Brothers, managers of Ford's theatre in that city. A widow, once known on the stage as Blanche Chapman, Harry, George and Frank, his sons, all of whom are in the theatrical profession, and a daughter, Ella survive him.

TUESDAY July 27 REVIEW

VAST RESOURCES OF GRIFFITHS

Producer of "Birth of a Nation Nation" Creates Villages to Burn Them

There is a new way of recording history. Carlyle, Motley, Macauley, Prescott, Parkman and all the historians of all time have placed the results of their research on paper. David Wark Griffith, actor, dramatist and director of motion pictures, places his interpretation of history on a film. His method is to revitalize and visualize the deeds of the past. He was peculiarly fitted to recreate the scenes of the Civil War and Reconstruction days for his father, Jacob Wark Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade and all his kinfolk endured the terrible sufferings of the post-bellum days.

For years young Griffith dreamed of his plans to make that epoch of American history live anew. Finally at a cost of half a million dollars he realized his dream. The result was "The Birth of a Nation" which is now in its second triumphant week at the New Nixon.

In staging Sherman's march to the sea a village of frame houses was built to be burned; Ford's Theater in Washington was constructed in replica; the Assembly Chamber of the South Carolina legislature was reproduced in the same way in order to get a scene lasting only thirty seconds.

He staged an endless series of interior views of the Cabinet room in Washington, the Wilmer-McLean home at Appomattox where Lee surrendered to Grant; the military hospital in the Patent Office in Washington; the homes of the two families, one Northern and the other of the South, in which the love interest of the story centers, and he took a number of amazing scenes at night by the light of exploding incandescent bombs.

Lillian Gest in "The Birth of a Nation" at New Nixon Theater.

GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THIS WEEK.

GRIFFITH'S FILM CONTINUES HERE

Producer of "Birth of a Nation" Creates Villages to Destroy Them

There is a new way of recording history. Carlyle, Motley, Macauley, Prescott, Parkman and all the historians of all time have placed the results of their research on paper. David Wark Griffith, actor, dramatist and director of motion pictures, places his interpretation of history on a film. His method is to revitalize and visualize the deeds of the past. He was peculiarly fitted to recreate the scenes of the Civil War and Reconstruction days for his father, Jacob Wark Griffith, command a Confederate brigade and all his kinfolk endured the terrible sufferings of the post-bellum days.

For years young Griffith dreamed of his plans to make that epoch of American history live anew. Finally at a cost of half a million dollars he realized his dream. The result was "The Birth of a Nation," which is now in its second triumphant week at the New Nixon Theatre.

In staging Sherman's march to the sea a village of frame houses was built to be burned; Ford's Theatre in Washington was constructed in replica; the Assembly Chamber of the South Carolina legislature was reproduced in the same way in order to get a scene lasting only thirty seconds. He staged an endless series of interior views of the Cabinet room in Washington, the Wilmer-McLean home at Appomattox where Lee Surrendered to Grant; the military hospital in the Patent Office in Washington; the homes of the two families, one Northern and the other of the South, in which the love interest of the story centers, and he took a number of amazing scenes at night by the light of exploding incandescent bombs.

PRESS

Lincoln signing pardon in "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon.

GERMAN GAZETTE

The Birth of a Nation.

Das grandiose Filmschauspiel im neuen Nixon Theater in Atlantic City.

Es bildet gegenwärtig die Hauptattraktion am Boardwalk.

„The Birth of the Nation", D. W. Griffith's Meisterwerk, steht in der zweit Woche seines Engagements in Atlantic City. Das großartige Filmschauspiel zieht bei jedesmaliger Aufführung ausverkaufte Häuser und nie zuvor ist die Geschichte Amerika's und der größte Krieg des Landes in umfassenderer Weise vor Augen geführt worden, wie in Nixon's und wird auch laut Kontrakt mit der Epoch Production Company in keinem anderen Theater in Atlantic City zur Aufführung gebracht werden.

Aus den friedlichen Tagen in South Carolina wo dem Kriege wird der Zuschauer plötzlich mitten in den Krieg versetzt. Sherman's berühmter Marsch an die See und eindrucksvolle Schlachtzenen bilden den Inhalt. Schließlich bietet die Entscheidungsschlacht ein großartiges Gemälde, daß zu einem Schluß als der „kleine Oberst die Fahne in eine noch rauchende Kanone der Südstaaten-Truppen stößt.

Die Handhabung dieser Menschenmassen auf dem Bilde ist verblüffend. Mit unglaublicher Präzision wird der Angriff durchgeführt. Höchst natürlich wirkt die allmähliche Dezimirung der Angreifer. Naturgetreu versinnbildlicht die ganze Aufnahme den Schrecken der Schlacht mit den Haufen der Gefallenen, stürzenden Pferden, sich dahin schleppenden Verwundeten. Wohl in keinem Film wurden bisher so treffliche Aufnahmen gezeigt.

„The Birth of a Nation" wird täglich zweimal, einschließlich Sonntag, um 2.30 Nachmittags und um 8.30 Abends gezeigt.

UNION

GRIFFITH'S FILM CONTINUED CARD

At the New Nixon Hundreds View the Picture Wonder of the Age—Two Daily Performances

There is a new way of recording history. Carlyle, Motley, Macauley, Prescott, Parkman and all the historians of all time have placed the results of their research on paper. David Wark Griffith, actor, dramatist and director of motion pictures, places his interpretation of history on a film. His method is to revitalize and visualize the deeds of the past. He was peculiarly fitted to recreate the scenes of the Civil War and Reconstruction days for his father, Jacob Wark Griffith, command a Confederate brigade and all his kinfolk endured the terrible sufferings of the post-bellum days.

For years young Griffith dreamed of his plans to make that epoch of American history live anew. Finally at a cost of half a million dollars he realized his dream. The result was "The Birth of a Nation," which is now in its second triumphant week at the New Nixon Theatre.

In staging Sherman's march to the sea a village of frame houses was built to be burned; Ford's Theatre in Washington was constructed in replica; the Assembly Chamber of the South Carolina legislature was reproduced in the same way in order to get a scene lasting only thirty seconds.

He staged an endless series of interior views of the Cabinet room in Washington, the Wilmer-McLean home at Appomattox where Lee Surrendered to Grant; the military hospital in the Patent Office in Washington; the homes of the two families, one Northern and the other of the South, in which the love interest of the story centers, and he took a number of amazing scenes at night by the light of exploding incandescent bombs.

Lincoln signing pardon in "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon.

Wednesday July 28

PRESS REVIEW

GREAT PROJECTOR FOR 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

In order to insure the most perfect projection possible, the management of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre has installed new motors and dynamos at a cost of over $1,000. This new apparatus is the latest improved type manufactured in Fort Wayne Electric Works of the General Electric Company. The factory worked day and night to have the machines ready for last Monday night and the express company held a special car for their transportation. The increase in the volume of light may be imagined when it is known that the new motors and dynamos develop 26,000 candle power and use electricity at a cost of $50.000 a day.

With a symphony orchestra of forty musicians and with the large force of electrical experts, operators, effect men and others, it is very plain that the expense of running this mammoth spectacle equals that of the largest dramatic companies.

The mimic war scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" transcend reality. Imagine a panorama miles long in which the Confederate soldiers leap from their trenches in long, serried lines and charge the Union breatworks, overrunning the first, smashing their way into the second and pounding at the third line until they are forced to recoil before the storm of grape, cannister and bullet. Nothing approaches it in vraisemblance. Such scenes of sheer beauty and strength have never before been seen on the stage.

On account of the big demand for the choice locations it is advisable that reservations be ade in advance by mail or telephone.

NEW APPARATUS FOR NIXON FILM

Over $1000 Expended In New Electrical Equipment

Although "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon has been the most sensational success seen in Atlantic City in many seasons the management has at great cost installed new motors and dynamos to increase the volume of light.

The new apparatus is the latest improved type manufactured in the Fort Wayne Electric Works of the General Electric Company. The factory has been working day and night to have the machines ready for last Monday night and the express company held a special car in readiness to transport them.

The lighting expert of the Epoch Producing Company, Mr. Cecil B. Wood, came on from New York, and with an expert corps of trained men made the change of apparatus in the short time of three hours. In three minutes after they had finished the evening performance began.

To give an ideal projection to this wonderful work of education and art to the audiences in Atlantic City, making it fully on a par with that of New York, Chicago and Boston has entailed a cost of over $1000 to the management.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now the largest picture in Atlantic City and to realize what was necessary to obtain the dazzling whiteness and vivid detail it is only needful to state that the new apparatus develops and uses 26,000 candle power and uses electricity at the rate of $50.00 a day.

With a symphony orchestra of forty and with the large force of electrical experts, operators, effect men and others it can readily be seen that the cost of running this production equals that of large dramatic companies.

PRESS

NIXON DEFENDS 'BIRTH OF NATION'

Theatrical Magnate Answers Criticisms—Tells Why He Brought It Here

Atlantic City,
July 4, 1915.

Editor Press:

In your issue of this date appears a letter signer by Chas. A. A. V. Girod, addressed to Hon. William Riddle, Mayor of Atlantic City, demanding the suppression of "The Birth of a Nation". The only specific statement made which would warrant this unusual demand is as follows:

"Pennsylvania, Illinois, Rhode Island, Massachusett and several other states have barred "The Birth of a Nation" from their theatres."

This is a mis-statement of facts. "The Birth of a Nation" has not been barred from any theatre in any state in the United States of America. It is now playing at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., and the Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill. It is also playing at the Liberty Theatre, New York City, the Brighton Beach Music Hall, Brooklyn, New York, the Davidson Theatre Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and the Alcazar Theatre, San Fransisco, Cal.

Herewith is the story of the production of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle in so far as it relates to censorship:

It was passed by the National Board of Censors with this comment upon its merits: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great forward in motion picture production."

Also passed by Mayor Mitchell, of New York City, Commissioner of Li-[illegible] McAdoo and the

[illegible]

KAISER CONSIDERING AMERICAN NOTE

Berlin, July 27.—Dr. von Bethmann [illegible] to Berlin today from general headquarters [illegible] where he discussed with Em[illegible] ly sustained the picture and it has been running ever since at the Tremont Theatre.

Herewith I beg to hand you a copy of an official letter issued from the mayor's office of Boston, covering this case:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor

The officials designated by chapter 348, Acts of 1915, having received a petition from certain citizens requesting that performances of "The Birth of a Nation" be stopped by them under the authority given to them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protestors and the license and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended.

The above statement was issued from the Mayor's office, Boston, Mass., on June 2nd, 1915, after Mayor Curley, as chairman, Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court and Police Commissioner O'Meara had met in the Mayor's office as the official Censor Board of the City of Boston to pass on the play. The run of "The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., April 10, 1915, and is still in continuance at present writing, (July 1, 1915), having been uninterrputed since the opening.

(Signed) FRANCIS J. BRENNAN,
Chief Clerk, Mayor's Office.

In Chicago where censorship has been carried to a point which is too serious to be ridiculous, the management of "The Birth of a Nation," for the first time in the history of this picture, had to begin an action in equity to establish their rights. A sweeping injunction issued by Judge William Fenimore Cooper of the Superior Court restrains the Mayor or any other official of the city of Chicago from interfering with its presentations in that city. Over 200,000 of the best citizens of Chicago have seen this production and rousingly endorsed the action of the court. I beg to hand [illegible] given a clean bill of health. Censor boards have approved it. There is not a court on record in the country that has not sustained it upon the strictest constitutional grounds, publicans and men and women in every walk of life whose names are known throughout the country have given it their enthusiastic endorsement.

[illegible] have a grave significance for the west, as it will mean that Russia's power to [illegible] points out that the [illegible] [illegible] in this region. The newspaper [illegible] planning to envelop the entire Russian [illegible] now is apparent that the Germans are [illegible] which the city is the center, and that it [illegible] the whole system of railway communication [illegible]

It would take a page of your valuable paper to list the people of prominence who have seen this picture and proclaimed it a wonderful achievement in the are of dramatic expression. Surely men and women of the broadest conceptions are not banded together in an effort to lay any burden upon the citizens of this country negro origin. The very showing of the good work that is being done by enlightened negroes of this country is Mr. Griffith's answer to those who have missed the purposes and the merits of the case. If his story was designed to attack the Afro-Americans he would be the last man to arrest the continuity of his drama to do justice where the exegencies of the case suggest this disinterested opportunity to pay tribute to the remarkable growth of the colored people. The truth is Mr. Griffith has been more than fair. "The Birth of a Nation," shows the mistakes that were made in the past and it points the way out. Any man, be he white or black, cannot miss this dominant note if he looks at it in the proper spirit. It is essentially a drama of given circumstances showing the power of good deeds over intrigue and hatred and its lesson is so indellibly planted that prejudice cannot longer exist. It demon strates beyond the question of doubt that crime cannot live in the open. It is a most powerful argument against the festering disease—known as suppression. Any man who can be prejudiced by this powerful story is not worth bothering over.

In bringing the picture to Atlantic City I was actuated by one consideration. Every business man here has been urging that we do things to call attention to our wonderful city. As a pioneer theatrical man here I deemed it my duty to get the biggest attraction extant from a summer engagement. Oout of town visitors are great theatregoers but they demand the best. I looked the field over and realized at once that "The Birth of a Nation" was the sensational hit of the year and just the attraction we needed for one of our Boardwalk Theatres. It cost me untring work and a great deal of money to secure this offering. Having succeeded in this I am content to let the merits of the work tell the remainder of the story.

SAMUEL P. NIXON

July 28
REVIEW

THURSDAY July 29

1st. PRIZE LETTER

CALLS RACE-SPLITTING PICTURES OUTRAGEOUS

The Editor of the Review:

Dear Sirs:

The pictures that are now being shown in this city "The Birth of a Nation," exhibited wonderful art and vision, but tend to create offense between two races.

The Negro is being shown as the most degenerate and demoralized specimen of humanity, but what shall we say of the men who are responsible for the two millions of mulattoes? The fathers of these illegitimate people pose as "The Southern gentlemen" after preying upon the virtues of the ignorant innocent mothers. Had these mothers resisted the demands of these "Southern Gentlemen" they would hav been subjected to severe corporal punishment.

In regard to the control of the South by the negro, he had it thrust upon him before he was ready, and like anything else that is governed by the aw of natural events, had to fail.

It is an indisputable fact that the American Negro has progressed as no other race in the world has or could have under his conditions.

The Russian peasants were given their freedom nearly one hundred years before the American negro was liberated and if the black man ceases to progress any more for the next twenty-five years, he will then surpass the Russians in the per cent of their accumulations.

While a great deal of this is due to the ability of the American white man to impart, it can not be disputed that the greater part of his thrift is due to the susceptibility of the minds of the negro to perceive.

To those who look upon the negro and his possession as a begrudging and diminishing aspect, I will ask. Is it because his skin is dark? It can not be anything else because they are produced and controlled by the same laws of nature; inertia, and gravity, and finally these chaotic delusions will give way to equal execution of Justice and all races will sing Hosannah under the same "Stars and Stripes."

WILLIAM L. BRIGGS.

REVIEW

nd athletic girls. No part frightens her hen Griffith is directing. Today her face s better known than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

The cleverness of the cast in the "Birth of a Nation" has had much to do with its phenomenal success for great acting is even more appealing than spectacular as es.

WONDERFUL RISE OF MAE MARSH

Little Actress in "Birth of a Nation" Photo-play's Favorite

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now at the New Nixon, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped, but Mr. Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was about finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of caracters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the younger sister [illegible] story. This California [illegible] almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls

PRESS.

UNION

GRIFFITH FILM MASTER PRODUCT

"Birth of Nation" at New Nixon is Projected With the Finest Instruments Ever Made

In order to insure the most perfect projection possible, the management of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre has installed new motors and dynamos at a cost of over $1,000. This new apparatus is the latest improved type manufactured in Fort Wayne Electric Works of the General Electric Company. The factory worked day and night to have the machines ready for last Monday night and the express company held a special car for their transportation. The increase in the volume of light may be imagined when it is known that the new motors and dynamos develop 25,000 candle power and use electricity at a cost of $50.000 a day.

With a symphony orchestra of forty musicians and with the large force of electricians, operators, effect men and others employed, it is plain that the expense of producing this mammoth spectacle equals that of many dramatic companies. [illegible] of "The Birth of [illegible] Imagine a [illegible] Confed- [illegible] in

GREAT GENERALS IN HISTORIC SPECTACLE

Grant and Lee Picturizes in "Birth of a Nation" at the Nixon

Among the actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the New Nixon Theatre, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have been particularly complimented on the faithfulness of their portrayals, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

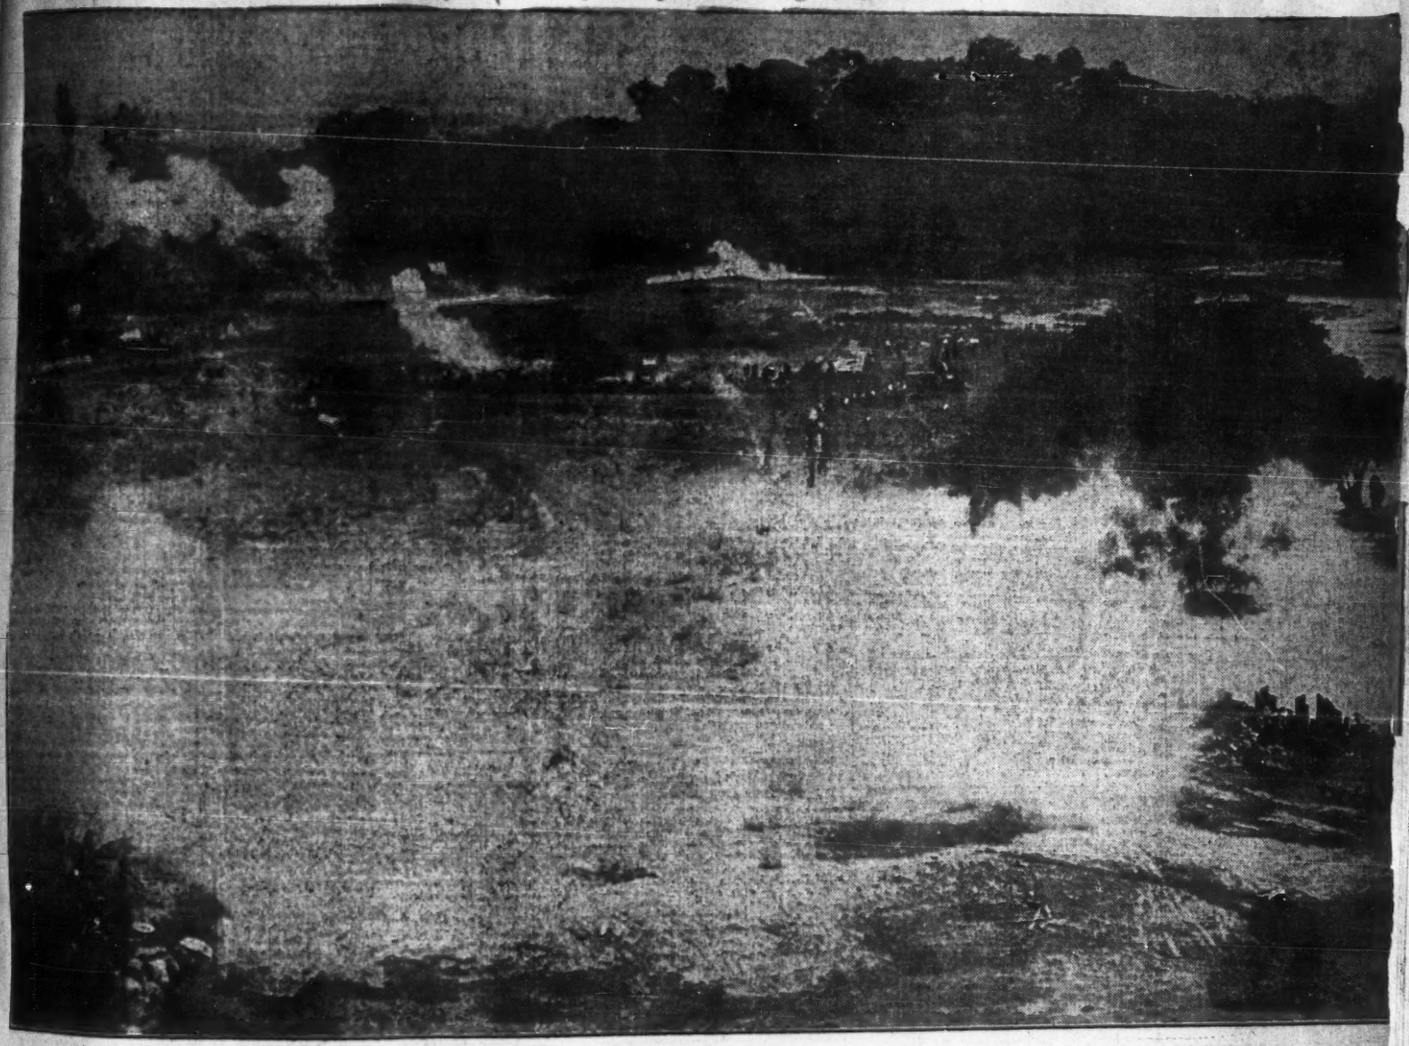
The picture shows Lee surrendering to Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Virginia, April 9, 1865. It is a perfect reproduction of the personages in that historic scene, of the room and of the minute details of the happenings.

It is well known that many supporters of the Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerrila warfare. But Lee was of a different mind. He realized that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of that fateful April day under the budding apple trees were determined the terms of peace, which were formally signed in the mansion that afternoon.

Lee had dressed for the occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, appeared in his fatigue uniform and dusty jack boots. A pocket inkstand and pen belonging to an officer of the general staff was used for writing and signing the historic document of surrender.

This and every other historical scene in the spectacle are absolutely correct reproductions of what actually happened. Photographs of the scenes and descriptions by authentic historians were used to insure complete accuracy.

PRESS-and UNION



Scenes from "The Birth of a Nation at the New Nixon.

LEE AND GRANT VIVIDLY PORTRAYED

Gaye and Grisp, Who Have These Roles in "Birth of a Nation" Studied the Military and the Human Sides of the Great Generals

UNION

Among the actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the New Nixon Theatre, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have been particularly complimented on the faithfulness of their portrayals, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows Lee surrendering to Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Virginia, April 9, 1865. It is a perfect reproduction of the personages in that historic scene, of the room and of the minute details of the happenings.

It is well known that many supporters of the Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerrila warfare. But Lee was of a different mind. He realized that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of that fateful April day

Friday July 30

REVIEW

MIRIAM COOPER IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," THE WONDERFUL SPECTACLE AT THE NEW NIXON THEATRE.

LONG RUNS FOR BIG SPECTACLE

'Birth of a Nation' Has Record Runs in Best Theatres of Country

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialised spectacle with music, continues its successful summer run at the New Nixon. This is the great offering that opened the new era in the best theaters of New York, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco and Los Angeles where it has been running simultaneously for many months.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient points of the war btew enehte States.

In the second half eht South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northern Elsie Stneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintains two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Klu Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost a half million dollars and took eight months to produce. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronising of a complete symphonic scores with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. Joseph Carl Breil, who composed the score, has used the Wagner idea of motifs. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of the best musucians.

PRESS

LILLIAN GISH in "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon.

A FILM THAT MAKES HISTORY LIVE

"Birth of Nation" Recalls to Mind the Bedrock Upon Which Nation Was Built

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It is now in the full swing of a successful all-summer run at the New Nixon Theatre, where it is playing to the most phenomenal business of the season.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. This great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1871—the period of the Civil War and Reconstruction.

Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," "The Birth of a Nation" has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. It is a choral symphony of light. The battle scenes are shown on a scale and with an imaginative quality that vividly resembles actual warfare.

The musical accompaniment adds to the thrill of the war scenes and intensifies the romance of the love episodes. The orchestra plays Southern and old-time airs for the softer scenes, while the big battle views are given to the clash and blare of martial music and the emotion-arousing classical compositions. The synchronisation of the music and the scenes is perfect.

The enormous popularity achieved by "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been more than duplicated in Atlantic City.

AMUSEMENTS

AT THE NIXON

New Electrical Equipment for "The Birth of a Nation"

Although "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon has been the most sensational success seen in Atlantic City in many seasons, the management has, at great cost, installed new motors and dynamos to increase the volume of light.

The new apparatus is the latest improved type manufactured in the Fort Wayne Electric Works of the General Electric Company. The factory has been working day and night to have the machines ready for last Monday night, and the express company held a special car in readiness to transport them.

To give an ideal projection to this wonderful work of education and art to the audiences in Atlantic City, making it fully on a par with that of New York, Chicago and Boston, has entailed a cost of over $1000 to the management.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now the largest picture in Atlantic City, and to realize what was necessary to obtain the dazzling whiteness and vivid detail, it is only needful to state that the new apparatus develops and uses 26,000 candle power and uses electricity at the rate of $50 a day.

With a symphony orchestra of forty and with the large force of electrical experts, operators, effect men and others, it can readily be seen that the cost of running this production equals that of large dramatic companies.

UNION

Saturday July 31

REVIEW

'BIRTH OF NATION' AT NEW NIXON

Orchestra of Forty Plays Accompaniment as Historical Tale Unfolds—Having Phenomenal Run at the Shore

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It is now in the full swing of a successful all-summer run at the New Nixon Theatre, where it is playing to the most phenomenal business of the season.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. This great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1871—the period of the Civil War and Reconstruction.

Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," "The Birth of a Nation" has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. It is a choral symphony of light. The battle scenes are shown on a scale and with an imaginative quality that vividly resembles actual warfare.

The musical accompaniment adds to the thrill of the war scenes and intensifies the romance of the love episodes. The orchestra plays Southern and old-time airs for the softer scenes, while the big battle views are given to the clash and blare of martial music and the emotion-arousing classical compositions. The synchronization of the music and the scenes is perfect.

The enormous popularity achieved by "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been more than duplicated in Atlantic City.

LILLIAN GISH in "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon.

SPECTACLE HAS STIRRING APPEAL

"Birth of a Nation" Has Strong Influence On Patriotism

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in David W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," a thrilling association with the issues of to-day. The great crises of 1861-71 was pictureed in the play have their lesson for Americans of the present. The North and South of Sherman's march to the sea; Lee's surrender to Grant and the aftermath of war in the Reconstruction period—all these form a series of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interests. Out of that terrible conflict a new nation, united by spiritual as well as geographical ties, was born. The fire of American patriotism never burned brighter than it burns to-day, and the play which shows the evolution from the past to the present has found a warm welcome at the New Nixon Theater.

Before the production of "The Birth of a Nation," such dull times had fallen upon the theater that long lines of "queues" of buyers have been noticeably absent. It took the Griffith production of pictures and music to bring back the big advance sale days. Now New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop and Boston's Tremont Street look like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of patrons stretching to the curb and even to the next street. The same phenomenon has been repeated in every city visited. It means of course, that the high-class theater is not moribund. It only needed the touch of Griffith's master wizardry to again infuse it with life.

PRESS

SURGEONS BUSY WHEN BIRTH OF NATION FILMED

Many Accidents Occurred when Griffiths Was Making His Spectacle

The realism of war was carried to such an extent in the making of David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a successful summer run at the New Nixon, that a regularly organized hospital corps of a chief surgeon, four assistant surgeons and a staff of orderlies accompanied the troops. This was not more decorative effect but the grim necessity of an ardous campaign.

Eighteen thousand men were engaged in a march over fifty miles of rough country representing the scene of the battle of Petersburg, the Appomattax campaign and (in reconstruction days) the North and South Carolina raids of the clansmen. Camps had to be pitched nightly, commisariat supplied and wells dug. Miles and miles of trenches were dug.

The cannon used in the battle scenes were leaded not with pyrotechnic powder, but with the real article. Each of the shells used cost $80, so a round of artillery fire was very expensive. In spite o the most careful precautions the casualty list was heavy and the hospital staff was kept busy.

The fighting was directed exactly like that of modern warfare by field telephones. "General" Griffiths headquarters was in a high tower overlooking the scene of action. A network of underground telephones connected him with his sub-directors in various parts of the field. It took three-quarters of a day "to set" each scene. The placing of the troops was complicated matter that had to be all worked out to suit the camera requirements.

The realism of the battle scenes has never been even approached before and yet with the vast number of troops engaged there were no really serious injuries although the surgeon and his staff was kept busy with minor hurts.

Review

THOUGHTS ON RACE HATRED

Editor of the REVIEW.

Dear Sir.—Although much criticism has entered the press concerning the immorality of a photo production, "The Birth of a Nation," no degree of racial friction has resulted from the same in the city. But in many cities feeling was such that pictures were not showed. The thoughts of conditions centering about our civil strife of sixty one and sixty five. I have always thought slavery a moral and a social evil that time has pronounced everlasting. It will forever be as a blunder among the creditable achievements of the white man. Truly, it fails to harmonize with "Lydian airs" of our Constitution. Why should anyone desire to popularize one of the greatest blunders in history? Such a production as "The Birth of a Nation" brings to the mind those terrible conditions of the past. We should follow Longfellow's advice:

"Let the dead past bury its dead."

Resulting from this civil strife men notable lives were lost—all of this was shown—should we not lament rather than glorify this struggle? Is it not sad to think that man should contend life for life over such racial disputes.

Alas, when we think of Lincoln sleeping together with the enemies caused by his lofty conception of the justice and rights of mankind, why should we not sigh over the thin delusions and racial grievences which divide heart from heart and make some white men so numerciful to the American Negro?

LAWRENCE [illegible]HOVE
250 North Virginia avenue.

July 31

Saturday July 31.

EVENING-LEDGER

MAE MARSH
In "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon, Atlantic City.

BULLETIN

"The Birth of a Nation" has made such a success at the New Nixon, at Atlantic City, that it will continue there indefinitely.

TELEGRAPH

"The Birth of a Nation"

In order to insure the most perfect projection possible, the management of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, has installed motors and dynamos at a cost of over $5,000. The new apparatus is of the latest type. The increase in the volume of light may be imagined when it is known that the new motors and dynamos develop 26,000 candlepower, and use electricity at a cost of $50 a day. With an orchestra of forty musicians and the large force of electrical experts, operators, effect men and others it is plain that the expense of running this spectacle equals that of a large dramatic company. The mimic war scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" transcend reality. Imagine a panorama miles long in which the Confederate soldiers leap from their trenches in flawless serried lines and charge the Union fortifications, overcoming the first, smashing their way into the second and pounding at the third line until they are forced to recoil before the storm of grape, cannister and bullet.

LILLIAN GISH—NEW NIXON (ATLANTIC CITY)

North American

'BIRTH OF A NATION' SHOWN AT NIXON'S, ATLANTIC CITY

Hailed wherever it has been shown as one of the most spectacular motion pictures ever attempted, "The Birth of a Nation" is duplicating at the Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, the success it has achieved in recent months in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

The piece is a graphic presentation of the stirring days which followed the peace at Appomattox. Its theme is the birth of a nation out of the social chaos, racial hatreds, political corruption and economic turbulence which despoiled the south at the close of the war. D. W. Griffith is the producer.

UNION

RED CROSS CORPS TRACKED GRIFFITH

Stirring Battle Scenes In the "Birth of Nation" Could Not Be Depicted Without Injuries. The Offering At the New Nixon.

The realism of war was carried to such an extent in the making of David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a successful summer run at the New Nixon, that a regularly organized hospital corps of a chief surgeon, four assistant surgeons and a staff of orderlies accompanied the troops. This was not more decorative effect but the grim necessity of an ardous cam-

PUT more layers of tic than we do in walls, to strong them, and the fixtures more with faster deterioration of Rubber through the greater engendered.
Put fewer layers, and walls would not be strong enough to carry the load of the Car.
So there you are—Mr.
User!
Why put MORE in of Fabric in the Walls of Tire than will properly the load, when each addit

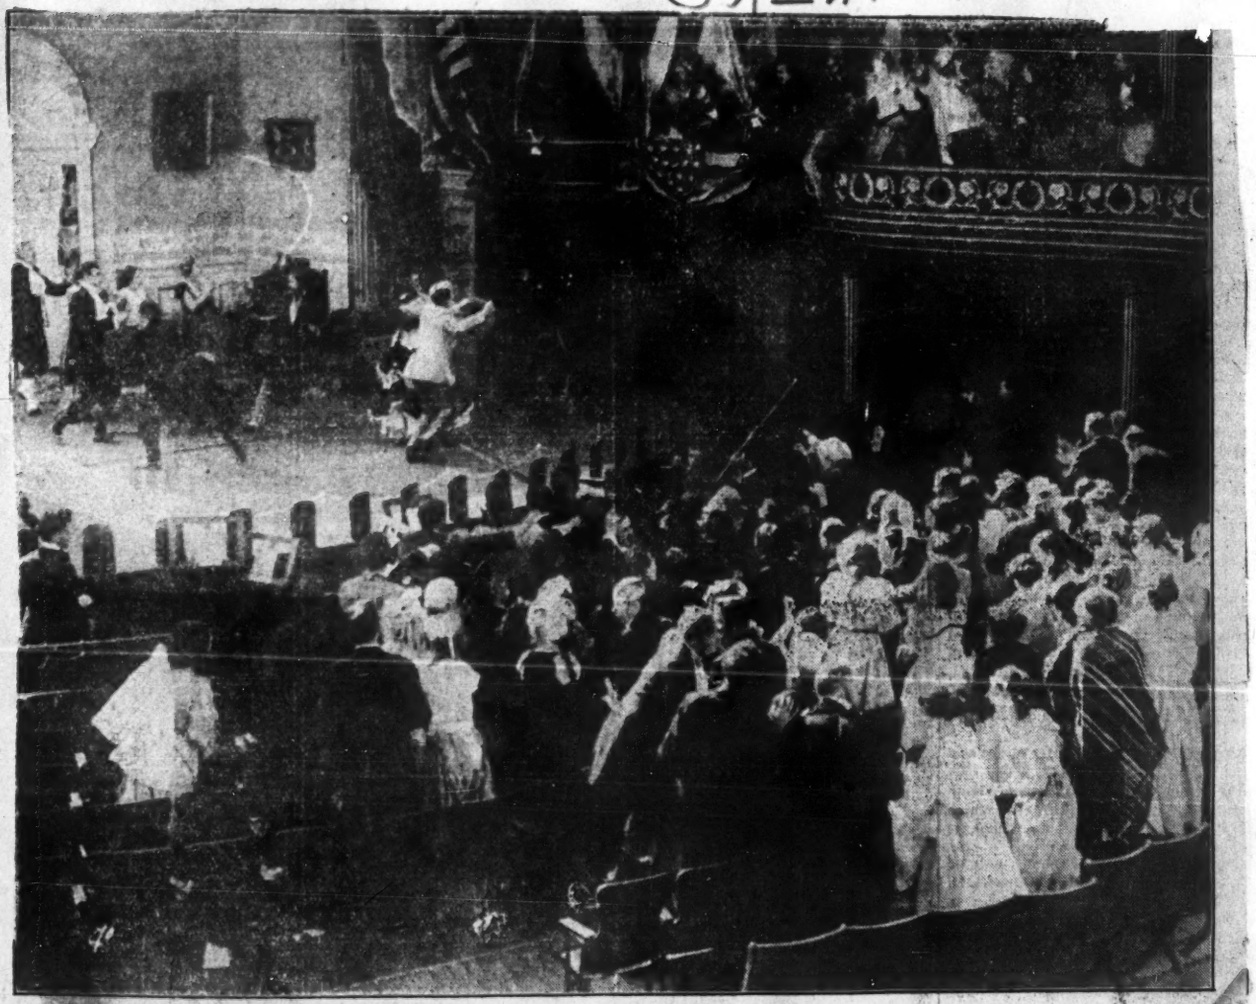
august 1 - Sunday GAZETTE



The Assassination of President Lincoln—Scene From "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theatre All This Week

Grant and Lee at Appomattox in "The Birth of a Nation" at New Nixon.

GAZETTE

Aug 1

PHILA PRESS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS PLAUDITS OF ALL AT NEW NIXON

Vividly Depicts the Primary Causes of the Civil War, Events During the War, and the Reconstruction of a Nation.

Matinee and Evening Performances Daily.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is duplicating at the New Nixon its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Partly from the nature of the new art and partly from the opposition aroused, this work has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of recent years, and the extraordinary demand for seats indicates the size of the eager throngs which are coming to the New Nixon.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the Civil War; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march to the sea, and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grand at Appomattox; the assasination of the Federal President; the harsh radical policy to the South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger-negro regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendship between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where Nature painted the backgrounds. The notable indoor scenes, like that of Ford's Theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox and the meeting of the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. It is the first time in art-production that American history has been presented in living pictures on so stupendous a scale. To do this many times the amount of time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Continued on Page Three.

NEW NIXON

(Continued from Page One)

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grace, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the erstwhile "servants in the Master's hall,"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitles the producer to his well earned laurel of having created a new art, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had notbeen conceivedbefore.

Among the distinguished principals is Henry H. Walthall, the popular Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, as the Clansman.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN THIRD WEEK AT SHORE

There is a new way of recording history. Carlyle, Motley, Macauley, Prescott, Parkham and all the historians of all time have placed the results of their research on paper. David Wark Griffith, actor, dramatist and director of motion pictures, places his interpretation of history on a film. His method is to revitalize and visualize the deeds of the past. He was peculiarly fitted to recreate the scenes of the Civil War and Reconstruction days for his father, Jacob Wark Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade and all his kinfolk endured the terrible sufferings of the post-bellum days. For years young Griffith dreamed of his plans to make that epoch of American history live anew. Finally at a cost of half a million dollars he relaized his dreams. The result was "The Birth of a Nation," which is now in its third triumphant week at the New Nixon, Atlantic City.

In staging Sherman's march to the sea a village of frame houses was built to be burned; Ford's Theater in Washington was constructed in replica; the Assembly Chamber of the South Carolina Legislature was reproduced in the same way in order to get a scene lasting only thirty seconds. When he wanted to show the thrilling rides of the Ku Klux Klan he found that all the roads he could use were oiled macadam. He needed dirt roads, so he went to the County Supervisors and obtained the use of the roads in an area of ten square miles for one day, hired a force of laborers to lay ten inches of dirt on the roads and ran his rides. Then the workmen removed the dirt.

North American

ON CURRENT PLAY BILL

Burdala Patterson, a favorite favorite of the variety stage will be seen at the Nixon this week, and Miss Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Elsie Cameron in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing its third successful week at the Nixon Theater, Atlantic City.

N. American

ATLANTIC CITY

Nixon—D. W. Griffith's spectacular photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," begins the third week of a successful run tomorrow. The picture has been viewed by thousands of persons.

RECORD

In "The Birth of a Nation"
(Motion Pictures) Nixon (Atlantic City)

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Continuation of Atlantic City Records of Griffith Film Presentations.

David Wark Griffith, actor, dramatist and director of motion pictures, places his interpretation of history on the film. His method is to revitalize and visualize the deeds of the past. He was peculiarly fitted to recreate the scenes of the civil war and reconstruction days for his father, Jacob Wark Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade and all David's kinfolk endured the terrible sufferings of the post-bellum days.

For years young Griffith dreamed of his plans to make that epoch of American history live anew. Finally at a cost of half a million dollars he realized his dreams. The result was "The Birth of a Nation," which is now in its third week at the New Nixon, Atlantic City. In staging Sherman's march to the sea a village of frame houses was built to be burned; Ford's Theatre in Washington was constructed in replica; the Assembly chamber of the South Carolina Legislature was reproduced in the same way in order to get a scene lasting only 30 seconds. When he wanted to show the thrilling rides of the Ku Klux Klan, Griffith found that all the roads he could use were oiled macadam. He needed dirt roads, so he went to the county supervisors and obtained the use of the roads in an area of 10 square miles for one day, hired a force of laborers to lay 10 inches of dirt on the roads and ran his rides. Then the workmen removed the dirt. He staged a series of interior views of the Cabinet room in Washington, the Wilmer-McLean home at Appomattox, where Lee surrendered to Grant; the military hospital in the Patent Office in Washington; the homes of the two families, one Northern and the other of the South, in which the love interest of the story centres, and he took a number of amazing scenes at night by the light of exploding incandescent bombs.

There is a matinee every day at 2.30, when the prices range from 25 cents to $1. At the night performances at 8.30 the best seats are $2 and $1, with numerous seats at 25 and 50 cents.

Aug 1

INQUIRER

Joseph Kenabery
as Abraham Lincoln
in "The Birth of A Nation,"
New Nixon, Atlantic City

With the Films

NEW NIXON, Atlantic City — "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, is now in the third successful week of its summer run at this theatre. This will be the only engagement played in Atlantic City for the contract between the Epoch Producing Corporation and the Nixon management expressly provides that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be presented in any other theatre. This wonderful spectacle of the American military era is eminently suited to the present with the Great War in the minds of all. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstandings; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the great, all-loving heart of President Lincoln and the little men who after his death thwarted his far-seeing plans; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as 1861-71. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent acting and perfect photography, the emotional appeal of the music and the cunning part of the mechanical effects combine to make an offering satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatregoers.

Monday Aug 2. all Papers

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

Third Big Week

Now Playing

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

Watch These Daily Bulletins for Paens of Praise the Like of Which Were Never Heard Before

No. 17 "A War Play, the like of which never has been presented on any stage before." —Dorothy

SEATS NOW SELLING Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

PARTINENT FACTS ABOUT D. W. GRIFFITH

Wark Griffith, the man who ... The Birth of a Nation," now showing at the New Nixon Theatre, is the son of Jacob Wark Griffith, who was a brevet brigadier general in the Confederate army and one of the closest friends of "Little Joe" Wheeler. His grandmother was a Shirley Carter, of Virginia, and his mother an Oglesby, of Georgia. As a matter of fact, the family name is not Griffith at all. One of his paternal ancestors in colonial times was of an English family of noble birth. Barrington was the family name. This ancestor got in a church and civil row in England and was exiled. He was resolved that the name should not ... him and he then took the ... of Griffith.

... sons of the Confederacy ... young Griffith was very poor. When he started out to make his fortune as ... as an actor. Then he wrote several plays. Finally, about eight years ago, James K. Hackett accepted one, "A Fool and a Girl." It opened in Washington and closed in Baltimore.

About this time motion picture plays began attracting serious attention and he turned his hand to writing scenarios. Then he went with the Biograph Company, at first in a very minor capacity, but he soon was a full-fledged director. Among the notable pictures that he directed were Browning's "Pippa Passes," "The Merchant of Venice," "The Boy on the Southern," "Enoch Arden," "Lines of White on a Sullen Sea," "Oil and Water" and many other masterpieces.

Then he went to the Mutual, where he produced "The Battle of the Sexes," "The Avenging Conscience" and many other great [illegible]. At last came "The ... of a Nation."

PRESS

PRESS

aug. 2

REVIEW

Meeting of the Ku Klux Klan "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon

GRIFFITH IS EXPERT DANCER

Producer of Birth of a Nation Authority on Classic Dances

The modern master of the film, like D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," the marvelous spectacle at the New Nixon, must be a walking encyclopaedia of arts and sciences. And even then he must hire brains. When "Judith and Bethulia" was produced, Griffith put a professor of archaeology at work drawing all the dance positions of the figures in the final dance of the Syrian tablets. Thus the dance to the fish god, after slumbering thousands of years, was revived to please the patrons of the play.

When he began work on "The Birth of a Nation" he had four historians on his executive staff. They were set to work in the great libraries digging up data about Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and the Lincoln tragedy at Ford's Theatre. In this war drama he had to be strategist, judge of costumes, building inspector, professor of dancing, artist and litterateur.

Next to the battle scenes and the marvelous replica of Ford's Theatre he took the keenest interest in the pictures of Southern life. The wizard of the film, who is himself an expert dancer, can stage and costume any kind of dance recorded in the history of that art.

Griffith was once rehearsing a performer in a ball room scene. He was capering up and down the room, illustrating what he wanted, when he struck into some funny little steps.

"There," he said to Kod—"put your name to this, take it around the country and make it and yourself famous. The player did so, and that it where the Fox Trot originated.

"Dancing is the best of all exercises" says Griffith. "Did you ever stop to think that every conquering people were dancing people?"

UNION

Meeting of the Ku Klux Klan "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon

UNION

SOMETHING OF LIFE OF GRIFFITH

Man Who Staged the Great Film on Historical Facts Scion Well Known Southern Family

David Wark Griffith, the man who made "The Birth of a Nation," now showing at the New Nixon Theatre, is the son of Jacob Wark Griffith, who was a brevet brigadier general in the Confederate army and one of the closest friends of "Little Joe" Wheeler. His grandmother was a Shirley Carter, of Virginia, and his mother an Oglesby, of Georgia. As a matter of fact, the family name is not Griffith at all. One of his paternal ancestors in colonial times was of an English family of noble birth. Bayington was the family name. This ancestor got in a church and civil row in England and was exiled. He was resolved that the name should not cross with him and he then took the name of Griffith.

Like most sons of the Confederacy, young Griffith was very poor. When he started out to make his fortune [illegible]

ATLANTIC CITY

ITEMS of INTEREST

(Special Correspondence of The Jewish Exponent)

AT THE NIXON

The Birth of a Nation

"D. W. Griffith's production of "The Birth of a Nation," which opened last week at the New Nixon, is meeting with great success.

So much had been said of this work that one was naturally expectant, but all the preparatory superlatives about it faded into insignificance in the face of what it actually portrays. You no longer look at immobile scenery or players confined within the narrow limits of three walls which have constituted play land. Here you have the whole country before you and you jump from one century to another while you watch history being made. You see statesmen grapling in the very time of their development with the mightiest problems that were to be faced and the preservation of the Union accomplished. You see the machinations of politics and the outcome of things which are hidden behind the scenes of an ordinary play.

TUESDAY-Aug 3

PRESS

PEACE ALEEGORY "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THEATRE

FINE ACTING IN BIRTH OF A NATION'

Excellent Cast of Actors in Griffith Production at the New Nixon

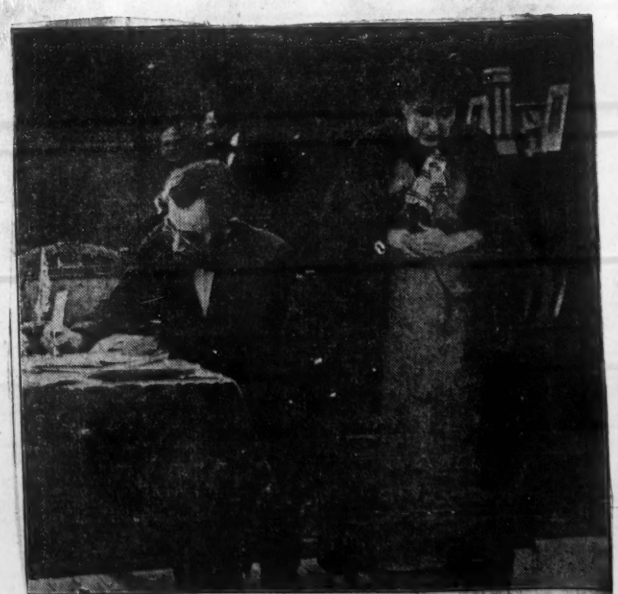
One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a record-breaking summer run at the New Nixon Theatre, is the unusual quality of the actors under the direction of David W. Griffith. Their work is at the farthest remove from the rough-and-ready methods and horseplay of a great deal of picture production. Henry Walthall's Ben Cameron, "the little Confederate colonel," is a fine, sincere and subtle piece of characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and the Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are all delightful feminine portrayals. Very notable are the portrayals of the great historical figures: Joseph Henabery as Abraham Lincoln, Donald Crisp as U. S. Grant, Howard Gaye as Robert E. Lee, Raoul Walsh as John Wilkes Booth and Ralph Lewis as Austin Stoneman, a character partly modeled after Thaddeus Stevens.

Josephine Crowell, as Mrs. Cameron, and Spottiswood Aiken, as Dr. Cameron, are splendid types of the old Southern aristocracy.

The negro types are faithfully portrayed. The two mulattos, Lydia Brown and Silas Lynch, are played by Mary Alden and George Seigmann, while the faithful old servants are portrayed by Jennie Lee, William De Vaull and William Freeman.

All of these widely varying types are made real and without the aid of the spoken word. It is a triumph for the silent drama and for the master director, David W. Griffith.

REVIEW



"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LINCOLN HEARS THE WIDOW'S PRAYER COMING TO THE NIXON SUNDAY NIGHT

BIRTH OF NATION OF FINE ACTING

The Stars of the Theatrical Firmanent Were Assembled To Produce the Greatest Story Ever Filmed

One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a record-breaking summer run at the New Nixon Theatre, is the unusual quality of the actors under the direction of David W. Griffith. Their work is at the farthest remove from the rough-and-ready methods and horseplay of a great deal of picture production. Henry Walthall's Ben Cameron, "the little Confederate colonel," is a fine, sincere and subtle piece of characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and the Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are all delightful feminine portrayals. Very notable are the portrayals of the great historical figures: Joseph Henabery as Abraham Lincoln, Donald Crisp as U. S. Grant, Howard Gaye as Robert E. Lee, Raoul Walsh as John Wilkes Booth and Ralph Lewis as Austin Stoneman, a character partly modeled after Thaddeus Stevens.

Josephine Crowell, as Mrs. Cameron, and Spottiswood Aiken, as Dr. Cameron, are splendid types of the old Southern aristocracy.

The negro types are faithfully portrayed. The two mulattos, Lydia Brown and Silas Lynch, are played by Mary Alden and George Seigmann, while the faithful old servants are portrayed by Jennie Lee, William De Vaull and William Freeman.

All of these widely varying types are made real and without the aid of the spoken word. It is a triumph for the silent drama and for the master director, David W. Griffith.

UNION aug-3

LILLIAN GISH in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON

REVIEW aug 3

MAGNITUDE OF NIXON FILM

Birth of Nation Is Almost Appalling In Its Scope

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation," now in the third week of its run at the New Nixon, is almost apalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hairraising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new

...in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has created a tremendous sensation because of its vastly more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation re-born is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago.

LILLION GISH

MAE MARSH

In "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre

REVIEW

AUGUST 4

PRESS

AUGUST 5

REVIEW

MAGNITUDE OF BIRTH OF NATION

Spectacle At New Nixon Almost Inconceivable In Scope

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, now at the New Nixon, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects add realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the War between the States and the Reconstruction of the Southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor drama" cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a Brigadier General of the Confederate army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfct characterization of the widely varying roles The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old-fashioned stage. The limitations of the theater were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama after panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor.

'BIRTH OF A NATION' OUT TOPS 'BEN HUR'

Film Has Sounded a New Note in Photoplays

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," now in its third successful week at the New Nixon, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage pectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Beard" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epoch of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage, such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy," and "Barbara Freitchie," seem tame after seeing the splendors of 'The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Homeric grandeur. The night riding of the Ku Klux Klan looks like a company of avenging spectres sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

This realistic picture of history in the making of untold value to both old and young. Besides the historical worth of this great spectacle the constant emotional throb ofthe romantic story thrills the heart of all. It is the supreme achievement of modern histrionism in its new guise untrammelled by the limitations of the theatre.

TELEPHONE IN STAGING FILM

Important Factor In Battle Scenes of "Birth Of a Nations

The telephone was a most important factor in staging the great battle scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's supreme spectacle now in the midst of a successful Summer run at the New Nixon.

"Camera two!" was the sharp command from "Gederal" Griffith, standing on the platform of a tower sixty feet high. The telephone operator of the small exchange at his side slipped a plug in the switchboard. Two miles away one of Griffith's assistants received the message. In a minute more a column of troops deployed, the roar of cannon was heard and the attack on the enemy's trenches began.

"Camera four!" A battery of field artillery wheeled about and thundered down the field. Quickly the orders were given to sixteen division assistants and the Battle of Petersburg was in full swing. Eighteen thousand men were battling over twelve square miles of ground. If the battle had been real there could not have been more celerity of movement. Everything went like clockwork without a hitch. The old-fashioned method of using the megaphone would have been futile. It was the telephone that made possible the most wonderful war scenes ever shown on any stage. The wires had to be laid underground for the telephone did not come into use until ten years after the Civil War and telephone poles would have been an anachronism.

Mr. Griffith got the idea of this method of handling his battle scenes from the use made of the telephone in the great war. The result of this applying of the most modern methods enabled him to achieve results with the camera far ahead of anything that had ever been done before. That is the secret of the success of Griffith. He is always the pioneer, the creator. The result is that "The Birth of a Nation" is the most stupendous creation ever staged.

HISTORY'S CHARACTERS IN 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

Life-like Representations in the Big Griffith Photoplay at the Nixon

In preparing for the spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Director Wavid W. Griffith experienced great difficulty in finding the proper actors to portray the great historical personages who appear in the various scenes. Lincoln, Grant, Lee and John Wilkes Booth found stage embodiment only after the most thorough search. The features of these are so well known to the public that it was absolutely necessary that the make-up of the actor be perfect. Perhaps the most familiar face, and there fore the most difficult to find a counterpart, was that of Abraham Lincoln.

Over twenty applicants were thoroughly studied before Joseph Henabery was finally chosen. In the research prior to the making of the picture it was found that there were over fifty photographs of Lincoln extant and that all varied in expression. Several of the applicants looked ideal at first, but failed in the photographic tests. Others were satisfactory in that respect, but failed to catch the mannerisms of the Great Heart.

Finally Mr. Henabery was chosen. In make-up and personality he came up to Mr. Griffith's requirements. It was afterwards ascertained that for years this actor had made a careful and conscientious study of every available book printed about President Lincoln and this undoubtedly was of material help in his characterization.

It is this quiet but firm insistence on perfection in every detail that has made David W. Griffith the master mind of the films and "The Birth of the Nation," a spectacle that fairly staggers the imagination. History repeats itself in perfect realism.

REVIEW AUGUST 5

LILLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON

UNION AUG. 4

GRIFFITH PICTURE THE MASTER WORK

"Ben Hur" and "The Blue Beard" Formerly Classed As the Greatest Stage Spectacle. "Birth of Na- New Nixon.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," now in its third successful week at the New Nixon, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage pectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Beard" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epoch of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage, such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy," and "Barbara Freitchie," seem tame after seeing the splendors of 'The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Homeric grandeur. The night riding of the Ku Klux Klan looks like a company of avenging spectres sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

This realistic picture of history in the making of untold value to both old and young. Besides the historical worth of this great spectacle the constant emotional throb ofthe romantic story thrills the heart of all. It is the supreme achievement of modern histrionism in its new guise untrammelled by the limitations of the theatre.

Gazette July 2-5

Night Gathering of the Ku Klux Clan a Scene from "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Today Matinee and Nigrt.

UNION AUG-5

PHILA GAZETTE AUG. 1

THE EXCELLENCE OF GRIFFITH CAST

"Birth of Nation" Has Finished Portrayals of Lincoln, Grant, Lee and John Wilkes Booth—Offering at the New Nixon Theatre

In preparing for the spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Director Wuvid W. Griffith experienced great difficulty in finding the proper actors to portray the great historical personages who appear in the various scenes. Lincoln, Grant, Lee and John Wilkes Booth found stage embodiment only after the most thorough search. The features of these are so well known to the public that it was absolutely necessary that the make-up of the actor be perfect. Perhaps the most familiar face, and there fore the most difficult to find a counterpart, was that of Abraham Lincoln.

Over twenty applicants were thoroughly studied before Joseph Henabery was finally chosen. In the research prior to the making of the picture it was found that there were over fifty photographs of Lincoln extant and that all varied in expression. Several of the applicants looked ideal at first, but failed in the photographic tests. Others were satisfactory in that respect, but failed to catch the mannerisms of the Great Heart.

Finally Mr. Henabery was chosen. In make-up and personality he came up to Mr. Griffith's requirements. It was afterwards ascertained that for years this actor had made a careful and conscientious study of every available book printed about President Lincoln and this undoubtedly was of material help in his characterization.

It is this quiet but firm insistence on perfection in every detail that has made David W. Griffith the master mind of the films and "The Birth of the Nation," a spectacle that fairly staggers the imagination. History repeats itself in perfect realism.

„Birth of Nation" wird nur in dem neuen Nixon gespielt werden.

D. W. Griffith's prächtiges Schauspiel „The Birth of a Nation", tritt heute in die dritte Woche seiner erfolgreichen Sommer-Aufführung in dem neuen Nixon-Theater in Atlantic City ein. Die einzige Gelegenheit, diese wunderbare Produktion in Atlantic City zu sehen, bietet sich während der gegenwärtigen Aufführung, denn der Kontrakt zwischen der Epoch Producing Corporation und dem Nixon Management bestimmt ausdrücklich, daß „The Birth of a Nation" in Atlantic City in keinem anderen Theater als dem Neuen Nixon dargeboten werden darf.

Die Geschichte dieser wunderbaren historischen und romantischen Darbietung beginnt in dem 17. Jahrhundert mit der Ankunft der afrikanischen Sklaven in Amerika. Ihr Fortschritt bezieht sich auf die Phasen der Sklaverei-Frage und ihren Einfluß auf die Geschichte der Ver. Staaten. Im Verlaufe der Abschaffungsbewegung kommt der Bürgerkrieg mit seinen furchtbaren Schlachten; Sherman's Marsch [illegible] dem Meere; der Brand von Atlanta; der Fall von Petersburg; Lee's Uebergabe an Grant; die Ermordung von Präsident Lincoln; das Ordeal der Rekonstruktions-Periode; die Ku Klux Klan's ösung des Problems und die endliche Etablirung eines beständigen Friedens. Diese historischen Szenen werden alle in einer Art und Weise gezeigt, die Geschichte mit Romantik verbindet. Es ist alles nach dem größten Plane dargestellt, der je von einem Künstler in der Welt ausgedacht und durchgeführt wurde.

Es giebt genug Aufregungen für mehrere Schauspiele und der Appell ist ergreifend und lebhaft. Es giebt zwei Vorstellungen täglich und die große Kapazität des Theaters bietet reichlich gute Sitze zu den verschiedenen Preisen, die jeder Börse entsprechen. Die Abendpreise rangiren von 25 Cents bis zu $2.00 und die besten Sitze in allen Matinees sind $1.00.

PHILA. LEDGER AUG. 1

"The Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's superb spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters today upon the third week of its successful summer run at the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City. The only opportunity to see this wonderful production in Atlantic City will be during the present run, because the contract between the Epoch Producing Corporation and the Nixon management expressly provides that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be presented in Atlantic City in any other theatre than the New Nixon.

The story of this wonderful historical and romantic offering begins in the seventeenth century, with the coming of African slaves to America. Its progress is closely related to phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War with its terrific battles; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the fall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant; the assassination of President Lincoln; the ordeal of the reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem and the final establishment of an everlasting peace. These historic scenes are all shown in a way that links history to romance.

JEWISH EXPONENT

AMUSEMENTS

AT THE NIXON

New Electrical Equipment for "The Birth of a Nation"

Although "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon has been the most sensational success seen in Atlantic City in many seasons, the management has, at great cost, installed new motors and dynamos to increase the volume of light.

The new apparatus is the latest improved type manufactured in the Fort Wayne Electric Works of the General Electric Company. The factory has been working day and night to have the machines ready for last Monday night, and the express company held a special car in readiness to transport them.

To give an ideal projection to this wonderful work of education and art to the audiences in Atlantic City, making it fully on a par with that of New York, Chicago and Boston, has entailed a cost of over $1000 to the management.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now the largest picture in Atlantic City, and to realize what was necessary to obtain the dazzling whiteness and vivid detail, it is only needful to state that the new apparatus develops and uses 26,000 candle power and uses electricity at the rate of $50 a day.

With a symphony orchestra of forty and with the large force of electrical experts, operators, effect men and others, it can readily be seen that the cost of running this production equals that of large dramatic companies.

RECORD AUG. 1

VIVID SCENES IN BIRTH OF NATION

The scenes of reconstruction days in the South shown in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon, are of great historical value. Some of the most interesting are those showing the sessions of the South Carolina Legislature when that body was controlled by negroes. In the House there were 78 colored members with only 46 whites and of those 32 were Carpetbaggers and scalawags. It was as if society was turned upside down. In place of the control of the old aristocratic statesmen was the rule of the ignorant democracy that mankind ever witnessed. For a time barbarism had overcome civilization by the force of numbers.

The result was the organization of the Ku Klux Klan and the redemption of the South from the horrors of misrule. This picture of history is one of the most vivid in "The Birth of a Nation." The progress made by the negro since those days is shown in views taken at Hampton Institute, Virginia.

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES P

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THIRD BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Matinee Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

700 Seats at $1

500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer: Watch these Daily Bulletins for Paens of Praise the Like of Which Were Never Heard Before.

No. 19. "It is worth $5.00 a seat."—C. F. Zittel, the famous critics of the N. Y. Journal.

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE ATLANTIC CITY BOARDWALK

SAMUEL F. NIXON - Managing Director

NOW PLAYING 3d Big Week

Twice Daily, Including Sundays

Evenings at 8:30—25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00. Matinees at 2:30—25c, 50c, $1.00.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

18,000 People

Cost $500,000 ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3000 Horses

8 Months To Produce

Direction EPOCH PRODUCING CORP. H. E. AITKEN, Pres't.

FOR BENEFITS FOR BROAD, FORREST AND GARRICK THEATRES, Philadelphia, the Coming Season, apply to Business Office, Broad Street Theatre.

AUGUST 6
PRESS
REVIEW

HISTORY WRITING IN THE FILMPLAY

"Birth of a Nation" Has Set the Standard at the New Nixon Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation," which is now playing a successful summer engagement at the New Nixon Theatre, shows the new method of writing history on the film.

David W. Griffith, the brilliant producer of this marvelous masterpiece, recently said: "The modern historian must use the camera. It is the instrument with which history is beginning to be written. In time it will be used in place of the typewriter. We may not live to see it, but one of these days each house will have receptacles for films.

"When one wants to refresh one's mind about a historical incident, nobody will turn to an encyclopaedia to read what happened on such and such an occasion; instead, some one will project the picture on the screen, and a story that needs no words will be pictorially told. By then the operation of a motion picture machine will be as familiar as putting a record on a phonograph.

"In the schools history, geography, botany, geology and other sciences will be taught by means of motion pictures. Churches will have a complete picture equipment as will also the public libraries.

"In the theatres moving pictures will replace most of the plays. On the stage one can get only the great moments, the high lights. On the screen is seen the gradual development, the little things that crystallize into the big issues. The stage can never hope to equal the panoramic sweep of the motion picture."

HENRY WALTHALL, In "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theatre.

MUSICAL SCORE FOR SPECTACLE

"Birth of a Nation" Has Specially Prepared Musical Setting

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation" is now in the third week of its summer run at the New Nixon.

The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpetbagger negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

In preparing the musical setting of this great production Mr. Griffith had hoped to find in folk-song collections the motifs for the symphonic score. His search was unsuccessful. Then he thought of the plantation melodies he used to hear as a boy down in Kentucky tunes that had never been made into crochets and quavers. As he worked, a different Southern air suggested itself for each character in the pictorial story. Joseph Carl Breil jotted down the hummed tunes. Mr. Briel next essayed the immense labor of scoring the 5000 scenes of the play, each with its appropriate music. The synchronization of the score to the scenes was indeed a task of magnitude.

There is an orchestra of forty and a large force of expert technicians.

UNION AUG 6

UNION AUG 6.

COLORED MEN TO DISCUSS PICTURE

Colored residents of the city have called a mass meeting to be held tonight at 8:30 o'clock at the Jethro Presbyterian Church, under the auspices of the Jethro Presbyterian Literary Society. It is understood that the purpose of the meeting is to discuss the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," now appearing at the New Nixon Theatre.

HENRY WALTHALL, In "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theatre.

CAMERA WRITER FUTURE HISTORY

David W. Griffith, Producer of "Birth of Nation" at the New Nixon, Says Camera Will Replace Encycloped Idea With Next Generation

"The Birth of a Nation," which is now playing a successful summer engagement at the New Nixon Theatre, shows the new method of writing history on the film.

David W. Griffith, the brilliant producer of this marvelous masterpiece, recently said: "The modern historian must use the camera. It is the instrument with which history is beginning to be written. In time it will be used in place of the typewriter. We may not live to see it, but one of these days each house will have receptacles for films.

"When one wants to refresh one's mind about a historical incident, nobody will turn to an encyclopaedia to read what happened on such and such an occasion; instead, some one will project the picture on the screen, and a story that needs no words will be pictorially told. By then the operation of a motion picture machine will be as familiar as putting a record on a phonograph.

"In the schools history, geography, botany, geology and other sciences will be taught by means of motion pictures. Churches will have a complete picture equipment as will also the public libraries.

"In the theatres moving pictures will replace most of the plays. On the stage one can get only the great moments, the high lights. On the screen is seen the gradual development, the little things that crystallize into the big issues. The stage can never hope to equal the panoramic sweep of the motion picture."

PRESS AUG. 7

JEWISH EXPONENT

TELEGRAPH AUG. 7

ATLANTIC CITY

ITEMS of INTEREST

(Special Correspondence of The Jewish Exponent)

AT THE NIXON

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," now in its third successful week at the New Nixon, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Beard" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epoch of American history, with its 5000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

RECORD AUG. 6

STORY OF THE KU KLUX KLAN

Probably the most thrilling scenes in David W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the New Nixon, are those of the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed "America for Americans."

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as "an institution of Chivalry, Humanity and Patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tennessee, in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the Grand Cyclops; his assistant was the Grand Magi; the marshall was the Grand Turk; the treasurer was the Grand Exchequer, and the guards were termed Lictors.

As the sorrows of the South under the baneful Reconstruction laws began to be unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popularized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because most of the original members were descendants of Scotch Clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scotch Highlanders was again used as a call to arms. A great gathering of the Klan in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1867, passed the following resolutions which were then kept secret:

"We recognize our relations to the United States Government, the supremacy of the Constitution."

The aims of the organization were set forth as follows:

"1. To protect the weak, the innocent and the defenceless from the indignities, wrongs and outrages of the lawless, the violent and the brutal; to relieve the injured and oppressed; to succour the suffering and unfortunate and especially the widows and orphans of the Confederate soldiers.

"2. To protect and defend the Constitution of the United States and all laws passed in conformity thereto and to protect the States from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3. To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of the land."

The Empire, as the Klan was known, was ruled by the Grand Wizard, General Nathan Bedford Forrest, the Confederate cavalry leader. Each state was known as a Realm and the ruler was the Grand Dragon. He was assisted by eight Hydras. A group of counties was called a Dominion, ruled by a Grand Titan and six Furies.

Each county was a Province under a Grand Giant and four Goblins. The unit of the organization was the Den and the members were known as Ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and situal were never written until after the Grand Wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

A similar order was started in Louisiana known as the Knights of the White Camelia.

THE GRIFFITH MASTERWORK

"Birth of a Nation" Continuing to Enthrall Seashore Visitors.

David W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is duplicating at the New Nixon, Atlantic City, runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Partly from the nature of the new art and partly from the opposition aroused, this work has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of recent years, and the extraordinary demand for seats indicates the size of the eager throngs which are coming to the New Nixon.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, the piece's technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the civil war; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march to the sea and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger—negro regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the spectator.

Of equal importance with the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters.

EVE. LEDGER AUG. 7

Lighting "The Birth of a Nation"

Although "The Birth of the Nation" at the New Nixon in Atlantic City has been "crowding 'em in," the management has at great cost installed new motors and dynamos to increase the volume of light.

The new apparatus is the latest improved type manufactured in the Fort Wayne Electric Works of the General Electric Company. The factory had been working day and night to have the machines ready for last Monday night, and the express company held a special car in readiness to transport them.

The lighting expert of the Epoch Producing Company, Cecil R. Wood, came on from New York, and with an expert corps of trained men made the change of apparatus in the short time of three hours. In three minutes after they had finished the evening performance began.

To give an ideal projection to this wonderful work of education and art to the audiences in Atlantic City, making it fully on a par with that of New York, Chicago and Boston, has entailed a cost of over $1000 to the management.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now the brightest picture in Atlantic City, and to realize what was necessary to obtain the dazzling whiteness and vivid detail it is only needful to state that the new apparatus develops and uses 25,000 candle power and uses electricity at the rate of $50 a day.

With a symphony orchestra of 40, and with the large force of electrical experts, operators, effect men and others, it can readily be seen that the cost of running this production equals that of large dramatic companies.

TWO NEW PLAYS

Theatrical business has been very good this week. Two new plays have seen the light of day here, and both have made such a hit that they are scheduled for long runs in New York city. "Common Clay" has struck the feminine fancy, and at the matines every seat was sold in advance, while at the night performances the houses were very large, with 70 per cent. of the audience made up of women. "The Girl Who Smiles," a light operetta, without the faintest tinge of vulgarity and with catchy, bright music, also scored heavily. "The Birth of a Nation," the massive photoplay production, is continuing to do an immense business, despite the fact that the price of best seats is $2. From here it goes to the Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia.

MIRYAM COOPER — NEW NIXON (ATLANTIC CITY)

Griffith Picture Continues.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's pictorial spectacle with music, continues its summer run at the New Nixon, Atlantic City. This is the offering that opened a new era in the best theatres of New York, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where it has been running simultaneously for months. Despite great opposition, the play has never been suppressed, but has met approval everywhere. The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient points of the war between the States, the formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the tragedy of Lincoln's assassination. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown a story of Reconstruction Days. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. Joseph Carl Breil, who composed the score, has used the Wagnerian idea of motifs. The music is played by a large orchestra.

BULLETIN AUG. 7

"The Birth of a Nation" will continue on its successful run at the New Nixon, Atlantic City, where this remarkable spectacle and gripping drama has repeated its popularity in New York.

NORTH AMERICAN AUG. 8

ATLANTIC CITY

Nixon—The stirring scenes of civil war and reconstruction days as depicted in "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photoplay, are gripping thousands of spectators at the coast resort. The play is founded on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

RECORD AUG. 6

PRESS AUG. 8

BIG FILM SPECTACLE MAKES HISTORY REAL

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It is now in the full swing of a successful all-Summer run at the New Nixon, Atlantic City, where it is playing to the most phenomenal business of the season.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3000 horses. This great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1871—the period of the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," "The Birth of a Nation" has a grandly epical quality. The battle scenes are shown on a scale and with an imaginative quality that vividly resemble actual warfare.

The musical accompaniment adds to the thrill of the war scenes and intensifies the romance of the love episodes. The orchestra plays Southern and old-time airs for the softer scenes, while the big battle views are given to the clash and blare of martial music and the emotion-arousing classical compositions.

PRESS AUG. 9

RONALD CRISP NEW NIXON ATLANTIC CITY

Scene in "The Birth of a Nation" Nixon, Atlantic City (Motion Pictures)

INQUIRER AUG 8

LEDGER AUG. 8

UNION AUG. 7

Young Sentry a Hit in Film Play

David W. Griffith, in his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now in its second successful week at the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, has proved that quiet, refined comedy is a bigger laugh-maker than the old horse-play methods. One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is caused by the love-sick sentry gazing at Elsie Stoneman in the hospital scene. This particular bit is of the "sure-fire" order, for never does an audience fail to chuckle over the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young woman. Paul Le Blanc is the name of the young actor who made such an unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans creole and he played comedy roles with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt before he went to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is an exact reproduction of the uniform worn in 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines are almost doubles of this sentry, which shows the great care used by Mr. Griffith in his work.

E THEATRES

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

COMPLETE STORY OF KU KLUX KLAN

"Birth of Nation" Gives Entire History of the Famous Band of the South on "the Morrow of the Rebellion"

Probably the most thrilling scenes in David W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the New Nixon, are those of the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed "America for Americans."

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as "an institution of Chivalry, Humanity and Patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tennessee, in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the Grand Cyclops; his assistant was the Grand Magi; the marshall was the Grand Turk; the treasurer was the Grand Exchequer, and the guards were termed Lictors.

As the sorrows of the South under the baneful Reconstruction laws began to be unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popularized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because most of the original members were descendants of Scotch Clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scotch Highlanders was again used as a call to arms. A great gathering of the Klan in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1867, passed the following resolutions which were then kept secret:

"We recognize our relations to the United States Government, the supremacy of the Constitution."

The aims of the organization were set forth as follows:

"1. To protect the weak, the innocent and the defenceless from the indignities, wrongs and outrages of the lawless, the violent and the brutal; to relieve the injured and oppressed; to succour the suffering and unfortunate and especially the widows and orphans of the Confederate soldiers.

"2. To protect and defend the Constitution of the United States and all laws passed in conformity thereto and to protect the States from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3. To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of the land."

The Empire, as the Klan was known, was ruled by the Grand Wizard, General Nathan Bedford Forrest, the Confederate cavalry leader. Each state was known as a Realm and the ruler was the Grand Dragon. He was assisted by eight Hydras. A group of counties was called a Dominion, ruled by a Grand Titan and six Furies.

Each county was a Province under a Grand Giant and four Goblins. The unit of the organization was the Den and the members were known as Ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and situal were never written until after the Grand Wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

A similar order was started in Louisiana known as the Knights of the White Camelia.

PRESS AUG 9

GRIFFITH MAKES HIS OWN STARS

Augustus Thomas recently related the story of how he once went to the late Charles Frohman on behalf of a prominent star who had just closed his season with a profit of $100,000, but who was dissatisfied with his management and who wanted to go under the Frohman management. The great manager's reply was characteristic: "Your friend is a finished star. I want to make my own stars. I want some one I can help." That sounds very much like David W. Griffith, whose great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now at the New Nixon Theatre. Griffith has always believed in young people. He has had wonderful success in training those who have had neither stage or picture experience. There is no other director who employs so many young people. Lillian Gish, who plays the role of Elsie Stoneman, is not quite nineteen. Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper are also about the same age. Griffith is the master maker of film stars.

He is untiring in the search for a type when one is called for by the scenario. He will spend days coaching people of no experience, but he gets nature and not stage acting. Two years ago an awkward, timid, freckled girl appeared at the Biograph studios. Open-eyed with astonishment, she saw for the first time the making of a picture. Griffith saw her and at a flash realized her possibilities. The girl was Mae Marsh, often called the Maude Adams of the films. In a few months Griffith moulded her into one of the best actresses of the screen. As Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," she has won a triumph of which any star would well be proud.

"The Birth of a Nation"

That stupendous pictorial history of the Civil War and the period following it, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to draw enthusiastic crowds at the Nixon Theatre, in Atlantic City. This work reproduces in realistic detail the battles of the war, introducing Grant and Lee and other personages whoose careers are known to every schoolboy and girl; meetings of President Lincoln and his Cabinet, and other happenings of equal historical importance. Then, there are the stirring scenes in the South during the period of reconstruction; the Ku Klux Clan is shown at work, and the doings of the nefarious carpet-bagger exposed.

Thousands of men and horses were employed in the making of the great ensembled scenes for the drama. It is said to have cost $500,000 to produce it.

REVIEW AUG. 9

GRIFITH AN ANIMAL LOVER

All who have enjoyed the perfect art of the Griffith films have noted how often he uses domestic animals in his pictures. No one but a lover of animals would think of using them in such a delightful way. They figure prominently in some of the most charming scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the New Nixon Theatre.

When Elsie Stoneman is first seen at her Lancaster home she is playing with the old family tabby cat. Soon the scene shifts to the Piedmont home of the Camerons. The kindly master is reading his paper while a kitten and a puppy play contentedly at his feet. Nothing else could so delightfully show the character of the home-loving Southern gentleman of the old school. It is such touches of nature that help to make the greatness of this masterpiece.

Never in the history of the stage has there been any play which presented such faithful pictures of the Southland before war cast its dread shadow over all. Equally true to life are the scenes during the great Civil conflict and afterwards of the blighting Reconstruction days. In vivid contrast are the panoramic views of the great battles which settled the destiny of the American people.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in the fourth week of its phenomenally successful run in Atlantic City and the attendance is breaking all records at the New Nixon, which by the way is the coolest spot on the Boardwalk.

UNION AUG. 9

GRIFFITH STARS OF HIS OWN TUTELAGE

Players in "The Birth of a Nation" Are All Young and of the Producer's Own Making

Augustus Thomas recently related the story of how he once went to the late Charles Frohman on behalf of a prominent star who had just closed his season with a profit of $100,000, but who was dissatisfied with his management and who wanted to go under the Frohman management. The great manager's reply was characteristic: "Your friend is a finished star. I want to make my own stars. I want some one I can help." That sounds very much like David W. Griffith, whose great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now at the New Nixon Theatre. Griffith has always believed in young people. He has had wonderful success in training those who have had neither stage or picture experience. There is no other director who employs so many young people. Lillian Gish, who plays the role of Elsie Stoneman, is not quite nineteen. Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper are also about the same age. Griffith is the master maker of film stars.

He is untiring in the search for a type when one is called for by the scenario. He will spend days coaching people of no experience, but he gets nature and not stage acting. Two years ago an awkward, timid, freckled girl appeared at the Biograph studios. Open-eyed with astonishment, she saw for the first time the making of a picture. Griffith saw her and at a flash realized her possibilities. The girl was Mae Marsh, often called the Maude Adams of the films. In a few months Griffith moulded her into one of the best actresses of the screen. As Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," she has won a triumph of which any star would well be proud.

UNION AUG. 9

DAVID W. GRIFFITH, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" at New Nixon

LILLIAN GISH, IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

SUNDAY GAZETTE AUG 8

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," NOW PLAYING AT THE NEW NIXON THEATRE.

PEACE ALLEGORY—"The Birth of a Nation" at Nixon.

AN ERA OF NEW ART ARRIVES WITH THE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

GAZETTE AUG. 8

This Wonderful Spectacle, Now Playing at the New Nixon Afternoon and Evening, Overshadows in Its Greatness, All Dramas of the Older Stage Art.

David W. Griffith, foremost of directors, is conceded to have established a new art by his celebrated production, "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of its triumphant run at the New Nixon. As disclosed at the Liberty Theatre, New York, last March, and in Boston, Chicago and other big cities a little later, this realization of Civil War and Reconstruction days by means of motion picture, music and mechanical effects overshadowed in its greatness all of the dramas of the older stage art, and won the most extraordinary encomiums from the critics, the play was fiercely opposed by certain elements that did not like its true interpretations of American history but it was passed by all censor boards and civic authorities, and it has received the overwhelming endorsement of the 2,000,000 spectators that have witnessed it.

The battle scenes pictured in the Civil War part of "The Birth of a Nation," mark the supreme achievement of motion photography up to date. The intensely vivid skirmishes and hand-to-hand struggles are not only well planned but well acted. You actually see death in some faces as the men fall in close combat. But the most thrilling sights of all the battles conducted on a big scale in vast stretches of field and valley. The impression made upon the spectator is that of viewing gigantic military movements from some great mountain. The so-called war pictures sent over from Europe look tame in comparison.

(Continued on Page Four.)

NEW NIXON

Continued from Page One.

Other great historic scenes in the play include skillful facsimiles of Lincoln's call for troops; General Lee and General Grant at Appomattox; Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of Atlanta and President Lincoln's assassination in the crowded Ford's Theatre, Washington, April 14, 1865.

The second part of the spectacle is devoted to the Reconstruction days when the South uprose a second time and threw off the carpetbagger negro tyranny. The Ku Klux Klan are the protagonists of this part of the story. Their wild rides, rescues of harried whites, and their snatching of victory from the jaws of defeat are represented on a vast scale with thousands of men and horses and with the infinte spirit, dash and eclat for which Mr. Griffith's spectacular work is so remarkable.

Intertwined with the mighty epical progress of the story are two beautiful romances of the Blue and the Gray.

"The Birth of a Nation" took eight months to produce, cost half a million dollars, employed 18,000 actors, 800 shells in the artillery duels, night photography for the first time in some of the battle scenes, and in all respects of magnitude, skill and artistry far surpassed anything remotely like it that had ever previously been attempted. The wonder was capped by having the thousands of scenes accurately synchronized to a sort of "Grand Opera" musical score played by a symphony orchestra of nearly forty musicians. Experts have declared that this magnificent score forms an artistic achievement fully as great as the picture itself.

The managers of this attraction, the Epoch Producing Company, have seen to it that the production viewed here is in every respect identical with those of New York, Boston and Chicago.

REVIEW AUG. 9

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Truth and Indescretions About the Reconstruction Period

Well, I've gone and done it. I saved my dimes for two months, knowing it was coming, and when it came I marched bravely up to the box office and paid one dollar to see a movie. It required long consideration, because I do not like movies and seldom go to see them. But finally, curiosity, the spirit of courage and the spirit of recklessness possessed me last week at the same time and this combination brought me to a decision. I have seen "The Birth of a Nation."

A friend of mine who is something of an expert on this period of American history was there the same evening. He had studied the facts from contemporary documents and had written a book on the reconstruction period. I had heard such extravagant praise of this picture that naturally I was curious to hear the comment of a student of history when those films came before us depicting the dramatic incidents in the south when "the bottom rail was on the top."

"It is all true enough," he said, "although I doubt if so many "Kluckers" ever went scampering over the country in broad daylight. Old Thad Stevens was a theoretical philosopher, and while Lincoln wanted to bind up the nation's wounds, Stevens wished to rub salt in them."

And it certainly was rubbing it in hard where the proud beaten humiliated Southerner—as happened in so many cases—was subjected to the domination of his former slave. Dixon's novels are all cheapened by unnatural concentration and over-emphasis for the sake of stirring dramatic passion. "The Clansman," of which "The Birth of a Nation" is a film version, is especially open to this criticism. But when all is said, the fact remains, that when Stevens got control of Congress, he ground the South down under the black man's heel.

The love episodes of the story are in no way out of the common. The battle of the Crater at Petersburg, and the flight of the refugees from Atlanta are two of the most impressive spectacles that have ever been put on the films. The incident, too, of the assassination of Lincoln is something which no American should miss seeing. I don't think thedastardly horror of it can be brought home to any one's senses by the historian's descriptive words. It was done. Here one sees it in the doing.

The latter part of the exhibition, the riot of the blacks, and the restoration of white supremacy by the Klu Klux Klan, carried less conviction, for it never happened on such a stupendous scale. Dixon was straining hard to drive his point home. Nevertheless, the fact is a vital one, it is an appeal to the white men of the North from the white men of the South to stand together for Anglo-Saxon domination and to draw a dead line of social cleavage between the Caucasian and the African. One could feel the affirmative response from the audience throbbing passionately in harmony with the hoof beats of the rescuing Clansmen's horses.

I felt that there was passionate hate in that response of the audience and it brought the main question to an issue in my mind, whether it was wise at this late day, to stir up again that virulent storm of the past generation. I didn't have to answer the question. The films makers themselves answered it. The epilogue, so to speak, those detached pictures showing the industrial progress of the industrious negroes, suggested that the film makers had an uneasy conscience and that they were trying to atone for the preceding indiscretion.

"The Birth of a Nation" has undoubtedly an important educational value. But he who goes to see the pictures should safeguard himself against the surge of indammible hate by the full realization that though the past, under the rule of the vicious carpetbaggers and the ignorant ex-slave was terrible, things are different now.

Thousands of worthy negroes have demonstrated their right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The old regime denied them that, and the old regime has gone forever.

PEGGY PRATTLE.

UNION AUG. 10

A CLEAR, FIRM PICTURE AT NIXON

Audiences Sit for Nearly Three Hours With Eyes Riveted on Screen and Experience no Strain is Boast

Perfect projection has been the aim and accomplishment of the management of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre. The result is that there is no strain on the eyes of the spectators. Although the entertainment runs for two and three-quarters hours, it is a common comment of those who have seen this great spectacle that it hardly seemed an hour.

One of the most irritating features to the eyes is the exposure to the direct reflected rays, a condition which is found in so many picture houses where the projecting machines are placed in the gallery of the theatre. Dr. J. Norman Risley, of Philadelphia, has been waging vigorous warfare against this method of projection and he warmly urges projection to the screen on a horizontal plane. This perfect method, which he urges, is that used at the New Nixon. The booth is situated on the orchestra floor and there is absolutely no eye strain from screen reflection. No expense has been spared to give to "The Birth of a Nation" the most perfect presentation that modern science can accomplish. The greatest optical experts in the country were consulted so that every piece of mechanism should be the best that the ingenuity of man has devised.

Besides perfect projection, "The Birth of a Nation" is shown with every surrounding that can add to the pleasure and enjoyment of the spectator. A symphony orchestra of forty picked musicians plays a score of Wagnerian proportions which is perfectly synchronized to the scenes of this great spectacle.

The management particularly wishes to emphasize the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be seen in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

PRESS AUG. 10

DAVID W. GRIFFITH, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" at New Nixon

PRESS AUG. 10

PERFECT PROJECTION AT NIXON THEATRE

No Eye Strain is Felt After Witnessing "Birth of a Nation"

Perfect projection has been the aim and accomplishment of the management of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre. The result is that there is no strain on the eyes of the spectators. Although the entertainment runs for two and three-quarters hours, it is a common comment of those who have seen this great spectacle that it hardly seemed an hour.

One of the most irritating features to the eyes is the exposure to the direct reflected rays, a condition which is found in so many picture houses where the projecting machines are placed in the gallery of the theatre. Dr. J. Norman Risley, of Philadelphia, has been waging vigorous warfare against this method of projection and he warmly urges projection to the screen on a horizontal plane. This perfect method, which he urges, is that used at the New Nixon. The booth is situated on the orchestra floor and there is absolutely no eye strain from screen reflection. No expense has been spared to give to "The Birth of a Nation" the most perfect presentation that modern science can accomplish. The greatest optical experts in the country were consulted so that every piece of mechanism should be the best that the ingenuity of man has devised.

Besides perfect projection, "The Birth of a Nation" is shown with every surrounding that can add to the pleasure and enjoyment of the spectator. A symphony orchestra of forty picked musicians plays a score of Wagnerian proportions which is perfectly synchronized to the scenes of this great spectacle.

The management particularly wishes to emphasize the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be seen in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

REVIEW AUG. 10

BIRTH OF NATION AN INSTITUTION

Great Spectacle at New Nixon Surpasses Anything on Stage

"The Birth of a Nation," now on its fourth record-smashing week at the new Nixon, is as popular with the summer visitors as the Boardwalk and ocean. The theatre is the coolest indoor spot in Atlantic City and it is always comfortable even on the hottest days.

David W. Griffith's masterpiece has become much more than merely a popular attraction. It is not a firmly established entertainment that is seen over and over again by the most critical playgoers. In fact, with its five thousand swift changing scenes more than a view isrequired to grasp all of its interesting phases. At each seeing new beauties are revealed.

In its infinite variety "The Birth of a Nation" far surpasses anything that has ever been shown on a stage. In mere pictorial beauty it excells the masterpieces in the art galleries of Paris, Rome and Munich, for it is the beauty of nature itself.

Years ago great battles were shown in cycloramas but that was most unsatisfactory for there was no life, no action. It was merely a painting on a grand scale. Now one can sit in a comfortable seat in a theatre and see the Battle of Petersburg visualized in so life like a manner that it is as if one were looking at the real battle from an observation tower. Homer and Virgil have kept alive for centuries the "glory that was of Greece and the grandeur that was of Rome." With his new and wonderful art Griffith has perpetuated for all time the most stirring story of American history.

There are two performances daily, including Sunday at the New Nixon.

ELSIE STONEMAN

In "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre

REVIEW AUG. 11

CRITICS LAUD BIRTH OF NATION

Spectacle Highly Praised By Boston Newspapers

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's thrilling historical spectacle, has for twenty weeks duplicated in Boston its triumphs in New York and Chicago. This is all the more remarkable because many doubted if Boston would accept so radical a presentment of the Southern angle of the history of the Reconstruction period. The result has been that the enthusiasm evoked by the picture is as great in Boston as in any section of the country. It is difficult to select from the universal chorus of newspaper praise, but a few extracts will show the trend.

The Boston Herald: "A triumph upon which Mr. Griffith and his associates may well plume themselves."

The Boston Transcript. "The surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, move upon the screen as they never moved in print."

The Boston Globe: "So wonderful and so beautiful and so full of life that it robs one of the power of criticism."

The Boston American: "A wonderful historical drama and an enthralling human story."

The Boston Post: "'The Birth of a Nation' is most remarkable."

The Boston Journal: "The pictures make up the most extraordinary historical clorama so far brought forward."

The Boston Record: "A wonderful accomplishment; compels admiration for its authors."

PHILA. TELEGRAPH AUG. 10

Griffith Picture at New Nixon.

Capacity houses continue to be the rule at the New Nixon, Atlantic City, where David W. Griffith's pictorial spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is breaking all records for a summer run. Although meeting with determined opposition from those who fear the excitement of race prejudice, this presentation is running with unparalleled success in the best theatres of New York, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco and Los Angeles. It tells in the highest class of moving photography the story of the Civil War and the dark days which followed it in the reconstruction period in the South—the days of the "carpet-baggers"—and is based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." A large and excellent orchestra adds much to the pleasure of the spectacle.

REVIEW AUG. 11

ELSIE STONEMAN AND THE SENTRY, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THEATER.

PRESS AUG. 11

THE BIRTH OF A NATION A MESSAGE OF PEACE

Film Spectacle Shows the Deterrent Effect of War on the Nation . At Nixon

D. W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its fourth successful week at the New Nixon is the most popular entertainment on the Boardwalk. A member of the United States Senate recently said: "Any one contemplating war should see this picture. I sincerely believe it will do more to deter people from engaging in war than anything written or spoken on the subject in years.'"

Never before has war in all its horror been pictorialized so vividly. Sherman's devasting march to the sea, the capture and burning of Atlanta and the battle of Petersburg, are shown with the vividness of reality.

The whole period of the Civil War is luminously recreated. Then follows the baneful time of reconstruction when the ex-slaves, carpetbaggers and scalawags combined to bring sorrow and suffering to the oSuthland.

Running through this wondrous historical spectacle are tow romantic love stories of surpassing heart interest. In the cast are Henry B. Walthall, as the gallant little Colonel, Ben Cameron; Mae Marsh and Miria Coper as his sister; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman and Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as her brothers; Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Hary Alden, George Seigmann and many others.

One of the most delightful features of the entertainment is the symphony orchestra of forty .

PRESS AUG. 11

A NEW PROTEST AGAINST PICTURE

"Birth of Nation" is Condemned at Mass Meeting. Appeal to Mayor

At a mass meeting held at the Jethro-Presbyterian Church on August 6, 1915, to protest against the continuation of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS, there is being shown at the New Nixon Theatre, in this city, a play entitled "The Birth of a Nation,"

WHEREAS, the said play shows a colored woman and a white man living an immoral life together:

WHEREAS, the picture represents the best women of the colored race leading a life of drunkeness and dissipation:

WHEREAS, the play shows a colored man chasing a little white girl for immoral purposes:

WHEREAS, the same little white girl is represented in the picture as dying to save the honor and virtue of the Southern white women:

WHEREAS, Silas Lynch, the negro Lieutenant-Governor is represented in the picture as chasing a white womar around in a room trying to force her to marry him:

WHEREAS, the play shows colored citizens preventing white citizens from voting:

WHEREAS, the play shows that Murderous band of outlaws, known as the Ku Klux Klan, is justified in killing innocent negroes:

WHEREAS, the manifest object in showing Hampton Institute in connection with the play is to divert the mind of the colored people from the racial hatred which the play engenders, and

WHEREAS, in our serious judgment the play represents an unjustifiable and indefensible stigma and reflection upon the negro race. Therefore, be it

RESOLVED, that we the citizens of Atlantic City protest against the continuation of the scenes of "The Birth of a Nation, as relate to the negro race, and be it also

RESOLVED, that the so-called race leaders of Atlantic City who had neglected their duty are hereby condemned for their sotish and cowardly actions in the defense of the colored race, and therefore, be it

RESOLVED, that their leadership is discredited and that they are repudiated before the civilized world: and be it further

RESOLVED, that President Frizell of Hampton Institute and all others who consented and recommended that pictuers of Hampton Institute be shown in connection with "The Birth of a Nation" are censored and condemned as traitors of the negro race, and be it also

RESOLVED, that Rev. Doctors Clark, Gregory, Langsford and Martin are highly commended for the brave, noble and outspoken manner in which they denounced "The Birth of a Nation," and be it further

RESOLVED, that we highly commend the Honorable William Riddle, Mayor of this city, for his noble stand on the question: and be it finally

RESOLVED, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mayor Riddle, to the City Commissioners, to the city Press, and to the following out of town newspapers: The Crisis, The New York News, The New York Age, The Amsterdam News, The Boston Guardian, The Colorado Statesman, The Philadelphia Press, The Washington Star, The Washington Eagle The Charlotte Observer and The Atlanta Constitution.

Respectfully yours,
James E. Johnson,
Chas. A. V. Girod,
E. C. Thompson
B. A. Webb,
Herman S. Whaley
F. R. Wimberley
(Signed) J. M. Jackson
Committee on Resolutions

A committee of seventeen, accompanied with fifty or more citizens, will appear before the Mayor and present a copy of these Resolutions to him.

UNION AUG. 11

David W. Griffith, Producer of "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" at the New Nixon Theatre

GRIFFITH PICTURE A STAY OF PEACE

A Senate Member Said: "Anyone Contemplating War Should See This Picture"—Showing at the New Nixon

D. W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its fourth successful week at the New Nixon is the most popular entertainment on the Boardwalk. A member of the United States Senate recently said: "Any one contemplating war should see this picture. I sincerely believe it will do more to deter people from engaging in war than anything written or spoken on the subject in years.'"

Never before has war in all its horror been pictorialized so vividly. Sherman's devasting march to the sea, the capture and burning of Atlanta and the battle of Petersburg, are shown with the vividness of reality.

The whole period of the Civil War is luminously recreated. Then follows the baneful time of reconstruction when the ex-slaves, carpetbaggers and scalawags combined to bring sorrow and suffering to the oSuthland.

Running through this wondrous historical spectacle are tow romantic love stories of surpassing heart interest. In the cast are Henry B. Walthall, as the gallant little Colonel, Ben Cameron; Mae Marsh and Miria Coper as his sister; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman and Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as her brothers; Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Hary Alden, George Seigmann and many others.

One of the most delightful features of the entertainment is the symphony orchestra of forty .

REVIEW AUG. 12

BIRTH OF NATION IS FASCINATING

Spectacle Has Combined Qualities Of Most Brilliant Masterpieces

"The Birth of a Nation" now at the New Nixon, is a bright beacon light which illuminates the most important period of American history. It is as fascinating as a Dumas romance; as impressive as Dante's Divine Comedy; as comprehensive as Balzac's Human Comedy and as soul-searching as the tragedies of Shakespeare. It is a brilliant, faithful and vivid historical romance which tells the story of the war between the States and of the reconstruction era of the South.

This amazing spectacle in 12,000 feet of superb motion pictures was made under the direction of David W. Griffith. Eight months were consumed in the making, 18,000 people and 3,000 horses were used in the 5,000 scenes and $500,000 were explained. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "Clansman," the historical episodes are interspersed with a dual love story of absorbing interest.

This mighty masterpiece is now filling the following theatres to their utmost capacity: The Liberty and Brighton, in New York; the Tremont in Boston; the Illinois in Chicago and the Davidson in Milwaukee.

"The Birth of a Nation" will always be remembered as the first to merit and win success in the best theatres at a scale of prices the same as had been obtained by the most costly dramatic productions.

With the wane of the season the summer run of "The Birth of a Nation" will soon be reaching its close. It is therefore well to see this great production at the earliest possible time as there will be no other engagement played in Atlantic City.

UNION AUG. 11

A NEW PROTEST AGAINST PICTURE

"Birth of Nation" is Condemned at Mass Meeting. Appeal to Mayor

At a mass meeting held at the Jethro-Presbyterian Church on August 6, 1915, to protest against the continuation of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS, there is being shown at the New Nixon Theatre, in this city, a play entitled "The Birth of a Nation."

WHEREAS, the said play shows a colored woman and a white man living an immoral life together:

WHEREAS, the picture represents the best women of the colored race leading a life of drunkeness and dissipation:

WHEREAS, the play shows a colored man chasing a little white girl for immoral purposes:

WHEREAS, the same little white girl is represented in the picture as dying to save the honor and virtue of the Southern white women:

WHEREAS, Silas Lynch, the negro Lieutenant-Governor is represented in the picture as chasing a white woman around in a room trying to force her to marry him:

WHEREAS, the play shows colored citizens preventing white citizens from voting:

WHEREAS, the play shows that Murderous band of outlaws, known as the Ku Klux Klan, is justified in killing innocent negroes:

WHEREAS, the manifest object in showing Hampton Institute in connection with the play is to divert the mind of the colored people from the racial hatred which the play engenders, and

WHEREAS, in our serious judgment the play represents an unjustifiable and indefensible stigma and reflection upon the negro race. Therefore, be it

RESOLVED, that we the citizens of Atlantic City protest against the continuation of the scenes of "The Birth of a Nation, as relate to the negro race, and be it also

RESOLVED, that the so-called race leaders of Atlantic City who had neglected their duty are hereby condemned for their sotish and cowardly actions in the defense of the colored race, and therefore, be it

RESOLVED, that their leadership is discredited and that they are repudiated before the civilized world: and be it further

RESOLVED, that President Frizell of Hampton Institute and all others who consented and recommended that pictuers of Hampton Institute be shown in connection with "The Birth of a Nation" are censored and condemned as traitors of the negro race, and be it also

RESOLVED, that Rev. Doctors Clark, Gregory, Langsford and Martin are highly commended for the brave, noble and outspoken manner in which they denounced "The Birth of a Nation," and be it further

RESOLVED, that we highly commend the Honorable William Riddle, Mayor of this city, for his noble stand on the question: and be it finally

RESOLVED, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mayor Riddle, to the City Commissioners, to the city Press, and to the following out of town newspapers: The Crisis, The New York News, The New York Age, The Amsterdam News, The Boston Guardian, The Colorado Statesman, The Philadelphia Press, The Washington Star, The Washington Eagle The Charlotte Observer and The Atlanta Constitution.

Respectfully yours,
James E. Johnson,
Chas. A. V. Girod,
E. C. Thompson
B. A. Webb,
Herman S. Whaley
F. R. Wimberley
(Signed) J. M. Jackson
Committee on Resolutions.

A committee of seventeen, accompanied with fifty or more citizens, will appear before the Mayor and present a copy of these Resolutions to him.

PRESS AUG. 12

GRIFFITH SPECTACLE BIRTH OF A NEW ART

Big Film Has Upset Precedent In Photoplays—At the Nixon Theatre Now

Homer, with the spoken word; Herodotus, with the written word, and Phidias, with chiseled marble, told the story of Grecian glory; Michael Angelo and Titian reflected the grandeur of Rome with palette and brush and Richard Wagner, with his music dramas, breathed the flame of life into the ancient sagas of Germanic lore. With his new pictorial-musical art, David W. Griffith has illumined and immortalized the story of "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, which is now to be seen at the New Nixon Theatre, has revolutionized the theatre. In all of the large centers of population "The Birth of a Nation" is pleasing vast multitudes of observers. During the first six months of its presentation it has been seen by nearly two million people.

It would be difficult to determine what are the most pleasing points of this supreme artistic achievement. The infinite variety of the scenes is perhaps one of its chiefest charms. There are panoramic battle scenes of grandeur, thrilling night rides of the Ku Klux Klan, historical episodes like the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of President Lincoln, the home-life of the South during and after the Civil War and a double love story of surpassing interest.

The magnitude of the spectacle is almost beyond belief. Such theatrical productions as "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" seem infinetesimal in comparison. Griffith's new art has made possible the seemingly impossible. His combination of picture and music is irresistable.

PRESS AUG. 12

MAE MARSH in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Now Nixon.

UNION AUG. 12

REVIEW AUG 14

BIRTH OF A NATION A NEW PRODUCTION

Homer, with the spoken word; Herodotus, with the written word, and Phidias, with chiseled marble, told the story of Grecian glory; Michael Angelo and Titian reflected the grandeur of Rome with palette and brush and Richard Wagner, with his music dramas, breathed the flame of life into the ancient sagas of Germanic lore. With his new pictorial-musical art, David W. Griffith has illumined and immortalized the story of "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, which is now to be seen at the New Nixon Theatre, has revolutionized the theatre. In all of the large centers of population "The Birth of a Nation" is pleasing vast multitudes of observers. During the first six months of its presentation it has been seen by nearly two million people.

It would be difficult to determine what are the most pleasing points of this supreme artistic achievement. The infinite variety of the scenes is perhaps one of its chiefest charms. There are panoramic battle scenes of grandeur, thrilling night rides of the Ku Klux Klan, historical episodes like the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of President Lincoln, the home-life of the South during and after the Civil War and a double love story of surpassing interest.

The magnitude of the spectacle is almost beyond belief. Such theatrical productions as "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" seem infinetesimal in comparison. Griffith's new art has made possible the seemingly impossible. His combination of picture and music is irresistable.

GRIFFITH MAKES HIS OWN STARS

Augustus Thomas recently related the story of how he once went to the late Charles Frohman on behalf of a prominent star who had just closed his season with a profit of $100,000 but was dissatisfied with his management and who wanted to go under the Frohman management. The great manager's reply was characteristic: "Your friend is a finished star. I want to make my own stars. I want some one I can help." That sounds very much like David E. Griffith, whose great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" is now at the New Nixon. Griffith has always believed in young people. He has had wonderful success in training those who have had neither stage or picture experience There is no other director who employs so many young people. Lilian Gish, who plays the role of Elsie Stoneman, is not quite nineteen. Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper are also about the same age. Griffith is the master maker of film artists.

He is unwiring in the search for a type when one is called for by the scenario. He will spend days coaching people of no experience but he gets nature and not stage acting. Two years ago an awkward, timid, freckled girl appeared at the Biograph studios. Open-eyed with astonishment she saw for the first time the making of a picture. Griffith saw her and at a flash realized her possibilities. The girl was Mae Marsh often called the Maude Adams of the films. In a few months Griffith moulded her into one of the best actresses of the screen. As Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation" she has won a triumph of which any star should well be proud.

UNION AUG 12

MAE MARSH in "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION APPEALS TO PATRIOTS

PRESS AUG. 13

Big Film Play Stirring In Every Foot of Its Entire Length—At Nixon

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in David W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," a thrilling association with the issues of today. The great crisis of 1861-'71 was pictured in the play have their lesson for Americans of the present. The North and South in intersection struggle; the strategy of the Petersburg campaign and of Sherman's march to the sea; Lee's surrender to Grant and the aftermath of war in the reconstruction period—all these form a series of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interests. Out of that terrible conflict a new nation, united by spiritual as well as geographical ties, was born. The fire of American patriotism never burned brighter than it burns today, and the play which shows the evolution from the past to the present has found a warm welcome at the New Nixon theatre.

Before the production of "The Birth of a Nation" such dull times had fallen upon the theatre that long lines or "queues" of buyers have been noticeably absent. It took the Griffith production of pictures and music to bring back the big advance sale days. Now New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop and Boston's Tremont street looks like old times again when the box office forces doubled and the lines of patrons stretching to the curb and even to the next street. The same phenomenon has been repeated in every city visited. It means of course, that the high-class theatre is not moribund. It only needed the touch of Griffiths master wizardry to again infuse it with life.

PICTURE PROTEST TO COMMISSION

A small army of colored residents crowded the Commission Chamber yesterday to voice their protests against the continuance of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," now showing at a Boardwalk Theatre. Following the impassioned speeches of several ministers, Mayor Riddle introduced a resolution reading. "Because the picture causes hatred between the races, and because of its evil having been forbidden in many other cities, the Director of Public Safety is hereby requested to cause the distontinuances of this picture, "The Birth of a Nation."

Director Bartlett did not appreciate being made the "butt" of the resolution and wanted to visit the theatre, take in the picture and report back. Mr. Bacharach then moved that the Director of Safety be given full power to act and this was passed. "I would like to be enlightened on the subject." Mr. Bartlett stated. 'I h'ave heard it was a fine picture and conducive to the improvement of the colored race. I would also like to know the legal aspect with reference to my power of stopping the presentation of the picture."

REVIEW AUG, 13

CLEVER COMEDY IN SPECTACLE

Unsually Mirth Provoking Scenes in "Birth of a Nation"

David W. Griffith in a great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" whic' is now in its fourth successful week at the New Nixon Theatre, has proved that quiet, refined comedy is a bigger laugh-maker than the old horse-play methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is caused by the live-sick sentry gazing at Elsie Stoneman in the hospital scene. This particular bit is of the "sure-fire" order for never does an audience fail to chuckle over the rapt devotion of thfe sentinel and the haughty expression of the young woman.

Paul Le Blanc is the name of the young acter who made such an unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole and he played comedy roles with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt before he went to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is an exact reproduction of the uniform worn in 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines are almost doubles of this sentry which shows the great care used by Mr. Griffith in his work. Miss Lillian Gish, who plays the role of Elsie Stoneman, wears several gowns that were actually worn by members of her family during the Civil War and Reconstruction days.

Another very clever comedy scene is furnished by Robert Harron and Maxfield Stanley as the young Stoneman and Cameron sons. The youthful Northerner wears a pickle-dish hat that much amuses Duke Cameron and the comedy of the scene is accentuated by the or-[illegible] plays "Where Did You Get That Hat!"

There are two performances every day at 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

PRESS AUG 14

SYMPHONIC MUSIC AT THE NIXON

Large Orchestra Plays Incidental Music for "Birth of a Nation"

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is duplicating at the New Nixon Theatre its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Partly from the nature of the new art and partly from the opposition aroused, this work has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of recent years, and the extraordinary demand for seats indicates the size of the eager throngs which are coming to the New Nixon.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the Civil War; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Serman's march to the sea and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh radical policy to the South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger-negro regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendship between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where Nature painted the backgrounds. The notable indoor scenes, like that of Ford's Theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox and the meeting of the South Carolina legislature of 1870 are exact facsimiles of the originals. It is the first time in art-production that American history has been presented in living pictures on so stupendous a scale. To do this many times the amount of time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the popular Alabama actor, whose family is historically connected with the story, as the Clansman; Lillian Gish, as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis, as Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp, as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann, as the mulatto Lieutenant-Governor of South Carolina; Walter Long, as the renegade negro, Gus; Raoul Falah, as John Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden, as the octoroon housekeeper, Lydia; William De Vaull and William Freeman, as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron, as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell, as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron and many others.

REVIEW AUG. 14

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES P

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

FOURTH BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Matinee Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

700 Seats at $1

500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer.

Important!

"The Birth of a Nation will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

"BIRTH OF NATION" IS BANNED

Director Bartlett Hearkens To Protests Of Colored Citizens

On the heels of the protest of a large delegation of the colored race in this city to the City Commission against "The Birth of a Nation" on Thursday and indications that disorder might be precipitated if the photo play were continued longer at the New Nixon, Director of Public Safety Bartlett last night notified the management of the New Nixon theatre to withdraw the production after Monday next.

It has been running here for four or five weeks and has created strong feelings of resentment among the colored population in this city.

This feeling came to a head on Thursday afternoon when about 200 colored men and women appeared before the City Commission and told the "rulers" the play was an insult and a false travesty of their race and was certain to provoke race hostility. They urged the Commissioners to prohibit the further production of the much talked of moving picture drama of past times. Mayor Riddle thereupon moved a resolution requesting Director of Public Safety W. H. Bartlett to order its discontinuance.

Director Bartlett said he had not seen the show and asked that the matter be referred to him with power to act. Finally the Mayor withdrew his resolution and on Commissioner Bacharach's motion the matter was left with Mr. Bartlett.

Yesterday Director Bartlett attended a performance of the show himself. He decided, in view of the muttering of the storm brewing among the colored people, that the play was not a safe one to be continued.

PRESS AUG. 14

BARTLETT TO STOP "BIRTH OF NATION"

Director of Public Safety Served Notice on New Nixon Last Night, Effective After Monday

If an order issued yesterday by Director of Public Safety William H. Bartlett prevails, the photo-drama "Birth of a Nation," which is on its fourth week at the New Nixon Theatre and still drawing large patronage, will not be shown in Atlantic City after next Monday night.

Pursuant to a protest received by the City Commissioners at their meeting on Thursday, holding that the photoplay incited to race hatred, Director of Public Safety Bartlett last night served notice on Manager Harry Brown of the New Nixon as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"You are hereby notified that on and after Monday, August 16, you must be prohibited from exhibiting the picture entitled "Birth of a Nation."

When 'phoned by The Press last night, Manager Brown, who had just come frim a conference with Samuel F. Nixon, the theatrical magnate, stated that he would prefer to say nothing about the matter for the pres en. He admitted tha he had received the preemptory notice from the Director of Public Safety. Colored citizens have been making a demonstration against the showing of the picture for some time. It is regarded as the most remarkable moving picture in the world, but the colored citizens believe it engenders race hatred.

E. POST 17

PHILA. BULLETIN AUG. 14

AT NIXON THEATRE

Perfect projection has been the aim and accomplishment of the management of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre. The result is that there is no strain on the eyes of the spectators. Although the entertainment runs for two and three-quarters hours, it is a common comment of those who have seen this great spectacle that it seemed an hour.

Besides perfect projection, "The Birth of a Nation" is shown with every surrounding that can add to the pleasure and enjoyment of the spectator. A symphony orchestra of forty picked musicians plays a score of Wagnerian proportions, which is perfectly synchronized to the scenes of this great spectacle.

The management particularly wishes to emphasize the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be seen in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

Half a century is scarcely long enough to permit the rancors of Ku Kluxism to be forgotten. There are some incidents in the history of the South that, while interesting and legitimate for study in a text book or serious chronicle, are hardly the stuff to dish up as entertainment before mixed audiences. Anything which breeds race hatreds or revives the memories of them ought to be eliminated from the popular theatre.

LEDGER AUG. 14

NEGRO PROTEST STOPS FILM PLAY

Atlantic City Director of Public Safety Suppresses "Birth of Nation"

THREATS OF VIOLENCE LEAD HIM TO ACT

Detectives Report That Racial Trouble Was Likely to Result

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

ATLANTIC CITY, Apg. 13.—Fearing race violence on the Boardwalk, William H. Bartlett, Director of Public Safety, late today issued an order forbidding the presentation of the "Birth of a Nation," a film drama, in Atlantic City.

The production, which has been shown for several weeks at the New Nixon, a Boardwalk playhouse owned and conducted by Philadelphians, deals ith reconstruction times in the South and the Ku Klux Klan.

Acting under instructions from the City Commission, which yesterday heard burning protests from more than 100 negro churchmen, who declared the play incited race hatred, Director Bartlett sent to the Nixon Theatre management tonight notice of his intention to suppress the film drama after Sunday night next by police measures if necessary.

Director Bartlett's summary action, regardless of an informal opinion from City Solicitor Schimpf that he is without power to act, followed a conference with Chief of Police Woodruff. Woodruff early today sent plain-clothes men through the black belt of thec ity, where nearly 10,000 negroes have their homes, to sound sentiment and ascertain whether it is so bitter as colored pastors and laymen represented to the City Commission yesterday.

Detectives Hear Threats

Woodruff's men reported that they found sections of the back town in a ferment, with men, women and children congregating in the streets to talk about the film and the attack upon their race they claim it carries. Threats of violence were made freely in the saloons patronized by colored men. The detectives heard proposals to attack the Boardwalk playhouse.

Woodruff's reports reached Director Bartlett at 6 o'clock this evening and his order of suppression was drawn and signed 20 minutes later.

Earlier in the day Bartlett intimated the belief that agitators were seeking to make political capital out of the matter, and endeavoring to align the colored vote against him unless he took action without precedent in the city.

Reports of Woodruff's men changed the whole phase of the situation for him. "This matter is evidently serious," the Director said. "Whether police action is justified under a strict interpretation of law or not, we are going to do our utmost to suppress this cause of contention. We cannot afford to have violence in Atlantic City if it is possible to avert it, and that is the attitude we shall pursue."

There is much division of opinion among visitors here as to the film. Many believe that it teaches a lesson and should be shown as widely as possible. Other believe that as strongly that there is no reason for recalling the fearful conditions following the Rebellion in the Southland an darousing race prejudice.

One of the strongest scenes in the film drama shows a negro vagabond pursuing a small white girl through the woods. She finally leaps from a cliff and is killed. Then the Klu Klux Klan gathers by night and carry its death and destruction among the negroes.

Hotel men here indorsed Bartlett's action tonight. Nothing could be worse, many of them said, than to have any serious racial disturbance in Atlantic City with the midcummer season near its height. There are probably 20,000 Southern people in the city. Most of them have seen the Ku Klux pictures and declare them an educational achievement.

The fact that conditions in the negro sections should be sufficiently serious to call for the suppression order caused no little uneasiness. It wa declared tonight that threats to start a stampede in the Boardwalk theatre were made in front of City Hall yesterday while the protest committee was demanding that the City Commission take action to avert possible violence.

EVE. LEDGER AUG. 14

NIXON TO MAKE FIGHT FOR SUPPRESSED FILM

Charges Shore Officials With Truckling to Negro Vote. Goes to Court

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 14.—"Figh," is the answer of Samuel F. Nixon, of Philadelphia, lessee of the New Nixon Theatre on the Boardwalk, to the order issued last night by William H. Bartlett, Director of Public Safety, forbidding the presentation of the "Birth of a Nation" at the Boardwalk playhouse.

"We shall apply for an injunction in Camden," declared Nixon, proprietor of two theatres here. "We are not going to be made the victims of a political dodge to corral the colored vote in Atlantic City. Talk of violence in connection with a film drama which has been seen by thousands in all of the large cities of the counary is ridiculous."

Nixon had assembled a distinguished array of lawyers to give the City Commissioners battle. His fighting force includes former Judge Gordon, of Philadelphia; former Attorney General McCarter, of Newark; former Judge Robert Ingersoll, and former Assemblyman Emerson Richards, of Atlantic City. The application for an injunction will be made to Vice Chancellor Edmund Leaming. It is hoped a temporary injunction will be waiting at the box office of the Boardwalk playhouse when police raiders appear there on Monday.

"Talk about suppressing this production is absurd," Nixon, in a temper, said this morning. "Why, it has not only ben passed by J. Louis Breitinger, of the Pennsylvania Board of Censorship, but school authorities have been advised to make arrangements for as many children as possible to see it. Claims that it incites race hatred, and for that reason should be suppressed, are ridiculous. It deals with nothing but historical facts."

Director Bartlett's order for the suppression of the film was issued last night after detectives had reported to him that the Negro section of the city, where more than 12,000 Negroes live, was in a ferment. Threats have ben made to stampede the theatre, to smash its windows and commit violence in other forms. Pastors of Negro congregations have declared they will not be responsible for what occurs if the city fails to act.

"Politics! Politics!" Nixon exclaimed today.

Mayor Riddle and the City Commissioners are playing for the colored vote. We are not going to let them frighten us."

LEDGER ED. AUG. 14.

No Perversions of History

THE decision of the City Commissioners of Atlantic City to suppress the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," looks like common sense. However costly the production may have been, now being multiplied endlessly over the country, it is well known that it was planned by and based on the works of a man whose partisan and passionate descriptions of American life belong to the perversions of history rather than to that fair and candid treatment of a controversial period that all sections should strive for.

To use for partisan purposes the tremendously cumulative agency of the photoplay, which has its educational value heightened to an unparalleled degree by its all-pervading character and the peculiar vividness of its visual appeal, is a great wrong. The moving picture has all the world for its field; its recreative ministrations are ever welcome. It is, in its best estate, the greatest invention for the highest form of entertainment ever devised. Those who live by it and profit by it, as well as those who merely enjoy it, and the authorities who have to pass on it, have certain inescapable responsibilities. And these should be met with a spirit of fair play and accommodation on both sides. But this does not mean easy-going lenity as to plays and scenes which sin against public morals or menace public order.

So far as the suppressed play goes, it is admittedly an attempt to reverse certain facts of history, to exalt race hatred into a kind of social religion, to cover up with a picturesque glamour some of the most abhorrent phases of the resumption of white rule in the South, wherein one great wrong did not justify others; and, in general, to teach history from an entirely one-sided sectional and offensive point of view. Those who have the right love of their common country are opposed to all efforts to present an essentially false view of history with all the fervor of a zealot, whose emotions, rather than events, determine his pictures of the united nation we love and cherish.

UNION AUG. 14.

SYMPHONIC MUSIC AT NEW NIXON

Large Orchestra Plays Incidental Music for "Birth of a Nation"

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is duplicating at the New Nixon Theatre its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Partly from the nature of the new art and partly from the opposition aroused, this work has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of recent years, and the extraordinary demand for seats indicates the size of the eager throngs which are coming to the New Nixon.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the Civil War; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Serman's march to the sea and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh radical policy to the South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger-negro regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendship between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where Nature painted the backgrounds. The notable indoor scenes, like that of Ford's Theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox and the meeting of the South Carolina legislature of 1870 are exact facsimiles of the originals. It is the first time in art-production that American history has been presented in living pictures on so stupendous a scale. To do this many times the amount of time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the popular Alabama actor, whose family is historically connected with the story, as the Clansman; Lillian Gish, as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis, as Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp, as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann, as the mulatto Lieutenant-Governor of South Carolina; Walter Long, as the renegade negro, Gus; Raoul Falah, as John Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden, as the octoroon housekeeper, Lydia; William De Vaull and William Freeman, as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron, as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell, as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron and many others.

GAZETTE AUG. 15

PHOTO-PLAY AT NEW NIXON TO BE CONTINUED

Injunction Secured Restraining Director Bartlett From Enforcing His Order to Discontinue the Great Photo-Play, "The Birth of a Nation."

Following the receipt of a peremptory order from Director of Public Safety William H. Bartlett, that the photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," must be discontinued after next Monday at the New Nixon Theatre, because of a mighty protest lodged by negroes of the resort before the City Commissioners, counsel for Samuel F. Nixon, owner of the playhouse, hurried to Trenton, yesterday morning and applied to Chancellor Walker for an injunction restraining the police from enforcing the closing order.

Chancellor Walker granted the injunction prohibiting the City of Atlantic City, the Director of Public Safety and the Chief of Police from interfering in any way with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre.

This action of the Chancellor puts a stop to the efforts made to close the New Nixon Theatre, and renders null and void the order sent by Director of Public Safety William H. Bartlett, to Manager Harry Brown, Manager of the New Nixon, which read:

"Dear Sir: You are hereby notified that on and after Monday, August 16, you must discontinue exhibiting the picture called 'The Birth of a Nation."'

The order sent by Director Bartlett gave no reasons for his action. "The Birth of a Nation" is now being shown in New York, Brighton Beach, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Spokane, and it has never been barred from any theatre in any state of the United States. It was passed by the National Board of Censors, Mayor Mitchell of New York, and by the Board of Censors of Boston, of which Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Polster and Police Commissioner O'Meara were the members. "The Birth of a Nation" will continue at the New Nixon Theatre.

Fears of "race violence" expressed by Director Bartlett are ridiculed by local amusement interests. It is charged on the contrary that the sudden decision to wind up the performance which has now run four weeks without the slightest semblance of disorder, is designed solely as a political vote catching move. The photo-drama is advertised for matinee and evening performnce today, and will enter upon its fifth week tomorrow at the New Nixon according to a statement issued by Manager Harry Brown last night.

Continued on Page Two.

(Continued from Page One)

Founded on "The Clansman," "The Birth of a Nation," the protesting negroes declare, incites to race hatred, and the delgation that visited the City Commissioners at Thursday's meeting was composed principally of colored clergymen and members of their congregation.

Mr. Nixon had assembled a distinguished array of lawyers to give the City Commissioners battle. His fighting force included former Judge Gordon of Philadelphia; former Attorney General McCarter, of Newark; former Judge Robert Ingersoll, and former Assemblyman Emerson Richards, of Atlantic City.

"Talk about suppressing this production is absured," Mr. Nixon said yesterday morning. "Why, it has not only been passed by J. Louis Breitinger, of the Pennsylvania Board of Censorship, but school authorities have been advised to make arrangements for as many children as possible to see it. Claims that it incites race hatred, and for that reason should be supressed, are ridiculous. It deals with nothing but historical facts."

Harry Brown, Manager of the New Nixon Theatre, says that certain newspaper statements to the effect that Chief of Police Woodruff sent plain clothes men through the back section of the city and found that threats of violence were being manufactured out of the whole cloth. "I had a talk with Chief Woodruff, and he said that he had not sent out detectives and that there had not been either any disorder or threats of disorder among the colored people of Atlantic City. He authorized me to make this statement in his behalf.

"I also had a talk with William F. Hainstein, President of the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association, and he told me that neither he nor the association had indorsed Director Bartlett's attempt to stop 'The Birth of a Nation,' but that on the contrary they endorsed the picture and think that the management ought to be thanked for bringing so splendid a picture to this city. He said that every man, woman and child, white and colored, ought to see the wonderful spectacle.

"Rev. Robert A. Elwood and many other prominent citizens called on me to express their indignation at the attempts being made to stop the picture. I feel sure that there will be great satisfaction over the action of Chancellor Walker who has issued the injunction prohibiting the City of Atlantic City from interfering with the presentation of 'The Birth of a Nation'."

Miriam Cooper in "The Birth of a Nation at Nixon Today.

N.Y. TIMES AUG 15

Ban on Film Play Lifted.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 14.—By an order made tonight by Chancellor Walker, City Commissioner William H. Bartlett, Director of Public Safety of Atlantic City, N. J., and other officials of that resort are restrained from interfering with the motion picture drama "The Birth of a Nation," being exhibited at the New Nixon Theatre. A rule to show cause why an injunction should not issue prohibiting the Atlantic City authorities from interfering with the production has been allowed. It is returnable Aug. 24. Mr. Bartlett had given notice that on and after Aug. 16 the exhibition would be prohibited.

Scene in Piedmont, S. C., in "The Birth of a Nation," at New Nixon Today.

BEAUTIFUL STORY INTERWOVEN IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT NIXON

Crowned With Record Breaking Success, This Massive Production Will Enter Upon the Fifth Big Week of Its Success Today.

The story of "The Birth of a Nation," the massive D. W. Griffith spectacle at the New Nixon, is based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but it has been much amplified.

The Stoneman boys of Pennsylvania had been guests at Piedmont, S. C., of their boarding school chums, the Cameron boys. Phil Stoneman had fallen deeply in love with Margaret Cameron. Ben Cameron had never seen Elsie Stoneman, yet the daguerreotype of her that he had pilfered from Phil seemed to him the sweetest thing in the world. The younger lads — too young for romance—frolicked like two friendly colts.

When war cast its shadow over the lad Phil and Tod Stoneman went to fight for the Stars and Stripes; Ben Cameron and his younger brothers, for the Stars and Bars. Piedmont gayly entered the conflict but soon was raided by a posy of white and colored guerillas. Sherman marched to the sea and two of the Cameron boys were killed in battle, one of them face to face with his dying chum, Tod. Ben Cameron, the "little colonel" as he was affectionately called by his men, was in the thick of the fighting about Petersburg. Finally came the orders for the last charge. With cold steel they charged the enemy's trenches. His men were mowed down on every side. The "Little Colonel" reached the enemy's trenches and rammed his flag in the mouth of a smoking cannon. As he fell wounded he was rescued by his old friend Phil, who was then a captain in the Union army. In a Washington hospital he was saved back to life by Elsie Stoneman. It was a case of love at first sight. She and Ben's mother went to Lincoln, "the Great Heart," and procured his pardon when he was condemned on an odious charge.

Continued on Page Two.

Austin Stoneman, leader of Congress and father of Elsie, thought that Lincoln's policy was too pacific towards the South, but Lincoln was firm. The war was over and then followed a terrible tragedy, the assassination of the President. Austin Stoneman, who was then supreme in Congressional councils, went South to carry out his plans to establish the complete political and social equality of the negroes. His chief aid was Silas Lynch, a mulatto. Elsie and Phil accompanied their father to Piedmont. Elsie accepted the gallant little Confederate colonel, but Margaret would not yet look kindly on Phil who had fought on the other side. The reign of the carpet-baggers and scalawags began. The "Union League" won the State election and Silas Lynch became Lieutenant-Governor. The legislature looted the State. Whites were elbowed off the streets, kept from the polls and despoiled of their property. Ben Cameron then organized the "invisible empire" of the Ku Klux Klan. Stoneman was mad with rage. Lynch's spies found that Cameron was a Ku Klux and Stoneman made Elsie disavow her lover.

Little Flora Cameron, the joy and pride of the Cameron household, was followed by a renegade negro, Gus. And to her terror she jumped over a cliff to her death. Gus was caught and condemned to death. Dr. Cameron was arrested on the charge of harboring the clansmen. He was rescued by Phil Stoneman and a few friends and the Doctor, his wife, Margaret, Phil and the faithful negro servants fled to the country where they found refuge in a log cabin with two Union veterans.

In the meantime Elsie Stoneman had gone to Lynch's house to appeal to him to save her brother and the Camerons. Instead of doing this, Lynch seized the opportunity to declare his "love" for his patron's beautiful daughter told her he would make her the queen of his empire, and sent for a negro chaplain to perform a forced marriage. Her father arrived at this crises but was helpless.

Word had reached Ben Cameron and he rushed to her rescue with the Ku Klux Klan. Elsie was saved, and then a word came of the beseiged ones in the cabin. Quickly the Klan rode to the rescue. The little party within the beiseiged walls were almost at the last gasp. Quick was the rush of the Ku Klux Klan and the raiders were routed. There is little left to tell. To Ben and Elsie, to Phil and Margaret, the sequel was a beautiful double honeymoon to the sea [illegible]

David W. Griffith, Producer of "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Today.

GAZETTE AUG. 15

LEDGER AUG. 15

COURT SUSTAINS FILM OWNERS

Production of "Birth of Nation" to Continue at Atlantic City

ORDER SHORE OFFICIALS NOT TO INTERFERE

Petition for Permanent Injunction to Be Argued on August 24

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

TRENTON, Aug. 14. — The Court of Chancery, through an injunction issued by Chancellor Walker at his home here tonight, temporarily restrained City Commissioner William H. Bartlett, Director of Public Safety of Atlantic City, and the Police Department of that city from interfering with the moving picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the New Nixon Theatre.

Representing the Esplanade Amusement Company, owners of the theatre and the Epoch Producing Corporation, owners of the picture, ex-Assemblyman Emerson L. Richards and Ulysses G. Stryon appeared before the Chancellor and petitioned that the officials of Atlantic City be restrained from their contemplated action of stopping the exhibition of the picture.

Chancellor Walker allowed a rule to show cause, returnable Tuesday, August 24, why a permanent injunction should not be granted, and in the meantime the temporary restraint was allowed. The management of the theatre was notified yesterday by Commissioner Bartlett that on Monday the picture would be closed and no reason was assigned for the action.

The petition presented to the court called particular attention to the magnitude of the production; that it had cost a sum in excess of $100,000; that it had taken a year's time to produce it; that 18,000 persons and 3000 horses were used in the production; that there had been no attempt to engender racial or religious prejudices, but that, on the contrary, it is wholesome and elevating.

Another contention made by the complainants is that at present the picture is being exhibited in all parts of the country and that it was witnessed in February of this year by most distinguished persons in official life at the National Press Club in Washington, and the universal verdict was that it was a wonderful production.

N.Y. SUN AUG. 15

WRIT KEEPS FILM SHOW OPEN.

"Birth of a Nation" to Continue at Atlantic City.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 14.—A temporary injunction was issued by Chancellor Walker here to-night restraining William H. Bartlett and other Commissioners of Atlantic City from carrying out their contemplated action in closing the film production of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre in Atlantic City next Monday. The Chancellor also allowed a rule to show cause returnable Tuesday, August 24, why the injunction should not be made permanent.

Former Assemblyman Emerson Richards, representing the New Nixon Theatre and the Epoch Producing Corporation, owners of the picture, made the application to the Chancellor. He argued that if the Commissioners were permitted to carry out their purpose it would not only affect the profits of the theatre but also cause irreparable damage to the production.

The notice that the picture would be prohibited did not carry with it any reason for the action of the Commissioners.

NOR. AMERICAN AUG. 15

RECORD AUG. 15

ORDERS 'BIRTH OF NATION' STOPPED AT ATLANTIC CITY

Public Safety Director Expresses Fear of Violence Following Negroes' Protest

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 14.

Ordered peremptorily by Director of Public Safety Bartlett to discontinue the photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theater after Monday night Samuel F. Nixon, owner of the playhouse, applied today through counsel to Chancellor Walker, of Trenton, for an order restraining the police from enforcing Director Bartlett's commands.

As a reason for issuing the order, Director Bartlett expresses the fear that "race violence" may result from the further presentation of the photoplay, which is founded on "The Clansman."

Boardwalk amusement purveyors ridicule this assertion, pointing out that the performance is in its fourth week, and that it has not been attended by the least semblance of disorder. They charge that the director's move is actuated by politics and is designed to catch the negro vote.

Told He Cannot Stop the Pictures.

Trenton, Aug. 14.—Director of Public Safety Bartlett, of Atlantic City, and all other authorities of that place were restrained from interfering with the moving picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," now being exhibited there, by an order made tonight by Chancellor Walker. Commissioner Bartlett, it was said, had notified the management that the exhibition would be prohibited.

INQUIRER AUG 15

Will Fight Order to Stop Show

Special to The Inquirer.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 14.—An injunction is being sought by the management of the New Nixon Theatre, to suspend the order of Director of Public Safety William Bartlett, who forbade the further production, after Monday, of the "Birth of a Nation." He based his ruling on the appeals from the colored people, who claimed that it developed race hatred. The pictures, which run for three weeks, follow somewhat the story of "The Clansman." The owners of the play declare that it does not provoke race hatred, but that it gives a historic review of the foundation of the republic, and its re-birth after the Civil War.

UNION AUG 16

Mere protest of a certain moving picture by some of the colored citizens was news and Philadelphia and newspapers in other large cities so preceived it. The protest was handled by the majority of correspondents in the usual news way.

A correspondent for one Philadelphia paper of the "blood and thunder" type was on the job as usual with his story of "drastic action found necessary to prevent rioting etc."

The hint of a riot was an insult to those colored citizens who have been arbitrating the question with all dignity.

NY TELEGRAPH AUG 15

FIGHT TO PRESENT 'BIRTH OF NATION'

Atlantic City Manager Employs Counsel and Appeals to New Jersey Courts.

INJUNCTION IS OBTAINED

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 14.

"Fie," is the answer of Samuel Nixon of Philadelphia, lessee of the new Nixon Theatre on the Boardwalk, to the order issued last night by William Bartlett, Director of Public Safety, forbidding the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Boardwalk playhouse.

Mr. Nixon obtained an injunction from Chancellor Walker at Trenton today restraining the Atlantic City officials from interfering with the production.

"We are not going to be made the victims of a political dodge to corral the colored vote in Atlantic City," declared Mr. Nixon. "Talk of violence in connection with a film drama which has been seen by thousands in all of the large cities is ridiculous."

Nixon has assembled a distinguished array of lawyers to give the City Commissioners battle. His fighting force includes former Judge Gordon of Philadelphia, former Attorney General McCarter of Newark, former Judge Robert Ingersoll and former Assemblyman Emerson Richards of Atlantic City.

"Talk about suppressing the production is absurd," Nixon, in a temper, said this morning. "Why, it has not only been passed by J. Louis Breitinger of the Pennsylvania Board of Censorship, but school authorities have been advised to make arrangements for as many children as possible to see it. Claims that it incited race hatred, and for that reason should be suppressed, are ridiculous. It deals with nothing but historical facts."

Director Bartlett's order for the suppression of the film was issued last night after detectives had reported to him that the negro section of the city, where more than 12,000 negroes live, was in a ferment.

Threats have been made to stampede the theatre, to smash the windows and to commit violence in other forms.

NIXON THEATRE GETS INJUNCTION

Enjoins City from Prohibiting "The Birth of a Nation."

Chancellor Walker, of New Jersey, on Saturday afternoon, in Trenton, granted an injunction prohibiting the City of Atlantic City, the Director of Public Safety and the Chief of Police from interfering in any way with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre. This action of the Chancellor nullifies the order sent by Director of Public Safety William H. Bartlett to Manager Harry Brown.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now being shown in New York, Brighton Beach, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Spokane. Samuel F. Nixon states that it has never been barred from any theatre in any state of the United States. It was passed by the National Board of Censors, Mayor Mitchell, of New York, and by the Board of Censors of Boston, of which Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara were the members.

Mr. Harry Brown, Manager of the New Nixon Theatre, says that certain newspaper statements to the effect that Chief of Police Woodruff sent plain clothesmen through the north side of the city and found that threats of violence were being made are lies made out of whole cloth. "I had a talk with Chief Woodruff," said Mr. Brown, "and he said that he had not sent out detectives and that there had not been either any disorder or threats of disorder among the colored people of Atlantic City. He authorized me to make this statement on his behalf.

"I also had a talk with Mr. William F. Hanstein, President of the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association, and he told me that neither he nor the association had endorsed Director Bartlett's attempt to stop 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

GRIFFITH HAS A MENAGERIE

Producer of the Wonder Film Collects Canines and Felines About Him

All who have enjoyed the perfect art of the Griffith films have noted how often he used domestic animals in his pictures. No one but a lover of animals would think of using them in such a delightful way. They figure prominently in some of the most charming scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" now playing at the New Nixon Theatre.

When Elsie Stoneman is first seen at her Lancaster home she is playing with the old family tabby cat. Soon the scene shifts to the Piedmont home of the Comerons. The kindly master is reading his paper while a kitetn and puppy play contentedly at his feet. Nothing else could so delightfully show the character of the home-loving Southern gentleman of the old school. It is such touches of nature that help to make the greatness of this masterpiece.

Never in the history of the stage has there been any play which presented such faithful pictures of the Southland before war cast its dread shadow over all. Equally true to life are the scenes during the greatest Civil conflict and afterwards of the blighting Reconstruction days. In vivid contrast are the panoramic views of the great battles which settled the destiny of the American people.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in the fourth week of its phenomenally successful run in Atlantic City and the attendance is breaking all records at the New Nixon, which by the way is the coolest spot on the Boardwalk.

Press Aug 16 PRESS Aug 16 REVIEW Aug 16

D.W. GRIFFITH A LOVER OF ANIMALS

Producer of "Birth of a Nation" Selects Dumb Beasts for His ePts

All who have enjoyed the perfect art of the Griffith films have noted how often he used domestic animals in his pictures. No one but a lover of animals would think of using them in such a delightful way. They figure prominently in some of the most charming scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" now playing at the New Nixon Theatre.

When Elsie Stoneman is nrst seen at her Lancaster home she is playing with the old family tabby cat. Soon the scene shifts to the Piedmont home of the Camerons. The kindly master is reading his paper while a kitetn and puppy play contentedly at his feet. Nothing else could so delightfully show the character of the home-loving Southern gentleman of the old school. It is such touches of nature that help to make the greatness of this masterpiece.

Never in the history of the stage has there been any play which presented such faithful pictures of the Southland before war cast its dread shadow over all. Equally true to life are the scenes during the greatest Civil conflict and afterwards of the blighting Reconstruction days. In vivid contrast are the panoramic views of the great battles which settled the destiny of the American people.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in the fourth week of its phenomenally successful run in Atlantic City and the attendance is breaking all records at the New Nixon, which by the way is the coolest spot on the Boardwalk.

NIXON THEATRE GETS INJUNCTION

Enjoins City from Prohibiting "The Birth of a Nation."

Chancellor Walker, of New Jersey, on Saturday afternoon, in Trenton, granted an injunction prohibiting the City of Atlantic City, the Director of Public Safety and the Chief of Police from interfering in any way with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre. This action of the Chancellor nullifies the order sent by Director of Public Safety William H. Bartlett to Manager Harry Brown.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now being shown in New York, Brighton Beach, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Spokane. Samuel F. Nixon states that it has never been barred from any theatre in any state of the United States. It was passed by the National Board of Censors, Mayor Mitchell, of New York, and by the Board of Censors of Boston, of which Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara were the members.

Mr. Harry Brown, Manager of the New Nixon Theatre, says that certain newspaper statements to the effect that Chief of Police Woodruff sent plain clothes men through the north side of the city and found that threats of violence were being made are lies made out of whole cloth. "I had a talk with Chief Woodruff," said Mr. Brown, "and he said that he had not sent out detectives and that there had not been either any disorder or threats of disorder among the colored people of Atlantic City. He authorized me to make this statement on his behalf.

"I also had a talk with Mr. William F. Hanstein, President of the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association, and he told me that neither he nor the association had endorsed Director Bartlett's attempt to stop 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

BATTLE SCENES IN NIXON FILM

Battles in "Birth of a Nation" Tremendously Thrilling

David W. Griffith, foremost of direct-on, is conceded to have established a new art by his cleberated production, "The Birth of a Nation" now in the midst of its triumphant run at the New Nixon. As disclosed at the Liberty Theatre, New York, last March and in Boston, Chicago and other big cities a little later ,this realization and mechanical effects overshadowed in its greatness all of the dramas of the older stage art, and won the most extraordinary accomplishments from the critics.

The battle scenes pictured in the Civil War part of "The Birth of a Nation" mark the supreme achievement of motion photography up to date. The intensely vivid skirmishes and hand to hand struggles are not only well planned, but well ated. The most thrilling sights of all are the battles conducted on a big scale in vast stretches of field and valley.

The second part of the spectacle is devoted to the Reconstruction days, when the South uprose a second time and threw off the carpetbagger-negro tryanny. The Ku Klux Klan are the protagonof this part of the story. Their wild rides, rescues of harried whites, and their snatching of victory from the jaws of defeat, are represented on a vast scale with thousands of men and horses and with the infinite spirit and dash for which Mr. Griffith's spectacular work is so remarkable.

Intertwined with the mighty epical progress of the story are two beautiful romances of the Blue and the Gray: Ben Cameron, the Clansman and his Northern sweetheart, Elsie; Capt. Phil Stoneman, U. S. A. and swet Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie.

REVIEW Aug 16th

FILM MEN SECURE INJUNCTION

"Birth of a Nation" to Continue Despite Bartlett's Order

Chancellor Walker of New Jersey on Saturday afternoon in Trenton granted an injunction prohibiting the city commissioners, the Director of Public Safety and the Chief of Police from interfering in any way with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theater. This action of the Chancellor puts a stop to the efforts to close the New Nixon Theater, and renders null and void the order sent by Director of Public Safety William H. Bartlett to Manager Harry Brown, of the New Nixon, which read:—

"Dear Sir: You are hereby notified that on and after Monday, Aug. 16, you must discontinue exhibiting the picture called 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

The order sent by Director Bartlett gave no reasons for his action.

"The Birth of a Natin" is now beiug shown in New York, Brighton Beach, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Spokane and it has never been barred from any theater in any State of the United States. It was passed by the National Board of Censors, Mayor Mitchel, of New York, and by the Board of Censors of Boston of which Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner O'Meara were the members.

"The Birth of a Nation" will continue at the New Nixon Theater.

Harry Brown, manager of the New Nixon Theatre, says that certain newspaper statements to the effect that Chief of Police Woodruff sent plain clothes men through the colored portion of the city and found that threats of violence were being made are lies made out of whole cloth. "I had a talk with Chief Woodruff," said Mr. Brown, "and he said that he had not sent out detectives to the black belt and that there had not been either any disorder or threats of disorder among the colored portion of Atlantic City. He authorized me to make this statement on his behalf."

"I also had a talk with Mr. William F. Hanstein, president of the Atlantic City Hotelmen's Association and he told me that neither he nor the association had indorsed Director Bartlett's attempt to stop "The Birth of a Nation," but that on the contrary they indorse the picture and think tha the management ought to be thanked for bringing so splendid a picture to this city. He said that every man, woman and child, white and colored ought to see the wonderful spectacle."

"Rev. Robert A. Elwood and many other prominent citizens called on me to express their indignation at the attempts being made to stop the picture. I feel sure that there will be great satisfaction over the action of Chancellor Walker who has issued an injunction prohibiting the City of Atlantic City from interfering with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation." This insures the continuance of the most successful run in the history of Atlantic City theatres."

5th BIG WEEK

COMMENCING TODAY

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AND ST. CHARLES

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager

The Coolest Spot in Town

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Mighty Spectacle — The 8th

Wonderful Artillery Duels With Real Shells

18,000 People Used to Tell the Drama

Cost $500,000 To Assemble Its Mighty Forces

Most stupendous dramatic spectacle the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed

An Orchestra of 40

Direction The Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. Aitken, Pres.

IMPORTANT — "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Will Positively NOT Be Shown in Any Other atre

WARE AV.
ND
ARLES P.

ess Manager

n

TWICE DAILY

NIGHTS—8.30 Sharp MATINEES—2.30 Sharp

At These Rare Prices In Reach of All Patrons

Eves. 25c, 50c, $1, $1.50, $2 All Matinees 25c,,50c, $1

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

8th Wonder of the World

The Greatest Battles of the Civil War Re-enacted

3,000 Horses Mounted by Daring Riders

Took 8 Months of Super-Human Effort to Produce It

SEE THE WILD RIDES OF THE KU KLUX KLAN

Seats Now Selling Two Weeks Ahead

er Theatre in Atlantic City — IMPORTANT

NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Harry Brown, Business Manager.

ily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

th's Mighty Spectacle

he Coolest Spot in Town

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

NY ORCHESTRA OF 40

tic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!! positively not be shown in any other theatre in ion Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

THEATRICAL-

Attractions at Local Playhouses.

THE SUNDA

SUNDAY GAZETTE, ATLANT

BEAUTIFUL STORY INTERWOVEN IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT NIXON

Crowned With Record Breaking Success, This Massive Production Will Enter Upon the Fifth Big Week of Its Success Today.

The story of "The Birth of a Nation," the massive D. W. Griffith spectacle at the New Nixon, is based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but it has been much amplified.

The Stoneman boys of Pennsylvania had been guests at Piedmont, S. C., of their boarding school chums, the Cameron boys. Phil Stoneman had fallen deeply in love with Margaret Cameron. Ben Cameron had never seen Elsie Stoneman, yet the daguerreotype of her that he had pilfered from Phil seemed to him the sweetest thing in the world. The younger lads — too young for romance—frolicked like too friendly colts.

When war cast its shadow over the lad Phil and Tod Stoneman went to fight for the Stars and Stripes; Ben Cameron and his younger brothers, for the Stars and Bars. Piedmont gayly entered the conflict but soon was raided by a body of white and colored guerillas. Sherman marched to the sea and two of the Cameron boys were killed in battle, one of them face to face with his dying chum, Tod. Ben Cameron, the "little colonel" as he was affectionately called by his men, was in the thick of the fighting about Peters-

"THE ETERNAL CITY" TODAY AT CRITERION

Stupendouss and Intensely Dramatic Film Evokes Great Enthusiasm.

When the management of the Criterion Theatre anounced the presentation of the stupendous and wonderfully beautiful dramatic photoplay "The Eternal City," it was anticipated that unusual interest and enthusiasm would be shown for this production, but the success of this photo-drama at the Criterion has far exceeded all that was expected of it. "The Eternal City" has been presented at the Criterion Friday and Saturday, and the unprecedented enthusiasm it created has caused it to be continued again today. During the past two days the Criterion has witnessed the most remarkable aud-

(Continued on Page Five.)

CHARLEY GRAPEWIN HEADS AT KEITH'S THEATRE T

Marie Nordsstrom in "Bits of Acting," Victo Mullen and Coogan, Gardner Trio and on All Feature Bill.

CHARLEY

When this succ peared in the fa Awakening of M acres predicted t be able to find a s to replace it. N polished, rewrote finally he has p much skill as is gether the many a domestic com keepsie." This e ded with laughte ous laugh, and C pears to even be he did as the i He is capably a Anna Chance w to look upon, bu foil for Mr. Gra of individual co

MARIE N

Marie Nordstr life is Mrs. Hen her distinguishe for theatrical la ceedingly attrac able actress. was scored as and Paid For purposes Frances ter, has arrange ment called "Bit is the assemblin choice theatrica

(Continued

HOBART BOSWORTH IN 'THE SCARLET SIN' AT THE CITY SQUARE

Based on a Story That Will Impress All of Society. Other eFatures.

"Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be made whiter than snow." One of the real sensations of the motion picture world, entitled "The Scarlet Sin," featuring the celebrated actor and writer, Hobart Bosworth, heads the usual high class bill of feature films at the City Square Theatre on Atlantic avenue, today. "The Scarlet Sin" is a beautiful story that carries a strong moral, a picture that should be seen by every man and woman. It preaches a sermon that will impress all classes of society. It will improve every person who sees it for it is based on truth. A story of heart interest showing the weakness of human passion. The story of an

Continued on Page Two.

"BROTHER MASONS" THE L COMEDY TREAT OPENS

H. H. Frazee, Famous for Comedy Succes Latest Production With a Cast Nev Equalled in a Farce-Comedy

The big comedy treat of the early | in this compan

BIRTH OF NATION BIGGEST SUCCESS

Box Office Returns Show That It Has Gripped the American Public Like No Other Picture

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in the fifth week of its summer run at the New Nixon Theatre.

The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

In preparing the musical setting of this great production, Mr. Griffith had hoped to find in folk-song collections the motifs for the symphonic score. His search was unsuccessful. Then he thought of the plantation melodies he used to hear as a boy down in Kentucky—tunes that had never been made into crotchets and quavers. As he worked, a different Southern air suggested itself for each character in the pictorial story. Joseph Carl Breil jotted down the hummed tunes. Mr. Breil next essayed the immense labor of scoring the 5,000 scenes of the play, each with its appropriate music. The synchronization of the score to the scenes was indeed a task of magnitude.

There is an orchestra of forty and a large force of expert technicians.

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

THE EVENING UNION,

TUESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1915

'BIRTH OF NATION' AT NEW NIXON

Picture Continues To Fill the Uptown Theatre—The Wonder Film of the Age

The scenes of reconstruction days in the South shown in D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon, are of great historical value. Some of the most interesting are those showing the sessions of the South Carolina Legislature when that body was controlled by negroes. In the House there were 78 colored members with only 46 whites and of those 32 were Carpetbaggirs and Scalawags. It was as if society was turned upside down. In place of the control of the old aristocratic statesmen was the rule of the most ignorant democracy that mankind ever witnessed. For a time barbarism had overcome civilization by the force of numbers. The slave was rioting in the halls of his former masters.

James S. Pike, a prominent abolitionist and therefore an unprejudiced witness wrote of those days:

"At some of the desks sit colored men whose types it would be hard to find outside of Congo; whose costumes, visages, attitudes and expressions only befit the forecastle of a buccaneer."

The result was the organization of the Ku Klux Klan and the redemption of the South from the horrors of misrule. This picture of history is one of the most vivid in "The Birth of a Nation." The progress made by the negro since those days is shown in views taken at Hampton Institute, Virginia.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

REVIEW, ATLANTIC CITY, TUESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1915

Social News

THEATRE PARTY

Miss Ruth Thompson Guest Of Honor

Harry Brown Jr., manager of "Nobody Home," entertained in honor of his fiancee, Miss Ruth Stanton. The members of the Virginia avenue beach set last night to see the "Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre. Members of the party were Miss Ruth Stanton Miss Katherine Diamond, Miss Edith Reger Edith Clymer, Miss Edith Cobb, Thelma Jones, Mrs. Harry Johnson, Miss Helen Smalley, Miss Marie Johnson, Miss Regina Murphy, Miss Gertrude Powers, Stephen Keet, Charles Hitschler, James Dorham, Harry Brown, Jr.

PRESS

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 18, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION A WORLD WIDE SUCCESS

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in the fifth week of its summer run at the New Nixon Theatre.

The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

In preparing the musical setting of this great production, Mr. Griffith had hoped to find in folk-song collections the motifs for the symphonic score. His search was unsuccessful. Then he thought of the plantation melodies he used to hear as a boy down in Kentucky—tunes that had never been made into crotchets and quavers. As he worked, a different Southern air suggested itself for each character in the pictorial story. Joseph Carl Breil jotted down the hummed tunes. Mr. Breil next essayed the immense labor of scoring the 5,000 scenes of the play, each with its appropriate music. The synchronization of the score to the scenes was indeed a task of magnitude.

There is an orchestra of forty and a large force of expert technicians.

MAY AGREE OVER "BIRTH OF NATION"

Colored Clergymen Hold a Satisfactory Conference with Samuel Nixon and Manager Brown

Protests sounded by the colored people of this city against the photo-play, "Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the New Nixon Theatre, may be satisfactorily adjusted as the result of an hour conference held yesterday between prominent colored clergymen of the city and Samuel F. Nixon, owner of the theatre, and Harry Brown, manager.

The clergymen at the conference included Rev. William M. Langford, of the M. E. Church; Rev. Charles V. Doughlas, Second Baptist Church; Rev. Jeremiah Gregory, Union Baptist Temple, and Rev. E. M. Clark, Jefro Presbyterian Church.

While the ministers agreed that the picture was most artistic and wonderful, they suggested the elimination of only two brief scenes in order to delete it of any tendency toward the fomenting of race hatred. Messrs. Nixon and Brown assured the delegation that they would meet them half-way and comply with any suggestion in reason. Another conference was arranged for and it is believed that all the differences will be satisfactorily adjusted before the beginning of next week.

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Now Playing

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

3,000 Horses

Cost $500,000

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

RECONSTRUCTION OF THE AMERICAN NATION

The scenes of reconstruction days in the South shown in D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon, are of great historical value. Some of the most interesting are those showing the sessions of the South Carolina Legislature when that body was controlled by negroes. In the House there were 78 colored members with only 46 whites and of those 32 were Carpetbaggirs and Scalawags. It was as if society was turned upside down. In place of the control of the old aristocratic statesmen was the rule of the most ignorant democracy that mankind ever witnessed. For a time barbarism had overcome civilization by the force of numbers. The slave was plotting in the halls of his former masters.

James S. Pike, a prominent abolitionist and therefore an unprejudiced witness wrote of those days:

"At some of the desks sit colored men whose types it would be hard to find outside of Congo; whose costumes, visages, attitudes and expressions only befit the forecastle of a buccaneer."

The result was the organization of the Ku Klux Klan and the redemption of the South from the horrors of misrule. This picture of history is one of the most vivid in "The Birth of a Nation." The progress made by the negro since those days is shown in views taken at Hampton Institute, Virginia.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

Aug 18th

FILM DISPUTE MAY BE SETTLED

Colored Clergy Have Amicable Meeting With Theatre Men

"The Birth of a Nation" dispute may be compromised.

With announcements yesterday that the city would defend the injunction suit aimed to prevent its stopping the "Birth of a Nation" play at the New Nixon and an intimation that Mayor Riddle may propose to the City Commission on Thursday an alternative method of preventing further production of the much talked of photo play, objected to by the colored colony, came simultaneously news of an amicable meeting by leaders of the colored protestants with Samuel F. Nixon, lessee of the theatre at which it was suggested that the features objected to might be eliminated.

Following a conference with pastors of four colored churches in the city yesterday, Mr. Nixon sent word to John J. McCarthy, representative of D. W. Griffith, owner of the "Birth of a Nation" films, telling him of the situation and asking him to get consent to cut out certain scenes, and to arrange to come here by next Thursday for a conference on the matter. Mr. Nixon believes that he will be able to announce on Thursday that the scenes objected to, such as "Gus, the Renegade," who drives a white maiden to death, and "Lynch," the negro Lieutenant Governor, who tries forcibly to marry the daughter of his benefactor, will be eliminated from the picture during the remainder of their production here.

Both Mr. Nixon and Manager Harry Brown declared last night that the interview with the colored ministers was amicable and satisfactory. These ministers were, Rev. W. W. Langford, Rev. Charles S. Douglas, Dr. Gregory and Dr. E. M. Clark, who all appeared before the City Commission last Thursday. Mr. Nixon said the colored delegates were very reasonable in their arguments, and while praising the play as very fine, declared they were only opposed to the scenes which they thought would excite race hatred. They urged that these be eliminated.

The earnestness of the colored clergymen and their reasonable attitude impressed the theatre men.

City Solicitor Theodore W. Schimpf is preparing an answer to the injunction suit brought by the theatre people to restrain the city from taking action to stop the play from proceeding. Argument will be heard on August 24 by Chancellor Walker at Trenton.

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES PL

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

FIFTH BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer.

Important!

"The Birth of a Nation will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

PREDICTS GREAT SCOPE FOR FILM

Griffith Believes It Will Supplant Books in Recording History

"The Birth of a Nation," which is now playing a successful summer engagement at the New Nixon, shows the new method of writing history on the film.

David W. Griffith, the brilliant producer of this marvelous masterpiece, recently said: "The modern historian must use the camera. It is the instrument with which history is beginning to be written. In time it will be used in place of the typewriter. We may not live to see it, but one of these days each house will have receptacles for films.

When one wants to refresh one's mind about a historical incident, nobody will trek to an encyclopaedia to read what happened on such and such an occasion; instead some one will project the picture on the screen, and a story that needs no words will be practically told. By then the operation of a motion picture machine will be as familiar as putting a record on a phonograph.

"In the schools history, geography, botany, geology and other sciences will be taught by means of motion pictures, equipment as will also public libraries.

"In the theatres moving pictures will replace most of the plays. On the stage one can get only the great moments, the high lights. On the screen it can be seen in gradual development, the little things that crystalize into the big issues. The stage can never hope to equal the panoramic sweep of the motion picture."

THE EVENING UNION.

BIRTH OF NATION BIGGEST SUCCESS

Box Office Returns Show That It Has Gripped the American Public Like No Other Picture

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in the fifth week of its summer run at the New Nixon Theatre.

The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

In preparing the musical setting of this great production, Mr. Griffith had hoped to find in folk-song collections the motifs for the symphonic score. His search was unsuccessful. Then he thought of the plantation melodies he used to hear as a boy down in Kentucky—tunes that had never been made into crotchets and quavers. As he worked, a different Southern air suggested itself for each character in the pictorial story. Joseph Carl Breil jotted down the hummed tunes. Mr. Breil next essayed the immense labor of scoring the 5,000 scenes of the play, each with its appropriate music. The synchronization of the score to the scenes was indeed a task of magnitude.

There is an orchestra of forty and a large force of expert technicians.

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Now Playing

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

Aug 18th

FILM DISPUTE MAY BE SETTLED

Colored Clergy Have Amicable Meeting With Theatre Men

"The Birth of a Nation" dispute may be compromised.

With announcements yesterday that the city would defend the injunction suit aimed to prevent its stopping the "Birth of a Nation" play at the New Nixon a,nd an intimation that Mayor Riddle may propose to the City Commission on Thursday an alternative method of preventing further production of the much talked of photo play, objected to by the colored colony, came simultaneously news of an amicable meeting by leaders of the colored protestants with Samuel F. Nixon, lessee of the theatre at which it was suggested that the features objected to might be eliminated.

Following a conference with pastors of four colored churches in the city yesterday, Mr. Nixon sent word to John J. McCarthy, representative of D. W. Griffith, owner of the "Birth of a Nation" films, telling him of the situation and asking him to get consent to cut out certain scenes, and to arrange to come here by next Thursday for a conference on the matter. Mr. Nixon believes that he will be able to announce on Thursday that the scenes objected to, such as "Gus, the Renegade," who drives a white maiden to death, and "Lynch," the negro Lieutenant Governor, who tries forcibly to marry the daughter of his benefactor, will be eliminated from the picture during the remainder of their production here.

Both Mr. Nixon and Manager Harry Brown declared last night that the interview with the colored ministers was amicable and satisfactory. These ministers were, Rev. W. W. Langford, Rev. Charles S. Douglas, Dr. Gregory and Dr. E. M. Clark, who all appeared before the City Commission last Thursday. Mr. Nixon said the colored delegates were very reasonable in their arguments, and while praising the play as very fine, declared they were only opposed to the scenes which they thought would excite race hatred. They urged that these be eliminated.

The earnestness of the colored clergymen and their reasonable attitude impressed the theatre men.

City Solicitor Theodore W. Schimpf is preparing an answer to the injunction suit brought by the theatre people to restrain the city from taking action to stop the play from proceeding. Argument will be heard on August 24 by Chancellor Walker at Trenton.

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES PL

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

FIFTH BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer.

Important !

"The Birth of a Nation will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

PREDICTS GREAT SCOPE FOR FILM

Griffith Believes It Will Supplant Books in Recording History

"The Birth of a Nation," which is now playing a successful summer engagement at the New Nixon, shows the new method of writing history on the film.

David W. Griffith, the brilliant producer of this marvelous masterpiece, recently said: "The modern historian must use the camera. It is the instrument with which history is beginning to be written. In time it will be used in place of the typewriter. We may not live to see it, but one of these days each house will have receptacles for films.

When one wants to refresh one's mind about a historical incident, nobody will trek to an encyclopaedia to read what happened on such and such an occasion; instead some one will project the picture on the screen, and a story that needs no words will be practically told. By then the operation of a motion picture machine will be as familiar as putting a record on a phonograph.

"In the schools history, geography, botany, geology and other sciences will be taught by means of motion pictures. equipment as will also public libraries.

"In the theatres moving pictures will replace most of the plays. On the stage one can get only the great moments, the high lights. On the screen it can be seen in gradual development, the little things that crystallize into the big issues. The stage can never hope to equal the panoramic sweep of the motion picture."

THE EVENING UNION.
THE EVENING UNION.

BIRTH OF NATION BIGGEST SUCCESS

Box Office Returns Show That It Has Gripped the American Public Like No Other Picture

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in the fifth week of its summer run at the New Nixon Theatre.

The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

In preparing the musical setting of this great production, Mr. Griffith had hoped to find in folk-song collections the motifs for the symphonic score. His search was unsuccessful. Then he thought of the plantation melodies he used to hear as a boy down in Kentucky—tunes that had never been made into crotchets and quavers. As he worked, a different Southern air suggested itself for each character in the pictorial story. Joseph Carl Breil jotted down the hummed tunes. Mr. Breil next essayed the immense labor of scoring the 5,000 scenes of the play, each with its appropriate music. The synchronization of the score to the scenes was indeed a task of magnitude.

There is an orchestra of forty and a large force of expert technicians.

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Now Playing

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

DAILY PRESS

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1915

GREAT BATTLES IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Gettysburg is Thrillingly Depicted in the Griffith Film at Nixon

The telephone was a most important factor in staging the great battle scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's supreme spectacle now in the midst of a successful summer run at the New Nixon Theatre.

"Camera two!" was the sharp command from "General" Griffith, standing on the platform of a tower sixty feet high. The telephone operator of the small exchange at his side slipped a plug in the switchboard. Two miles away one of Griffith's assistants received the message. In a minute more a column of troops deployed, the roar of cannon was heard and the attack on the enemy's trenches began.

"Camera four!" A battery of field artillery wheeled about and thundered down the field. Quickly the orders were given to sixteen division assistants and the Battle of Petersburg was in full swing. Eighteen thousand men were battling over twelve square miles of ground. If the battle had been real there could not have been more celerity of movement. Everything went like clockwork without a hitch. The old-fashioned method of using the megaphone would have been futile. It was the telephone that made possible the most wonderful war scenes ever shown on any stage. The wires had to be laid underground for the telephone did not come into use until ten years after the Civil War and telephone poles would have been an anachronism.

Mr. Griffith got the idea of this method of handling his battle scenes from the use made of the telephone in the Great War. The result of this applying of the most modern methods enabled him to achieve results with the camera far ahead of anything that had ever been done before. That is the secret of the success of Griffith. He is always the pioneer, the creator. The result is that "The Birth of a Nation" is the most stupendous creation ever staged.

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Now Playing

Eve. Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

700 Seats at $1.00

500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!

"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

STORY OF THE KU KLUX KLAN

Provide Most Thrilling Scenes in "Birth of a Nation"

Probably the most thrilling scene in David W. Griffith's spectacular production "The Birth of a Nation," now at the New Nixon, are those in which the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the South.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed, "America for Americans."

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as an "institution of chivalry, humanity and patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tennessee, in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the Grand Cyclops; his assistant was the Grand Magi; the marshall was the Grand Turk; the treasurer was the Grand Exchequer and the guards were termed Lictors.

As the sorrows of the South under the baneful Reconstruction laws began to be unbearable, the organization changed its character and the name became popularized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because most of the original members were descendants of the Scottish Clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scotch Highlanders was again used as a call.

Each County was a province under the Grand Giant and four Goblins. The unit of the organization was the Den and the members were known as Ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and ritual were never written until after the Grand Wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1915

VIVID BATTLE SCENES IN FILM

"Birth of a Nation" a Powerful Harbinger of Peace

D. W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its fifth week at the New Nixon is the most popular entertainment on the Boardwalk. A member of the United States Senate recently said: "Any one contemplating war should see this picture. I sincerely believe it will do more to deter people from engaging in war than anything written or spoken on the subject in years."

Never before has war in all of its horror been pictorialized so vividly. Sherman's devasting march to the sea, the capture and burning of Atlanta and the battle of Petersburg are shown with the vividness of reality.

The whole period of the Civil War is luminously recreated. Then follows the baneful time of reconstruction when the ex-slaves, Carpetbaggers and Scalawags combined to bring sorrow and suffering to the Southland.

Running through this wondrous historical spectacle are two romantic love stories of surpassing heart interest. In the cast are Henry B. Walthall as the gallant little Colonel, Ben Cameron; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as his sisters; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman and Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as her brother; Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Geo. Seigmann and many others.

One of the most delightful features of the entertainment is the symphony orchestra of forty

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES P

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

FIFTH BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer.

Important!

"The Birth of a Nation will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

DAILY PRESS

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1915

GREAT BATTLES IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Gettysburg Is Thrillingly Depicted in the Griffith Film at Nixon

The telephone was a most important factor in staging the great battle scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's supreme spectacle now in the midst of a successful summer run at the New Nixon Theatre.

"Camera two!" was the sharp command from "General" Griffith, standing on the platform of a tower sixty feet high. The telephone operator of the small exchange at his side slipped a plug in the switchboard. Two miles away one of Griffith's assistants received the message. In a minute more a column of troops deployed, the roar of cannon was heard and the attack on the enemy's trenches began.

"Camera four!" A battery of field artillery wheeled about and thundered down the field. Quickly the orders were given to sixteen division assistants and the Battle of Petersburg was in full swing. Eighteen thousand men were battling over twelve square miles of ground. If the battle had been real there could not have been more celerity of movement. Everything went like clockwork without a hitch. The old-fashioned method of using the megaphone would have been futile. It was the telephone that made possible the most wonderful war scenes ever shown on any stage. The wires had to be laid underground for the telephone did not come into use until ten years after the Civil War and telephone poles would have been an anachronism.

Mr. Griffith got the idea of this method of handling his battle scenes from the use made of the telephone in the Great War. The result of this applying of the most modern methods enabled him to achieve results with the camera far ahead of anything that had ever been done before. That is the secret of the success of Griffith. He is always the pioneer, the creator. The result is that "The Birth of a Nation" is the most stupendous creation ever staged.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

STORY OF THE KU KLUX KLAN

Most Thrilling Scenes in "Birth of a Nation" Provide

Probably the most thrilling scene in David W. Griffith's spectacular production "The Birth of a Nation," now at the New Nixon, are those in which the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the South.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed, "America for Americans."

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as an "institution of chivalry, humanity and patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "Kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tennessee, in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the Grand Cyclops; his assistant was the Grand Magi; the marshall was the Grand Turk; the treasurer was the Grand Exchequer and the guards were termed Electors.

As the sorrows of the South under the baneful Reconstruction law began to be unbearable, the organization changed its character and the name became popular. ized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because most of the original members were descendants of the Scottish Clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scotch Highlanders was again used as a call.

Each County was a province under the Grand Giant and four Goblins. The unit of the organization was the Den and the members were known as Ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and ritual were never written until after the Grand Wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1915

VIVID BATTLE SCENES IN FILM

"Birth of a Nation" a Powerful Harbinger of Peace

D. W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its fifth week at the New Nixon is the most popular entertainment on the Boardwalk. A member of the United States Senate recently said: "Any one contemplating war should see this picture. I sincerely believe it will do more to deter people from engaging in war than anything written or spoken on the subject in years."

Never before has war in all of its horror been pictorialized so vividly. Sherman's devasting march to the sea, the capture and burning of Atlanta and the battle of Petersburg are shown with the vividness of reality.

The whole period of the Civil War is luminously recreated. Then follows the baneful time of reconstruction when the ex-slaves, Carpetbaggers and Scalawags combined to bring sorrow and suffering to the Southland.

Running through this wondrous historical spectacle are two romantic love stories of surpassing heart interest. In the cast are Henry B. Walthall as the gallant little Colonel, Ben Cameron; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as his sisters; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman and Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as her brother; Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Geo. Seigmann and many others.

One of the most delightful features of the entertainment is the symphony orchestra of forty

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES P

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

FIFTH BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer.

Important!

"The Birth of a Nation will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

THE EVENING UNION,

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 19

GREAT CONFLICTS OF THE REBELLION

Reproduced Under Direction of Some of the Participants for "The Birth of A Nation" At the New Nixon This Week.

The telephone was a most important factor in staging the great battle scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's supreme spectacle now in the midst of a successful summer run at the New Nixon Theatre.

"Camera two!" was the sharp command from "General" Griffith, standing on the platform of a tower sixty feet high. The telephone operator of the small exchange at his side slipped a plug in the switchboard. Two miles away one of Griffith's assistants received the message. In a minute more a column of troops deployed, the roar of cannon was heard and the attack on the enemy's trenches began.

"Camera four!" A battery of field artillery wheeled about and thundered down the field. Quickly the orders were given to sixteen division assistants and the Battle of Petersburg was in full swing. Eighteen thousand men were battling over twelve square miles of ground. If the battle had been real there could not have been more celerity of movement. Everything went like clockwork without a hitch. The old-fashioned method of using the megaphone would have been futile. It was the telephone that made possible the most wonderful war scenes ever shown on any stage. The wires had to be laid underground for the telephone did not come into use until ten years after the Civil War and telephone poles would have been an anachronism.

Mr. Griffith got the idea of this method of handling his battle scenes from the use made of the telephone in the Great War. The result of this applying of the most modern methods enabled him to achieve results with the camera far ahead of anything that had ever been done before. That is the secret of the success of Griffith. He is always the pioneer, the creator. The result is that "The Birth of a Nation" is the most stupendous creation ever staged.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

DR. ABBEY PRAISES "BIRTH OF A NATION" AS A WORTHY LESSON

Asserts Photoplay Shows Negro's Actions After War Reflect on Unscrupulous Politicians

NOT UNFAIR TO BLACKS

By DR. CHARLOTTE ABBEY

As one who has formed a high estimate of the evolutionary possibilities of the Afro-American race through personal association with those interested in social work, I am sorry to find that an historical play such as "The Birth of a Nation" should be the cause of inciting race prejudice. The play teaches a mighty lesson to both white and colored, and it seems strange that lessons so plainly taught by the writer of the play should need to be pointed out.

Through bloodshed the United States arose, but at the very moment that the Stars and Stripes waved over the States there were those who for their own selfish ambition put into action forces that led to the racial prejudice that has since existed and which threatened to defeat the ideals of the man who freed the slave for the purpose of giving him opportunity to attain his humanitarian rights through right living.

An unscrupulous white politician does not understand the meaning of freedom any more than a colored politician of the same grade. To such the term "freedom" spells license. He has not yet attained to the mental and spiritual standard that enables a man of higher grade to see that only through obedience to the Divine law which Jesus upheld as the precedent of all laws, and which Lincoln obeyed, is the only means by which an individual or people can be worthy of freedom. In "The Birth of a Nation," the author clearly shows that the negroes' actions at the time they were freed were altogether the result of unscrupulous politicians, backed by one who, whilst he posed as a reformer, was really the slave of his own personal ambition; hence blinded to the true interest of all whom he was professing to help, and therefore the very antithesis of Lincoln. Most children, white or colored, can be bribed with candy or a nickel to do what is wrong, because so few have inherited that moral perception which enables them to do right for right's sake.

So it is with adults who have not had the education that would have developed their higher faculties; they can be persuaded when an appeal is made to inherited desires to do as the one who bribes them wishes.

It is said that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing." This applies most assuredly to an education that fails to make the law of love to God and thought for others the basis of all progress. We have in consequence of this failure our low-grade criminals and our high-grade ones, those more highly educated making fools of the lower grades to accomplish their own ends.

A religion that fails to bring the emotional and intellectual faculties of man's nature into united action, through showing the relation of Divine law to a life of kindness and usefulness is, of all powers, the most criminal, for it professes to have the well-being of the human race at heart, and yet keeps it in ignorance of the evolutionary purpose of life—that purpose which Jesus emphatically taught in the Lord's Prayer and the Sermon on the Mount. Drama should be the history of life teaching vital truth.

This "The Birth of a Nation" does and without any wish to be unfair to the colored race. If there are some white people so narrow in their outlook that they cannot see the enormous difference between an ignorant slave on the plantation, whose whole heredity and environment had made him the slave of his sex instinct, and the upright living, and industrious colored man and woman who have learned to control their instincts, and are bringing up their children to become self-respecting citizens; such white people are forfeiting their birthright of justice as Esau did, for a mess of pottage (prejudice). The writer gained three important truths from witnessing the drama, "The Birth of a Nation."

First. That license, the following out of one's own selfish desires or tendencies, will be mistaken for freedom until the law of love for God (our ideal of all that is good and beautiful) and thought for others, and made the basis of all education, religious or secular.

Second. Universal suffrage is the ideal of political freedom, but neither white or colored man or woman should be allowed the privilege of suffrage unless each has a clean moral record of not less than seven years.

Third. A nation will only be truly birthed when children are taught to grow physically, mentally and morally great, through kind and useful lives, the result of obedience to the divine law of the ages.

Surely the results of Afro-American training, illustrated in the "Birth of a Nation" by views of students at Hampton and other institutions, and the thorough exposure of unscrupulous white politicians and false reformers should be enough to do away with any feeling of resentment by the Afro-American race against the play.

While stopping off en route, in Los Angeles the other day, with her husband, Jean Schwartz, Rosalka Dolly was gathered in by Mr. Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," and placed under contract to be featured in a new film work. It is to be one of Griffith's own.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1915

NO EYE STRAIN AT NEW NIXON

Perfect Projection for "Birth of Nation" Praised By Oculists

Perfect projection has been the aim and accomplishment of management of "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theater. The result is that there is no strain on the eyes of the spectators. Although the entertainment runs for two and three-quarter hours it is a common comment of those who have seen this great spectacle that it hardly seemed an hour.

One of the most irritating features to the eyes is the exposure to the direct reflected rays, a condition which is found in so many picture houses where the projecting machines are placed in the gallery of the theater. Dr. J. Norman Risley, of Philadelphia, has been waging vigorous warfare against this method of projection and he warmly urges projection to the screen on a horizontal plane. This perfect method, which he urges, is that used at the New Nixon. The booth is situated on the orchestra floor and there is absolutely no eye strain from screen reflection. No expense has been spared to give to "The Birth of a Nation" the most perfect presentation that modern science can accomplish. The greatest optical experts in the country were consulted so that every piece of mechanism should be the best that the ingenuity of man has devised.

Besides perfect projection, "The Birth of a Nation" is shown with every sur-

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES P

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

FIFTH BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer.

Important!

"The Birth of a Nation will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

DAILY PRESS

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION IS AN INSTITUTION

Filmplay Succeeds in Presenting a Resume of the Events That Made This Country

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its fifth record-smashing week at the New Nixon, is as popular with the summer visitors as the Boardwalk and the ocean. The theatre is the coolest indoor spot in Atlantic City and it is always comfortable even on the hottest days.

David W. Griffith's masterpiece has become much more than merely a popular attraction. It is now a firmly established entertainment that is seen over and over again by the most critical playgoers. In fact with its five thousand swiftly changing scenes more than one view is required to grasp all of its interesting phases. At each seeing new beauties are revealed. In its infinite variety "The Birth of a Nation" far surpasses anything that has ever been shown on a stage. In mere pictorial beauty it excells the masterpieces in the art galleries of Paris, Rome and Munich for it is the beauty of nature itself. Years ago great battles were shown in cycloramas but that was most unsatisfactory for there was no life, no action. It was merely a painting on a grand scale. Now one can sit in a comfortable seat in the theatre and see the Battle of Petersburg visualized in so life-like a manner that it is as if one were looking at the real battle from an observation tower. Homer and Virgil have kept alive for centuries "The glory that was of Greece and the grandeur that was of Rome." With his new and wonderful art Griffith has perpetuated for all time the most stirring story of American history.

There are two performances daily including Sunday, at the New Nixon and there are prices to suit every purse. There is not a seat in the house which does not afford a splendid view of the picture.

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

EVENING UNION,

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1915.

BIRTH OF NATION AT NEW NIXON

Most Instructive Film Yet Made.—Tells Historical Events Without Shading.

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its fifth record-smashing week at the New Nixon, is as popular with the summer visitors as the Boardwalk and the ocean. The theatre is the coolest indoor spot in Atlantic City and it is always comfortable even on the hottest days.

David W. Griffith's masterpiece has become much more than merely a popular attraction. It is now a firmly established entertainment that is seen over and over again by the most critical playgoers. In fact with its five thousand swiftly changing scenes more than one view is required to grasp all of its interesting phases. At each seeing new beauties are revealed. In its infinite variety "The Birth of a Nation" far surpasses anything that has ever been shown on a stage. In mere pictorial beauty it excells the masterpieces in the art galleries of Paris, Rome and Munich for it is the beauty of nature itself. Years ago great battles were shown in cycloramas but that was most unsatisfactory for there was no life, no action. It was merely a painting on a grand scale. Now one can sit in a comfortable seat in the theatre and see the Battle of Petersburg visualized in so life-like a manner that it is as if one were looking at the real battle from an observation tower. Homer and Virgil have kept alive for centuries "The glory that was of Greece and the grandeur that was of Rome." With his new and wonderful art Griffith has perpetuated for all time the most stirring story of American history.

There are two performances daily including Sunday at the New Nixon and there are prices to suit every purse. There is not a seat in the house which does not afford a splendid view of the picture.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

AUGUST 21, 1915

CLEVER ACTRESS IN NIXON FILM

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now at the New Nixon, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was about finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the younger sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. To-day her face is better known than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

The cleverness of the cast in "The Birth of the Nation" has had much to do with its phenomenal success for great acting is even more appealing than spectacular scenes.

THE NEW NIXON THEATRE

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

FIFTH BIG WEEK

NOW PLAYING

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer.

Important!

"The Birth of a Nation will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

DAILY PRESS

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1915

BOSTON FAVORED BIRTH OF A NATION

New England City Critics Sent Their Paens of Praise to Laud Picture

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's thrilling historical spectacle, has for twenty weeks duplicated in Boston its triumphs in New York and Chicago. This is all the more remarkable because many doubted if Boston would accept so radical a presentment of the Southern angle of the history of the Reconstruction period. The result has been that the enthusiasm evoked by the picture is as great in Boston as in any section of the country. It is difficult to select from the universal chorus of newspaper praise, but a few extracts will show the trend.

The Boston Herald: "A triumph upon which Mr. Griffith and his associates may well plume themselves."

The Boston Trascript: "The surrender of Lee at Appomatox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, move upon the screen as they never moved in print."

The Boston Globe: "So wonderful and so beautiful and so full of life that it robs one of the power of criticism."

The Boston American: "A wonderful historical drama and an enthralling human story."

The Boston Post: "'The Birth of a Nation' is most remarkable."

The Boston Joural: "The pictures make up the most extraordinary historical cyclorama so far brought forward."

The Boston Record: 'A wonderful accomplishment. Compels admiration for its authors."

Mr. John Williamson has returned to his home in Chelsea after spending several weeks in Harrisburg, Pa.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres

ENING UNION,

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1915.

HUB CITY PRAISES GRIFFITH FILM

Run of 'Birth of A Nation,' At Boston Duplicating Sensational New York and Chicago Engagements.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's thrilling historical spectacle, has for twenty weeks duplicated in Boston its triumphs in New York and Chicago. This is all the more remarkable because many doubted if Boston would accept so radical a presentment of the Southern angle of the history of the Reconstruction period. The result has been that the enthusiasm evoked by the picture is as great in Boston as in any section of the country. It is difficult to select from the universal chorus of newspaper praise, but a few extracts will show the trend.

The Boston Herald: "A triumph upon which Mr. Griffith and his associates may well plume themselves."

The Boston Trascript: "The surrender of Lee at Appomatox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, move upon the screen as they never moved in print."

The Boston Globe: "So wonderful and so beautiful and so full of life that it robs one of the power of criticism."

The Boston American: "A wonderful historical drama and an enthralling human story."

The Boston Post: "'The Birth of a Nation' is most remarkable."

The Boston Joural: "The pictures make up the most extraordinary historical cyclorama so far brought forward."

The Boston Record: 'A wonderful accomplishment. Compels admiration for its authors."

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

Twice Daily--2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
INCLUDING SUNDAY

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

The Coolest Spot in Town

Fifth Big Week

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

18,000 People in Great Battles

Cost $500,000

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

3,000 Horses

Took Eight Months to Produce

A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

The Most Stupendous Dramatic Achievement Ever Conceived by any Producer

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

SEATS NOW SELLING — Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

LAST 2 WEEKS OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" 8TH WONDER OF WORLD

Griffiith's Mighty Spectacle Nearing the End of a Most Spectacular Run at the New Nixon Theatre—Crowded Houses the Rule—Last Performance Sept. 6th.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" begins its last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon today. There will be two performances daily at 8.30 and 2.30 P. M.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The part that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in ts foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for those results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of beforee. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background, 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battle field is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these planes and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent assunder by the demons of war ;home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

Continued on Page Two.

BIRTH OF A NATION

(Continued from Page One)

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln set about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wenderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many year to come.

Elsie Stoneman and The Sentry in "The Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon Theatre Today.

Generals Lee and Grant in "The Birth of a Nation" at Nixon.

6th BIG WEEK

COMMENCING TODAY

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

SEATS NOW SELLING

The NEW NIXON The

BOARDWALK— DE ST

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, B

The Coolest Spot in To

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Mighty Spectacle — The

Niagara Falls Is Still Running

and So Is

The BIRTH OF A NATION

(IN EVERY DETAIL)

At THE NEW NIXON THEATRE

Last Two Weeks

N. B.—(ENGAGEMENT IN ATLANTIC CITY POSITIVELY TERMINATES MONDAY NIGHT, SEPTEMBER 6 1915.)

EVENING PRICES—500 Seats at 25c, 1000 Seats at 50c, 700 Seats at $1.00, 500 Seats at $2.00

Direction The Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. Aitke

IMPORTANT — "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Will Positively NOT Be Shown in A

TWICE DAILY

Including Sunday

IGHTS—8.30 Sharp MATINEES—2.30 Sharp

IE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

SEATS NOW SELLING

nder of the World

WONDERFUL ARTILLERY DUELS WITH REAL SHELLS

18,000 PEOPLE USED TO TELL THE DRAMA

COST $500,000 TO ASSEMBLE ITS MIGHTY FORCES

OST STUPENDOUS DRAMATIC SPECTACLE THE BRAIN OF MAN HAS YET VISIONED AND REVEALED

AN ORCHESTRA OF 40

REATEST BATTLES OF THE CIVIL WAR RE-ENACTED

ORSES MOUNTED BY DARING RIDERS

ONTHS OF SUPER-HUMAN EFFORT TO PRODUCE IT

WILD RIDES OF THE KU KLUX KLAN

CES—500 Seats at 25c, 1000 Seats at 50c, 500 Seats at $1.00

CITY—IMPORTANT

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW, A

MONDAY, AUGUST 23, 1915

LAST TWO WEEKS FOR NIXON FILM

"Birth of a Nation" On Last Lap of Remarkable Run

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music, is now playing its last two weeks of its all summer engagement at the New Nixon. This is the great offering that opened a new era in the theatres of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many, many months. Despite great opposition the play has never been suppressed, but has met the approval of censor boards, judges, municipal authorities, publicists, editors and clergymen everywhere.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman", exhibits the salient events of the war between the States. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lasse, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of exjerts who are carried on tour in the travelling company of 50.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST CHARLES PL
THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.
SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager
TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.
D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
NIAGARA FALLS IS STILL RUNNING
and so is
THE BIRTH OF A NATION
In Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
SIXTH BIG WEEK
Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—Engagement in Atlantic City positively terminates Monday Night, Sept. 6, 1915
An Orchestra of Forty
THE BIRTH OF A NATION
NOW PLAYING
Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2
Most stupendous spectacle the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed.
See the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan.
Important—The "Birth of a Nation" Will Positively NOT be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City—Important.
Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp. H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

DAILY PRESS

MONDAY, AUGUST 23, 1915

IS GREATEST PLAY THE BIRTH OF A NATION?

Critics Seem to Feel That Griffith Has Done What No One So Far Has Succeeded in Doing

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to—the unique offering at the New Nixon Theatre now in the last two weeks of its all-summer run.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-1870 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director
SEATS NOW SELLING

The Coolest Spot In Town

Harry Brown, Business Manager.
SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily

INCLUDING SUNDAY
Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp

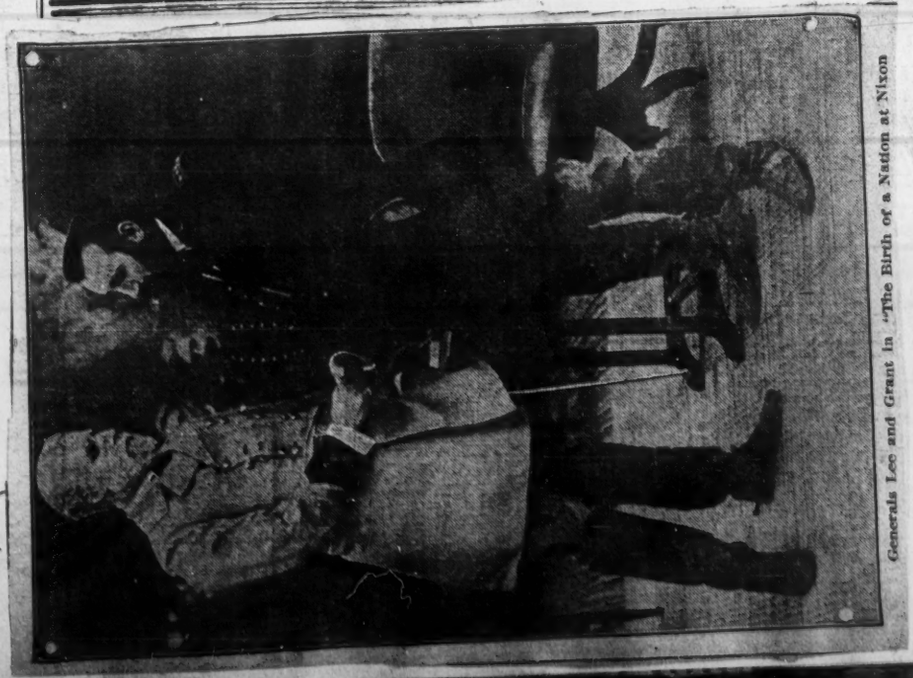
Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.



Generals Lee and Grant in "The Birth of a Nation at Nixon

EVENING UNION,
MONDAY, AUGUST 23, 1915

GRIFFITH MAKER OF GREATEST PLAY

Dramatic Critics Inclined To Favor Producer of "The Birth of a Nation" in Reviews of Season's Work

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to—the unique offering at the New Nixon Theatre now in the last two weeks of its all-summer run.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Claneman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-1870 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — SEATS NOW SELLING
The Coolest Spot In Town
Harry Brown, Business Manager. — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

INCLUDING SUNDAY Nights
8:30 Sharp
Matinees
2:30 Sharp
Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

Generals Lee and Grant in "The Birth of a Nation" at Nixon

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 24, 1915

FAITHFULLY ACT GENERAL'S PARTS

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" which enters upon the last two weks of its engagement, after an all summer's run at the New Nixon Theatre, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as Genral U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But Genral Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the Battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9th under the budding trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES P

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

NIAGARA FALLS IS STILL RUNNING

and so is

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

In Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

SIXTH BIG WEEK

Matinee Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

500 Seats at $1

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—Engagement in Atlantic City positively terminates Monday Night, Sept. 6, 1915

An Orchestra of Forty

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

NOW PLAYING

Eve. Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

700 Seats at $1

500 Seats at $2

Most stupendous spectacle the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed.

See the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan.

Important—The "Birth of a Nation" Will Positively NOT be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City—Important.

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

ELSIE STONEHAM AND THE SENTRY IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THEATRE TODAY.

DAILY PRESS

TUESDAY, AUGUST 24, 1915

GRIFFITH IS PREMIER FILM PLAY DIRECTOR

A well known artist visiting D W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he aid, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its all-summer run at the New Nixon Theatre. The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The affect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one nearer the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamar-like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Eutopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment in "The Birth of a aNtion" of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wane, skeleton like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the kean, emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled up victims of a battle field. Arms are raised in entreaty to Heaven. Bodies, legs and arms and, as it were, shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who sense the mighty thought, the deep, emotional appeal, in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — SEATS NOW SELLING

The Coolest Spot In Town

Harry Brown, Business Manager — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation

in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

Now Playing Twice Daily

INCLUDING SUNDAY
Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed

An Orchestra of 40

See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!

"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

EVENING UNION,

TUESDAY, AUGUST 24, 1915.

COURT SAYS NO LAW MAKES HIM PICTURE CENSOR

Chancellor Walker Today Allows Permanent Injunction Restraining Commissioner Bartlett From Stopping "Birth of a Nation" at the New Nixon

Says No Evidence to Support Allegation of Race Riots

TRENTON, Aug. 24.

Declaring that there was no law making him a censor of moving picture films, Chancellor Walker today allowed a permanent injunction restraining Commissioner William Bartlett, of Atlantic City, from stopping the exhibition of the "Birth of a Nation," a film that involves the negro race. The film was to be shown at the New Nixon Theatre on the Boardwalk and a delegation of negroes asked Commissioner Bartlett to prevent.

It was charged today that the agitation against the production was largely worked up by Mayor Riddle to win him the colored vote of Atlantic City .There was a denial of any prejudice against the negro race or attempts to stir up race hatred. Affidavits were read averring that some of the scenes showed the negroes in a very bad light and were calculated to cause riots. Chancellor Walker ruled that the plaintiffs had not made out a case and there was no evidence that any such direct results would follow the exhibition.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director
SEATS NOW SELLING
The Coolest Spot In Town
Harry Brown, Business Manager.
SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS.
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily
INCLUDING SUNDAY
Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp
Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

GRIFFITH IS PREMIER FILM PLAY DIRECTOR

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its all-summer run at the New Nixon Theatre. The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Eutopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment in "The Birth of a Nation" of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wane, skeleton like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the lean, emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled up victims of a battle field. Arms legs and arms and, as it were, shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who sense the mighty thought, the deep, emotional appeal, in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1915

CHANCELLOR NOT PICTURE CENSOR

Permanent Injunction Allowed And "Birth Of Nation" May Run

Trenton, Aug. 24.—Declaring that there was no law making him a censor of moving picture films, Chancellor Walker today allowed a permanent injunction restraining Commissioner William Bartlett of Atlantic City, from stopping the exhibition of the "Birth of a Nation," a film that involves the negro race. The film was to be shown at the New Nixon Theatre on the Boardwalk and a delegation of negroes asked Commissioner Bartlett to prevent it.

It was charged today that the agitation against the production was largely worked up by Mayor Riddle to win him the colored vote of Atlantic City. There was a denial of any prejudice against the negro race or attempts to stir up race hatred. Affidavits were read averring that some of the scenes showed the negro in a very bad light and were calculated to cause riots. Chancellor Walker ruled that the plaintiffs had not made out a case an dthere was no evidence that any such direct results would follow the exhibition.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES PL

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

NIAGARA FALLS IS STILL RUNNING

and so is

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

In Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

SIXTH BIG WEEK

Matinee Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

500 Seats at $1

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—Engagement in Atlantic City positively terminates Monday Night, Sept. 6, 1915

An Orchestra of Forty

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

NOW PLAYING

Eve. Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

700 Seats at $1

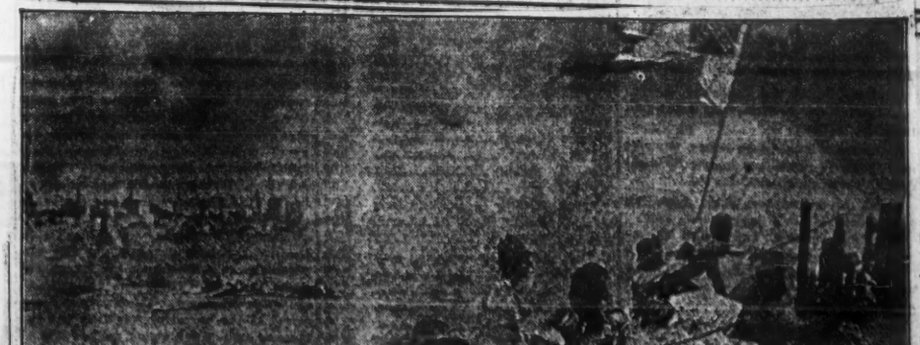
500 Seats at $2

Most stupendous spectacle the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed.

See the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan.

Important—The "Birth of a Nation" Will Positively NOT be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City—Important.

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.



DAILY PRESS

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" CANNOT BE STOPPED

Chancellor Walker Restrains City Commissioners from Stopping Picture Show

Trenton, August 24—The Commissioners of Atlantic City were permanently enjoined by Chancellor Walker today from further interfering with the production of the moving picture film, known as "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at the New Nixon Theatre in that city. A temporary injunction was granted by the court August 14 restraining the Commissioners from prohibiting the production.

In an affidavit of William F. Hanstein, president of the Hotel Men's Association, read before the Chancellor today it was stated that the picture was an object lesson, beneficial to the colored race as showing what might befall them in the hands of unscrupulous politicians.

Emerson L. Richards, who appeared for the managers of the theatre read several affidavits from business men and colored preachers of Atlantic City commending the production and disclaiming that it was likely to create riot and disorder on the part of colored persons. In these affidavits it was denied that the picture had been productive of racial prejudice.

After hearing the testimony Chancellor Walker said it seemed peculiar to seek to restrain the production because they anticipated it might create disorder or riot. He pointed out that the position of the commissioners was in effect asking the court to censure a play without showing that the sense of propriety of the community had been outraged and without establishing legal grounds for judicial action.

GRIFFITH'S GREAT FEAT IN THE BIRTH OF NATION

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" is almost appalling—at least, to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchback scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate drama"? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vester and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation re-born is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago. "The Birth of a Nation" will enter upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon after an all summer run.

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — SEATS NOW SELLING

The Coolest Spot In Town

Harry Brown, Business Manager. — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

Now Playing Twice Daily

INCLUDING SUNDAY Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!

"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

EVENING UNION,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1915.

PLOT COVERS 150 YEARS U.S. HISTORY

David W. Griffith Assembled His Great Story From Facts in History Covering Long Period and Culminating in the Klu Klux Klan

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" is almost appalling—at least, to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchback scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate drama"? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation re-born is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago. "The Birth of a Nation" will enter upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon after an all summer run.

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.

SEATS NOW SELLING — The Coolest Spot In Town — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily

INCLUDING SUNDAY
Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

EVENING UNION,

THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1915.

COMEDY TURNS IN BIRTH OF NATION

The Love Sick Sentinel At Hospital Brings Laughter. —Picture Continues At the New Nixon.

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith, in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon Theatre, after an all summer run, proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry in the Hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doubles of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director
SEATS NOW SELLING

The Coolest Spot In Town

Harry Brown, Business Manager.
SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily
INCLUDING SUNDAY
Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

DAILY PRESS

THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1915..

HUMOR RELIEF IN BIRTH OF A NATION

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith, in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon Theatre, after an all summer run, proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry in the Hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doubles of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — SEATS NOW SELLING
The Coolest Spot In Town
Harry Brown, Business Manager. — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily

INCLUDING SUNDAY Nights
8:30 Sharp
Matinees
2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1915

GRIFFITH GREAT STAGE DIRECTOR

Obtains Uncanny Effects in Producing "Birth of a Nation"

A well-known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film Director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water colors rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon after an all Summer's run. The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and yellings of the characters in the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Utopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment, in the Birth of a Nation, of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wan, skeleton like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness.

Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. The spectator is impressed by the mighty thought, the deep emotional appeal in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES P

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

NIAGARA FALLS IS STILL RUNNING
and so is
THE BIRTH OF A NATION
In Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

SIXTH BIG WEEK

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—Engagement in Atlantic City positively terminates Monday Night, Sept. 6, 1915

An Orchestra of Forty

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

NOW PLAYING

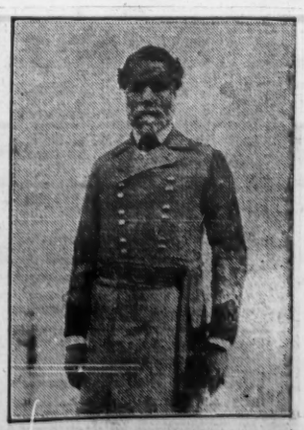
Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

Most stupendous spectacle the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed.

See the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan.

Important—The "Birth of a Nation" Will Positively NOT be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City—Important.

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.



GEN. LEE AS PORTRAYED IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THEATER.

DAILY PRESS

FRIDAY, AUGUST 27, 1915

LILLIAN GISH IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION

"Golden Aureole" is One of the Leading Players in the Griffith Film

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its run at the New Nixon Theatre, after an all summer engagement, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of the Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss

TO DEMONSTRATE WAR SIGNALLING

Jaquith Plans to Show Tonight Foreign Aviator Corps in Action

Tonight at 8 o'clock Aviator Kenneth Jaquith in his Curtiss flying boat which is illuminated with electric lights will demonstrate war signalling methods now being used by the French and English Aviation Corps, in the war zones while the armies are being directed by night.

While there will not be any bombs dropped upon the Boardwalk throngs to make the scene realistic, Jaquith will provide at least an hour's entertainment. The message he will send to the visitors from the clouds or clear skies is "Atlantic City All the Time." The Morse code is to be used in the flashes.

Leipale Angerer, of San Remo, Italy, a Chelsea cottager, and one of the five richest Italians in America today enjoyed an aerial flight with Jaquith yesterday. He was accompanied by his wife and an interpreter. A pair of large field glasses were his constant companion and he held them to his eyes during the entire trip. Other passengers were James, Taylor, Australia, Hotel Strand; Alvin Seiler, 231 Metropolitan avenue, south, Frank Scott, with "The Birth of a Nation."

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — SEATS NOW SELLING

The Coolest Spot In Town

Harry Brown, Business Manager. — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily

INCLUDING SUNDAY
Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 27, 1915.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES PL

THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.

SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

NIAGARA FALLS IS STILL RUNNING

and so is

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

In Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

SIXTH BIG WEEK

Matinee Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

500 Seats at $1

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—Engagement in Atlantic City positively terminates Monday Night, Sept. 6, 1915

An Orchestra of Forty

NOW PLAYING

Eve. Prices

500 Seats at 25c

1000 Seats at 50c

700 Seats at $1

500 Seats at $2

Most stupendous spectacle the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed.

See the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan.

Important—The "Birth of a Nation" Will Positively NOT be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City—Important.

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

EVENING UNION.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 27, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION TO STAY 2 WEEKS

New Nixon Picture Enters Upon Closing Weeks After Playing Through Summer to Capacity Houses.

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its run at the New Nixon Theatre, after an all summer engagement, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of the Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in indoor or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera, are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil War and Reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early War-time to the end of Reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

The New Nixon Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.
SEATS NOW SELLING — The Coolest Spot In Town — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

Now Playing Twice Daily
INCLUDING SUNDAY
Nights 8:30 Sharp
Matinees 2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

ATLANTIC CITY REVIEW.

SATURDAY, AUGUST, 28, 1915.

A PRIVATE WAR MADE TO ORDER

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon after an all summer run, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord" with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied for. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days."

Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State, the race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day without an accident or flaw.

After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the mand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 do do the trick and the producer thinks it was worth all it cost."

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV AND ST. CHARLES PL
THE COOLEST SPOT IN TOWN.
SAMUEL F. NIXON, Managing Director. HARRY BROWN, Business Manager

TWICE DAILY INCLUDING SUNDAY — 2.30 and 8.30 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

NIAGARA FALLS IS STILL RUNNING
and so is
THE BIRTH OF A NATION
In Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

SIXTH BIG WEEK

Matinee Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—Engagement in Atlantic City positively terminates Monday Night, Sept. 6, 1915

An Orchestra of Forty

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

NOW PLAYING

Eve. Prices
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
700 Seats at $1
500 Seats at $2

Most stupendous spectacle the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed.

See the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan.

Important—The "Birth of a Nation" Will Positively NOT be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City—Important.

Seats Now Selling; Direction Epoch Producing Corp., H. E. AITKEN, Pres.

DAILY PRESS

SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1915

MAE MARSH, PRODIGY IN BIRTH OF A NATION

Is Captivating in the Role of Flora in Griffith's Film Play at the Nixon

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon after its all-summer run, is a prodigy of filmdom. In fact it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts who declare her to be the best "find" of the last thirty months in this wonderful advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job as spear-holding with the "merry, merry," was at last promised her. While waiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit—with the possible exception of Henry Walthall playing the hero—had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention offhand a really great character actress in the photographic field the chances are ten to one that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan.

The New Nixon Theatre

BOARDWALK — DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — SEATS NOW SELLING

The Coolest Spot In Town

Harry Brown, Business Manager. — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre

LAST TWO WEEKS

N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle

THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

Now Playing Twice Daily

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

INCLUDING SUNDAY Nights 8:30 Sharp Matinees 2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed—An Orchestra of 40

See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!

"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

The Maynard — $12.00 weekly. Dollar Pier. Bathing from house; excellent table. $3.00 depot. One square from beach. One square from station.

Chelsea Hall — $6 to 12 North Georgia avenue. Capacity 250; excellent table; hot and cold water; baths. Florida avenue, near beach. Convenient to pier and amusements. Rooms single or ensuite $1.00 day up. Special weekly. Capacity 300. Booklets. MRS. P. COYLE.

Hotel La Fayette — American and attractive or two persons; $8 to $12 weekly; $1.50 up daily.

HOTEL FITNEY — Atlantic City's large baths.

EVENING UNION,

SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1915

MAE MARSH, FLORA IN BIRTH OF NATION

Little Miss Ascends to Perfection of Histronic Art in Great Griffith Play—Attraction at the New Nixon

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the last two weeks of its engagement at the New Nixon after its all-summer run, is a prodigy of filmdom. In fact it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts who declare her to be the best "find" of the last thirty months in this wonderful advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job as spear-holding with the "merry, merry," was at last promised her. While waiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit—with the possible exception of Henry Walthall playing the hero—had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention off-hand a really great character actress in the photographic field the chances are ten to one that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan.

The NEW NIXON Theatre
BOARDWALK— DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Harry Brown, Business Manager.
SEATS NOW SELLING — The Coolest Spot In Town — SEATS NOW SELLING

Niagara Falls Are Still Running and so is the Birth of a Nation
in Every Detail at the New Nixon Theatre
LAST TWO WEEKS
N. B.—(Engagement in Atlantic City Positively Terminates Monday Night, September 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle
THE 8th WONDER OF THE WORLD

Sixth Big Week

The Greatest Art Conquest Since the Beginning of Civilization

Evening Prices
500 Seats at 25c.
1000 Seats at 50c.
700 Seats at $1.00
500 Seats at $2.00

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Now Playing Twice Daily

INCLUDING SUNDAY Nights
8:30 Sharp
Matinees
2:30 Sharp

Most Stupendous Dramatic Spectacle the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Revealed
An Orchestra of 40
See the Wild Rides of the Ku Klux Klan

Matinee Prices:
500 Seats at 25c
1000 Seats at 50c
500 Seats at $1.00

DIRECTION THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORP., H. E. AITKEN, PRES.

IMPORTANT!!
"The Birth of a Nation" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in Atlantic City.

7th BIG WEEK

COMMENCING TODAY

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

The NEW NIXON Theatre

BOARDWALK AND DELAWARE AV. AND ST. CHARLES P.

Samuel F. Nixon, Managing Director — Hyman, Business Manager

SEATS NOW SELLING

The Coolest Spot in Town

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Mighty Spectacle — The 8th W

Last Week

In

Atlantic City

Engagement Positively Terminates Monday Night, Sept. 6th

EVENING PRICES—500 Seats at 25c, 1000 Seats at 50c, 700 Seats at $1.00, 500 Seats at $2.00

Direction The Epoch Producing Corp. Aitken, Pres.

☞ IMPORTANT — "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Will Positively NOT Be Shown in Any Other Theatre

"BIRTH OF A NATION'S" LAST WEEK

REAKER

us Picture

ON

(ge One)

he conquered entures and Klux Klan
enes, which double romrthern sweet-

t of the mag greater and al play that rison. For ,000 actors of the tiny boards. He e of four or es of many, lux "rides"
hich surpass
t cup race.
is as fine short cast"
ry Walthall
Mae Marsh
rising" to marvels of 0 faithfully
the musi-
the several individual oduction of e theatre
n was shot, legislature
s of battle new prods of cloth
nd 12,000
the mangement of tion of the or nature;
ctive play-
Romance deepest mery, the (except a new art
ith-music.
has been al drama theatrical lass scale.
No ad-se prices
e and a ady witady run
f a year
tions of , prove behalf verdict.
at various times,
it should be added "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censor boards everywhere upheld when attacked by decisions of courts of records; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including ministers and priests, than any other entertainment ever offered to the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the Reconstruction story.

TWICE DAILY
Including Sunday

NIGHTS—8.30 Sharp MATINEES—2.30 Sharp

THE GREATEST ART CONQUEST SINCE THE BEGINNING OF CIVILIZATION!

SEATS NOW SELLING

Wonder of the World

WONDERFUL ARTILLERY DUELS WITH REAL SHELLS

18,000 PEOPLE USED TO TELL THE DRAMA

COST $500,000 TO ASSEMBLE ITS MIGHTY FORCES

MOST STUPENDOUS DRAMATIC SPECTACLE THE BRAIN OF MAN HAS YET VISIONED AND REVEALED

AN ORCHESTRA OF 40

THE GREATEST BATTLES OF THE CIVIL WAR RE-ENACTED

3,000 HORSES MOUNTED BY DARING RIDERS

TOOK 8 MONTHS OF SUPER-HUMAN EFFORT TO PRODUCE IT

SEE THE WILD RIDES OF THE KU KLUX KLAN

MATINEE PRICES—500 Seats at 25c, 1000 Seats at 50c, 500 Seats at $1.00

tre in Atlantic City — IMPORTANT

Joseph Hemabery as Abraham Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," at New Nixon Theatre Today.

Lillian Gish in "Birth of a Nation," at Nixon Today

7th BIG COMMENCI
THE GREATEST ART
BEGINNING OF SEATS NO
D. W. GR
La
We Atlan
Engageme
Terminat
Night,
EVENING PRICES—500
700 Seats at $1.
IMPORTAN

Attractions at Local Playhouses.

THEA
THE SUN
SUNDAY GAZETTE

"BIRTH OF A NATION'S" LAST WEEK PROMISES TO BE A RECORD-BREAKER

The New Nixon Engagement of This Marvelous Picture Production Terminates Monday Evening, September 6th.

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will enter upon the last week of its engagement, closing its remarkable run of eight weeks in Atlantic City on Monday night, September 6th. Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and picturializes the greatest events of the war between the States as well as those of Reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the South—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South." A struggle caused by the attempt to impose

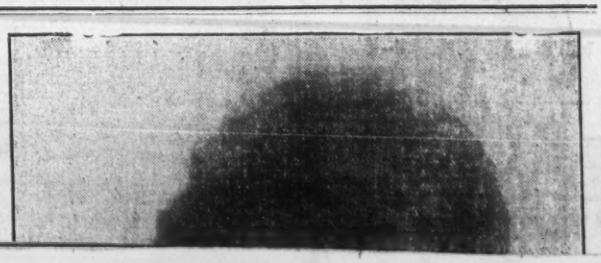
(Continued on Page Four.)

FAMOUS COMEDIAN IN PREMIER PHOTO-PLAY AT COLONIAL

Sam Bernard, World's Foremost Character Comedian in "Poor Schmaltz."

When the Famous Players Film Company recently announced that it had induced Sam Bernard, the world's foremost character comedian, to appear before the camera, the news aroused more enthusiasm on the part of photoplay fans throughout the country than has the recent announcement of any other prominent stage star's decision to transfer his talent to the screen. If Mr. Bernard's bare consent to appear on the screen created this amount of interest imagine the effect of the news that the celebrated comedian has actually completed his first film impersonation for the Famous Players, as 'Poor

(Continued on Page Five.)



SOPHYE BARNARI STAR BILL

Assisted by Lou Anger, Mo of Twenty Show Girl Playlet, "Abe

JAMES J. CORBETT IN "BROTHER BIL

Former Champion in N Comedy-Drama at Cort All Week.

It is not generally known James J. Corbett, who is the feat number of "Brother Bill," which be the attraction at the Cort The all of this week, has enjoyed a ied dramatic and vaudeville caree

Immediately following the l event in the South where a new champion was raised over the l of one of the former gladiators the sport, Corbett went under management of William A. Brady that astute manager immediately ranged to present his champion the dramatic stage. He chos melodrama called "Gentleman J for the purpose, and Corbett enj a long season as the star of this p He then appeared in 'A Naval Cad which was carried to success on wave of his personal popularity. showed aptitude, however, Henry Guy Carleton, the same contributed much to the Empire T atre staff, wrote for him "The venturer."

The next time he appeared associates was in vaudeville. sketch was "A Thief in the Nig

Continued on Page Three.

SCHUBERT MUSIC

"BIRTH OF A NATION'S" LAST WEEK PROMISES TO BE A RECORD-BREAKER

The New Nixon Engagement of This Marvelous Picture Production Terminates Monday Evening, September 6th.

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will enter upon the last week of its engagement, closing its remarkable run of eight weeks in Atlantic City on Monday night, September 6th. Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and picturializes the greatest events of the war between the States as well as those of Reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre, and the following orgy of hate and oppression in the South—these personages and events pass rapidly before the eyes of the spectator and lead up to the climaxes of Part II, which deals with what has been styled the "struggle between the North and South." A struggle which attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered States. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

(Continued on Page Four.)

NEW NIXON

(Continued from Page One)

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3000 horses instead of the tiny "armies" of the theatric boards. He shows 5000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux "rides" right out in the open, which surpass in thrills any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a "short cast" drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details, the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful eproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 20,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes and 12,000 yards of women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of out-door nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of Romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art form of drama-spectable-with-music.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama to be presented in a regular theatrical way and at the usual first class scale of "two-dollar top" prices. No advance will be made on these prices on tour. The fact that one and a half million people have already witnessed it and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half a year in the simultaneous productions of New Yok, Chicago and Boston, prove that the biggest claims in its behalf are justified by the popular verdict. Despite opposition at various times, it should be added "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censor boards everywhere upheld when attacked by decisions of courts of records; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including ministers and priests, than any other entetainment ever offered to the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the Reconstruction story.

Joseph Henabery as Abraham Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," at New Nixon Theatre Today.

Lillian Gish in "Birth of a Nation," at Nixon Today

ght Gathering of the Ku Klux Clan a Scene from "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Today Matinee and Nigr